Copy presented of Treasury Minute, dated 26th January, 1900, directing, in pursuance of section 2 (3) of the Public Accounts and Charges Act, 1891, that, where any sum is by order of the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, under section 80 (2) of the Local Government (Ireland) Act, 1898, deducted from moneys payable from the Local Taxation (Ireland) Account to any Council in respect of a debt due from such Council, and where the amount due from the Council would, if paid in ordinary course, have been applied as an Appropriation-in-Aid of the Vote for the Royal Irish Constabulary, the sum deducted in lieu thereof shall be similarly applied as an Appropriation-in-Aid of that Vote [by Act] ; to lie upon the Table.

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1884.

Copy presented of Treasury Minute, dated 31st January, 1900, declaring that Samuel Nevitt, Viewer, Royal Small Arms Department, War Office Department, was appointed without a Civil Service Certificate through inadvertence on the part of the head of his department [by Act] ; to lie upon the Table.

SOUTH AFRICA (TRANSPORTS).

Return ordered, "showing the name, tonnage, and speed of each vessel employed to convey troops to South Africa since the 1st day of July last, the date and port of her departure from these shores, and arrival at Capetown, Durban, or elsewhere, respectively, including arrival at and departure from intermediate port of call ; the number of troops and horses or mules carried on each occasion, the number of horses or mules lost on voyage, vessels provided with new pattern fittings, vessels provided with old pattern fittings, vessels provided with slings for each horse or mule, vessels not so provided ; and the time occupied by each vessel in making the voyage, in the following form :—

| | | |
|--|--|--|
| | Name of vessel. | |
| | Tonnage. | |
| | Speed. | |
| | Port. | Date of departure and port. |
| | Departure. | |
| | Port. | Date of arrival and departure from intermediate ports. |
| | Arrival. | |
| | Departure. | |
| | Cape Town. | Date of arrival and port. |
| | Durban. | |
| | Time occupied on voyage. | |
| | Number of troops carried. | |
| | Number of horses or mules carried. | |
| | Number of horses or mules lost on voyage. | |
| | Whether provided with new pattern or old pattern fittings. | |
| | Whether provided with slings for each horse or mule. | |

—(Mr. Weir.)

COAL EXPORTS, &c.

Return ordered, "giving for the year 1899 the export of coal from each port in the United Kingdom to each country abroad, together with a summary statement showing the export of coal from the principal districts of the United Kingdom to the principal groups of foreign countries; and also showing the quantity of coal shipped at each port in the United Kingdom for ships' use on foreign voyages during the same period (in continuation of Parliamentary Paper, No. 198, of Session 1889)."—(Mr. D. A. Thomas.)

QUESTIONS.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—TRANSPORTS.

MR. BAINBRIDGE (Lincolnshire, Gainsborough): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Admiralty whether, in view of the recent employment of inferior transport ships to the Cape (occupying nearly twice the time in the passage which would have been taken by the best passenger ships), the Government has arranged to secure the use of first class passenger vessels in future.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY (Mr. G. J. Goschen, St. George's, Hanover Square): I must respectfully protest against the preamble of the honourable Member's question. It conveys an impression quite contrary to fact. With regard to the question itself, I cannot undertake that only first class passenger ships shall be used in future. Such ships are naturally quite unsuited for horse transports, which constitute the majority of those now being taken up. But the hon. Member may rely on it that our best endeavours have been and will be used to place both infantry and cavalry as quickly at the Cape as we can.

GUNS AT PRETORIA.

MR. BAINBRIDGE: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether the Government possesses full information as to the number and character and projectile force of the guns at present in Pretoria, and whether a list of these can be laid before the House; whether some of these guns have a range of over 10,000 yards; and whether the siege train sent out at the end of December last had any guns with the same range.

THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR (Mr. WYNDHAM, Dover): There is reason to believe that many of the guns from the forts round Pretoria have been sent to the front. We have not full information as to what guns have been left. The answer to the last two questions is in the affirmative.

TREATMENT OF PRISONERS OF WAR.

MR. HARWOOD (Bolton): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether the Boer prisoners of war at Cape Town are kept confined on board ship; and, if so, whether such treatment is the same as that which it is reported is being accorded to the British prisoners at Pretoria.

MR. WYNDHAM: We were informed on the 22nd of January that the Boer prisoners are no longer to be confined on board ship. It is obvious that while they were on board ship the conditions of their imprisonment could not be the same as those under which the British prisoners at Pretoria are confined.

TRANSPORT WAGONS.

MR. BAINBRIDGE: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether a number of transport wagons have been sent out to the Cape and have proved to be so unsuited to South African requirements as to cause General Buller to report that the whole were unfit for service.

MR. WYNDHAM: No, Sir; no such report has been received from General Buller. The only complaint was in respect of the fitness of the brakes in the first consignment for South African service; this defect was remedied locally, and the necessary alteration has been made in all subsequent consignments.

CLOTHING FOR THE TROOPS.

MR. *WARNER (Staffordshire, Lichfield): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether the clothes of the troops who have been some time on active service are worn out and have not been renewed; and why appeals have been made to private sources for flannel shirts and socks if the Government is supplying these articles.

*MR. WYNDHAM : Provision has been made for replacing any clothes worn out. No appeals for flannel shirts or socks have been made by the Government, but persons desirous of forwarding comforts to the troops have been informed that amongst other articles these things would be useful.

GENERAL SIR FREDERICK CARRINGTON.

MR. COGHILL (Burton-upon-Trent) : I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether General Sir Frederick Carrington at the outbreak of the war placed his services at the disposal of the War Office ; and why, having regard to his great knowledge and prolonged experience of South African warfare, his services were not in the first instance accepted.

*MR. WYNDHAM : The services of all officers are at the disposal of the Commander-in-Chief, and the fact of their applying ought not to, and does not, influence the order of their selection.

COMMISSIONS FOR NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

MR. GODDARD (Ipswich) : I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War if he can say how many non-commissioned officers have been promoted to commissions for services in the field during the present war.

*MR. WYNDHAM : No recommendations for the promotion of non-commissioned officers to commissions for services in the field during the present war have yet been received. Lord Roberts has, however, been recently asked to recommend men who have performed good and meritorious service in the field.

MAFEKING STATION-MASTER.

MR. T. M. HEALY : I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies if he will inquire whether Mr. James Quinlan, station-master at Mafeking, was shot in October by order of Colonel Baden-Powell ; and why the letter which Mr. Quinlan addressed to an Irish Member vindicating his innocence was not allowed to be forwarded.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES (MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN, Birmingham. W.) : The hon. and learned Gentleman is aware that this question relates to an alleged exercise of military authority, and under those circumstances it is not in my department. The question should be addressed to the War Office.

MR. T. M. HEALY : The right hon. Gentleman knows that the War Office will not inquire, and now he says he will not inquire ; is that because this man was an Irishman ?

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN : I do not think that the hon. and learned Gentleman shows his usual fairness in insinuating that this is a matter which has not been dealt with because it is an Irish question. Perhaps, with reference to that, the House might like to have some account of Irish opinion, at all events, on the spot. I have received to-day from the Governor, Sir W. Hely-Hutchinson—who is himself an Irishman, I believe—the following telegram—

“ Mr. T. P. O'Meara, till recently member for Maritzburg, member of town council of Maritzburg, and prominent citizen, requests me to send you the following on behalf of himself and brother Irishmen in Natal. Begins : ‘ Irishmen in Natal support Her Majesty's Government. The supremacy of the Empire in South Africa must be placed beyond a doubt.’ ”

MR. T. M. HEALY : Would the right hon. Gentleman, out of consideration to the Irishmen of Natal who are supporting the Government, inquire into the shooting of Mr. Quinlan ?

*MR. WYNDHAM : I think the hon. Member misunderstood my reply to his question yesterday. What I stated was that I did not think it reasonable to address a question to Lord Roberts unless I myself was personally cognisant of the statement on which that question is based. If the hon. Member or any other hon. Member will supply me with those statements, then there is something to go upon, and I will make an inquiry. But I cannot intrude upon the time of a most distinguished officer on mere rumours, of which there are so many at this moment.

MR. T. M. HEALY : This statement—which was that the gentleman was shot, and that he forwarded a letter to an Irish Member before he was compelled to dig his own grave—appeared in the English papers at the Cape.

*MR. WYNDHAM: Will the hon. Gentleman supply me with the statements so that I can act upon them?

MR. T. M. HEALY: That is very reasonable. I will do so. It appeared in Mr. Rhodes's paper.

ATTITUDE OF THE ORANGE FREE STATE IN 1885.

DR. CLARK (Caithness-shire): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies when it was that Sir John Brand, on behalf of the Orange Free State, protested against the objects sought to be obtained by Sir Charles Warren's Expedition; and, if the communication is published, in what year it was published.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: If this question refers to an interruption by me in the course of the speech of the hon. Member for the Bodmin Division of Cornwall I have to say that, on looking at the report of the debate, I find that I misunderstood the right hon. Gentleman and have to apologise accordingly. I thought he was referring to 1881. In 1885 there was great uneasiness in the Orange Free State, and her Majesty's Government were anxious as to the attitude of the burghers.

DR. CLARK: Burghers of the Orange Free State?

MR. CHAMBERLAIN: Yes.

ALLEGED HIGH TREASON AT THE CAPE.

MR. BRYN ROBERTS (Carnarvonshire, Eifion): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether Mr. Barend du Plessis, a well-to-do farmer of the Hanover District, Cape Town, was arrested on the 10th of December last on a charge of high treason, based on the unsupported statement of a discharged native servant, and was kept in prison for ten days, and then set free, the Solicitor General declining to prosecute; and whether any compensation will be made to this gentleman.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: In reply to a telegram which I addressed to him with regard to the subject of the question, Sir A. Milner informs me "Case of Du Plessis has not been brought to my notice, but inquiries being made."

SIR WILLIAM BUTLER.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL (Donegal, S.): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War is it the fact that when the question arose of occupying Northern Natal as far as Dundee before the outbreak of hostilities, Sir William Butler was informed that this step was believed to be desirable but that the decision was left to him, and was General Butler's refusal to exercise this discretion, by not occupying Northern Natal, one of the grounds on which he was deprived of his command at the Cape; when General Butler was appointed to command elsewhere did he express his disinclination to accept the command, and only yield on the urgent representation of the War Office and on the understanding that he would only occupy the new post for a year; and does the acceptance by Sir William Butler of this appointment preclude him, except with the consent of the War Office, from defending himself from the charges levelled against him.

*MR. WYNDHAM: There is no ground for either of the allegations contained in the first paragraph of the hon. Member's question. Sir W. Butler was offered the command of the Western District on the 8th August. On the 10th August he declined the offer, explaining that he did not wish to risk possible embarrassment to his superior officers by accepting it. He was informed on the 12th August that his acceptance would cause no embarrassment, and he accepted the post on the 14th with thanks. There was no limitation of the Western District command to one year, or any understanding to that effect. The appointment is for the ordinary period of five years, subject to the rules regarding age retirement, which do not appear likely to affect the tenure. Sir W. Butler's acceptance of this command imposes no special disability upon him.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: Can a general officer in command explain his attitude with reference to public matters, except with the consent of the War Office?

*MR. WYNDHAM: A general officer, and every other soldier, is forbidden by the Queen's Regulations to raise questions upon orders, regulations, and matters of discipline. He is not debarred from the right of a private gentleman, and I may mention to the hon. Member that only a few days ago Sir William Butler asked us whether he might take proceedings and instruct his solicitor, and he was informed by return that there were no military objections.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: Was that against Heneage, who called him a traitor?

[No answer was given.]

ROYAL ARMY MEDICAL CORPS.

SIR WALTER FOSTER (Derby, Ilkeston): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War how many officers of the Royal Army Medical Corps are now employed in South Africa, and how many civil medical officers have been sent out to aid them; how many officers of the Royal Army Medical Corps are employed at other foreign stations, and how many are at home stations; and whether it is intended to employ any of the retired pay officers for duties in the United Kingdom.

*MR. WYNDHAM: 368 officers of the Royal Army Medical Corps are employed in South Africa, 377 at other foreign stations, and 111 at home; 133 civil surgeons are employed in South Africa, and 28 more are under orders to go; 112 retired pay officers are employed at home.

VOLUNTEER ARTILLERY GUNS.

MR. BAINBRIDGE: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether the attention of the Government has been drawn to a statement by Colonel Angus, commanding the 1st Newcastle-on-Tyne Volunteer Artillery, and similar statements by other Volunteer officers, that the guns supplied to Volunteers are of quite an obsolete pattern; and what steps are being taken to remedy this?

*MR. WYNDHAM: I have not seen the statement referred to, but the guns of the Volunteer Artillery are not of a recent pattern. I shall refer to this matter when I make the statement of our proposals to the House.

NORTHUMBERLAND FUSILIER VOLUNTEERS.

MR. BAINBRIDGE: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether the officers of the 1st Volunteer Battalion of the Northumberland Fusiliers made an application to the War Office offering to equip their regiment with a Maxim gun and all accessories thereto entirely at their own cost; and, if so, why this request was refused by the War Office.

*MR. WYNDHAM: There is no trace of the receipt of such an application.

LONDON SCOTTISH VOLUNTEERS.

MR. WEIR (Ross and Cromarty): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether he is aware that members of the London Scottish Volunteers whose offers of service in South Africa have been accepted, to whom £1 has been granted towards their outfit, are only receiving 9s. 6d., the balance of half a guinea having been deducted in each instance as the member's subscription to the corps for the current year; and in view of the fact that these Volunteers are for the time being classed as soldiers on active service enrolled with the Gordon Highlanders, will arrangements be made for them to receive the £1 grant in full.

*MR. WYNDHAM: The grant of £1 towards outfit was not a grant of public money, but out of the private moneys raised by the corps for this purpose, and was, therefore, not under the control of the War Office. I understand, however, that the ordinary subscription to the corps was made optional on the part of volunteers for active service.

TRANSVAAL CONSUL AT DELAGOA BAY.

MR. SCOTT MONTAGU (Hampshire, New Forest): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government is aware that Mr. Pott, for many years the Transvaal Consul at Delagoa Bay, has been actively engaged in assisting her Her Majesty's enemies, and whether at the same time Mr. Pott has been acting as the agent of the Castle Steamship Company which conveys mails and troops to the Cape and subsidies from Her Majesty's Government; and whether steps have been taken to bring the importance of this to the notice of the Imperial authorities in South Africa.

THE UNDER SECRETARY FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS (Mr. BRODRICK, Surrey, Guildford): The Castle Line Company has made arrangements for relieving Mr. Pott of the agency, and he will no longer have anything to do with the company's business.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis): Since what date?

[No answer was given.]

THE GARRISON OF INDIA.

MR. WARNER: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War if any steps are being taken to replace the British troops who have been withdrawn from India for South Africa.

MR. WYNDHAM: Not at present, Sir.

CIVIL SERVICE VOLUNTEERS.

MR. HEDDERWICK (Wick Burghs): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether, in the case of those members of the Civil Service Corps who have been accepted for active service in South Africa, the Government have declined to pay the salaries to which they would have been entitled had they remained at home.

THE FINANCIAL SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY (Mr. HANBURY, Preston): Civil servants who are accepted for active military service receive full military pay and allowances. Moreover, in the case of married non-commissioned officers and privates half the civil pay is paid to the wife and children in addition to the Army separation allowance. In the case of every unmarried non-commissioned officer and private and of every officer, whether married or unmarried, the balance of his civil pay, after providing for his duties during his absence, is reserved for him, but so that such balance together with his military pay does not exceed the full civil pay.

FOOD STUFFS AS CONTRABAND OF WAR.

MR. DILLON (Mayo, E.): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether Her Majesty's Government intend to treat food as contraband of war during the present war; and if so, under what restrictions and limitations.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY (Mr. A. J. BALFOUR, Manchester, E.) said: Food stuffs as such have never been considered by this country as contraband of war. Food stuffs intended for the supply of an army in the field are, I believe, by universal consent and international law, regarded as contraband of war.

MR. DILLON: Will the right hon. Gentleman explain what regulations the Government intend to enforce, and on what evidence they intend to determine the character of food stuffs landed at Lorenzo Marques?

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: Questions of fact, of course, are to be decided by the Prize Court.

MR. DILLON: Is it the intention of the Government to direct British cruisers to seize all cargoes of food stuffs going to Lorenzo Marques until their character is ascertained?

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I can make no declaration of policy with regard to that.

CUSTOMS DUTIES ON ARTICLES SENT TO THE TROOPS.

MR. BARTLEY (Islington, N.): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether in reference to the War Office circular of 9th December, 1899, entitled "Parcels for Officers and Men on Active Service in South Africa," the &c. in section 2, "Customs duties will not be charged in Cape Colony or Natal on tobacco, &c., addressed to officers and men serving there," means alcohol and all other taxable articles.

MR. WYNDHAM: The following telegram has been received from Mr. Hamilton Gatliff, who has very kindly undertaken the distribution of gifts for the troops—

"The privilege of free entry of gifts to troops applies to articles arriving by parcels post only. With regard to articles arriving otherwise, the local Customs authorities will consider the merits of each case with a view to remission. Up to date all articles have had free entry."

The statement in the memorandum of December, 1899, was, it appears, a little too wide.

NEWSPAPERS FOR THE FRONT.

MR. COGHILL: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, why newspapers and periodicals sent out from this country to the officers and men of the Natal Field force have not been delivered to them; and if he can say what has become of them.

MR. HANBURY: All newspapers and periodicals for the forces in Natal have been duly forwarded to the Army Post Office. If the hon. Member will be good enough to furnish definite information as to particular cases of non-delivery enquiry shall be made of the Army Post Office.

ELECTORAL DISABILITIES (MILITARY SERVICE) BILL.

GENERAL LAURIE (Pembroke and Haverfordwest): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will take into consideration the desirability of extending the provisions of the Bill of which he has given notice, Electoral Disabilities (Military Service), so as to include members of the Army and Navy as well as those of the other Forces named in the notice who may be absent on the Military service of the Crown.

*THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT (Sir M. WHITE RIDLEY, Lancashire, Blackpool): I have not overlooked the point raised by my hon. and gallant friend; but I do not think that it comes properly within the scope of the Bill, which is not one for the extension of the franchise but is intended to deal with the consequences of an unusual state of war, and not with those of ordinary military or naval service.

GENERAL LAURIE: Would not the military and naval Members of the House who have gone to South Africa be entitled to exercise the franchise if still at home?

*SIR M. WHITE RIDLEY: Yes; but there is a considerable difference between those serving the country by being called to India or other parts of the Empire in ordinary circumstances, and those who, as on the present occasion, have volunteered for foreign service.

*MR. GIBSON BOWLES: Are not the special circumstances of this case equally applicable to the Army and Navy as to these other forces?

*SIR M. WHITE RIDLEY: We had better discuss these questions when the Bill is introduced. All I wish to point out is that this Bill is not intended to be an extension of the franchise; it is to meet a special case.

LEE-ENFIELD RIFLES.

MR. WEIR: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether the Lee-Enfield rifles recently issued were previously tested; and, if so, will he say where the tests were made; and will he state who is responsible for having passed weapons with faulty backsights.

*MR. WYNDHAM: The Lee-Enfield rifles recently issued had been inspected at the places of manufacture, Enfield, Birmingham, and London. The sighting was approved in 1895 by the then Inspector-General of Ordnance on the advice of the late Director-General of Ordnance Factories, after trials carried out by the officers who were at the time Superintendent of the Small Arms Factory and Commandant of the School of Musketry respectively, and on the recommendation of the Chief Inspector of Small Arms. A strict inquiry into the origin of the error in the sighting of these rifles has been instituted.

MR. WEIR: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War if he will state the number of Lee-Enfield rifles which have been manufactured since its adoption, and the number issued; also whether the rifles bear any mark or stamp indicating the place of manufacture; and if they do not, will he consider the advisability of adopting a distinctive mark in future?

*MR. WYNDHAM: The number of Lee-Enfield rifles manufactured is about 350,000, and that issued about 100,000. They all bear the marks referred to.

CASE OF HENRY URQUHART, GORDON HIGHLANDERS.

MR. HEDDERWICK : I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether the attention of the War Office has been attracted to the case of Henry Urquhart, aged 73, formerly an officer in the Gordon Highlanders, said to have served in the Crimea, the Indian Mutiny, and in the North-West Provinces of India, and to have been specially mentioned in despatches for distinguished bravery, who, with his wife, aged 77, applied in January last to the Lambeth Guardians for relief upon the ground of destitution and the infirmity of age; and whether there is any fund at the disposal of the Government applicable to such a case; and, if not, whether the Government will consider the desirability of establishing a fund which would obviate the necessity of such an appeal by old soldiers who have served the Queen.

*THE FINANCIAL SECRETARY TO THE WAR OFFICE (Mr. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS, Birmingham, S.): If the officer referred to is identical with William Henry Urquhart who sold out of the 17th Foot as a Captain in October, 1861, his case is now being enquired into.

MR. HEDDERWICK : The hon. Gentleman has not answered the second part of my question.

*MR. POWELL-WILLIAMS : That would depend on the result of the inquiry. There may or may not be. The whole circumstances of the case will be looked into.

RIFLE RANGES.

MR. F. W. WILSON (Norfolk, Mid): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War if he will supplement the return granted last session of rifle ranges closed in Great Britain by a further return giving the names and localities of ranges so closed.

*MR. WYNDHAM : If the hon. Member will specify any particular locality as to which he desires information, I will do my best to furnish it; but at the present period of pressure in the War Office I am reluctant to require a return which would cause considerable labour.

CRIMEAN PENSIONERS.

MR. FLAVIN (Kerry, N.): I beg to ask the Financial Secretary to the War Office whether he is aware that Irish Army pensioners and others, who have served over twenty years in the Army, the greater portion of which has been active service in Persia, India, China, and the Crimea, are now in many instances inmates of Irish workhouses, supported at the expense of the public rates, as also supported by public charity in such institutions as the "Little Sisters of the Poor"; whether Her Majesty's Government can see their way, by legislation or otherwise, to increase the pension of Crimean veterans and others beyond the sum of eightpence a day; and whether this question has been considered; and, if so, with what result.

*MR. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS : If the hon. Member will send me the particulars of any case which has come to his notice I will cause inquiry to be made.

MR. FLAVIN : The hon. Gentleman last October told the House the whole matter was under consideration.

SUBSIDISED CRUISERS.

MR. BAINBRIDGE : I beg to ask the First Lord of the Admiralty if he will have a return presented to the House giving the number, classification, and names of the ships subsidised by the Government for the purpose of being available as cruisers prior to October last.

MR. GOSCHEN : The hon. Member will find the information he requires as to the vessels subsidised as merchant cruisers at page 93 of the Navy Estimates for 1899-1900.

COAL FOR THE NAVY—EMERGENCY CONTRACTS.

*MR. D. A. THOMAS (Merthyr Tydvil): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Admiralty whether by the conditions of contract for the supply of steam vessel coals to the Government in times of emergency, the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty are to be the sole judges of the circumstances constituting anticipated or actual war under which the contractors shall be called upon to supply; whether any coal has ever been taken by the Admiralty under any of such emergency contracts; whether any consideration money is paid for the contract; and if he can indicate the circumstances contemplated in the conditions of the emergency coal contracts under which coal would be taken.

MR. GOSCHEN: The reply to the first and second paragraphs is in the affirmative—to the third paragraph in the negative, but the firms who have tendered have always defended the very high prices asked on the grounds that they are completely in the dark as to when they may be called upon to supply. It is proposed before the next contracts are made to revise some of the conditions.

*MR. D. A. THOMAS: May I ask the right hon. Gentleman—but, of course, I do not press the question if to answer it will be inconsistent with the public interest—whether the Lords Commissioners anticipate military operations are likely to lead to actual war in South Africa?

MR. GOSCHEN: I do not think that is a question I should be called upon to answer.

THE COASTGUARD AND TELEPHONIC COMMUNICATION.

SIR CAMERON GULL (Devonshire, Barnstaple): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Admiralty whether, when any of the coastguard in whose houses the coast telephonic communication is placed are mobilised, any, and if so what, steps are taken to insure the proper working of the telephone during their absence.

MR. GOSCHEN: The question of the hon. Baronet relates, I presume, to the civilian services rendered by the coastguard in charge of telephonic arrangements for life-saving purposes along the coast. The Admiralty and the Board of Trade are in communication with each other on this subject. The organisation of the war signal stations is complete.

ANGLO-GERMAN CONVENTION— TONGA.

MR. HOGAN (Tipperary, Mid): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether Mr. Basil Thomson has been despatched on a special mission to Tonga; and if so, whether there is any objection to stating its purport.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: Yes. Mr. Thomson has been sent to Tonga to discuss with the King the change in the international position of the group effected by the Anglo-German Convention of November last.

SAMOA.

MR. HOGAN: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs what is the latest consular information from Samoa as to the working of the new governing arrangements under the Anglo-German Convention, and the probabilities of a permanent acceptance of the new régime by the natives.

*THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS (MR. BRODRICK, Surrey, Guildford): The Tripartite Convention between Great Britain, Germany, and the United States with regard to Samoa was only approved by the Senate on the 29th ult. The formal ratifications will be exchanged without delay. Until this has been done, the Convention does not come into effect, and consequently German administration has not yet been established in Upolu and Savaii.

BRITISH NORTH BORNEO.

MR. WEIR: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies if he will state the nature of the differences which have arisen between the native population and the Chartered Company of British North Borneo; have any efforts been made by the British North Borneo Company to discuss the grievances of the natives with a view to an amicable settlement, as on a previous occasion, when Mat Salleh delivered his sword to Mr. Cowie, the manager of the British North Borneo Company; will he state the nature of the expedition sent against Mat Salleh and his followers; and whether the expenses will be charged to the British taxpayer or to the British North Borneo Company.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: I am unable to answer this question without referring to the British North Borneo Company. If the hon. Member will kindly postpone his question for a week, I hope then to be in a position to reply.

JAMAICA LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether he is aware that the Order in Council restoring to the Colony of Jamaica a representative legislature, passed on the 19th May, 1884, was accompanied with a despatch to the Governor of the Colony, Sir H. Norman, from Lord Derby, the Colonial Secretary, stating that Her Majesty's Government thought it undesirable that the Legislative Council should be so constituted as to place the elected members in a majority and the nominated members in a minority, and trusting that it would be rarely if ever necessary for the Governor to exercise the power of overruling the votes of the elected members; is he aware that, from 1884 till 1899, the extreme power vested in the Governor, of raising the number of nominated members of the Council to the maximum, was never exercised; whether, in 1899, the Governor of Jamaica, with the sanction of the Colonial Secretary, appointed the full number of nominated members on the Legislative Council in order to carry measures of taxation, the finances having become, owing to bad seasons, temporarily embarrassed; whether a petition to the Queen, numerously signed by representative men of the island of Jamaica, by Mr. Adrian A. Robinson, President of the Jamaica Association and Mayor of Kingston, protesting against the action of the Governor and the Colonial Secretary as ultra vires and unconstitutional, has been received; and will he explain what justification the Governor offered for so acting.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: The circumstances referred to in the hon. Member's question are explained in Papers relating to the finances of Jamaica (9,177, February, 1899, 9,412, July, 1899, 9,413, July, 1899), which have already been laid before the House, and in further correspondence which will be shortly laid.

MR. MACNEILL: Is it the fact that the Constitution of Jamaica has been suspended?

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: No, Sir.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: Have you any address from the loyalists there?

[No answer was given.]

FRENCH SETTLEMENT AT SHANGHAI.

MR. YERBURGH (Chester): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether he can state the result of the negotiations with regard to the extension of the French concession at Shanghai.

*MR. BRODRICK: The main objections entertained by Her Majesty's Government to the extension of the French settlement at Shanghai was due to the fact that certain British property was included in the proposed French concession. Satisfactory assurances have now been obtained from the French Government, by which all municipal regulations will be submitted to Her Majesty's Minister at Peking before being enforced on British subjects, and all titles to British property are secured. The Secretary of State consequently withdrew his opposition, and the extensions of both the French and the Anglo-American or international settlements have now been arranged.

RUSSIAN LOAN TO PERSIA.

MR. YERBURGH: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether he can state the conditions of the Russian loan to Persia; and whether the customs of the port of Bender Abbas are pledged to Russia under any agreement.

*MR. BRODRICK: The conditions of the loan, as announced in the Messenger Officiel on January 30th, and published in the Journal de St. Pétersbourg of January 31st, are:—The payment of the interest and sinking fund for the term of seventy-five years is to be guaranteed by all the customs revenues of Persia, exclusive of those of Fars and the Persian Gulf ports. In case of delay in the payments of the service of the loan the Banque des Prêts is to have the right of establishing a control over the custom houses, the revenues of which form the security for the loan. The Persian Government engages to extinguish all its previous external obligations with part of the proceeds of the loan, and not to conclude without the consent of the Banque des Prêts any fresh foreign loan until the loan of 1900 has been extinguished. The Persian Government grants the Banque des Prêts the right, if it thinks necessary, of placing on the money market bonds of the Persian Loan for the amount to which it is indebted, and bearing the full guarantee of the Russian Government. We have no ground for believing in the existence of any agreement to the effect mentioned in the second paragraph.

THE ROYAL COMMISSION ON THE LICENSING LAWS.

SIR J. LENG (Dundee): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has considered the recommendations made in the reports of the Royal Commission on the Licensing Laws; and what course he proposes to take with regard to them.

SIR M. WHITE RIDLEY: I have of course given my best consideration to the recommendations in the reports of the Commission, but under existing circumstances the Government can make no promise of legislation during the present session.

FOOT AND MOUTH DISEASE—CATTLE IMPORTATION TO IRELAND.

MR. FIELD (Dublin, St. Patrick): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Agriculture whether he can state how many outbreaks of foot and mouth disease have occurred among cattle in Great Britain, and the number of animals so affected, and what precautions are being taken to prevent infection: and whether the permission to import cattle into Ireland has been suspended.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. LONG, Liverpool, West Derby): Three outbreaks of foot and mouth disease have, I regret to state, occurred in the neighbourhood of Yarmouth. The number of animals actually affected is thirty-six. The precautions prescribed by the Diseases of Animals Act and the Foot and Mouth Order of 1895 are being carried out by the local authorities acting in conjunction with the staff of lay and veterinary inspectors, which was dispatched to the spot immediately on the occurrence of the first outbreak. In addition we have prohibited the movement of animals into or out of a scheduled district or along any highway therein, and have imposed special restrictions in the areas immediately surrounding the infected places. I understand that the Irish authorities have suspended the importation of cattle into Ireland for the time being. The situation is a very grave one, but if agriculturists generally will support the efforts we are making, we may yet be able to prevent the disastrous results which must ensue if the disease becomes epidemic throughout the country.

VETERINARY ADVISERS OF THE BOARD OF AGRICULTURE.

MR. JOHNSON-FERGUSON (Leicestershire, Loughborough): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Agriculture, whether he is aware that the number of veterinary advisers to the Board of Agriculture has been reduced during the past year, by death or retirement, from three to one; and, whether, considering the important nature of the duties performed by these officials, it is his intention to fill up the vacancies as soon as possible.

MR. LONG: In addition to the Veterinary Inspectors at the Ports, whose services have always been drawn upon in times of emergency, we have now at our entire disposal the services of six veterinary inspectors in addition to the chief and assistant veterinary officers, as against the three veterinary officers employed prior to the retirement of Sir George Brown in 1894. A vacancy has arisen in the position of assistant veterinary officer which will be filled without unnecessary delay, but in the meantime we have no difficulty in making provision for the work which requires to be done.

PASSENGER VESSEL REGULATIONS—WRECK OF THE "MOHEGAN."

SIR CAMERON GULL: I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether his attention has been called to the following recommendations of the Court of Inquiry upon the wreck of the "Mohegan":—(1) That they were strongly of opinion that when a vessel was lighted with electric light she ought at night to have lighted and in an easily accessible position oil lamps to take the place of the ship's lamps in case of failure of the electric light. (2) That they were also strongly of opinion that a lifeboat should be swung out on each side of a passenger vessel while navigating the English Channel. And, if so, whether he has taken or proposes to take any and what steps in the direction indicated by the Court of Inquiry.

*THE PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF TRADE (Mr. RITCHIE, Croydon): Yes, sir. My attention has been called to the recommendations referred to in the question, and they have received attentive consideration. The regulations of the Board of Trade require vessels fitted with electric side and masthead lights to be also supplied with oil lamps for use in case of failure of the electric system. These regulations were fully complied with in the case of the "Mohegan," but the oil lamps (which were trimmed and ready for use) were submerged and rendered inaccessible soon after the vessel struck; and if they had been lighted they would have been extinguished. The statutory rules as to life saving appliances do not require a lifeboat to be swung out on each side of a passenger vessel while navigating the English Channel, and the Board of Trade are advised that under certain conditions such a requirement would be neither prudent nor practicable.

LONG EATON LEVEL RAILWAY CROSSING.

SIR WALTER FOSTER: I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether his attention has been called to an inquest held recently on a woman killed at the level crossing at Long Eaton Station on the Midland Railway, and to the verdict of the jury which described the crossing as most dangerous, and referred to the very inadequate means for passengers wishing to get across the line; whether he is aware that several thousand persons use the crossing daily, and that representations have been frequently made to the Midland Railway authorities by the District Council of Long Eaton as to the urgent need of a safer method of crossing the line; and whether he will communicate with the Midland Railway Company with a view of obtaining safer accommodation for the public.

MR. RITCHIE: Yes, Sir. The Board of Trade communicated with the Midland

Company on the 5th of January, but have not yet received an answer. The company have been pressed for a reply. The hon. Gentleman is no doubt aware that there is a footbridge which pedestrians can avail themselves of.

WORKMEN'S TRAINS.

MR. WOODS (Essex, Walthamstow): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade if it is the intention of the Government in dealing with the question of the housing of the working classes to take into consideration the necessity of amending the Cheap Trains Act, 1883, so as to make provision for an ample service of workmen's trains at cheap fares between the central stations and the outer suburbs of all large towns, and thus remove one of the difficulties experienced in housing the working classes.

MR. RITCHIE: Large additional facilities have been afforded recently in the matter of workmen's trains, and I am not satisfied that the present law is insufficient to secure the desirable object referred to by the hon Member.

CATTLE TRANSIT IN THE NORTH OF IRELAND.

MR. FIELD: I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he is aware that on the Great Northern line, Ireland, it is the practice to detain cattle loaded at Kells or Navan for Drogheda until all the consignments for Belfast are taken away; and whether the Board of Trade can prevent, as a preferential treatment to consignors, the sending of live stock to the more distant terminus in the north.

MR. RITCHIE: I have communicated with the Great Northern Railway Company (Ireland), and they inform me that their arrangements for the conveyance of cattle from the fairs at Navan and Kells are framed so as to best meet the requirements of the traffic, and that the stock which is going the long distance to Belfast and is intended for shipment the same night has necessarily to be loaded and sent away earlier than that which is going the shorter distance to Drogheda. They also state that the cattle for Drogheda is despatched at a proper time, having regard to its delivery to them and the completion of a train load, and that they have received no complaints from any of the dealers or shippers. If any complaint on the subject is pressed, the jurisdiction to deal with it would appear to be with the Railway Commissioners.

FREE RAILWAY PASSES FOR IRISH MEMBERS.

MR. FIELD: I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he is aware that in the British colonies members of the legislature have free travelling on railways; and whether he is prepared to consider the advisability of extending this regulation to Irish Members of Parliament.

MR. RITCHIE: It would be useless for me, even if I deemed such an arrangement desirable, to consider the matter, as I have no power to give effect to my consideration should it result as desired by the honourable Gentleman.

MR. FIELD: Perhaps the right hon. Gentleman will use his influence with the railway companies.

CASE OF EMANUEL WILLIAMS.

SIR JOSEPH LEESE (Lancashire, Accrington): I beg to ask the Financial Secretary to the Treasury whether his attention has been called to the circumstances under which Mr. Emanuel Williams, a chartered accountant of high standing in Manchester, was on the 19th of September last arrested and kept in prison for five days under a warrant granted, at the instance of the Treasury, by a magistrate of the Bullingdon Division of Oxfordshire, charging him with having written and sent to the Rev. George Moore five letters demanding with menaces certain money and a valuable security; whether the Treasury before giving instructions for a warrant to be applied for caused inquiry to be made as to the circumstances under which the alleged threatening letters were written, or whether they relied merely on the letters; and also whether they caused inquiry to be made as to Mr. Williams's character and position, with a view to ascertaining whether he could be depended upon to answer a summons; whether he is aware that on the hearing of the case the prosecution withdrew two of the letters; that the prosecutor admitted that he saw no threat in the third; and that with regard to the last letter, upon which the prosecution mainly relied, the presiding magistrate in dismissing the charge said it suggested no course which was not strictly reasonable and honourable for anyone to have taken; and further stated that the magistrates regretted very much that Mr. Williams had been put to annoyance and inconvenience, and to the temporary deprivation of his liberty; and whether the Treasury intend to reimburse Mr. Williams the costs he has incurred in defending himself.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL (Sir R. WEBSTER, Isle of Wight): The answer to the first and third paragraphs of my honourable and learned friend's question is in the affirmative. As regards the second, before application was made for a warrant, full inquiries were made. I have most carefully considered the whole of the circumstances of the case, and there is in my opinion no ground for suggesting that the Treasury should reimburse Mr. Williams the costs he has incurred in defending himself.

GALWAY POSTAL SERVICE.

MR. O'MALLEY (Galway, Connemara): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether he is aware that great inconvenience is occasioned by the late delivery of letters in Carna, Letterfrack, and other districts in Connemara, and if steps will be taken to cause an earlier and more punctual delivery of letters in those districts; and whether he will institute a Sunday delivery of letters in Carna.

MR. HANBURY: Considering the exposed nature of the roads and the bad weather in the winter, there does not appear to have been avoidable delay in the recent working of the mail cars. The present arrangements involve an expenditure much in excess of the revenue, and increased expense for affording an accelerated service is not warranted. In view of the deficiency of revenue a Sunday post to Carna would not be justified.

TELEGRAPH DELAYS AT OLDHAM.

MR. RUNCIMAN (Oldham): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether the Postmaster General has received representations from the Oldham Chamber of Commerce as to the serious delays experienced in telegraphic communication between Oldham and London and the South of England; what steps are being taken to remedy this grievance; whether, in view of the great commercial importance of Oldham, the Postmaster General has contemplated the necessity for direct telegraphic facilities being provided between Oldham and London; and whether it is the only town in England with a population of over 140,000 which is not provided with a direct wire to London.

MR. HANBURY: The Postmaster General is not aware that there is any general delay in the transmission of Oldham telegrams. He has been giving very careful attention to the question of providing direct telegraphic facilities between Oldham and London, but he finds that the number of telegrams is not sufficient to justify a direct wire. The answer to the hon. Member's last question is in the affirmative. The point to be considered is, however, not the population but the traffic.

KILDARE POSTAL ARRANGEMENTS.

MR. FIELD: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether he is aware that much delay is experienced in the delivery of letters to Straffan, Celbridge, and Kildare; and whether he will cause inquiry to be made and a quicker system of delivery adopted.

MR. HANBURY: The hon. Member presumably refers to applications which have been made for an additional delivery of letters at Straffan beginning at about 10 o'clock at night. These applications have been fully considered, but inasmuch as there is already a delivery commencing as late as 7.50 p.m., the later delivery asked for would be of service to very few residents in the neighbourhood, and the Postmaster General does not consider that such a delivery would be warranted. At Celbridge there have, it appears, been some slight delays in commencing the evening delivery, but arrangements are about to be made for ensuring greater punctuality in future. The Postmaster General is not aware that much delay has taken place in the delivery of letters at Kildare, but he will have inquiry made on the subject.

PAUPER REMOVALS IN IRELAND.

MR. FIELD: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether his attention has been called to the grievance endured by the City of Dublin owing to the absence of any law of removal in the case of paupers and pauper lunatics such as exists in England and Wales; and whether, in view of the fact that large numbers of those classes are chargeable on the rates of the City of Dublin and have no connection with it, he will consider the advisability of assimilating the law of the two countries, and so enable the charge of such to rest on their respective districts within Ireland.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL FOR IRELAND (MR. ATKINSON, Londonderry, N.) (for MR. G. W. BALFOUR): The suggestion in the question is that the English law of settlement should be applied to Ireland. The Chief Secretary is not aware that any representations have been made to the Local Government Board in favour of such a proposal, and he is unable to advise that it should be adopted.

SALE OF EXPLOSIVES IN IRELAND.

MR. J. P. FARRELL (Cavan, W.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether any new regulation has recently been issued to vendors of explosives to refuse to sell powder to road contractors for blasting purposes unless the person applying has procured a red license; and whether, seeing that it was the custom formerly to give powder on any magistrate's order, this regulation can be withdrawn and the former state of things reverted to.

MR. ATKINSON (for MR. G. W. BALFOUR): No new regulation has been issued of the nature mentioned in the question.

LICENCES TO CARRY ARMS IN IRELAND.

MR. J. P. FARRELL: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland on what grounds a licence to carry arms has been refused to Mr. James O'Neill, vice-chairman of Longford Board of Guardians; whether he is aware that three magistrates, including the High Sheriff for 1900 for County Longford, recommended him as a fit and proper person to receive a licence; and whether, seeing that he stated he only required the gun to destroy vermin on his land, an order will now be given to Mr. Kilkelly, R.M., to issue the necessary certificate forthwith.

MR. ATKINSON (for Mr. G. W. BALFOUR): The discretion of granting or withholding a licence to carry firearms is vested by law in the resident magistrate, who is the licensing officer, and it would be contrary to the invariable practice to disclose the reasons which actuated him, in the exercise of his discretion, in refusing to grant a licence in any particular case. Mr. Kilkelly has no recollection that the fact is as alleged in the second paragraph, and as regards the third paragraph the matter is not one calling for the interference of the Government.

IRISH LAND COURT RETURNS.

MR. MAURICE HEALY (Cork): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland if he will state down to what year returns have up to the present been made out for the Land Judge under the Rules made pursuant to Sec. 40 of the Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1896, of estates to which that section in the first instance applies; how far the returns already presented have been gone through by the Judge in the regular course; how many requests have been issued by the Judge to the Land Commission under the section; how many reports have been made by the Land Commission pursuant to such requests; how many estates have been offered for sale to the tenants under the section and accepted by the tenants, and what the number of such tenants is, and the total amount of the purchase money; how many estates have been actually vested in the tenants under the section, and what the number of such tenants is; and whether the offer of sale to the tenants has been refused by them in any and what cases.

MR. ATKINSON (for Mr. G. W. BALFOUR): Returns, such as referred to, have been prepared so far as they relate to cases in which receivers were appointed prior to 1891, and all the estates comprised in these returns have been dealt with by the Land Judge with a view to their being sold under the 40th section, or of determining whether they were estates to which the provisions of that section apply. The return for the period between 1891 and 1896 is in course of preparation and is almost complete. The number of requests lodged with the Land Commission under the section is 154; the number of estates in which the Land Commission have made their reports to the Land Judge is 127; the number of estates in which orders of the Land Judge have been lodged with the Land Commission is 81; the Land Commission have made offers in the case of 74 estates to 1,247 tenants, of whom 1,101 have accepted these offers, and 146 have not accepted them, while advances amounting to £230,197 have been made to 802 tenants for the purchase of their holdings on 54 estates. In the case of seven estates where the Orders of the Land Judge have been received and where offers have not been made, the offer are in course of preparation and some of them will be made within a few days. The total amount of the purchase money in the case of the 146 tenants who have not accepted the offers made to them is £49,778.

BALDWIN'S ESTATE.

MR. MAURICE HEALY: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland if he will state the date when the request by the Land Judge for a report under Section 40 of the Land Act of 1896, in the case of Baldwin's estate, was lodged with the Land Commission, and also the date when the valuation of the estate by the Land Commission for the purpose of the report was completed; what has caused the delay by the Land Commission in reporting to the Land Judge; and when their report will be presented.

MR. ATKINSON (for Mr. G. W. BALFOUR): The request was lodged with the Land Commission on 8th April, 1899, and the valuation of the estate was completed on 24th August. The report of the Land Commissioners was forwarded to the Land Judge on the 15th ultimo.

FREEMANTLE AS A PORT OF CALL FOR AUSTRALIAN MAIL STEAMERS.

MR. HOGAN: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether his department has any objection to Fremantle being made a port of call for the Australian mail steamers now that this harbour is capable of accommodating the largest steamers.

MR. HANBURY: The only objection is the slight loss of time in the passage to and from the Australian ports beyond Western Australia. This objection the Postmaster General does not consider serious, and at the request of the Australian Governments collectively, power was taken in the present mail contracts to require this change of the contractors on allowing them additional time for the détour. The Colonies are not now unanimous in desiring the change, and the Postmaster General understands that all save Western Australia object to the slight extension of time demanded by the contractors. The matter is still under consideration.

MEMBERS' ROOMS AT THE HOUSE.

MR. HARWOOD: I beg to ask the First Commissioner of Works whether, especially in view of announced official changes, it is possible to improve the very inadequate accommodation now given to members in the reading, tea, and smoke rooms.

THE FIRST COMMISSIONER OF WORKS (MR. AKERS DOUGLAS, Kent, St. Augustine's): I have not lost sight of the question of the improvement of the accommodation in this House, but I am not yet in a position to make any detailed statement.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

*MR. D. A. THOMAS: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury if he can now state what he proposes shall be the course of business in the House immediately after the debate on the Address in reply to the Gracious Speech from the Throne is concluded.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: The first business of substance after the Address is concluded will be the introduction by my hon. friend the Under Secretary for War of supplementary Army Estimates connected with the war, and in introducing those estimates he will make the statement so anxiously expected both by the House and the country upon the questions of home defence, which are agitating, or at all events deeply interesting, the public mind at the present moment. I shall probably have to ask the House, before entering upon that business, to pass the ordinary sessional rule with regard to Supply, and I shall also have to ask them to give the Government facilities, with regard to financial business alone, in order that we may get through our necessary financial work before 31st March.

MR. CHANNING (Northamptonshire, E.): Is it intended to take Tuesdays up to 31st March?

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: We shall have to ask facilities with regard to Tuesdays, but there is one Tuesday which I notice it is intended should be devoted to a motion connected with an inquiry into the raid. My right hon. friend the Secretary for the Colonies yesterday declined to deal with that subject in his speech, saying that he would reserve what he had to say for that motion to be brought forward. Under those circumstances it would be highly improper that the Government should impose any obstacle in the way of that motion being considered. I ought, however, to guard myself by saying that it may be necessary—it depends on the state of our financial work—to take a morning sitting on that Tuesday.

MR. T. M. HEALY: Are you going to take Wednesdays?

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: No.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE (QUEEN'S SPEECH—MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: Before moving the first motion which stands on the Paper in my name, I wish to qualify a statement I made in answer to the hon. and learned Gentleman the Member for North Louth, who asked me whether we proposed to take Wednesdays. We do not propose to take Wednesdays, but as there is financial business which must be passed before the 31st of March, it is conceivable, though I believe it is extremely improbable, that we shall have to ask for facilities with regard to Wednesdays. I say that in order to guard against any charge of breach of faith, should that unexpected contingency arise.

Ordered, That the proceedings on the Address in answer to Her Majesty's Speech have precedence this day and to-morrow of the Notices of Motions and of the other Orders of the Day.—(Mr. A. J. Balfour.)

SITTINGS OF THE HOUSE (EXEMPTION FROM THE STANDING ORDER.)

Ordered, That the proceedings on the Address, if under discussion at Twelve o'clock this night, be not interrupted under the Standing Order sittings of the House.—(Mr. A. J. Balfour.)

NEW BILLS.

LIQUOR TRAFFIC LOCAL VETO (SCOTLAND).

Bill to give the ratepayers the direct control of the liquor traffic in their respective areas, ordered to be brought in by Mr. John Wilson (Govan), Mr. Colville, Mr. Cameron Corbett, Mr. Souttar, Sir William Dunn, Mr. Hedderwick, Mr. M'Leod, and Dr. Clark.

LIQUOR TRAFFIC LOCAL VETO (SCOTLAND) BILL.

"To give the ratepayers the direct control of the liquor traffic in their respective areas," presented, and read the first time; to be read a second time upon Wednesday, 2nd May, and to be printed. [Bill 63.]

VAGRANTS' CHILDREN PROTECTION.

Bill for the further protection of the Children of Vagrants, ordered to be brought in by Mr. Drage, Earl Percy, Mr. Birrell, and Mr. John Burns.

VAGRANTS' CHILDREN PROTECTION BILL.

"For the further protection of the Children of Vagrants," presented, and read the first time; to be read a second time upon Monday next, and to be printed. [Bill 64.]

VOLUNTARY SCHOOLS (GRANTS IN AID).

Bill to enable School Boards in certain county boroughs to make grants in aid of efficient Voluntary Schools; and for other purposes, ordered to be brought in by Mr. Lawrence, Sir James Fergusson, Mr. Warr, Sir John William Maclure, Mr. Tomlinson, Mr. David MacIver, and Sir George Fardell.

VOLUNTARY SCHOOLS (GRANTS IN AID) BILL.

"To enable School Boards in certain county boroughs to make Grants in Aid of efficient Voluntary Schools; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; to be read a second time upon Wednesday, 2nd May, and to be printed. [Bill 65.]

REGISTRATION OF ELECTORS.

Bill to amend the Law relating to the qualification and Registration of Electors at any election in England and Wales ordered to be brought in by Mr. M'Kenna, Sir William Harcourt, Mr. Samuel Evans, Mr. Brynmor Jones, Mr. Alfred Thomas, and Mr. D. A. Thomas.

REGISTRATION OF ELECTORS BILL.

"To amend the Law relating to the Qualification and Registration of Electors at any election in England and Wales," presented, and read the first time; to be read a second time upon Monday, 19th February, and to be printed. [Bill 68.]

LAND VALUES TAXATION (SCOTLAND).

Bill for the Taxation for local purposes of Land Values in burghs in Scotland, ordered to be brought in by Sir Charles Cameron, Mr. Caldwell, Mr. John Wilson, Mr. Provand, Dr. Clark, and Mr. Colville.

LAND VALUES TAXATION (SCOTLAND) BILL.

"For the taxation for local purposes of Land Values in burghs in Scotland," presented, and read the first time; to be read a second time upon Wednesday, 21st March, and to be printed. [Bill 66.]

LIQUOR TRAFFIC LOCAL VETO (WALES).

Bill to enable owners and occupiers in Wales to have effectual control over the Liquor Traffic, ordered to be brought in by Mr. Herbert Roberts, Mr. Brynmor Jones, Mr. Alfred Thomas, Mr. Lloyd-George, Mr. Herbert Lewis, and Mr. Griffith.

LIQUOR TRAFFIC LOCAL VETO (WALES) BILL.

"To enable owners and occupiers in Wales to have effectual control over the Liquor Traffic," presented, and read the first time; to be read a second time upon Wednesday, 2nd May, and to be printed. [Bill 67.]

ADDRESS IN ANSWER TO HER MAJESTY'S MOST GRACIOUS SPEECH.

[SIXTH DAY'S DEBATE.]

Order read for resuming Adjourned Debate on Amendment [30th January] to Question [30th January], "That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, as followeth:—

Most Gracious Sovereign,

We, Your Majesty's most 'dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Captain Pretymun.)

And which Amendment was—

"At the end of the Question, to add the words, 'But we humbly express our regret at the want of knowledge, foresight, and judgment displayed by Your Majesty's advisers, alike, in their conduct of South African affairs since 1895, and in their preparations for the war now proceeding.'"—(Lord Edmond Fitzmaurice.)

Question again proposed—"That those words be there added."

Debate resumed.

*MR. ASQUITH (Fifeshire, E.): I am aware that the initiation and continuance of this debate is regarded by some people, whose judgment is entitled to respect, with great disfavour. It is even represented as the device of a factious Opposition, anxious by one and the same expedient to cloak its own domestic dissensions and to create in the eyes of the world the appearance of a divided nation. I repudiate that charge with all the emphasis that I can command, and in support of that repudiation I am not afraid to appeal to the experience of the last three months. The times have been trying; confident hope has had to give way to bitter and reiterated disappointment; the temper and the mettle of our people has been put to the severest test that any of us can recall. During those anxious weeks the voice of party has been stilled, and we of the Opposition have done what in us lay, by silence or, where it seemed fitting and necessary, by speech, to the best of our ability to maintain the unity of the national front and the height of the national resolve. I am not claiming any credit for us on that account, and I trust and believe that the party opposite, in a like case, would have done the same by us, had we for the time being been the trustees of the national fortunes. But it is not a little singular that the accusations to which I am referring come with the greatest vehemence from quarters from which less than a month ago, in the very darkest hour of the war, a torrent of denunciation was being daily poured, without stint, without scruple, and I will add without shame, upon our statesmen in the Cabinet, and even upon our generals in the field. In that noisy demonstration of panic and clamour I am glad to remember that not a single Member of the Opposition condescended to take part. We are therefore, I think, entitled to the presumption that in raising this debate we have not been animated by a reckless spirit of partisanship, and that we have not forgotten the obligations of patriotic reserve. I will go further and say, as my right hon. friend the Member for West Monmouthshire said last night, that if we had not raised the debate we should have been abdicating the functions which it is the primary business of the Opposition to discharge. What was the situation in which the country found itself when Parliament met? We had been engaged for over three months in a war which, for the reversal of expectations, for the bewildering exhibition of inexplicable strategy, and for the almost unbroken series of reverses and disasters, has no parallel in our history since the days of the administration of Lord North. And, while this disquieting and baffling spectacle was unfolding itself before the eyes of the people, what was the attitude and what have been the declarations of Her Majesty's Ministers? We have had alarms and excursions at Leicester; we have had rambling apologies at Manchester; and we had, only a week ago—as lately as the first night of the session—declarations from the two leading Ministers of the Crown in the two Houses of Parliament hopelessly at issue and irreconcilable one with the other on elementary and yet vital questions of fact. I appeal to any candid and fair-judging man—whether he sits in this House or whether he walks the streets—if in such a situation it was not both the right and the duty of the Opposition to challenge the Executive Government to give an account of their stewardship. I agree entirely with what my right hon. friend said last night that the course which we have taken is in strict accordance with the principles of the Constitution as they have been understood and practised by all the great statesmen of either party in the past. I know that the British Constitution is for the moment out of favour, not only with professors of poetry and the melancholy tribe of idealists, but out of favour with the leading Members of Her Majesty's Government. It is a melancholy state of things when the Prime Minister and the Constitution fall out with one another; but, as Lord Salisbury has already made a public apology to his other bête noire—the Treasury—I think we may cherish the hope that before many days are over he will again don the white sheet, and, in the same handsome fashion, “make it up” with the British Constitution. The hon. Gentleman the Under Secretary for War, in his brilliant and powerful speech the other night, appealed to us in his closing sentences, and spoke of this House by the title of “Mother of Parliaments.” Yes, but before this House enjoyed the privileges of motherhood it was, what it still is, and what I hope it will always continue to be, “The Grand Inquest of the Nation.” Sir, this debate has developed, as it might have been expected to do, differences of opinion as to the apportionment of responsibility for the outbreak of the war. It would be affectation on my part to deny the existence of such differences, though I think when they come to be examined they will be found to be differences not of principle, nor even of policy, but differences for the most part as to the true interpretation of a series of historical events. But I shall imitate the frankness of those who have preceded me, and, as I believe it to be the duty of everybody who rises in debate to support this Amendment, I shall, if the House will permit me, in two or three sentences endeavour to make clear my own position. Speaking to my own constituents in the early days of the month of September, when the negotiations were just reaching their most critical state, and with the information which I then possessed—thinking, I believe, with nine-tenths, nay, I might say 99-100ths, of my fellow-countrymen, that a war such as this was an unthinkable catastrophe—I expressed the opinion that if such a war were to break out it would be a reproach to statesmanship and a calamity to South Africa. I had that opinion then; I hold it still. I do not belong to either of the fashionable schools of fatalism. I do not think that the epithet “inevitable,” in the sense in which it is commonly employed, is any more applicable to the outbreak of this war than it is to the blunders and disasters which have attended its prosecution. I never heard and never read in history of a war which could not have been avoided by the exercise upon both sides of two very commonplace but not very common qualities—good sense and good faith. I say, upon both sides; because if it is true that it takes two to make a quarrel, it is equally true that it may take two to avoid it. I am going to speak my own convictions. I know they are not shared by all those who sit around me. But I wish to affirm two propositions, not as covering the entire ground, or exhausting the case—two propositions to which I should like to appeal for almost general assent. The first proposition is that this war was not intended nor desired by the Government of Great Britain. It is a totally different question whether other steps should have been taken to avoid it; but the absence of any such intention or desire is in my opinion, I would not say a justification, but is the only explanation of the state of military unpreparedness in which we found ourselves. My second proposition—I do not know whether it will meet with an equally general assent—is that this is a war which should and could have been avoided by President Kruger. Proposals were put forward at a very early period in the month of September, and urged upon his acceptance, not only by Her Majesty's Government, but by men belonging to every shade and school of political opinion in this kingdom, as on the one hand perfectly compatible with the maintenance of the independence of his own State, and on the other hand an instalment—a proper and legitimate instalment—of the long-delayed and over-due debt of justice to the British population in the Transvaal. If these proposals had been accepted there would have been no war. They were rejected, and that rejection was followed by demands which were known to be impossible, and intended to be refused, and by the invasion and the annexation of British territory. Mr. Speaker, if I thought that the negotiations carried on by our Government had been a mere cloak and a pretext; if I thought that they had behind them the ulterior, though unavowed, purpose of sapping the independence and paving the way for the annexation of the Transvaal; if I thought, worse than all, that Her Majesty's Government had allowed themselves to become the dupes and the tools, conscious or unconscious, of a gang of interested speculators; why, then, despite the invasion of British territory, despite the loss of British life, I do not think I should have been able to reconcile it with my conscience to vote for a single halfpenny for the further prosecution of this war. But that is not the opinion, I believe, either of the House of Commons or of the great majority of the people of this country. It is because it is not their opinion that, however much many of us may find to criticise and even condemn in the conduct of the negotiations with the Transvaal, we are, as regards the duty and the necessity of carrying on the war, a united Parliament and a united people. Sir, the Colonial Secretary last night put to me and to others this question: "How," he said, "holding the views that you do as to the origin of the war, can you with logic and consistency impeach the knowledge, the foresight, and the judgment of the Government?" I am not embarrassed by the challenge. It is one thing to assert, as I am prepared to do, for the reason I have given to the House, that this war was, in the last resort, forced upon us, and that we can engage in it with clean hands and a clear conscience. It is another and a totally different thing to approve or condone the methods, the temper, and the judgment with which, from time to time, our part in this adventure has been handled and our case presented to the world. For my part, I am prepared to maintain, nor do I think it can be seriously denied, that there have been at various stages from the beginning almost up to the end of these transactions, a demonstrable lack of both insight and foresight. Sir, the House of Commons would be justly indignant with me were I, at this stage of the debate, to travel in detail over familiar and much-trodden ground. I will, therefore, indicate only in the broadest outline two or three of what seem to many of us to be the salient features of the case. In the first place who can deny—does anybody deny?—that the Government, from 1895 down to the present day, has done little or nothing to mitigate, and not a little to intensify, the temper of suspiciousness on the part of the Boers, which has been such a serious and dangerous factor in the whole business? The Boers chafed, as the right hon. Gentleman very justly told us last night—they chafed from the first at the fetters imposed on their restored independence by the Conventions of Pretoria and London. All along they have suspected us of a design of still further curtailing that independence. Sir, I believe from my heart that no responsible statesman in this country ever had any such purpose. But that was all the more reason for not giving that temper of suspicion and distrust any colour or pretext. I won't go over again the story told so often in this debate, of the raid, and the inadequate punishment of those who took part in it; of the inquiry cut short, just at the point, remember, when on the assumption of Imperial complicity, it was convenient and even necessary to stop it; of the public and formal rehabilitation of the chief offender. I say it is impossible for any man who impartially reviews these facts, realising on the one hand the pre-existing and not unnatural temper of the Boer population themselves, and, on the other hand, the ambiguous treatment which that criminal adventure had meted out to it by the Government of this country, to deny that there is one point on which we must necessarily convict the Government of want of foresight and judgment. I pass on to a later date, when we began our negotiations for the redress of the grievances of the Uitlanders. Have we not there also fresh evidence of the same defects? For my part, I think the Government were not only entitled but bound to take up the case of the Uitlanders. I go further, and say that having taken up the case they should have persevered effectually to the end. But they ought to have known, they must have known, when they entered on these negotiations at that time, that they were entering on slippery ground. They knew of the armaments of the Transvaal; to use Sir Alfred Milner's phrase, the Transvaal had been converted into an armed camp. They knew of the defensive treaty between the Transvaal and the Orange Free State, and experience I think shows that the difference between a defensive and an offensive alliance is not so great as the Under Secretary for War supposes. They knew further that we were at a distance of 7,000 miles from the possible scene of action, that two of our colonies were practically denuded of all means of defence, and that mobilisation and transport of troops would take weeks and even months. I have said that in my belief the Government did not desire or intend to go to war, but war, as was now admitted, was always possible. Then why was nothing done, as admittedly nothing was done, to safeguard the territories of our two colonies from this invasion? I will not say much, indeed, I will say nothing, about the negotiations, or about that curious running commentary of speeches by which they were accompanied both in and out of Parliament. That is a topic already sufficiently dealt with. The right hon. gentleman's despatches and speeches are now the property of the recording angel of history. Litera scripta manet; what would he not give for the chance of editing them to-day?

Mr. Asquith.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES (MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN, Birmingham, W.): I would not alter a word.

*MR. ASQUITH: If I were in the right hon. Gentleman's place I would give a great deal to have the chance of undotting some of the i's, of uncrossing some of the t's, of erasing an epithet here, and expunging a metaphor there. I pass from that subject to the preparations that were made for war when war had become probable and even imminent. It is not necessary at this stage of the debate to labour the point. One of the most useful results of this debate has been that the pleas, the excuses, and the apologies of the Government have, one after another, been thrown away. The theory of necessary ignorance was followed by the theory of inevitable accident. Both are now abandoned. The Under Secretary for War in his admirable speech admitted errors of judgment which were patent to all the world with a candour which made all the more impressive and convincing the answers to the charges which he was able to give. The Colonial Secretary repeated the admissions. The First Lord of the Treasury has told us that the disasters and reverses of this campaign could be traced to the initial blunder the "unhappy entanglement at Ladysmith." What was the origin of that unhappy entanglement? I hope the House has read the White Paper which contains the correspondence with the Government of Natal, but in case it has escaped the attention of any one, I will trouble the House with two of the documents that appeared in that book. Early in May the Governor of Natal had informed the High Commissioner that the Ministers of Natal were nervous at the prospect of war. The Governor had told the acting Prime Minister he had no reason to anticipate hostilities, but if the British Government found it necessary to advance fair and reasonable demands, the Natal Government ought to give the British Government unwavering support. The Minister replied that he would gladly do as the Governor suggested, but he feared the consequences to Natal if the British Government drew back after all. On May 25th Sir Alfred Milner telegraphed to the Secretary of State:—

"I have telegraphed following to the Governor:—'You can tell the Minister from me that it is out of the question that any invasion of Natal should be tolerated by Her Majesty's Government.' Such an event is highly improbable, I think, but Natal would be defended with the whole force of the Empire."

On May 28th, a most important date, the Secretary of State sent a telegram to the High Commissioner, in which he said: "I approve of your message to the Governor of Natal referred to in your telegram of May 25." That meant that the Secretary of State, on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, confirmed the assurance given to the Ministers of Natal that the invasion of that colony would be resisted by the whole force of the Empire. There is the secret of the unhappy entanglement of Ladysmith. I should like to know, and the country is entitled to know, whether the Colonial Secretary consulted the War Office before he gave that assurance. Of course, from what we now know, the first thing the War Office would have said was, "It is a mad pledge. We cannot defend Natal. The whole of Northern Natal must be exposed." What happened? The Ministers of Natal, relying upon that pledge, were very indignant when Laing's Nek was abandoned; they were indignant when Newcastle was abandoned; and even the occupation of Glencoe and Dundee did not satisfy their demands. It was impossible for the Government, after giving an assurance of that kind, to retire from Ladysmith and leave the whole of Northern Natal at the mercy of an invading force. I pass with a sense of relief to the present time. The position at this moment has been described by the Prime Minister as a position of humiliation. I do not cavil at the word, but I venture to say, and here I think I shall have the general agreement of the House, that there is no ground in anything that has happened in the past, or in anything that we can contemplate at present, for the croakings of pessimism, or for the shivering fits of panic. The Colonial Secretary, in an eloquent passage of his speech last night, enumerated the resources still unexhausted, still unimpaired, which this country has at its disposal. I will only refer to two. First and foremost—it is the thing, I think, which strikes the imagination of us all—there is the valour and discipline, doubted beforehand by not a few critics, but abundantly demonstrated by the war, of the common soldier. Politicians and generals may have set him an impossible task. He has shown that the word "impossible" has for him no meaning, and he has exhibited qualities which have not only kindled the grateful pride of his countrymen, but have conquered the reluctant admiration of the whole world. Next, in the spontaneous and enthusiastic loyalty and support of our self-governing colonies we have been made to realise—and this, perhaps, is the greatest compensation, if there is any compensation, for the war—that our Empire is not a name or a sentiment merely, but that it is a fact and a force. The word "Imperialism" has been bandied to and fro, now as a symbol, now as a missile, in the course of this debate. In my judgment, Imperialism is a word of good or of bad omen according to the way in which it is defined. It is a word which has no attraction for me, or, I believe, for the vast majority of my countrymen, except as an expression, not of a policy of menace, of aggression, of subjugation, but of an ideal which can only be realised by the loyal co-operation for common purposes of free and self-governing communities. But great as are our resources, greater still is the responsibility of those who direct them. The Colonial Secretary challenged us last night to state our view of the end that was to be attained. I speak only for myself, but I believe I represent the feeling of many other hon. Members when I say that the end to be aimed at is, first and foremost, that you should have, not a patched up, but a durable peace; next, that it must be such a settlement as will, at any rate, safeguard our colonies against the risk of further invasion or menace; further, that it must secure for both races throughout South Africa equal rights; and lastly, but not less important, the guiding principle being not superiority but equality, it must not replace the ascendancy of one race by the ascendancy of another. The right hon. Gentleman spoke of an inherent, and as he seemed to suggest ineradicable, antagonism between the ideas and aspirations of the Boers and the Britons. For my part, I believe that antagonism to be the artificial creation, the transient and removable result of accident and circumstance. I look forward to the time when at the end of this calamitous strife Dutch and British, forgetting their animosities, bound together by ties of common interest and mutual respect, enjoying in like measure both the discipline and the privileges of freedom, will be found living and labouring side by side under the shelter of equal laws in a union which no man can put asunder.

Mr. Asquith.

MR. ELLIOT (Durham): My excuse, Sir, for rising is to say that I deeply regret from the bottom of my heart that this country has become involved in war with the South African Republic. I am not going so far as some hon. members, who assert that it will produce not only disaster to the Transvaal, to the Orange Free State, and the whole of South Africa, but to the whole of the British Empire as well. I am bound to say that in order to avoid this war I would have gone much further in the direction of conciliation, and possibly in the way of compromise, to have achieved such a result as would have enabled the two peoples to live side by side happy and prosperous. We were looking forward in the contemplation of peace, in October, before one drop of blood had been shed and before the ultimatum had been issued, but our hopes were doomed to disappointment. I am not going back into the past; I am not going to raise any fresh discussion upon the manner in which the negotiations were conducted, upon the merits of our diplomacy, or the statesmanship exhibited by the Government before the war. What I feel we ought to do now, in the House of Commons, is to realise the position in which we find ourselves. Nobody deprecates more than I do the commencement and the continuance of this deadly strife, but the contest is upon us. In my opinion the struggle was forced on us by the Boers, but whatever may be our views as to how the war arose, the question immediately before us is, how do we stand now? Is it not essential to our future position in South Africa, as well as to our position in the world, that victory to our arms should be thorough and complete? Sir, I cannot conceive anything more disastrous than an incomplete success. Because what would that mean? You would have gained in your desire to govern in South Africa, not a democratic Parliament, but a party animated by Dutch feeling; and, with a foreign Power in close proximity, your position would have been infinitely worse than anything we have yet seen. Considering, then, the state of affairs as it now exists, it behoves us to make our victory final and complete. I think the Government would be very unwise to hold their hands in the event of our achieving some successes. We must all feel that in the struggle now going on it is to decide which of the two is the stronger—Briton or Boer. The issue must provide no uncertain answer. I say that as much for the good of the Boers themselves as for the good of South Africa. Now, Sir, I am not going into the military considerations and plans that were laid before the war; but I do say, as a humble observer of events, that when the Government and the War Department are censured as if they had displayed weakness, or incapacity, for my part I think that so far from that being the case, the indications and the facts point to the contrary conclusion.

Until war broke out I had no idea whatever of the military strength of our country. It was said, not so very long ago, that we could not put a vast army in the field such as our Continental friends are able to do; but now we have it in evidence that within a period of three months of the outbreak of the war, we had sent across the sea 180,000 men, and that before many more weeks are over we shall have a force in South Africa of nearly 200,000 men. I say that a military department which can establish a record like that is worthy not of censure, but the highest praise. There is no country in Europe which can see without surprise the enormous resources at our command. To talk, therefore, of the slowness of our organisation and the incapacity of our War Department—when within a very few weeks of the war breaking out the men who, only the other day, marched out from Knightsbridge barracks, are now storming the heights on the Modder River or across the Tugela—is so much idle nonsense. It is a military feat of the most remarkable kind, and exhibits the truth that our military strength is far greater than many of us had dreamed of. I must say that having spoken after the right hon. Gentleman the late Home Secretary, who has just addressed us, and following on the speech of the hon. Gentleman the Member for the Berwick Division, I fail to see why it is they take such a step as that of supporting a vote of censure at the present time. The hon. Gentleman the Member for the Berwick Division seems to me, to use a well-worn phrase, to have “found salvation” in the speech of my right hon. friend the First Lord of the Treasury at Manchester. After reading that speech, I am bound to say that I fail to find there the terrible things imputed to it. There are in the speech itself none of the terrible atrocities attributed to it by commentators in the press. I think the original text of the speech has been almost entirely concealed, if not wholly obliterated, by the efforts of these commentators. One of them went so far as to say that the right hon. Gentleman had professed himself absolutely indifferent to the interests of the Empire. This, I say, is not fair comment, especially in view of the extraordinary feeling of excitement of the time. It is only fair—to employ a legal simile in reference to this criticism of the right hon. Gentleman—to state not only what the prisoner at the bar says, but what he does; and I repeat that to say that the right hon. Gentleman and the other members of the Government are indifferent to the best interests of the Empire at a crisis like this, when they are making greater efforts than before, and have accomplished the organisation and despatch of a military force unprecedented in the history of the country, is simply criminal. The newspapers which have suggested that our leading Cabinet Ministers are triflers are the critics who are weakening us in the face of the world. I am at a loss to know what conceivable purpose can be gained by pressing this matter to a division. We are all agreed as to the policy which must be pursued. The work that has to be done is work which any Government would have to carry out—namely, to carry on the war to a successful end. Let us show the world that we are at one. I have no sort of qualm of conscience in the slightest degree in supporting the Government or with voting any number of millions of money or any number of thousands of men for which they may ask in order to bring this war to a satisfactory and rapid conclusion. It is eminently desirable, if it can be attained, that the crowning victory should be speedily achieved. We see the state of affairs abroad. It is not that the country is in danger, as some have asserted, but we are within measurable distance of a position of the very greatest difficulty. This and many other reasons make me feel from the bottom of my heart that the crisis is a terribly real crisis. That being so, I do think that we must all with no uncertain voice support the Government in the division lobby to-night.

*CAPTAIN NORTON (Newington, W.): My main object in taking part in this debate is to make my position perfectly clear with regard to the vote I am called upon to record. Nobody who has followed the course of this debate can have failed to observe the desire on the part of hon. Gentlemen opposite to fix upon us the stigma of a want of patriotism. What would have been said by them, and by nine out of every ten of the electors of this country, at such a crisis as the present, when the people of this country are smarting under a sense of humiliation caused by a carelessness not less culpable than incompetence on the part of the Ministry with reference to the conduct of affairs in South Africa, if we, from a fear of being stamped as unpatriotic, or from a thought that we should incur the disapproval of a certain section of our supporters, were to hesitate to do what is manifestly our duty? We should deserve to be banished for ever from public life.

With reference to the Amendment before the House, I ask whether, since it applies only to the conduct of affairs in South Africa and the state of preparation for the war, there is a single gentleman on that side of the House who could not conscientiously walk into the lobby with us? I ask in the same way whether we or the great majority of Members on this side of the House are not absolutely and completely at one with reference to the prosecution of this war to a successful issue? That being so, and seeing that at the present moment the great nations of Europe, envious of our greatness, are anxious to exult over our expected downfall, is it not incumbent on those seated upon that bench to consider the advisability of asking us to go into different lobbies, thereby giving the nations of Europe the impression that we are not absolutely and completely united? As to the negotiations, whether there might not have been greater delicacy, whether greater diplomatic foresight and skill might not have brought about a different result—are not they at the present moment questions of secondary importance? I fully admit there are great temptations from a party point of view, but in my opinion this is no time for placing party above the greatness of the State. But when I come to the second portion of the Amendment, dealing with the state of the preparations of the Government, it is quite a different question.

*SIR CHARLES DILKE (Gloucestershire, Forest of Dean): Hear, hear!

*CAPTAIN NORTON: I am glad the right hon. Baronet cheers that statement, because I was just about to mention that the eloquent and able speech of the Under Secretary of State for War was, after all, nothing but an apologetic speech and did not deal with one fraction of the speech of my right hon. friend in reference to the question of preparation. No Minister has yet touched the question of why the stores and munitions of war were accumulated in Natal at the very worst point.

Mr. Elliot.

We have had no answer with reference to the question of maps. We are told that we could not have ordnance maps of Natal. Those of us who have any experience of the making of maps know perfectly well that to make an ordnance survey of the whole of the theatre of this war would cost not thousands but tens of thousands of pounds, and would occupy a great number of years. But why were not such maps made, with reference to Ladysmith, as could easily and conveniently have been made by Engineer and staff officers, as now exist of the country round about Laing's Nek? Why were not the Modder River and the Tugela River carefully surveyed by competent officers? Such a survey could have been made in a very short time. If this question of maps alone had been seen to it would have made a very great difference with reference to the conduct of the campaign. The excuse of the Prime Minister is that he had not sufficient secret service money. There is another point which bears distinctly upon the want of preparation for the war, and that is the question of guides. Why, when the Government found that war was not only possible but probable, were not a certain number of absolutely reliable guides secured and placed at the disposal of the military authorities, so as to have removed the possibility of our men being led to slaughter as in the case of Magersfontein? Some portion of the responsibility for this war has been cast upon the British Constitution, and the remaining portion has been thrown on the army system. For years past in this House we have been pointing out to the Government what our army system is. It is neither a short service system nor a long service system. It is a hybrid combination, and we have never even had the short service system properly carried out. Two years ago the service members in this House asked this Government to increase the number of battalions to fourteen in order that the link battalion system might be carried out. They also asked for a certain number of batteries of artillery. What was done? They were given a certain proportion, nothing more. It has always been with the service members a question of "Live horse, and you will get grass." When we pointed out that the Militia was from 20,000 to 30,000 short of its numbers last year, no steps were taken to increase its numbers. We were told there was a Militia Reserve of 30,000 men supposed to be available for reinforcing the Militia. Now the reserve is used for the double purpose of filling up the Militia on the one hand, and the Line battalions on the other, which has the result of robbing Peter to pay Paul. The question of keeping in this country at least one Army Corps in a thorough state of preparation has been completely lost sight of. With what result? That we have now, if I may use the word, scratch staffs drawn from all parts of the kingdom, with the result that will always occur when a certain number of individuals not accustomed to work together are suddenly thrown together, there is friction on all hands. The Government claim that they have done their best. But they also attempt to cast a certain amount of responsibility upon the front Opposition Bench. Between 1886 and 1892, when a Conservative Government were in power, was the period when the artillery batteries in this country had their guns reduced from six to four, and the spare horses taken from them. I frankly admit that a short time ago a slight increase was made in the matter of guns. We have pointed out over and over again the want of mounted troops. The Government state that when mounted troops were offered in the first instance by the Colonies they were not accepted because it was thought infantry would be more useful at the outset of the campaign. I hold in my hand a report of a lecture delivered by a very distinguished officer early in July, 1899, and this is what he stated at the Royal United Service Institution. Speaking of the Boers he said that our infantry to master such an enemy must have the assistance of well-trained cavalry—that does not mean yeomanry—to outflank, fight, and follow up. And yet the Government refused this offer on the part of the Colonists. I ask, therefore, whether we on this side of the House are not justified—especially those of us who have been soldiers—in our righteous indignation towards the Government, who have at their backs one of the largest majorities a Government has ever had, and which includes the largest number of military men who ever sat in this House? They pointed out all these difficulties, but the Government proceeded, the very moment they came into office, to enlarge their responsibilities by enlarging the Empire, and without taking proper steps for the defence of that Empire. Two years ago we pointed out that fact, and yet they took no action. I do not complain of their Imperialism. When they were annexing large tracts in the Soudan, in South and West Africa, and in China, and thus extending our Empire, and when at the same time money was pouring into the Exchequer, owing to the admirable measure of the late Chancellor of the Exchequer in regard to the death duties, what did the Government do? Why, they showered millions upon their political supporters, the parsons and the squires, while on the other hand, they neglected to make the defences of the Empire secure, and they failed to provide that which in the opinion of all the military experts in this House was considered necessary for the defence of the Empire. The leader of the House said that no great military authority had ever estimated that we should require more than 50,000 men in South Africa. That may be so, but in my humble capacity in this House last year I pointed out that were the Government to be involved in war in South Africa they would require not one but two army corps, and that if they furnished them complete from our regular Army they would leave this country absolutely bare of properly-trained troops. Is that not absolutely the case? The hon. Gentleman the Under Secretary of State for War, in his apologetic speech, very carefully and very wisely dealt with the position of affairs as they now are in South Africa, but he never attempted to deal with the state of affairs as they were when we met with those disasters. There were only seven batteries of horse artillery and thirty-two batteries of field artillery, or 234 guns. That works out at $2\frac{1}{2}$ guns per thousand, whereas we ought to have had at least double that number. [An HON. MEMBER: We had not so many.] My hon. friend says we had not so many; but be that as it may, we ought not to have less than four guns per thousand men, which is the minimum, according to all authorities, attacking, as we were, positions strongly held by magazine rifles and quick-firing guns not to speak of heavy guns. But what was the defenceless state in which this country was left at that time? Why, we only had left in this country three batteries of horse artillery and fifteen field batteries, making a total of 108 guns. That leaves us in this position—if by any accident a foreign army corps landed on these shores we had not sufficient guns for 40,000 men. I shall be told that in the event of an invasion we should rely upon our Volunteer forces. Every military man in this House knows perfectly well that the Volunteers minus guns or transport would be absolutely useless against an organised force. As regards the state of preparation for the war in South Africa, the Government, knowing as they did the character of the country, does it not seem strange that when they knew they would have to attack positions of this kind they took no opportunity of sending powerful guns of position with a long range and a heavy battering power capable of throwing shells by direct fire? [An HON. MEMBER: "They sent out howitzers."] Yes, but not very long ago, and they were sent since the majority of those disasters have taken place. There is one matter which is of greater importance, and that is the responsibility of the generals. I am anxious that the Government should not shelter themselves behind the military authorities. If it be true that the generals were given an absolutely free hand, I ask whether they were given instructions to take the political situation into consideration with the Colonial authorities upon arriving in Natal. If they were told to do so, then they were certainly not given a free hand, and General White ought to be absolutely absolved from getting into the entanglement at Ladysmith. The right hon. Gentleman has said that they do not minimise the task, but the proof of the pudding is in the eating. They may not minimise the task now, but they certainly did in the past, and their action has met with the disapprobation of the country. They are bound to admit that they received from the military authorities full information. I think they were told that there would be something like 59,000 Boers in the field, and yet, knowing that they would have to operate in a country which was defensively held, and that they would require four or five times the number of our opponents' troops, the Government made no provision for pouring into the country anything like that number. Recently they have resorted to the Volunteer and Yeomanry corps, and I make no complaint of that. No doubt that was done in response to the feeling of the country, but I would also ask the Government to take note that it has made us a laughing-stock in the eyes of the military authorities of Europe. I am not one of those who take a pessimistic view of the forces in South Africa, and I should not be surprised if within a number of months we should secure a number of signal successes. But what we have to consider is what is our position in the face of Europe. There can be no question that every nation in Europe is only waiting for a suitable opportunity in order to insult us. Of course, that may not be the case in reference to the leading statesmen of foreign countries. I have perhaps some advantage in possessing a knowledge of foreign countries, and I venture to assert that in a country not far distant the tone of the press and the feelings which exists among the public is such that very little might land us in war. Does the Government realise that, and are they making the preparations which the country deem to be necessary? What is being done with reference to the fleet—is it being mobilised? We have a Naval Reserve numbering about 28,000 men. It ought to be double that. We know that the weak point of our Navy, which is recognised by all Continental Powers, is the supply of men. Why are these men not called up for training? I believe they are absolutely incompetent so far as the use of modern guns are concerned, for they have been trained upon the old-fashioned guns, and have never in their lives fired modern weapons. Are our battleships and cruisers now being built being hurriedly pushed to completion, and what steps are being taken with reference to the Militia and Volunteers? No doubt we shall have a statement upon that subject shortly, and the Under Secretary of State for War has said he is anxious to have suggestions. There is one suggestion I will venture to put forward. We have in this country and in Ireland some 60,000 police, who are, perhaps, the finest and most magnificent body of men in the world, but they are not trained to the use of arms. I ask whether it would not be a simple matter to arm this force with a long rifle, and train them to the use of it? It could be done by batches in the different counties, and in case of a great national emergency a large number of these could be used in defence of the country, their places being supplied by special constables and others. I have a certain amount of confidence with reference to the state of affairs in South Africa, but I have no confidence with reference to the state of affairs all the world over, and I hope that the Government will take the strongest possible steps in regard to preparation for possible interference by other Powers when this war assumes a certain phase. There can be no doubt that, should an opportunity occur, some other nation will endeavour to have some say with reference to the settlement in South Africa. In my opinion they should have none. As regards South Africa itself, for my part I cannot see why every man in this House should not agree with this Amendment and yet support the Government as to the war. What is the state of affairs? Why, the integrity of the Empire has been tampered with; the colonies of Natal and Cape Colony have been invaded, and the lives and liberties of British subjects are at stake. It is necessary, therefore, that every nation in the world should know that the Briton, wander where he may, is ever followed by the watchful eye and ever protected by the powerful arm of the mother country. We are a nation unaccustomed to defeat or to disgrace, and we are bound to bring this war to a successful issue. The path of duty is plain before us. The Empire has spoken—and spoken out—from the wilds of Canada to the jungles of Ceylon, and the Mother Country has responded in no doubtful or faltering tone. From this great Metropolis and England's busy towns, from the glens of Scotland and from the mountains of Wales, aye, and from Ireland's Emerald soil—that inexhaustible nursery of gallant soldiers—Britain's sons, both high and low, have nobly answered to the Empire's call. In such a crisis the place for the Government is in front of the nation, and there I hope it will be found, not only anxious, but prepared to vindicate the Imperial honour and to protect the Imperial interests.

Capt. Norton

COLONEL KENYON-SLANEY (Shropshire, Newport): Mr. Speaker, so long as we are condemned by the Opposition to proceed with this wearisome and unfortunate debate, there are certain things that will have to be repeated at certain intervals, but I should like to comment on one or two of the speeches which have been delivered. I have listened now for many hours to the discussion, and I have been struck with the extraordinary number of Members of the House of Commons who apparently are qualified to be Ministers of War at the shortest possible notice, and who possessed an extraordinary conception not given to all of us of what was about to occur. They are prepared to act either as War Ministers at home or as generals in the field. I discount the value of such opinions, and I think their expression is practically a waste of the time of this House. The hon. and gallant Gentleman who has just sat down assured us that his side was at one with ours with regard to the prosecution of the war. Does he forget that the whole of probably the only section of his party that are united are not going to vote for this Amendment because they do not wish to see the war prosecuted? The hon. and gallant Gentleman should be more careful in what he states when the facts are contradictory to his statements. The hon. and gallant Gentleman also stated that the Government instead of spending money on the needs of the Army squandered it on the squire and the parson. I know there are many parsons with £50 or £60 a year, but I doubt whether much of the money referred to by the hon. and gallant Gentleman has gone to them. He also found fault with the military preparations of the Government, and took a rather pessimistic view of the situation with regard to foreign countries. At all events we can take this to ourselves, that not one regiment could cross the seas without the leave of the British admirals, and therefore I do not think that the state of things is so very rotten as he would have us believe. Before the hon. and gallant Gentleman addressed the House we had the advantage of a speech from a right hon. Gentleman who occupies a marked position on the front Opposition Bench; I refer to the late Home Secretary. It would be almost impertinent for a Member of my standing to cross swords with one infinitely my superior in Parliamentary warfare, but if we remain still and never try, we shall never improve. Therefore I hope the right hon. Gentleman will forgive me if I take exception to some of his arguments. In the first place, I was very much struck by the repetition from his eloquent lips of the phrase: "Inquest of the nation." Really that phrase has been used so often that I am doubtful whether I am listening to politicians or to coroners. With the main part of the speech of the right hon. Gentleman we, on this side of the House, have, however, very little to find fault. He stated that war was not intended or desired by the Government, and that we had entered on it with clean hands and a clear conscience. We re-echo that statement, and so does the country. He laid great stress on the failure which he thought was visible on the part of the Government to justify their promises to Natal. In that part of his argument there was weight and substance, but I feel certain that both sides of the House and the country are pledged to amply and loyally repay the colony of Natal for all its sufferings and sacrifices in the common cause. This Amendment is very little less than an imposition on the House of Commons; indeed, I might almost use a stronger word, and say it was a fraud on the House of Commons. I would like to regard it chiefly from the point of view of that particular section—I wish I could call it a wing, but that would be too much—of the party opposite which the right hon. Gentleman so well represents. It is also represented by the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Wolverhampton, the hon. Baronet the Member for the Berwick Division, and others who are in close touch with one of the most distinguished statesmen of the day—Lord Rosebery. They have made speeches in the country and in this House with which we have very little fault to find. They have said very much what we might say ourselves, and I am not ashamed to assert that we might have adopted both their utterances and their patriotism. They are all statesmen in a high degree, and they must recognise what their position would be if this Amendment could conceivably be successful; and they have no right to throw the weight of their authority and power into a continuance of this discussion or to support a challenge to the Government unless they are prepared to deal with the situation which would be created in the event of the Amendment being carried. That would entail on them the responsibility of forming a Government. Can they conceive it possible, in the present constitution of parties, that they could form any such Government? We have only to contrast the speeches we have heard from the other side of the House to see how absolutely impotent would be the position of right hon. Gentlemen if they attempted to take the only honourable course open to them after the line of action they have adopted. The speech of the late Attorney General was at as absolute variance with the speech of the late Home Secretary as two speeches could be. I cannot conceive how extremely able men sometimes say such extremely foolish things. I cannot conceive anything more unfortunate than the speech of the late Attorney General; every sentence in it was likely to produce a continuance of bitterness and mischief instead of good. I can only recall one parallel to that kind of speech, and that was the idea in the minds of a certain number of hon. Members who most unwisely sent a telegram to the King of Greece that they wished to give him moral support in his unfortunate war with Turkey, the only result of which was an additional slaughter of men on both sides. The speech of the late Attorney General is not the only matter at variance with the possibility of right hon. Gentlemen forming a Government. We know that such a Government would have to rely, more or less, on the support of Irish members, but in regard to the war that support is entirely denied them. On this matter I should like to say one word to representatives for Ireland. When we talk of Irishmen at this moment the country is not thinking of Irish politicians, but of the Irish regiments who are doing the work of the Kingdom and the Empire in South Africa. When, on Friday night, a statement was made by the hon. Member for East Clare that he was anxious and willing to go to South Africa to fight for the Boers, I was almost inclined to ask you, Sir, how far such a statement was consonant with the oath of loyalty and allegiance which the hon. Member had taken to the Queen. The only reason why no attention has been publicly called to that and similar statements is because the nation does not care for the action of Irish politicians. It is satisfied with the action of the Irish soldiers, and that is the only reason why Irish members are allowed to go on talking their toy-shop treason in that sort of security which is begotten of absolute contempt. If, however, right hon. Gentlemen opposite mean business over this Amendment, there are other difficulties before them besides reconciling their Irish supporters. They will have to reconcile also the excellent gentlemen who sit behind them, and who, more or less, are fond of omelettes, but think they ought to be made without breaking eggs. Speech after speech in this debate has been devoted to attacking the right hon. Gentleman the Secretary of State for the Colonies. With reference to these attacks the country briefly says, "We are amply satisfied with the magnificent spirit which the colonies have shown during the present crisis, and we recognise that the conduct of the right hon. Gentleman is in some degree at all events responsible for calling out that manifestation of opinion." Other speakers have not considered it beneath themselves to make constant reference to Mr. Rhodes, as if he were the cause of everything evil in this country. I am absolutely unconcerned with the raid, and have never sympathised with anything connected with it, but I cannot help recollecting that while all sorts of denunciations are being poured on Mr. Rhodes, he at all events is doing what none of his traducers are doing, he is standing up for the empire and taking daily risks. The time may come when these denunciations may be again brought before the country, and when charges which have been already dealt with may be re-opened, but in the name of fair play and honesty let these attacks cease while the man attacked is giving the greatest pledge he can of his loyalty to this country. Now the right hon. Gentlemen the Member for Bodmin also made a statement with which I take direct and absolute issue. I cannot help saying how much we admired and appreciated the effort which the right hon. Gentleman made last night, and I am sure that the sympathies of the whole House were with him in the difficulty in which he found himself placed. But he said one thing which he ought not to have said, and was not consonant with the feeling of the country. He said that this war was the war of the Secretary of State for the Colonies. I deny that. This war is the nation's war; if not, it is the Empire's war. It is not the war of any individual, of any one Minister, or of any particular Ministry at all. The hon. Member for Northampton said that the conscience of the civilised world absolutely denounced this war, but how about the right hon. Member for East Fife? Has he not a conscience, and has not Lord Rosebery a conscience? Is he to depart from the territories of the civilised world, of which many of us think he is a great adornment? I dare even to touch with the point of my feeble lance the shield of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Monmouthshire. In winding up his speech, to every word of which I listened, he recommended that we ought to follow the utterances of the Prime Minister who leads this party. If that be so, it hardly forms a very good reason for going into the lobby against the Prime Minister.

(Colonel Kenyon-Slaney.)

Sixth Day.

SIR WILLIAM HARCOURT (Monmouthshire, W.): That speech was made a year ago.

COLONEL KENYON-SLANEY: That section of the Liberal party opposite is so hopelessly unable to form a Government that it is not an unfair thing to say that they would hardly dare to vote for this Amendment if they thought that it would be successful; but if they are not prepared to take that course, then I venture to say that their conduct is more than questionable. I only wish that the right hon. Gentlemen opposite had the numbers behind them which would justify them, if they were successful, in forming a Government; but the Liberal party must continue to present to the country the sorry aspect which they do at this moment. They would hardly venture to vote for this Amendment if they could agree that it was to be successful. I would like to ask right hon. Gentlemen opposite what they conceive will be the effect of their action on other countries and other people? The effect on the Colonies must be the suggestion that this country, instead of being united at a time, as in some places is regarded, of peril, is divided and at war with itself. What, I would like to know, is to be the effect on the Boer Government when this debate becomes their property, as I have no doubt it soon will be? Only one effect, and that is to encourage them in playing the old game, that if only they can keep on long enough they may benefit from party exigencies in this country, and may possibly get better terms from one party than the other. It means a direct incentive to fight more vigorously than at present, and to sacrifice more lives, both of their own men and of their opponents, in order that they may possibly win from the divisions in the Opposition and in the country that which they never could get from a united country. The responsibility, therefore, of the Opposition is no slight one; it is genuine and real. What is thought in the Colonies of the possible effect of a change of Government? A special correspondent from Cape Town says in The Times—

“A change of Government at this critical period would, rightly or wrongly, be regarded by everyone in South Africa, English or Dutch, as a prelude to another betrayal of the loyal section of the population. It would create a panic among the English, and would be the signal for a violent agitation got up by those politicians whose one object is to defer to Afrikaner national ambitions at the first favourable opportunity by upholding the maintenance of the independence and the military power of the two Republics.”

[AN HON. MEMBER: That is Mr. Monypenny.] I cannot tell you the name of the writer, but I think it is a reflection of the opinion of the Cape. Right hon. Gentlemen have to reckon with views of the situation that have done infinite harm, not only to the prestige of the country, but the progress of the war. Hon. and right hon. Gentlemen may try to find excuses for the continuance of this debate in constitutional reasons, and in the allegation that it satisfies the demands of the British public. But I maintain that if you polled the United Kingdom you would only get a trifling minority in favour of it; in fact, I say that this debate is almost treasonable, and a waste of the time of the House. What earthly good can be expected from this long, wearisome and dull debate? Not much; but a little is found in the earnest and patriotic speeches which we have heard, such as that of the late Home Secretary and others on the opposite side of the House, although the conclusion they are coming to is impotent and unfair. Then there was the speech of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, who made it absolutely clear that that which the country at large is desiring is the very object which the Government is seeking to obtain. Something of good may result if the attention of the country is riveted more closely, not on what has been done to bring about the war, but on what has been achieved. That, I think, would clear what some people call the present state of gloom. Eulogies on the gallant conduct of our men have been on every

Colonel Kenyon Slaney.

lip. It had been said that foreign nations are smiling at the vanished prestige and military reputation of this country, but I venture to say, if any one of us could look into the military offices in those foreign countries which are concerned with the possibilities of the future he would find there is not a thinking soldier in the world to-day who would not say that more note of the fighting power of England must be taken than ever before. Because they see that the years of comparative freedom from great strain which we have enjoyed have not taken one fibre from the fighting sinews of our men, but that on the contrary the British soldier is not only as good as in the past, when he won victories all over the world, but superior. That is one note of satisfaction that we can deduce from the losses we all deplore. If we had had to admit that our faith in the capabilities of our soldiers had been shaken, it would indeed have been a time of gloom, but instead of being weaker we are stronger than ever before any national emergency that may arise. We are ready on this side of the House to sacrifice any Minister, the whole Ministry, and even the party itself, to secure the successful prosecution of the war. The time will come to join in fair criticism and put the blame on the right shoulders, but there is not a gentleman on the other side of the House who would dare to come over here and put his little finger on the burden which rests on the shoulders of the Government at the present moment. I apologise for having spoken so long, but I cannot help feeling earnest in this matter. While we politicians have been amusing ourselves, and trying to get the better of the man who spoke before us, the country outside is waiting impatiently and longing for the end of all this trifling and the cessation of this debate, which has been brightened by a very few speeches, but darkened by many which would have been better unspoken. I say we have not done anything during this debate to improve the position which we hold in the regard of our country. I charge it directly upon the Opposition as a whole, and upon the right hon. Gentleman who leads it, that for poor and paltry purposes they have done very much to defame our reputation, and to degrade the position which Parliament holds in the eyes of the country, by this long and futile debate on an absolutely futile Amendment.

MR. LLOYD-GEORGE (Carnarvon): The hon. and gallant Member who has just sat down has informed the House that this debate is a treasonable waste of time. One rather marvels what could have prompted so patriotic a member to assist in carrying on so treasonable an enterprise. The hon. and gallant Member said it was exceedingly undesirable that Members sitting on the front bench on this side of the House should be called upon at the present juncture to take upon themselves the burdens of the Government. I quite agree, and for the very good reason, that the Government has landed the country in a great mess, and the best thing they can do is to get us out of it. I do not wish that the Liberal party should get the opprobrium of paying the enormous bill that has been incurred. The hon. and gallant Member taunted us that many Members who protested now did not foresee the course of events. But that could not be alleged against a good many Tories on his side of the House, and certainly not against the Liberal press. I may call attention to the fact that one very important individual did foresee these disasters. There is a very remarkable communication in this morning's Manchester Guardian. That is not a newspaper in the habit of printing unsubstantial gossip. According to that communication Sir W. Butler, early in the course of last year, called the attention of Sir A. Milner to the state of things at the Cape. He pointed out that, if Sir A. Milner ordered him to send garrisons to the front, that would be provocation for war. And he pointed out further that war with the Transvaal would mean sending an army of 40,000 or 50,000 men to South Africa in addition to those then in the Cape and Natal. The communication in the Manchester Guardian went on to say that it was a matter of certainty, according to Sir W. Butler, that the Orange Free State would join forces with their brethren in the Transvaal; and in that case the British force would have to be still further augmented by at least two Army Corps. Sir A. Milner scornfully replied, "It is very natural for you to take such a line, from your sympathy with your friends the Dutch." [Laughter.]

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY (MR. A. J. BALFOUR, Manchester, E.): Where did you get such a statement? I never heard of such a communication.

MR. LLOYD-GEORGE: It appears in the Manchester Guardian, and I think it is worthy of something more than laughter; it is at least entitled to a denial from those who are responsible.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I give it denial.

MR. LLOYD-GEORGE: That suffices for the present. I will not pursue the subject further now. The hon. and gallant Member did not admit that the Government had made any mistakes at all. I point out that that is rather out of keeping with the very remarkable admission made by the Colonial Secretary last night, who said he was prepared to make an admission as to all the mistakes committed by the Government; and proceeded to admit the mistakes of the War Office, the mistakes of the generals, and, in fact, the mistakes of everybody except his own and those of the Colonial Office. I venture to say that in the general opinion of the country the greatest mistakes that have been made are those committed in the diplomacy of the Colonial Secretary. Discussion has been rather deprecated at the present juncture, especially discussion in regard to the merits of the war; but however much we may deprecate discussion, or succeed in stopping discussion in the House, it will not be stopped in the country. The Colonial Secretary said that if the war was unjust and unrighteous it ought not to be prosecuted. That is the view taken, not by a majority, but by a very strong body of people in the country, and a growing one. Whatever line we take in this House, discussion will go on in the country, in workshops and factories, until that conviction is reached. This bloodshed should be put an end to. I think it was John Bright who said that the people took no interest in diplomacy until it had been made interesting by war. That is perfectly true. I ask hon. Members opposite how many people in this country realise that the

Mr. Lloyd-George.

Boer Government, in the beginning of September, accepted an offer made by our Government in the beginning of August, and how many realise that we are at war now after they had accepted the proposals we had offered? I venture to put it to any lawyer in this House, whether in any court of equity specific performance would not have been enforced on that state of facts. Then we hear a good deal about the intolerable oppression of the Government of the Transvaal. How many workmen in this country realise that the wages earned by miners in the Transvaal were four times as high as at home? How many miners realise that an eight hours day, which they cannot get their own House of Commons to give attention to, is provided for by an Act passed under this oppressive Transvaal Government? How many people in this country realise, when they hear wild, vague talk about the oppression and despotism of the Transvaal, that whereas in Rhodesia, under our own Government, the gold mining royalties are fifty per cent., under this oppressive and despotie Transvaal Government they are only one-half per cent.? Then, I would like to know how many Members of the House know really what are the grievances in regard to which we are fighting. Let me give one case in point. No grievance has excited more sentimental opposition to the Transvaal than the grievance regarding the natives. Ministers of the gospel of peace go preaching war because they are excited by tales of intolerable oppression of the native blacks. But what is the native grievance? I give it not as stated by Mr. White, or by Mr. Stead, but by the Chamber of Mines in Johannesburg in its annual report. Native touts are sent round all Western Africa to induce natives to come to Johannesburg, and work in the mines. These touts make false representations to the natives in regard to wages and the hours of labour, and when the natives arrive they say "this is not what was promised us," and there are desertions among them to the number of 5,000 a month. What was it that the Uitlanders said? They complained against the Transvaal Government because it did not pass a law to detain these natives, to imprison them, to fine them beyond their means, and afterwards to send them per force to work in their (the Uitlanders') mines under the contracts of employment which had been entered into by fraud. This is the native grievance which these ministers of religion talk about. My hon. and learned friend the Member for South Shields delivered a very remarkable speech the other day. He said that all revolutionary wars were alike questions of £ s. d., and he compared these reformers in the Transvaal to John Hampden and George Washington. And he said that behind all these questions of £ s. d. was the great principle of human liberty. Now, what is the great principle of human liberty behind the £ s. d. in this case? I will quote as John Hampden a gentleman called Mr. Rudd, who delivered a speech at the annual meeting of the Consolidated Gold Fields on November 14th, 1899, in which he said—

“They should try some cogent form of inducement, or practically compel the native through taxation or in some other way to contribute his quota to the good of the community, and to a certain extent he would then have to work. . . . If under the cry of civilisation we in Egypt lately mowed down 10,000 or 20,000 Dervishes with Maxims, surely it cannot be considered a hardship to compel the natives in South Africa to give three months in the year to doing a little honest work.”

That is a grievance of the Uitlanders. It means that at the price of the blood of our brave soldiers we are going to renew slavery in South Africa. That is the John Hampden of the Rand, and that is the great principle for which we are fighting. Let us come to the George Washington of the Rand. I have called this gentleman George Washington because he is an American. His real name is Mr. Hays Hammond. He was one of the leaders of the Reform party; was in the raid, and was imprisoned. These are the principles he advocated when he addressed this meeting of shareholders on 14th November. These gentlemen are very astute; they speak out after the war has commenced, and when they know that nothing can stop it. If these speeches had been delivered before the war the people of this country would have received them with disgust. He said:—

“With good government there should be an abundance of labour, and with an abundance of labour there will be no difficulty in cutting down wages, because it is preposterous to pay a Kaffir the present wages. He would be quite as well satisfied—in fact he would work longer—if you gave him half the amount. His wages are altogether disproportionate to his requirements. . . . There would also be a considerable reduction in the cost of white labour.”

“With good government,” he says—and this is really a fine phrase—“there should be an abundance of labour, and with an abundance of labour there would be no difficulty in cutting down wages.” That is his George Washington idea, “because,” he says, “it is preposterous to pay the Kaffir the present rate of wages.” Three pounds per month, I think it is. [An Hon. MEMBER: No, £2 5s.] Well, he says “it is preposterous to pay a Kaffir the present rate of wages; he would be quite as well satisfied if you paid him half that amount. His wages are altogether disproportionate to his requirements.” Now, that is the great principle of human liberty espoused by my hon. and learned friend, who says that these questions are always governed by £ s. d. Then Mr. Hays Hammond proceeds to condescend to particulars, and he gives the exact profit which he has been getting for his company. He thought the war might better not have been, but he came to the conclusion that as the result of it the expected gain to the Consolidated Goldfields per annum would be £2,199,433; and he goes on to say that the increased dividends would amount to 45 per cent. So that apart from the great principle of human liberty there is no mistake about the £ s. d. That is what we are fighting for. That is the natives’ grievance which has excited the deepest commiseration throughout this country. That is what our brave troops are shedding their blood for; they are dying to restore slavery under the British flag. Now let us have another of these grievances. The next is the grievance of the liquor law, and it is really an extraordinary grievance to be fighting for. I quote here from the report of the Associated Chamber of Mines, which contains among other distinguished names those of Mr. Hays Hammond and Mr. Fitzpatrick. Here is the memorial of the Chamber of Mines to the Government. The first statement is that strong drink is by no means indispensable to natives; secondly, that experience has proved that addiction to strong drink is with the natives physically immoral; and thirdly, that the present liquor law is sound in principle, and that certain amendments, if vigorously enforced, will practically stamp out the illicit traffic.

Sixth Day.

These gentlemen are the prohibitioners. You are practically fighting for prohibition. But what a spectacle it all presents for a Government which floated into power on beer to engage in a sanguinary war to enforce prohibition in the Transvaal. That is the liquor law; and, by the way, I may say that that memorial had a good effect. Afterwards the assistance of the Crown Office was given to the Uitlanders to put it into operation. Now, another matter that is brought into the discussion is that of the railways, and it is most extraordinary. What is it that the Uitlanders demand? They demand that the railways which are now in the hands of the private companies shall henceforth be managed by the State. What, managed by a corrupt and inefficient Government!—a Government which is said to be so corrupt that it cannot manage its own affairs! They contend that the Government should not only take over the railways, but manage them as well. That is an extraordinary view for the Uitlanders to take. The next grievance is as to the franchise, and with regard to that I should like to point out this. There is a great deal said about equal rights and equal privileges between the two white races; but there is really no distinction in the Transvaal between one race and another. There is only that distinction which you find in every other nation in the civilised world between a man who is born on the soil and a man who comes from another country. In this country we draw exactly the same distinction between an Englishman and a foreigner. President Kruger in the Transvaal fixes a fourteen years residence as the qualification for the franchise. In this country we insist practically on seven years; but hardly any Uitlander in this country could get a vote under six or seven years. Now that, in my opinion, does not amount to intolerable oppression. Is it unreasonable that such a distinction should be drawn in a community like that of the Transvaal, where the foreigner is in the majority? If you think that a foreigner ought to wait six or seven years in your country, where the foreigner is a negligible quantity, surely it is not too much to expect that I should impose a period of fourteen years in my country in order to protect my position against the foreigners. But this is my point: President Kruger, who is all-powerful in the Volksraad, was called upon to practically hand over the country to foreigners, and he was entitled to say: "If that be so, I must insist that the Government is a local one." How could you ask President Kruger to hand over his country to the control of a people whose patriotism was the due of a foreign nation? I think it is unfair. That is really the effect of the proposition made on behalf of the Uitlanders. Here is a test of it. The country was in difficulties, in constant difficulties with the Kaffirs. President Kruger commanded a number of the British subjects. They said, "No, we won't fight; we are Englishmen." But what President Kruger said was that "the real test of patriotism is, whether a man will die for his country. If you are not prepared to do it, my burghers are." Then if they declined to do that, President Kruger was entitled to say, "You are no part of this country, and until I secure your fourteen years franchise I do not see that your status is different from that of the foreigner." Although there was nothing unreasonable in President Kruger's attitude, I think we would have got the five years franchise. There is good ground for thinking so. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for South Aberdeen pointed out that there was a great reform party in the Transvaal—the Liberal party of the Transvaal—headed by General Joubert, and he came within 500 votes of defeating President Kruger. In the Volksraad there was a proposal to reduce the franchise from fourteen to five years. That was before the raid. It was defeated only by a majority of four in a House of Dutchmen elected by the Boers. I should like to give you the names of some of the men who voted in favour of that proposal. The first is that of General Joubert, who is fighting for independence at the head of the Boer army; the next is General Schalk Burgher, and the next General Lucas Meyer. In a few years time we might have hoped to convert the best men in South Africa to our way of thinking. I believe we should have got the five years franchise in a few years. The new diplomacy has converted the best friends we had in Africa into those dangerous foes who have inflicted a more grievous succession of blows upon our Empire than any which it has suffered for over a century. The whole disposition of the Boers was changed by the raid,

Mr. Lloyd-George.

and I think there was real ground for the suspicion that they undoubtedly entertained. Here we had three or four men who have sworn that the Colonial Office was implicated in the raid. Dr. Rutherford Harris went into the box and said he believed that there was a coming revolution, and that he wanted this strip of ground in Bechuanaland in order to have the police ready in case of emergency. Another witness, Mr. Cecil Rhodes, and Mr. Hawksley, his solicitor, said the same thing. There were four gentlemen, at any rate, who believed the Colonial Office was behind them, and what is still more important, they said so at the time. Dr. Rutherford Harris believed it, so how can you blame the Boers for believing it? It is rather extraordinary that we have not had all the correspondence published. That would have thrown more light upon the matter. However, the Colonial Secretary knows perfectly well that the Boers had this suspicion in their minds, and every man in this country knows it now. The whole Continent of Europe knows it. Then there is another point—the clearing of Mr. Cecil Rhodes, the gentleman who had assured these men who went to die in the raid that they were dying for their Queen. Who was it who induced these men to commit an act which deprived them of their professional rank and ruined their professional career for life? To my mind there is no word in the English language adequate to characterise the moral turpitude of that action. It is a count in the indictment which still remains. Now, Sir, I doubt very much whether the conscience of this country will tolerate the problem of this war. What, after all, is this grievance as to the franchise in the Transvaal? I think the country ought really to be in possession of the facts. The foreigner landing in the Transvaal is in a better position in voting for the magistrates and for the election of President than he is in this country; and yet we proceed to teach them at the point of the bayonet the doctrine of equal rights. When the Conservatives were in office, in 1888–1892, they discussed swine fever among other things, but not a word was uttered about these intolerable burdens under which our fellow subjects were suffering in the Transvaal. At last in 1894 it dawned upon one bright intellect—that of the hon. Member for the Ecclesall Division of Sheffield (Sir E. Ashmead-Bartlett)—that he could strike a fine lode; and he started working it, and it has paid him. He, at any rate, made a long speech about this grievance; but there was not a word from anybody in support of him. Alone he stood. There was not even a word from the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham, except that he got up and said, “We have no right to interfere.” Not a word against that heretical doctrine which we are now spending millions to abolish. I agree with the hon. Member who has just sat down that this is not the war of the Colonial Office and the right hon. Gentleman the Colonial Secretary. It is the war of the hon. Member for the Ecclesall Division, and he has gone out there to watch with parental solicitude and pride the growth of his infant. Only nine years have elapsed since the agitation began for a five years franchise in the Transvaal, and we are now at war with that country, although here it took a whole century to lower the franchise. I do not believe the war has any connection with the franchise. It is a question of 45 per cent. dividends; and yet we hear of the obstinacy of President Kruger. It is said that there was no possibility of concession on the part of President Kruger except through the medium of guns and bayonets. When the war began, we heard a great deal about the obstinate and obdurate conduct of President Kruger, but only in July last the Colonial Secretary spoke of the rapidity with which the modifications made by the South African Republic since the Bloemfontein Conference had followed each other, and said that each new scheme seemed to be an advance and improvement on that which preceded it. The statement that President Kruger was so obstinate that he would not consider anything is untrue, and, seeing that the falsehood has led to this bloodshed, it is a crime perpetrated on the country. I should have thought that the greatest pride of the Uitlanders would have been to take part in this conflict and fight for their supposed rights. But how many have availed themselves of the privilege? They prefer to lounge about the hotels of Capetown while English homes are being made desolate on their behalf. Seven thousand of the Uitlanders are fighting for their intolerable oppressors. How many are fighting for their rights? Barely a battalion out of the whole 80,000, and the remainder are living in security, grumbling about their losses, and without turning a thought to those who are suffering in the war. I am sure, Sir, that I shall carry the House with me when I declare that such men and their grievances are not worth a drop of British blood.

*SIR JOHN STIRLING-MAXWELL (Glasgow, College): I have no intention of answering the speech to which we have just listened, because that is altogether foreign to the purpose for which I rise. If you will allow me to say so, as one who has a very sincere admiration for the hon. Member's talents, I have heard his speech from beginning to end with great regret, from the unjustifiable quotation with which he began down to the unjustified use of the sadder aspect of this war, with which he concluded. The right hon. Member for East Fife and the right hon. Member for West Monmouthshire made somewhat scornful allusions to those people who looked on this debate as a waste of time, and I trembled as they spoke; but I felt glad I was one of that devoted band, and I can honestly say that I feel no allegiance to any party so strong as I feel towards those who look on debates like this at times like this as a waste of time, and worse than a waste of time. I have no complaints to make against Members who have addressed the House, because in this matter of waste of time one speech has been as bad as another, but I make one exception due, not only to the brilliant eloquence of the Member for Dover, but to the fact that he was in the unique position of having something to tell us which we had not heard before. I cannot forget that the hon. Members and right hon. Members of this House, the First Lord of the Treasury, the right hon. Member for East Fife, who spoke to-day, and the hon. Member for the Berwick Division, gentlemen to whom we all look as the embodiment of public-spirited unselfishness in this House—even they have been drawn with zest into this discussion. I merely wish to test this Amendment by one test. Could anyone who has read this debate imagine that this House had met at a time of great national peril, or at least of grave anxiety? Could anyone imagine from the speeches made in this House that all eyes in the country were turned to this House to learn how defeat was to be turned into victory? It appears to me that the ancient methods of this House have led us into grave neglect of duty. The one thing which we ought to want to hear is what proposals the Government have to make for the reinforcement of the Army, and I should like to appeal to hon. Members on both sides to put an end to this debate. One hon. Gentleman on the opposite side told us that this Amendment had to be moved because it was expected by the country. Surely the country now has had enough of it. It is an idle Amendment, but though idle it may have serious results. Up to this time the right of this House to be considered the central council of the Empire has not been disputed, but as the Empire develops and the population grows larger there may come a day when the claims will not be allowed, and when that day comes I believe the enemies of this House will point to this debate as proving that at the first moment of real peril that comes to the Empire this House wasted more than a week of public time before turning to the pressing needs of the country. I have only now to appeal to the Leader of the House, and I assure him he has underestimated the confidence this House and the Empire has in him, and that the confidence will not be shaken by any inference which might be drawn from an enforced conclusion of this discussion. I appeal to him to bring it to a conclusion.

Mr. Lloyd-George.

MR. MUNRO FERGUSON (Leith Burghs): I am as anxious as anyone to come to the proposals of the Government with regard to defence, but at the same time I must express my surprise that we have not had the proposals sooner. If, as the leader of the House has stated, the public service is suffering through this debate, it is quite within the rules of the House that this debate can be stopped at any moment in order to consider urgent proposals. Therefore we are not open to any charge of delaying the Government. I think we should have had the proposals before now. There are two results we can claim from this debate, one the speech of the Under Secretary for War, which contained the first statement on behalf of the Government which showed they appreciated the gravity of the situation, and the second the speech of the Colonial Secretary, containing the most important declaration we have yet heard of the Government's policy. It showed us that the fate of the country was in stronger hands than might have been supposed from some of the statements of Ministers, before Parliament met, at Manchester, Leicester, and elsewhere, and from the statement of the Prime Minister in the House of Lords. Although I look upon this as a just war, and a war which has been forced upon us, yet I cannot conceal from myself the belief that there have been grave errors in the diplomacy and the preparations for war. In voting for this Amendment, I record my sense of avoidable disasters, but I do not in the least deny that it is a war in defence of our just rights. No charge can be made that we are unwilling to give a straight vote to the Government on the clear issue of the war. We merely desire to give them a clear perception of those parts of the policy of which we disapprove. The Under Secretary of State for War said that in various quarters this Amendment would not be understood, and that view has been re-echoed by many others. I do not think the Government or their supporters understand it. It has been denounced as a despicable party manoeuvre, inspired by the ignoble aim of uniting the Liberal party in anticipation of office. Who believes that a change of Government is desirable in the country at a time like this? I do not think that charge can be seriously made. Another objection made is that we should not move an Amendment like this unless we are prepared to cross the floor of the House. That is, after all, only a technical objection, because if any discussion is to be raised it is necessary to move an Amendment. In my opinion this Amendment is perfectly fair and reasonable, being inspired by a sense that the Government have failed to prepare for war, and now fail to appreciate sufficiently the grave state of affairs in which we are placed, and that is why I welcomed the declarations made in the most important part of the debate last night. It is the duty of the Opposition to raise a debate of this kind, and endeavour to keep the question within proper bounds. The supreme end of the Opposition at this time is to strengthen the Government. I have had doubts as to how that end could be best conserved, but to my mind, after the speeches on the opening day of the session, this Amendment was fully justified, and we could not have avoided bringing it before the House. It has been asserted during the course of the debate that the country does not care for an Amendment of this kind at a time like this, and although that is a characteristic statement from Members on the other side of the House, I do not think it represents entirely the feeling of the country. The country does care for the humiliation of the country. Each Minister tells his own tale. Lord Salisbury asks "How on earth we were to know the Boer strength"; Lord Lansdowne, rising within a few moments, said "We know all we care about the Boer strength." The First Lord of the Treasury said "War was inevitable." I am quoting from the Extra-Parliamentary Hansard, which purports to give a correct report of speeches of hon. and right hon. Gentlemen outside Westminster. The Under Secretary for War says that every precaution was taken which foresight could suggest. We have had admissions from the Colonial Secretary that the Government had made mistakes. The debate, I feel, will assist the country, and that was the reason this Amendment was moved. As to the unpreparedness for war, we feel that the Army did not have a fair chance at the start. At first it was thought that 20,000 men were sufficient, and that humiliation might be averted. Then we had 60,000, and we were told that we should have an easy time up to the taking of Pretoria. With 180,000 men we have found that the war has partaken of the nature of a drawn battle; and even with 200,000 men there is a long and difficult struggle before us, which will make the final settlement of South Africa all the more difficult, whilst our own position all the world over is more or less vulnerable. The question of the prompt dispatch of troops is one of the first importance, because we cannot conceal the fact that there is a world-wide sympathy with the Boers, which is greatly increased by our failure. It is the misrepresentations that are made of us, that we are shooting down harmless peasants who occupy South Africa in limited numbers, which blinds the world to the fact that the British Empire, and not the Republics, stands for liberty and freedom. I hope that the proposals which the hon. Baronet wishes to see introduced will show that further preparations will be made. There are many officers and men, tired of civil life, who could be called up, and who would form the nucleus of a fresh force for defensive purposes, or would strengthen the drafts which will have to be sent abroad. There has been anxiety to know who is really head of the Army. We are told that the generals in the field have had a free hand. But unless General White's instructions expressly directed him to ignore Natal and the Natal Government, and to think only of his army, he or any British officer in his position was liable to be swayed by political considerations. One would like to know whether General White considered the forces at his command sufficient to carry out his instructions. The Under Secretary of State for War the other night gave the late General Symons as the sole authority for the affair at Glencoe, while the right hon. Gentleman himself referred at Manchester to the "unhappy entanglement" at Ladysmith in which General White found himself involved, and the late Home Secretary to-night suggested that that entanglement might really have been caused, not by General White, but by his instructions. The First Lord of the Treasury also stated at Manchester that the guns supplied to General White were guns intended for a mobile force. Such statements do not tend to allay public anxiety, and the charge of unpreparedness is almost inevitable. It would seem, from what we are told, that every brigade or division sent out during the earlier part of a war is of the character of a forlorn hope which is necessarily sacrificed. That surely is not a very encouraging message to send either to our regular forces in the field or to the colonial contingents. Real encouragement was given by the statements of the Under Secretary of State for War and the Colonial Secretary, and I hope that we may, even now on the last day of the debate, have a very strong declaration from the First Lord of the Treasury also, because we want to know whether the right hon. Gentleman is more persuaded of the mistakes that have been acknowledged by the Colonial Secretary, and of the efforts which may be required to remedy a most serious state of things.

Mr. Munro Ferguson.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I believe I was the first Minister to state in public that there had undoubtedly been mistakes in regard to this war.

MR. MUNRO FERGUSON: That statement was probably made at Manchester, and the general trend of public opinion in respect of that speech may be judged from expressions used in regard to it by the press of the right hon. Gentleman's own party. The speeches of the First Lord of the Treasury and of Lord Salisbury undoubtedly introduced a feeling of gloom. Certainly that feeling was materially lightened by the speeches of the Under Secretary of State for War and the Colonial Secretary; but until Parliament met we had no declaration which gave any confidence to the country at a time of great trial and anxiety. There is only one other point to which I wish to refer, and that is the subject of unity. We have been exhorted and lectured on the subject of unity. There is no reason to suppose that we are not united for practical purposes. Surely the voting of supplies is a very practical purpose; surely the fact of the statements of the objects of the war made by the hon. Baronet behind me being accepted by the First Lord of the Admiralty shows a considerable amount of agreement with regard to the ordinary circumstances of the war. We have been taunted on our want of unity, but I myself am as anxious as anyone on that side of the House to see unity. We may have to go very far together in pursuing these objects—that there shall be equal franchise for the white races in South Africa, and that there shall never more be any arsenal there by means of which British supremacy may be threatened. I remember many years ago, when I happened to meet Sir Hercules Robinson, as he then was, he told me that, though a strong supporter of the restoration of the Transvaal and the policy of 1881, he thought that peace having been concluded on the frontier was a serious bar to that peace being a lasting settlement, and that the way to secure a lasting settlement was to make peace at Pretoria. This time, at any rate, we shall have to go to Pretoria. That kind of support should, I think, be held to be sufficient by our opponents if they wish to promote unity. There are other versions of unity held by some hon. Gentlemen, and it is interpreted as meaning that the Opposition is unpatriotic if it does not follow blindly and silently the Government into every hole and corner where its policy may lead us. If a Liberal criticises any part of the policy of the Government he is held up to obloquy; if he holds his tongue he is supporting his party for political purposes; if he speaks here for a few moments he is told the country does not care for the debate, and he had better be quiet; and if he votes against the Government he sinks beneath the notice of any decent citizen. I think the party opposite sometimes set about to create unity on the policy of the war in an odd kind of way. We are compelled to admit that in some parts of that policy most gross mistakes have been made. The Leader of the House says it was the raid which made the Government helpless in the matter of protesting against the armaments of the Boers. No, it was not the raid. It was the conduct of the inquiry after the raid which inflicted a cruel and irreparable injury upon British justice and British character, and that is the reason, if there is any, for our helplessness in making our war preparations with respect to the armaments of the Transvaal. But that is not a sufficient excuse. This matter must be dealt with in the light of plain facts, not by skulking behind the British Constitution or public departments or the "man in the street." We should do better if our troops could take cover and our Ministers come out into the open. We have heard of a weak and discredited Opposition. It is a thousand pities there may be nothing to take their place. The Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs said that the country would not turn the present Government out in order to put the Opposition in. That is a small consolation to the country, but the permanent incubus of a weak and indifferent and discredited Government would be the greatest curse that the God of battles could prepare for the British Empire.

*MR. GEDGE (Walsall): I am not one of those who complain of this Amendment having been moved. However small and weak the Opposition may be they have a perfect right to criticise the actions and omissions of the Government, and I do not know of any way in which they could bring the matter more fairly to the test than by moving such a resolution as that now before the House. In fact I think they have done the very best thing possible for the Government and for this side of the House. If we have been in any way, which I very much doubt, a disunited party this motion will certainly bring us together in the lobby. There is nothing brings a disunited party together so much as a vote of censure on the Government it supports. But there are two things of which we may complain. The first is that the Amendment is so wide, in that it goes back so far as 1895 instead of limiting the proposed censure to the Government's conduct since Parliament was prorogued in October last. The subject of the first part of the Amendment was amply and fully threshed out in the last session of Parliament, and it was certainly unnecessary to again take us over the whole ground. Then there is the conduct of the Opposition, which has unduly extended the length of the debate. Various reflections have been cast from both sides of the House. The hon. and learned Member for West Fife, who always speaks with wit, ability, and eloquence, taunted the two front benches with the fact that the prolongation of the debate arose from their vanity, that they desired to have the best cuts of the joint themselves, and that only one of them could speak each night. I think he ought to confine his censure to the front bench on his own side of the House, because it is an open secret that the Opposition are answerable for not allowing the division to take place until to-night. That being so, if more than one Member of the front bench spoke on any evening they would soon be used up, and the debate would collapse but for hon. Members sitting behind. Therefore, if any one of us gets up to speak I cannot see how we can be held responsible for the prolongation of the debate, because it has to go on until a certain time, and the intervening hours have to be filled up somehow. There being no complaint against us on that account, we complain that so much old matter has been raked up. Things that we dealt with in October have been again brought forward, and we have had to go over the same old ground. In one respect we may regret the recent arrangement by which the Address in answer to Her Majesty's gracious Speech is limited to one sentence. If the old course had been followed, a clause would have been inserted in the Address reciprocating Her Majesty's sympathy with those who are fighting in the front, and with those who are suffering because of the war, and her admiration of the heroism of the troops. If a short statement in that sense was added to the Address I believe that the hearts of our soldiers, both those who are fighting and those who are wounded, and of the relatives of those who have been killed, would receive very considerable comfort, and would glow with some thrill, knowing that not only did their Queen sympathise with them, but that the House of Commons as a body had expressed in Parliament their entire concurrence in that feeling. There are one or two speeches, which have not yet been sufficiently answered, upon which I wish to make one or two remarks. One complaint only have I to make against Her Majesty's Government. I wish they had shown a little more courage and a little more confidence in the hearty support of the large majority they have in this House, and not have feared, as they seem to have done, to make proposals which might be necessary for the safety of the country, even though they were unable at the time to lay before us all the circumstances which led them to the conclusion that such proposals were desirable. So great is our confidence in the Government that I do not think we should have needed any statement. If they had come to the House and said, "We as a Government tell you we want this or that done for strengthening the forces at home or the fleet," or if they had asked us to vote money, we should have supported them without pressing them for their reasons if they thought it desirable to withhold them. In all other respects they have done on the whole quite as well as could be expected from them. No doubt the Colonial Secretary said that mistakes had been made, and it was contended there was a discrepancy between that statement and the words of the Leader of the House at Manchester, when he said the Government were not going to apologise for any mistakes. I think they were both right. There were mistakes, but there is no need of apology. I never knew of anybody to get on at all without making mistakes. If we were all endowed with prescience,

Mr. Gedge.

if we knew exactly what was on the other side of the hill, or would take place to-morrow or next year, we should make no mistakes. He alone is culpable, and needs to make apologies for mistakes, who does not act rightly on the facts before him. There is no man in business who, on looking back, cannot see that he has made mistakes. But that is no reason for sorrow, it is not a reason for apology, to those who have done the best in their power on the facts before them, who have formed the best judgment open to them on what they knew. If things turned out not as they might reasonably have expected no one has any right to find fault, and there is no need of apology. That seems to me to be the position of the Government in the present instance. I did not have the advantage of hearing it, but I have read carefully a very long speech of the hon. Member the ex-Attorney General. There are other speeches very like his, but I think he is the chief offender in the matter. Here, at a time when great Imperial interests are at stake, at a time when we want to get to work, he thought it well to make a very long speech entirely taken up by details, full from beginning to end of small points. I could not but be reminded of a saying of Burke's about a hundred years ago in connection with the trial of Warren Hastings. An ex-Law Officer of the Crown made a long and elaborate speech on the subject, and Burke said that the hon. and learned Member was very eloquent; he was very great at nisi prius; he was a master of small points; his mind was filled with small points; but he was about as capable of understanding a great Imperial question like this as a doe rabbit is of understanding the gestations of an elephant. It seemed to me that the hon. and learned Member to whom I have referred was very much in the position of that doe rabbit. Then I heard the speech of another ex-Law Officer on this side of the House, and he thinks the war unnecessary and unjust, but yet he will gladly go into the lobby on behalf of the Government. I remember the old story of a nobleman many years ago, who was accustomed to ride at the head of his farmers to vote at the elections. One day somebody came up to him and said, "I see Mr. Jones going up with you; I wonder you do not get rid of him, because he makes Tory speeches." "I do not care what speeches he makes," was the reply, "so long as he votes with me." With regard to the hon. and learned Member, we on this side of the House do not care a bit about his vote, we have votes enough without it, but we do care about his speech very much, and we wish he had not made it. His speech is wrong from beginning to end, and I do not believe it will do himself or anybody else any good. Whom does he represent? We are all representatives in this House. I should not venture to express my own sentiments here, if I did not represent an important industrial constituency. The hon. and learned Member to whom I referred does not represent Plymouth; his constituents would be glad to get rid of him. His constituents distinctly state that he does not represent them, and therefore in taking the course he has done he merely represents himself. Somehow or other, the hon. and learned Gentleman for the last few years has taken a strong line against the party and Government which in political matters he used to support. ["No."] Take the Venezuela question. Almost before anything was known about it he got up and made a public speech and wrote letters to show that the Government were all wrong, the country had not a leg to stand on, and the Venezuelans were all right. But what did the arbitrators say? On almost every point they gave an award distinctly in favour of this country. I only instance that to show that the hon. and learned Gentleman might have had a little more distrust in his own opinion, and before taking a line strongly against his own country and Government have looked back a little and remembered how he had been proved to be in the wrong before. I think the same fate will befall him this time. The hon. and learned Member told us that the Boers were a brave and true-hearted people. Yes, they are brave if you like, but true-hearted! What does he mean by "true-hearted"? Let me read one or two short extracts from letters in the papers from those who are at the seat of war. Here is a letter from a Newark missionary lately in the Transvaal. He says—

"For three years I have been living in the heart of the Transvaal, and I have watched the Boers very closely. The first thing that strikes a stranger is their piety. After one has been among them for a time the gloss begins to wear off, and we find there is far more profession than possession, and we say with an American evangelist that 'of all humbugs the religious humbug is the biggest.' Taking them on the whole, their religion, their piety, is a farce. They interpret the Scriptures to meet their own purposes, and their prayers are that God will bless them and slay the—Englishmen. God is to them a God of the Dutch only. Some people venture to say the native has been treated little better than a dog. I will go further and say he has been treated worse than a dog. I have been working among 2,000 natives, composed of people from the Zambesi to Cape Town. Not one has a good name for the Boers. Dreadful as it may sound, war was a necessity. A thousand and one things called loudly for it. A government so foul and corrupt must fall. The flag of justice and freedom for black and white must wave o'er the (at present) God-forsaken Transvaal."

They are the true-hearted, are they? What do we get in letters from other parts of the battlefield? From a letter from Belmont I will quote—

"We had a little adventure there. One of our officers and about twelve of us got separated from our company and battalion, and came across a number of Boers among the hills. We attacked them and got close to them, and when we fixed our bayonets in order to charge them they put up the white flag. Of course that put us off our guard, and when we approached them they fired on us, killing two and wounding five or six more, our officer included."

That is not an isolated case. I have another case here which happened at Colenso. A doctor writes—

"This done, the brutes advanced with a flag of truce, and asked to be allowed to collect their wounded. (Of course we allowed them, but instead they gradually worked round and surrounded us, calling on our two companies to surrender. When our colonel refused this, they beat the poor old man on the head with the end of their rifles, breaking all his front teeth, taking our men all prisoners, and marched them off to Pretoria."

That is the sort of thing which is coming from every part of the battlefield. These are the class of persons who are called a true-hearted people, and it is said that we should not go to war with them on that account. We had in October last a terrible statement of the horrors of war, from the hon. Member for Plymouth and he has repeated it in this debate. Well, as a Christian, humane, and cultured people we feel deeply the horrors of war, and there is not one of us who would not be thankful if the war was stopped. But what right have Gentlemen opposite to throw this into the scale upon a question as to whether the Government have done their duty or deserve censure? Horrors of war are invoked to prove that it is Sir A. Milner's war, or the Colonial Secretary's war. That is most unfair. This is Paul Kruger's war. It has been said that we have gone to war for the franchise, but that was only a means to an end. The franchise was first proposed by a member of the party opposite, the Marquess of Ripon. There were a great many things going on in the Transvaal of which we had a right to complain and remonstrate. Do not let us get involved in such questions as the drifts, the dynamite monopoly, or other things. What was desired was that the Uitlanders would be able to help themselves by having the franchise which would render all this continual nagging and interference unnecessary. The franchise was a simple means to an end, and if Mr. Kruger desired peace he was a very great fool for not giving the franchise which the Colonial Secretary asked for. Only one-fourth of the representatives of the Transvaal would have been returned by the Uitlanders, and they would have been powerless in the Volksraad. They would have brought forth their grievances, but they would certainly have been out-voted, and England could not have interfered. The first thing that opened my eyes to the real intention of President Kruger was the way in which he just got near to what was proposed, and then he put something in which we could not accept, and which showed that he never honestly intended to come to terms because his intention was, as soon as the rains had fallen and there was food for horses, to declare war. We are blamed for breaking off the negotiations, and why? Because they had been entirely upon the franchise. It was found that Mr. Kruger would not come to terms, and the Colonial Secretary very properly stopped the negotiations on those lines so that he might try something else. The right hon. Gentleman was thinking it over, and told President Steyn he would be glad to hear his suggestions, and called attention to the Duke of Devonshire's speech, in which he declared that our proposals would be very moderate. But after only a few days' delay President Kruger sent us an ultimatum declaring war and invaded British territory, and yet we are told that this is the Colonial Secretary's or Mr. Rhodes's war. I say again it is Paul Kruger's war, which was forced upon us, and it must be fought to a conclusion. There is another conclusive point to my mind that Kruger intended war, and that is the fact that he took such pains to hide his armaments from the British. If a small State fears to be attacked by its neighbour it endeavours to lead the large State to believe that its armaments are larger than they really are, and that they will find if they attack them that they are only drawing the badger. What about all these cannon that were smuggled in pianoforte cases, and arms concealed in boxes of tapioca and macaroni, which was done because Kruger wanted to hide the fact that he was making a huge arsenal of the Transvaal? All these secret preparations were not for defensive purposes, but because Kruger intended to attack us. We are waging war now for the preservation of peace in our South African Republic. Supposing any one of our Native States in India followed President Kruger's course and imported secretly armaments and got foreign military strategists to train their soldiers? We should be obliged to tell them to stop it. A complaint was made against the Colonial Secretary because he did not at once, in the early stages of the diplomacy, declare war. For a Minister to be compelled to declare war in a case of that kind would put terrible power into the hands of an unscrupulous Minister involving his country in war. It is said that the Government ought to have known all about these preparations, and that they are guilty of want of knowledge and foresight. I maintain that the Government did all they could under the circumstances, and it would be easy to point out in the newspapers which represent the party which is now attacking us that when the troops were sent out they accused the Government of sending out too many troops, and now they charge us with not sending enough. I admit we have suffered what the right hon. Baronet calls checks. We have lost lives which perhaps might have been spared, although I do not think they could have been saved by anything we could have done at home. On the face of it this great loss of life and of prisoners was due to action on the spot, and not due to any orders directed by this Government. The troops sent out have done all they were sent to do. The right hon. Gentleman was very angry because the Secretary for the Colonies wired his approval of Sir Alfred Milner's statement that an invasion of Natal would not be tolerated for a moment. Would he have wished him to say that invasion would be tolerated and feebly resisted? No, he was bound to tell our colonists that the whole power of the British Empire would be used, and that such an invasion would not be tolerated. Nearly the whole of the boundaries of the Transvaal is British territory, and if we had had 100,000 men on the spot it would hardly have been possible to prevent invasion at some point on a boundary 2,000 miles long. We have done everything that was possible to repair any mistake, and we have succeeded in preventing the invasion coming still further. The Boers thought they were going to succeed in fighting their way to Pietermaritzburg and Durban, and thus drive us out of the country. But what progress have the Boers made? Why that little army which we sent out at first has been able to stop them. Troops are now going to the front in large quantities, and we have no reason to doubt that that invasion will be stopped and the Boers will be driven back. We have gained one or two good lessons from the war. We have been shown the weaknesses of our defences in case we have a quarrel with a European Power. My opinion is that this war has also shown us to be stronger in relation to European Powers than has been hitherto supposed. We have feared Russia's invasion of India, but we have now learned from the experience of Natal that, with thousands of Indian troops, stiffened by British officers, and with the aid of our splendid artillery and of the spade, we can fortify the mountain passes and prevent any Russian invasion. And as long as our Navy maintains its present proud position we have absolutely no fear of a foreign invasion of this country. If England was strong enough to stand against all Europe a century ago it can do so now. We know that the Government is going to profit by this war and remedy the weak spots in our military preparations. Therefore, with all my heart and without hesitation, I shall go into the lobby against this Amendment.

Mr. Gedge.

*MR. JOHN BURNS (Battersea): The right hon. Baronet the Member for the College Division of Glasgow, to whom I always listen with interest and sympathy, was under the impression that the House of Commons in this, the time of peril, ought to be engaged in a better and more dignified task than criticising the causes and the preparations for this war. He indicated that it was not a satisfactory thing for foreign nations to see the British House of Commons almost squabbling, as he said, about details while our soldiers were at death grips with the brave, plucky, magnanimous, and heroic Boers. I do not share that view. I believe that the proof of the real greatness of the British people is tested by the fact that the House of Commons is doing its legislative duty here as our soldiers are doing their duty in South Africa. In a specialised nation like this it is appropriate that the soldier should fight while the House of Commons is discharging its legal functions in discussing what led up to the war. I think it is a proof of the character and dignity of the House of Commons that while we are engaged in a war of this character, we are not excited like other assemblies or flying at each other's throats on the question as to who began the war and how it ought to be conducted. I will say for the House of Commons that I have never listened to a discussion extending over so many days in which the typical equanimity of the British character was more splendidly displayed than during the whole progress of this debate. And while we are discussing here the minds of the people are working, and the man in the train and the omnibus with almost equally placid demeanour is threshing out the issues and problems of this struggle; and I regard it as complimentary to the House of Commons and to the British people that we all have the moral courage to do our duty, taking no notice of the blind and ignorant criticisms directed against us by a few newspapers outside, owned by blackguards and edited by ruffians who clamoured for this war. I say that we are fulfilling the best traditions of the House of Commons, and we are incidentally imitating the great ones before us—Chatham and Fox and the Duke of Richmond and Gordon, who went further than the House of Commons is now doing by taking the side of the American colonies against their own countrymen when they were wrong. Then we are told by the other side that we ought to be silent; that the muzzling order should be imposed, that the House of Commons should be inarticulate, and that we should be dumb dogs all. In whose interest and for what? In the interest of some pinchbeck Pitt, some embryonic Cromwell, who has not yet appeared, and whose vain ambitions and plunging policies are to override a free assembly. One man is to be invited—and I hear it with shame—from the Liberal side, to do what Pitt did a hundred years ago, without Pitt's justification. Wild Imperialism succeeded by militarism is to pave the way to autocracy. He backed up the stupidity of the King by assuming power which the House of Commons only should have assumed, and by refusing the overtures of Napoleon Bonaparte, when he humbly sued for peace, the House of Commons being practically silent, involved the country in eighteen years of war and a national debt of a thousand millions. That was because the Opposition did actually, what the present Opposition has virtually done in recent years, abdicate its function of opposing the Government. Out of a mistaken sense of patriotism men have been silent in this House at the suggestion of a clique too long. The financial elements, the military caste, the society set, have dictated African policy too long, with fatal results. In the initial stages of this war, they should not only have been eloquent against it but indignant against all the causes which led up to it. It is stated that the country is disgusted with this debate, which is doing no good and possibly doing some harm. I do not believe it. If it be true, the country must be awakened by protest, and that protest I cheerfully make. Let me first deal with one fact in the speech of the hon. and gallant Member who has recently spoken. He said that the only effect of this debate will be to stimulate the Boers and give them an incentive to fight. What more incentive do they want from the military point of view? Fifty or sixty thousand peasant farmers, market gardeners, and undisciplined troops are fighting under the greatest stimulus men can ever have—a deep religious motive, a patriotic impulse, and a love of liberty. They have kept at bay the skill of our generals and the heroism of our troops. They want no more incentive than their continuous successes, and I would advise military men, who talk without perspective and proportion more befitting

VOL. LXXVIII. [FOURTH SERIES.]

Laffan's Plain than of actual warfare, to remember that the Boers want no further incentive than that supplied them by the baffling of our Generals and the blundering of the Colonial Secretary for the past four years. It was not as high as a church or as wide as a door, but, like Mercutio's wound, it was enough. This debate has evoked from the Under Secretary of State for War one of the most charming speeches I have ever listened to in the House of Commons, and it has enabled us to have departmental preparations and facts put before the country. What is more, it has enabled two or three Liberal Imperialists to state the case from the point of view of jingo expansion more clearly and ably than the Government were capable of doing themselves. This is interesting if disappointing, and illustrates too clearly their departure from Liberal traditions. Then we are also told that every day that this debate goes on there is a stronger probability of the country being involved in external trouble. I am not a jingo nor a Liberal Imperialist, but this I do say, that badly as England has done in a wrong cause against the Boers, and we have done badly mainly on that account, the Germans could not have done better, and the French would, in my opinion, have done infinitely worse. France met defeat in Madagascar; Italy met its fate in Abyssinia, and in West Africa and the Cameroons, where I have been, can be seen what Germany is capable of doing, where climate and strange conditions prevail. If foreign countries went so far as to presume on our difficulties in South Africa to attempt an invasion, in which I do not believe, let me tell the House of Commons, as knowing the man in the street, that there would be a prompt dismissal from the front benches of the incompetent Ministers and of the military mandarins in Pall Mall, who are a disgrace to their office. These gentlemen lack adaptability, promptitude, and seem incapable of meeting difficulty with resource. In a real national crisis prompt, able, and adaptable leaders would be found. The Army would be demilitarised and put on a basis that would enable it to repel invasion. The civilian and mechanical instincts of the people would make short work of those who fill office but cannot inspire confidence, who can exercise empty authority but wield no power. When I hear men talk about the British Empire being broken up I do not believe a word of it. It is not true. It would not happen even if we lost South Africa, as Empire depends on other qualities than military loss or failure. That kind of clap-trap was indulged in when we lost the American colonies, but from 1780 up till 1900 has been a period of unexampled prosperity, and so long as our people are industrious and our merchants honest the British people will go on. This debate amongst many good results must have the effect of dismissing from the public mind the violent misrepresentations of Paul Kruger, General Joubert, and of the Boer people generally which had been indulged in. Daily papers like the Daily Mail represented the average Boer to be a cross between Charles Peace, the burglar and murderer, a West African negro, with a dash of Jack the Ripper thrown in; and when the readers of that mendacious, and shallow and ignorant print read this description of the Boers every morning, they thought that these oracular productions and definitions of the Boer character came straight from the very fountain of truth itself. Did the gullible readers think that the proprietors of the Daily Mail, which has been mainly responsible for egging the people of this country on to this war—that Alfred Harmsworth had 500 shares in the Chartered Company; that Cecil Harmsworth was also a “chartered libertine,” and that another Harmsworth was one of the Rhodesian gang? Did they think that Tudor Street and Carmelite Street were poisoning the well-springs of information, playing the low-down game of the Johannesburg Star and every one of the corrupt and rotten papers that have excited the man in the street to clamour for war against his better judgment and better inclination? Fortunately the people are sobering, reverses have chastened them, and respect for their opponents has begotten fair play. I am one of those who have seen the Boer in this House when he occasionally visited us and in other places, and know something of him. It is creditable that men like Lord Methuen, Sir George White, General Symons, and, indeed, all who have come into contact with the Boers either here or in the colonies, have admired the strategy, chivalry, devotion, courage, and humanity of every man who follows the Boer flag. We have a right to say that. Respect for a brave foe is the first step to know how to vanquish him, and when beaten how to treat him. Members will find when the settlement arrives how their harsh words will stand in the way. We have been told in this debate by Members opposite that the debate is useless. Yes, but what about the speech of the Under Secretary for War—the debate produced that—or of the speeches of the hon. Members for Plymouth and Carnarvon? The hon. and legal Gentleman is far too great a man to be worried and troubled by the hon. Member for Walsall, who took the opportunity of attacking him in his absence. This debate was necessary if only for that speech, in which we got out the evidence of the War Office and how bad a defence could be in the hands of such a good advocate. Then it was necessary to have this debate if only to hear what case the Right. Hon. the Colonial Secretary could make out for the position he has taken up. I listened to that speech. It was a kind of speech which might have been delivered at a meeting of medical students, after they had passed their examination, in the Empire Theatre on a Saturday afternoon. No argument for the war—wave the Union Jack. No defence or justification of his policy—sing “Rule Britannia.” A few mistakes committed (by other people)—double the army in South Africa. And then an eloquent peroration about “seeing this thing through” in the language of the pot-house, and in the spirit of the prize-ring.

*MR. SPEAKER: The language of the hon. Gentleman is hardly consistent with the dignity of debate. Such expressions as “the language of the pot-house” should not be used in referring to the speech with which the hon. Gentleman is dealing.

*MR. JOHN BURNS: If you take, Mr. Speaker, exception to the phrase, I withdraw “language of the pot-house” and substitute “language of the Stock Exchange.” I venture to say that if the Colonial Secretary and the Colonial Office had conducted the negotiations which led up to this unfortunate war in the tone and temper of the gentlemanly speech of the hon. Member for Dover, instead of being in the death-grips, as now, with them, President Kruger, President Steyn, and General Joubert would have been interesting and attractive figures in Her Majesty's Jubilee procession in 1897. But it was not to be. What does the Colonial Secretary say? We are to have no second Majuba. Is that the kind of taunt to placate an enemy who deserves by his splendid fighting qualities to be treated well? Is it the kind of thing to say, that magnanimity is a mistake? Why we shall hear next that meanness is a virtue, charity a crime, and national honour only a mere convention. Then the Colonial Secretary talks about victory. I do not yet see it in sight—although like all men I would like to—when we know that we have lost 10,000 men, killed, wounded, missing, or prisoners; or when this lamentable fact is brought to light, that in three years in the Crimean war we had 851 officers killed and wounded; whereas in three months of this war we have 615 officers killed, wounded, missing or prisoners. It is not for us to boast of victory after four months' war, or to talk about magnanimity being a mistake, in face of tragic facts like these. It is not for us to talk about no repetition of Majuba, which was a military blunder on our side, and for which no fault could be found against the Boers. What we have got to do in our struggle with the Boers, whilst prosecuting our military aim with their ability, resource, and common sense, is to avoid provocation and boastful threats, and what we have a right to do when war ceases, is to make it possible for our enemy to enter into negotiations for a lasting and permanent peace, which shall be beneficial to both sides. I am not to be dismayed from expressing my opinion by very easy taunts from the other side. I do not believe that war, even in a good cause, should be so readily invoked as it has been in this struggle, where incompetence has been followed by bloodshed, and rashness by desolation. I would refer to Edmund Burke's speech on a similar occasion, when the dread arbitrament of war was lightly invoked. Then he said—

"A conscientious man would be cautious how he dealt in blood. He would feel some apprehension at being called to a tremendous account for engaging in so deep a play without any knowledge of the game. It is no excuse for presumptuous ignorance that it is directed by insolent passion."

The right hon. Gentleman taunted the Opposition for voting for the Amendment. Now, I do not altogether agree with it, but, illogical though it be, I want to swell the majority against this war, consequently I am not a prisoner to phrases. I am going also to vote for the Amendment of the Irish Members, and would support any Amendment that challenges, denounces, or condemns the war, or its causes, or in any way makes for peace, which both the Boers and we will desire before this conflict ends. I am not concerned with being taunted with being inconsistent and illogical. I take up higher ground, and accept the challenge of the right hon. the Colonial Secretary. I maintain as against him that this war is unnecessary, unjust, and immoral, because I recognise the Boer Republics as independent States, owing us no suzerainty except in one particular which has not yet been infringed. There is no difference between Boer and Briton that warrants war. I say we had no right to dictate, no right to demand, only the privilege to persuade. It is because I believe this that I say this war is unnecessary, unjust, and immoral. I take up this attitude and shelter myself behind the language of the Colonial Secretary, who said on May 8th, 1896, in the House of Commons—

Mr. John Burns.

"To go to war with President Kruger in order to force upon him reforms in the internal affairs of his State, with which successive Secretaries of State standing in this place have repudiated all right of interference, would have been a course of action as immoral as it would have been unwise."

If he was right then, as he was, I am justified now. I contend that this war might have been avoided, and to that extent was unnecessary. What is more, if the most elementary precautions and patience had been taken the cause of war could have been removed, if what others saw had been seen by the Colonial Office; the crisis we are now in was foreshadowed by many. But before I deal with that point I want to bring to light a prophecy, not by myself, but by the Saturday Review on March 6th, 1897. That journal took the view that—

"The return of Mr. Rhodes to South Africa will, we are afraid, mean the outbreak of further trouble. Is he to be permitted to do damage right and left now that he stands self-convicted of conspiracy against a friendly State. . . . Dr. Jameson, his victim, has suffered slightly for his participation in the plot. Is then the arch-conspirator, Mr. Rhodes, himself to escape scot-free? We are not disposed to be vindictive, but we do think that it is criminal to allow Mr. Rhodes to meddle further in the politics of South Africa. If Mr. Chamberlain countenances Mr. Rhodes's return to active political life and reappearance on the South African stage as a prominent though nondefined character, the results will be on his own head."

Well, it was because the Colonial Secretary had allowed Mr. Rhodes to go back to South Africa, and did not deprive him of his Privy Councillorship, of which he ought to have been deprived; because he allowed Earl Grey to dodge the Committee and slip away out of the country; because he promoted Sir Graham Bower, and retained Mr. Newton; because Willoughby and White had been reinstated whilst the correspondence between Mr. Hawksley and the Colonial Secretary showed how the instigators of the raid, the real cause of the war, had been treated—it is because of all these blunders and entanglements that we are involved in this lamentable war. Following the Saturday Review—and I have always taken a strong line against the Chartered Company—on the 6th January, 1896, only a week after the raid, I suggested that the charter should be revoked, that Lord Roberts should be sent out to South Africa with 15,000 men, that all chartered rights should be sequestered, that all commissioners, high and low, especially low, should be dismissed and sent home, that Mr. Asquith should be invited to be Civil Commissioner in South Africa for five years, that a guarantee should be given to the South African Republic of the autonomy for which they were fighting and which they deserve. Now why did I suggest that? Because I knew, as the man in the street knew, the composition of the financial gang which has engineered this war, and whose methods and agents were well known to everybody but the Colonial Office. On the question of independence of the Transvaal I stood with Mr. Gladstone, no act of whose political life deserves more credit than his magnanimous, prescient, and dignified conduct in 1881. I stood with Lord Kimberley, Lord Derby, Lord Salisbury, Sir Evelyn Wood, Mr. Balfour, Mr. W. H. Smith, and the Lord Chief Justice as to the freedom and independent sovereignty of the Boers. We have evidence after evidence that beyond suggesting improvements in franchise, tariffs, and other matters, which President Kruger could or need not accept,

we have no right to do what we have done, and in doing which we have been involved in this terrible and regrettable war. But it may be said that I want to see British subjects in South Africa treated better. Of course I do. I want to see British subjects under British dominion—no, not dominion; that is an arbitrary word—I want to see every British subject treated, wherever he is, as a true man ought to be. But the times are out of joint, when we have Conservatives invoking the cruel arbitrament of war to enforce a franchise on the aliens in the Transvaal, of whom they had such a poor opinion when in this country that they introduce Bills into this House to exclude them altogether from residence in England. The Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs and other Tory Members insisted that the real question before the House was whether the Government were justified in espousing the grievances of the Uitlanders. I say by diplomacy, yes; by representations, yes; by war, no, a thousand times no, because you have no right to dictate to the Transvaal on its internal affairs. But you did dictate, and demand and persuade with such effect that Paul Kruger climbed down considerably, and with such rapidity that the Colonial Secretary himself was astonished at the rapidity and amount of the concessions. And I venture to say that if he had continued to squeeze the sponge it would not have been necessary to grasp the sword. If he had been more tactful and conciliatory, and had known better the traditions of our old diplomacy, we might have done with the velvet glove of conciliation what he is trying to do with the iron glove of war. If the ingenuity for war had been used for peace, this conflict could have been avoided. Mr. Hawksley knows something of South Africa, and this is what he said on 31st January, 1900—

"No doubt Mr. Rhodes believed that reasonable diplomacy would bring the negotiations with President Kruger respecting the grievances of the Uitlanders—the real bedrock of the controversy between the disputants—to a satisfactory and peaceful conclusion immediately on the publication of the June, 1899, Blue-book, disclosing a policy of bully and bluff leading straight to war."

And certainly he was not alone when he said that if it had not been for the Colonial Secretary's despatches of June, 1899, the franchise would have been got without any trouble at all. Now, what was this demand for the franchise? Anybody would think that there had been heads cracked in some Johannesburg Trafalgar Square, or that some Johannesburg park railings had been torn down by infuriated Britishers. Well, we have had in this war gallant deeds done by the fighting 5th Northumberland Fusiliers. I know them well. They are our collier lads from Northumberland and Durham, and fine soldiers they are. When at home every man joins his trade union, and every man is a keen politician and an enemy of oppression of every kind. But what do the Northumberland and Durham miners say of the franchise in South Africa? They say what the Cornish miners say—

"We are not here for votes; we are here for money. We do not want to politically depatriate ourselves. We want to go home to England and remain British subjects and exercise the vote there."

When this capitalist war was brought about the Northumberland and Cornish miners very patriotically refused to fight against their country, but declined to fight against the Boers because they believed, with the best of the Uitlanders, that this demand for the franchise in South Africa is a bogus demand, and a fraudulent pretext of the financiers to cover ulterior designs, to buy up and use the votes of industrial nomads to increase their commercial power, to lower the social standard of the miners, to lower wages and to increase hours. A Cornish miner, when interviewed, said that—

"The five or seven years franchise did not trouble us."

He said further on—

"We had no complaint about the hours; we went to make money; this is a capitalists' job from beginning to end, and we have really no interest in it."

But let us take a higher authority than Northumberland or Cornish miners. The "Reform Union League of South Africa" sent over to England a gentleman named J. R. Dodd—Tommy Dodd he was called out there—and as soon as he landed from the ship in the dock he rushed to the House of Commons to interview the Labour Members, to interest them in favour of the grievances of the Uitlanders. In this he was following the lead of the Chartered Company, whose agents ply their schemes within these walls. I can only say he caught a Tartar when I happened to be the first Labour Member to meet him. He wrote an article in the Forum, in which he said that—

"From 1882 to 1892 there was no serious demand for the franchise, and no great anxiety for reform. The country was rich, and most of the new settlers were making too much money to care for reform. There was still, however, great need for the latter, and the administration was going from bad to worse, while the concessions granted for the construction of railways and for dynamite were sure to work havoc in later years."

There is nothing in this to suggest harsh grievances and oppression to the working people. I asked him, "Have you had any meetings in the Transvaal?" and he said "No." "Have you pulled down any park railings?" "No." "What demonstrations, then? Have you fought for the vote as long as Englishmen did at home?" "No." "Do you know that the Lords, in July, 1898, by 86 to 36, excluded aliens, and that 30 per cent. of your fellow countrymen in England either cannot vote for Commons or influence the Lords?" But he had not any proper answer to give. It was like my experience with another man from Johannesburg, where he had been for thirteen years, who came home, and whom I introduced into the House. The right hon. the Colonial Secretary was at the moment engaged in talking about the difference between the five and the seven years franchise; but the Johannesburg man could not restrain himself and refused to stay any longer. He had been used to getting 30s. a day in Johannesburg instead of 30s. a week in this country, and he showed all the impetuosity of the nouveau riche. He said—

"We don't want to listen to the Colonial Secretary and his talk of the franchise; what we want is the confounded country."

He was not so circumlocutory as Mr. Dodd, but more honest. Now who paid the expenses of Mr. Dodd? Look at his credentials and his letters of introduction. The fine Roman hand of Mr. Rutherford Harris will be detected there, as in nearly every grievance-mongering agitation, in the interest of gold and diamonds in South Africa. That is the spurious agitation of the discontented patriotic Britisher who wants to lose his nationality at home for a very doubtful nationality abroad! Again, what did Mr. Lionel Phillips, one of the Rhodesian conspirators, say?—

"As to the franchise, I do not think many people care a fig about it."

Mr. John Burns.

Let us see how the franchise is used by Rhodes, Harris, Fuller and Co. These gentlemen in the Lower House in Cape Colony, in August, 1899, obstructed and got rejected by two in the Cape House of Lords a 6d. in the £1 income tax because the De Beers millionaires would have had to pay the tax equally with the poor people. But not only that, these people who call the Boer Government a corrupt oligarchy were so keenly interested in doctoring the registers of the Capetown Parliament that Rhodes' agents put on 7,000 false votes, largely forgeries, and in over twenty cases Rhodesian agents were convicted by the courts of offences against the electoral laws, and one agent got four months' imprisonment with hard labour. And then we are told that the gentlemen who do these things have sympathy with the British working man, believe in the purity of government and honesty of administration! We are informed that the Boers treat the white labourers badly, but the native labourer worse, but if any one reads the labour papers which come from South Africa he will find that organised labour in South Africa—like the trade union councils at home—is unanimously of opinion that when the Transvaal comes under the Rhodesian domination, white labour will be reduced to what it is reduced in Kimberley, and that things will go from bad to worse, as is proved by the experience of every reliable witness who knows the conduct of the Rhodesian capitalists. As we go on we find instance after instance of intimidation, if white men refuse to arm or organise themselves for political purposes, subserving a commercial end in the interests of the mine owners in the various mines. When we go into the taxes, the eight-hour day, Sunday labour, wages, and freedom from interference, then I say the men who are engaged in the Transvaal are in an infinitely better position than those at Kimberley. The men in South Africa would lose rather than gain by any change taking place. Then, coming to the natives, I have had the pleasure, and perhaps the pain, of being one of the pioneers of Africa—I went to West Africa for a year, and was there, although the right hon. Gentleman may not know it, an engineer in the employ of a company of which the Colonial Secretary was a highly compensated shareholder. I know how the natives are treated, and I will say there is a tendency in Africa, thanks in no small measure to our Civil Service and captains in the Navy, to do their best to inculcate kindness, that the natives' position in this respect is better than in other parts; yet it is not so good as many people think. At the best I have seen cruelty practised there which has filled me with shame for my country, and both Boer and Briton need not be too proud of their treatment of the natives in any part of Africa. Then take the compound system. In the Wellington Barracks the death rate is 1 or 8 per 1,000 per annum, but when we go into the Kimberley compound, which is filled with people of just as strong physique as the soldiers in Wellington Barracks, we find, from reports of returning miners, the death rate runs from 40 to 70 per 1,000, almost the death rate of the Middle Passage. These men work hard at low depths, are liable to accidents, and when they come up they are not allowed out of the compounds, and the consequence is their only recreation is drinking, gambling, and fighting, with their attendant results in life and limb. Once a week they are subjected to strong purgatives to see that they do not secrete diamonds in their stomachs, and I now read that they go over each native with a sounding hammer to see whether he has a diamond hidden about him in his flesh. We are now told we ought to grant the franchise at the demands of men who desire that all South Africa should come in for that treatment. The franchise for what—Asiatic labour, slavery conditions for the natives, and continually lower wages and lengthening of the hours for the skilled white labour? What hypocrisy it is to talk about franchise when monopoly rule, and commercial serfdom prevails. The right hon. Gentleman the Colonial Secretary, who is so fervent for the franchise, and desirous of giving the Transvaal local government, who involves us in a war in October when we were going to war to enfranchise a lot of Uitlanders—mostly Jews, who if they got their vote would sell it—was depriving by a stroke of the pen in August of self-government one of Her Majesty's colonies, Jamaica, under the British flag, in the British Empire, whilst the Port of Spain, Trinidad, was protesting also against the arbitrary conduct of the Colonial Secretary in taking away its powers of local self-government and municipal administration. How can he reconcile war for aliens in Africa, and restricting colonial liberties at the same time? He cannot; this war is for territory, for gold, for capitalist domination masquerading in the guise of freedom and franchise. I believe while we are prosecuting this unrighteous war against these people we ought to prospect for peace; we ought to ascertain Kruger's mind as to what the ultimate terms should be. We can do so without loss of dignity and respect, and without loss of power or prestige. ["No, no!"] I am getting rather tired of this arrogant and everlasting "No." It will have to be settled some day, I am for feeling our way now. I can remember reading, as a schoolboy, with pride and pleasure, how Old England, from King Alfred's time, has been the protector of liberty and freedom. That is the quality that differentiates us from all other countries in the world. Except Ireland, Britain has been through centuries the knight-errant of the smaller peoples. Who set Belgium on its legs, gave Greece its independence, helped united Italy, and stood by Switzerland from time to time? England. In this war England is not fulfilling her traditional task, the protector of the smaller nations, and the British Army, which used to be for all good causes the Sir Galahad of History, has become in Africa the janissary of the Jews, and at whose instance a narrow financial section in and out of this House. I spent my Christmas holidays going through the books of the Chartered Company's shareholders, and I find that nearly every one who has spoken in this debate here, in the House of Lords, and in the country, has his patriotism strengthened and his speeches lengthened by the amount of his holding in the stock of the South Africa Company. It would be interesting if we could have a share list brought up-to-date to see who are the shareholders—the Duke of Fife, the Marquess of Lorne, 350 generals and Army officers, and newspaper proprietors by the yard. Then we find the shareholders in the books of the Chartered Company are also the men who figured as the Johannesburg prisoners; four of whom alone owned £12,000,000 of money, poor oppressed creatures; they were also the Jameson raiders; and we also find them directors of the Savage

Sixth Day.

South African Show at Olympia. Why was that started? To acquaint the people on this side with the customs and idiosyncrasies of the natives of Africa? No, it is part of a scheme to inflame the minds of the people with regard to the war against their better conscience and their better knowledge. Then we come to the Rhodesian press, and we find all the newspapers were captured by the Rhodesian gang, and I am surprised and ashamed that a great paper like The Times, the greatest newspaper in the world, but the smallest organ for oppressed humanity, should have employed the Monypennys and such people as correspondents. Wherever we go in this matter we see the same thing. Wherever we examine there is the financial Jew operating, directing, inspiring the agencies that have led to this war. They were supreme at the South African Committee in 1897. I thought I had landed myself in a synagogue when I went to hear the Commission; when I went to hear the trial of the Johannesburg prisoners before the Chief Justice I thought I had dropped into some place in Aldgate or Houndsditch; and when we see how the delay of the inquiry was brought about, and how the prisoners were allowed to escape with light punishment, and how exalted personages obtruded themselves into the committee and smiled upon the chief culprits, we see the force which is moving this country on to war. And for all this intrigue on the part of smart society for money, the nation incurs the debt of war. The trail of the financial serpent is over this war from beginning to end. I consider it my duty to the labour constituency I represent to say that I have a right to protest against this war. The Highland Brigade with typical valour and character share the brunt of battle with Welsh, Irish, and Englishmen, of the most serious struggles which have ever been compressed into three or four months of hard fighting; those men have shown they were heroes, but it is heroism wasted for ignoble ends. You should have gone to the relief of the Armenians against the Turk if you wanted war merely for war's sake. The crime of it all is that these brave lads from Inverness and Glasgow and the Rifle Brigade are fighting for an unrighteous cause, a cause which brings no military credit, will deprive a brave people of their freedom, and ultimately land us in conscription. The Highland Brigade, for example, who had so nobly done their duty by the side of men of other nationalities, were too good to waste on Mr. Ruthenford Harris and Mr. Beit. I protest against the incompetency displayed in the arrangements for the war, the hollowness of its object, the immorality of its aim, the stupidity with which the negotiations were conducted, and above all the want of taste, tact and temper too frequently shown by the Colonial Secretary, the result being that we have been dragged into a war that has besmirched the fair name of the country. (Cheers.)

Mr. John Burns.

*MR. WYLIE (Dumbartonshire), speaking against the Amendment, said no Scotch Member had spoken on the Conservative side, with the exception of one who had confined himself very much to applying to the Opposition to shorten the discussion. The real cause of the war lay deep down in the moral condition of the race which had so wantonly invaded our territory, their ignorance and domineering instincts, which existed, not only prior to 1895, but from the beginning of the century. The real cause of the war was first the oppression of the native races, whom we had done so much to relieve, and secondly, of the Uitlanders, whom we were going to relieve. It was universally admitted that the treatment of the native races by the British was infinitely better than that of any other country. From 1815, the very first year after we had acquired Cape Colony, they had bitterly resented our steady interference with what they believed to be their right to treat the natives not only as slaves, but as worse than beasts of burden. The right hon. Member for Bodmin had said that we should not mention the word magnanimity in connection with our treatment of the Boers. On the contrary, he thought it could not but be admitted that we were displaying great magnanimity even at the present time. It should be remembered that in Basutoland there were 35,000 of the finest cavalry in Africa, who are restrained by British influence from launching themselves against the Boers. Such magnanimity was not appreciated by the Boers, who were actively engaged in trying to induce the Basutos to rise against the British. The Uitlanders had been treated in the same spirit as the natives had been, and if after the petition in regard to the Edgar case the Government had refused to listen to their grievances, we would have lost all influence in South Africa, and there would have been the beginning of the end to our colonies all over the world. The offer of a seven years franchise was accompanied by such conditions as to render it perfectly inoperative. With regard to the lack of knowledge and foresight of the Government in the preparations for the war, the terms to President Kruger were so moderate and conciliatory that scarcely anyone thought war possible. This Government had spent a great deal to make the Army efficient, and if they had come to Parliament in October last and asked for sufficient money to transport 200,000 men to South Africa, the Opposition would have been the first to have scouted the proposal as recklessly extravagant. This was not the time for mutual recrimination, but rather for friendly co-operation. Let hon. Gentlemen remember, though we had under-estimated the strength and military resources of the Boers they had still more egregiously under-estimated ours, and the determination of this country to carry on the war to a successful termination. We had already secured peace and prosperity to a vast black population in North Africa and we would not slacken our efforts until we had secured even better results to the whites in South Africa. We were fighting for our countrymen in South Africa, who had been ground under the iron heel of oppression. We were fighting for justice for the native as well as the European, and under all the circumstances he believed that the House would reject by an overwhelming majority the Amendment that had been put before it, and that all parties would unite in carrying the war to a successful conclusion.

MR. HAVELOCK WILSON (Middlesbrough): I do not intend to detain the House very long to-night, but, as my purpose is to adopt a course which is against the party I am associated with, I think it necessary to explain my reasons for doing so. Now, Sir, I listened with great attention to the speech of my hon. friend the Member for Battersea, and I may say that he did not convince me that the Government is in the wrong in the course they are pursuing in repelling the invasion of the Boers into British territory. We have been told over and over again that the Government have declared war in the interests of the Uit-landers. I do not agree with that statement, because the fact is that the Government have been compelled to go to war in order to repel the invader from our colonies. Now, Sir, I am not one animated by jingo convictions; I do not believe in jingoism; but at the same time I do believe in upholding the integrity of the British Empire. I am a British patriot above all things. I have travelled a few times around the world, and I have found few countries where the same freedom and the same privileges are known as we enjoy. And where I find any encroachment on our territory, any invasion of our rights and liberties, I forget my party and put the support of my country, as a patriot, before all things. We do not need to go back to 1881 to find the cause of the war. I don't object in the slightest degree to Mr. Gladstone's general feelings of humanity and love of peace; but what I did object to at the time, and still think of, is the mistake made when the Government in 1881 declared their intention to go to war with the Boers in order to assert British supremacy in South Africa. Then, after suffering defeat, we climbed down, and we are made to suffer for that to-night. There is no mistake about it that that has been the cause of the trouble in the Transvaal all through. We are told that the Uitlanders have not suffered any serious oppression, and that they have not been knocked down and ill-used; but I have it from many of my friends residing in the Transvaal—and I believe them, despite what my hon. friend the Member for Battersea says—that they have been subjected to all kinds of petty tyranny for years from these Boers. I ask, in common fairness, how long can we tolerate that state of things? We are told that the Jameson raid is responsible for a great deal of this war. I don't believe it. I believe the Boers have been steadily arming for years—and for what object? They have been looking forward eagerly to the time when the South African Republic should haul down the British flag in Cape Colony and Natal. I say I do not believe that the Government have gone to war merely for the purpose of securing equal rights for the Uitlanders in the Transvaal. But, while I am not prepared, and refuse, to vote against the Government on this Amendment, at the same time I cannot approve their action in the conduct of the war. On that point I believe there never has been a Government in power that has so mismanaged a war as this one. We have only to read the newspapers to learn of the complaints made by the troops in regard to the arrangements made for sending them out to South Africa, and the bad food that was supplied them. I say it is a scandal and a disgrace that the Government should lay itself open to the charge of under-feeding and ill-feeding with rotten provisions and inferior stores the men we have sent to uphold the British prestige in South Africa. There is no excuse for it. The voyage was only of some twenty or thirty days, and the authorities should have seen that sufficient stores were placed on board. I think there has been sufficient said on this question, so I do not intend to occupy the time of the House any longer; but I must say that I am sorry to disagree with my hon. friends on this side of the House. I do not believe that they are at all pursuing an intelligent policy, because on the one hand they condemn the Government for going to war, and on the other say that they have not gone far enough, and finally they urge the Government to go on vigorously with a war which they call unjust. That is an irreconcilable position and one which I must dissent from. If I did not believe in the war I would do my best to check its progress as far as I could, not merely within the walls of this House, but upon every platform throughout the country.

Sixth Day.

Mr. Havelock Wilson.

*MR. BOND (Nottingham, E.): I rise, Sir, practically for the first time to take part in an important debate in this House. And I rise principally to dissociate myself, as representative of a great Midland city—for the majority of whose inhabitants I think I may venture to speak quite fearlessly—from the attitude and the line which has been taken up in regard to this war by certain sections of society and by certain Members of this House, as well as by an influential section of the London press. I for my part am sick and tired of this daily railing and Daily Mail-ing. I think that it is little less than shocking that papers which have been calling on foreign nations to admire the calmness and fortitude which our people have exhibited in face of the reverses which the British arms have sustained should themselves be daily cavilling at our administration and the inefficiency of our military preparations, and in the same breath be complaining of the Opposition for bringing forward this vote of censure. It is a kind of inconsistency which does not commend itself to the minds of reasonable men, and I am certain that in the great provincial centres these views are taken at their right value. I am told on good authority that in Nottingham nothing would be easier or more popular than to arrange for burning in the market place copies of the Daily Mail, the Morning Post, and The Times. Now, Sir, the view expressed in different ways by different speakers is that this is an inevitable war—and that view I share; but when I say it is inevitable, I say it on rather different grounds from those who have preceded me. I will explain what I mean. When this war was begun, or on the eve of the beginning of the war, I noticed a very interesting communication from the correspondent of the Morning Post, who was stationed at that time at Newcastle. He was evidently a young man who had gone out to South Africa for the first time, and he said—

“If any Englishman is suffering from what is called ‘swelled head,’ let him come out here, and he will quickly find that not only is an Englishman disliked, but despised.”

Now, Sir, we are accustomed to being disliked, but not despised; and I say that when a feeling of that kind becomes prevalent throughout the Boer Republic, and when we have the natural feeling of resentment which that attitude produces in the mind of an Englishman—we are not accustomed to that demeanour from those whom we come in contact with, as a rule—when we have grievances about the Uitlanders, and suspicion is aroused on both sides by the raid and the consequences of the raid, so that the negotiations we were conducting could not be carried to a successful issue, it was almost inevitable that a conflagration would arise. There was too much loose gunpowder about in South Africa, and whether the explosion occurred yesterday or to-morrow does not, it seems to me, matter very much. Under all the circumstances the collision was inevitable and could not be put off. It was what Lord Bacon would have called “a birth of time,” the result of a long series of events, all working and co-operating together to bring about a predestined close. I am, therefore, not much concerned with the question of whether the collision might have been put off for a short time; or whether, if President Kruger had shown himself rather more reasonable and amenable to argument, we might not have been engaged in the present desperate conflict. The belief I hold is that, however that might have been, this desperate conflict could not have been put off long. In that strong belief I put aside the question whether the negotiations the Government indulged in were conducted in the most successful or judicious manner, or whether we have any reason to suppose that if the British case had been put differently the immediate results would have been different. As far as this vote of censure is concerned, all that is of comparatively little moment. Then, with regard to the preparations which the Government ought to have made, if the accusations against them mean anything they mean that when the war broke out we ought to have had more forces in Cape Colony and Natal. Now how could we have observed the rules of the game and followed the ordinary course of conduct which one civilised State observes towards another, if we had put more forces or greater military armaments out there before war broke out? The hon. Baronet the Member for the Berwick Division, in a speech delivered in the early part of the debate, said, with his usual acumen and usual fairness, that whilst negotiations were going on, it would be absolutely impossible for us to appreciably augment the forces at our disposal in South Africa. That, Sir, I take to be absolutely true. We could not while conducting negotiations make an ostentatious display of force, nor could we be surreptitiously drafting forces into South Africa sufficient to make the frontier invulnerable against attack. Well, if that be so, if we were precluded by the position we assumed from bringing into Africa forces commensurate with those which the Boers could bring against us what charge can you bring against the Government at the time hostilities broke out? Who can say with truth that the Government fell short of their duty? When the war did break out, who will say that the Government was taken unprepared? Why, Sir, within as short a time as was humanly possible, the troops were on their way to South Africa. At the present time we have got an army in South Africa which no other European Power could place there in such short space of time and at such a distance from our shores. With regard to the Amendment, we on this side of the House feel that it is a matter of regret that it has been moved. It is not a patriotic Amendment; it is not an Amendment which on further consideration will recommend itself on the ground of party advantage to hon. Members opposite. I hardly know what it is they expect to gain from it. I am perfectly certain that were it carried—a contingency which cannot be contemplated—it would have a most serious effect upon our own country, and upon foreign countries, by evidencing a lamentable difference of opinion with regard to the policy of this war. Whether it be carried or not it can do nothing but harm. As far as I can judge, the only reason for proposing it is to give, for a few brief hours or for a few brief days, a fleeting and spurious semblance of unity to the disorganised battalions of the Opposition. That manœuvre, I feel sure, cannot succeed; it cannot take in the House; it does not take in the country; and I venture to say that we shall see those who are engineering this device hoist with their own petard.

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN (Stirling Burghs): Mr. Speaker, exactly a week ago I had the opportunity of explaining at considerable length, in the debate on the main question of the Address, my general views of the position of affairs in South Africa and the circumstances which have led to it. I spoke then with full knowledge that this Amendment was immediately to follow, and my observations covered the whole ground of the Amendment; therefore I feel myself wholly disinclined, and, in fact, should look upon it as too great a trespass on the patience of the House, to attempt to repeat much that I said on so recent an occasion. Among other things I expressed the view that there was much to condemn in the general conduct of South African affairs by the Government. I claimed for the Opposition the full right of criticism, and I said that this, so far from being an inconvenient time for criticism, was the proper and most effective moment at which criticism could be applied—criticism which would be of little value if it were put off to a convenient season, which might never arrive. I noted that the House received without demur the assertion of that claim, and indeed the contrary doctrine could not be sustained either by precedent or by constitutional usage and theory. Sir, I say that it was not only our right, but our bounden duty to make this motion expressive of our judgment, and to record that judgment by our votes. Surely the Government, and even the most ardent friends of the Government, who are often more sanguine than the Government themselves, could not imagine that Parliament could meet and no motion and debate of this kind occur. After recent events, and allowing as we may for every excuse and explanation which may be offered, the members of the Ministry can hardly pose as conquerors upon whose brows wreaths of laurel should be placed. Their diplomacy has failed. The end and object of diplomacy is to gain your purpose without war. Diplomacy has not gained their purpose, and we are at war. And their military operations can hardly be said to have been successful, because very little head—if, indeed, any head—has been made against the enemy, and these facts themselves invite criticism. But here arises one of the strangest phases of the present situation. For venturing to impugn the conduct of the Government we have been railed at day after day by a portion of the press on the ground of our want of patriotism, while the very newspapers that bring the accusation against us are themselves day by day denouncing the Government, calling for its reconstruction, searching about for a scapegoat, and clamouring for a change—[Ministerial cries of “No, no!”]—a change within itself if you like, but a change of some sort. They found their charge of want of patriotism upon what they represent to be the perilous position of the country. I protest against the exaggerated view of the position of the country which they take up, and which has been reflected in some of the speeches in this debate. “Humiliation” is, I believe, the word that the Prime Minister of Great Britain has used of the position of the country at this moment. Sir, disappointed we may be with the course of the war, humbled in their pride and arrogance those among us may be who went into the war with a light heart, confidently hoping for an easy triumph. But as to national humiliation and national discomfiture, it does not exist. Our difficulties may indeed be great, and a heavy call may be made on the patience and courage of our troops and our people; but the hysterical writers who have of recent years taken possession of a large portion of the press of this country have worked themselves up into a state of panic for which there exists no reason at all. I was glad to hear the composed and sensible tone in which the Colonial Secretary spoke of this matter the other night. Our country is not—although some things have been done and a good many things have been said that might lead to such a conclusion—our country is not at its last gasp. On the contrary, what has been done by this country, what even the much-maligned War Office has done, shows the stuff of which our Army is made, and the spirit which has been exhibited by the British people both at home and in the colonies has at once astonished and provoked the admiration of the world. When we are told, therefore, that we must be silent in our nation's agony because the Gauls are at the gates of Rome, I answer that the Gauls are not at the gates of Rome. We have 180,000 soldiers in South Africa, courageous, well-equipped men, and there is no reason for either despondency or panic. But on this very account we in the House of Commons are free, as we should not otherwise have been, to state our view of the administration of affairs by the Government, and to express our estimate of the spirit and the lines of policy which we think necessary for the peace and prosperity of our South African dominions—a policy by departing from which we have incurred our present misfortunes and troubles. I should like to pass, by in silence, and to treat in the way it deserves, another kind of imputation put upon us because of this motion and the speeches with which we support it—namely, that we are actuated by merely party motives and by a desire to clamber into power. [AN HON. MEMBER: Hear, hear!] My experience, which is longer, I am afraid, than that of the hon. Member who interrupts, leads me to believe that such taunts usually come from those who are themselves the bitterest party men; but I was amazed to hear this taunt and sneer coming from the right hon. Gentlemen on the Treasury bench. Did it not occur to some of them that they were using a weapon which has two edges; that, if there may be sometimes on the one side a selfish desire to obtain office, there may be also on the other side an equally unworthy desire to retain office, which may vitiate the judgment and stifle the conscience of a Minister? I can only say I think little of the cause which needs the support of any such weapon, and still less of the man who stoops to use it. As for us who are supporting this Amendment by our voice and by our votes, I can honestly say that we have no desire or expectation of personal or party advantage from it whatever. There is something that we believe ought to be said in the interest of the Empire, and we desire to say it. We are deeply grieved by the sufferings of our brave countrymen in the field and of those who wait and weep for them at home, and we are moved thereby to the expression of two desires. The first is that every facility should be given to the Government of the Queen for the prosecution of this war. [At this point the right hon. Gentleman was interrupted by loud cheers at the result of the York election from the Ministerial benches.] I was saying, when temporarily interrupted by a cause which I fully appreciate, that the first thing we are led to by the consideration of the sufferings of our brave fellow countrymen is that every facility should be given for the prosecution of the war, in order that it may be terminated as speedily as possible, and that the suffering and hardship may not be prolonged unnecessarily; and the second thing which we are led to by that consideration is that such a policy should be pursued in South Africa as would give the best hope that those sufferings will not have been in vain, and that harmony and peace in South Africa may issue from the struggle. There is only one other observation I would make on the general question of this Amendment. We have heard several speeches, and one of them I listened to with great pleasure from the hon. Baronet the Member for the College Division of Glasgow, that speech being solely devoted to this subject of the uselessness and the unnecessary character of this Amendment and debate. There is one thing which would have entirely stood in the way of a debate such as this.

Mr. Bond.

If we had been imposing the slightest delay in the way of the schemes or preparations which the Government had in hand for the purposes of the war, then I can tell the hon. Baronet and the House that so soon as we were informed of that I should have used all my influence to urge a cessation of the debate. But we have been assured by the Under Secretary for War, and the assurance was repeated by the Secretary of State himself in another place, that this was not the case, that they were in no way hindered or embarrassed. It was our expectation that by this debate we should not only have an opportunity of expressing views on the subject which are largely held in the country, but that we should be able to elicit by means of it from the Government some much-required information on important points. I cannot say that this last purpose of the debate has been very successful. This Amendment alleges against the Government a want of knowledge, of foresight, and of judgment. Let me test this allegation with reference to one particular point, and it is a crucial point. I asked the question in the speech I delivered last week, and I repeat it now—Did the Government, or did they not, know of the disparity between the defensive strength of the colonies and the military resources and power of the Boers when they entered into the negotiations which were conducted so vigorously last summer? If they knew of that disparity and realised it, then no words in condemnation of their course of conduct could be too strong. Let the House think for a moment of what have been the results—apart from the want of prudence which such a course would indicate. We see the results in the calamities which have befallen us in Natal, in the beleaguering of Ladysmith; we see them in the alteration of the plan of campaign and in the deadlock which has occurred in the military operations in other parts of South Africa. But if the Government were informed, and formed a right judgment on the information they received, there were three things which they might have done. They might have held back from their negotiations until they had first taken steps to increase the defensive strength of the Colonies. [Ministerial cries of "Oh!"] There would have been some delay, and the thought of it appears to shock one or two hon. Members on the other side. But can you say that a delay of a few months, or perhaps of a year, in gaining the object to which the negotiations were directed would have had consequences, material, social, or political, to be compared for one moment with the state of things which has arisen in the last few months? I repeat what I have said before, and I repeat it in the face of the statement of the right hon. gentleman, if the Government had come to Parliament asking for assistance for the purpose of fortifying the position of the colonies, Parliament would certainly willingly have provided all that was required. But there was an alternative course. The Government might at an earlier period have protested against the armaments of the Boers. They might have cleared themselves of all participation in, or connexion with, the raid and its authors. They might have given the most ample pledges and guarantees that no such enterprise would again be undertaken; and then, with their hands free, they could have gone to the Transvaal Government and insisted upon the cessation of the passage of arms. Either of these courses would have shown knowledge, judgment, and foresight. But take the third course, which the Government adopted. They instituted and prosecuted their negotiations with those whom they knew to be a touchy, jealous, susceptible, even, if you like, a quarrelsome people, because they had formed the mad expectation—I cannot call it other than mad, and we have never yet ascertained on what authority they formed it—that the Boers would not fight. The House will see that here surely was a question to which a plain answer can be given. Did the Government know, or did they not know, of the disproportion between these two strengths? How do we stand with regard to that question at the end of the debate? The leader in one House tells us that the Government knew everything. The leader in the other House asks querulously, "How on earth could we know?" In order to explain his lack of information, he makes an extraordinary statement—that it is due to the action either of Parliament or of the Treasury in cutting down the Secret Service Vote. Lack of secret service money is alleged by the Prime Minister to be the cause of want of information as to the armaments of the Boers. The House will be interested to know what the amount of the Secret Service Vote is. The amount voted by Parliament for the years 1896, 1897, and 1898 was £90,000. What was the amount expended during that period by the Government at the head of which is this Premier who complains of the deficiency of the vote? It was only £77,948, leaving an actual surplus unexpended of £12,000. We have evidently not got much further in our explanation of this matter. But the one bit of terra firma, the one little bit of solid ground for the sole of our foot which we have obtained, was furnished to us by the Under Secretary of State for War, who in the frankest manner told us what I had all along expected would be the case, that the Intelligence Department was fully acquainted with all the armaments and preparations of the Boers; and he gave us an interesting summary of the items of information possessed by the Department. But the hon. Gentleman failed, as he necessarily must fail because he could have no knowledge of the matter, to carry that information higher, and to tell us whether it had been communicated to and considered by the Cabinet, whose policy it was calculated to influence. Unless, therefore, the right hon. Gentleman gives us further and more definite information, we are not now in a position to say that the Cabinet knew the real strength they were provoking; and we cannot, on the other hand, say that they did not know. But this, at all events, is clear—that if they were ignorant it was because they did not care, or did not take the trouble to know, and plunged with wanton blindness into the formidable conflict in which the country is engaged. On one other point we remain without information. Nothing has been a more cogent fact in influencing the opinions of men in favour of the policy of the Government than the assertion of the existence of a great conspiracy against our power, spreading over the whole of South Africa. We have waited, and we wait still, to hear, I will not say sufficient evidence, but any atom of evidence of the truth of this assertion. I must express my own belief that it is an absolute invention from beginning to end. It is quite intelligible that when the Boers began to accumulate munitions of war, and saw warlike material increasing in their hands, the wilder spirits among them might very well begin to entertain larger ambitions, and dream of finding some suitable opportunity when they could overthrow the British power over them, and relieve themselves of their dependence, however nominal it may have been, on the British Crown. We must hope that wiser heads would have intervened to prevent this becoming an actual outbreak. It is a formidable fact enough in itself, and well calculated, as we may quite believe, to cause considerable alarm and anxiety. But let me point out this—that it falls far short of what is alleged. The desire, even if it took a warlike form—a desire to secure complete independence in matters of that sort—is widely different from the general conspiracy of which we have heard—a conspiracy which, as alleged, was nothing short of—nothing less than—a combination, not only of the Dutch in the Republics, but of the Dutch people in our own colonies, to overthrow the British power in South Africa and sweep the British into the sea. Why, Sir, it would be difficult to imagine a more appalling proceeding than that if there were any solid foundation for it. I say it would be difficult to imagine a greater insult to our loyal fellow subjects among the Dutch. Then why have we not had a word of explanation? I trust some explanation will be forthcoming, because this may have a serious effect. We do not know from what source the information comes outside official sources. It does not come, we are told, from any one in Park Lane, and it does not come from Mr. Rhodes; but wherever it comes from we should like to know who told of this Pan-Hollandic conspiracy. The idea of its existence is contradicted by the highest authorities to whom we are accustomed to look. Sir Alfred Milner in a despatch of June, 1897—what we may call his Jubilee despatch of two years ago—declared that, as far as he was able to judge, these racial differences did not affect any portion of the subjects of Her Majesty; and in a long article in The Times, which came from The Times special correspondent at Cape Town, whom I believe to be Mr. Garrett ["No"]—well, I cannot enter into that, I may be wrong—but the special correspondent of The Times at Cape Town, under the date of December 27th—long after we were told of this gigantic conspiracy, long after the world heard of it—said that from some articles which appeared in the English papers one might think that the whole Dutch population had been elaborately organised for rebellion and a great conspiracy. For this view the correspondent said there was no evidence whatever. There was nothing to implicate the party as a whole or any of its leading members in an organised conspiracy against the Imperial Government. That was the statement of The Times correspondent at Cape Town. Well, Sir, I want to know where this information came from and what is the evidence which has convinced the Government of this conspiracy. I hail with satisfaction some words used by the Colonial Secretary last night with reference to the loyal Dutch. I was not astonished to hear those words as to the loyal Dutch from the Colonial Secretary. On the contrary, I think they were well deserved and well applied; but I am bound to observe that this is the first recognition which these much tested and faithful subjects of the Queen have obtained. It is, so to speak, the first counterpoise to that unfortunate despatch of the High Commissioner which ought never to have been sent. The hon. Gentleman has rebuked me for having spoken of the claims which the loyal Dutch in the colonies have upon our sympathy and consideration, and making no mention of the British who were suffering by their side. I have equal sympathy with our Dutch and British fellow-subjects. ["Oh!" and cheers.] If I have not dwelt, except in a lesser degree, on what our British fellow-subjects are enduring it is for two reasons—first, because they, being looked after by the Government and their officers, do not require the adventitious advocacy of anyone like myself; and, in the second place, because, after all, however much they may have suffered, they have not been subjected to the strain of having their own near relatives amongst those who were fighting against their country, and therefore harassed and torn by conflicting sympathies between relatives on one side and their duty on the other. I cannot but think that these words of the Colonial Secretary may indicate a small ray of light—that they may prove to be the introduction of a wiser spirit into our future dealings with the mixed races in South Africa. I wonder if it has occurred to any hon. Member, as it has to me, that a striking illustration of the close intermixture of the two races is afforded to us by the very names with which within the last few weeks we have become conversant. We read of Glencoe and Dewdrop side by side with Spion Kop and Elands-laagte. Why, the very collocation of the names shows the equal interests and the close connection of the two races. Let me repeat once more the memorable words, which ought to be again and again repeated, and which ought to be written up in front of the table at which the Colonial Secretary—not this Colonial Secretary only, but every Colonial Secretary—sits and discharges his ordinary daily work, the words, "English and Dutch have got to live together at the Cape." That is the key of the whole position. This war must be prosecuted with vigour, and the vigour must not be of the kind which is actuated by despondency, but of the kind which is actuated by confidence and hope. The First Lord of the Treasury made an attempt—not a successful attempt, and I think not altogether a very worthy attempt—to beguile me the other night to say more than I wished to say, and to give my conception of what the military end ought to be. He himself knows of no bounds to his military ardour. He gives us to understand that he will hear of no peace and no settlement until he has had a full glut of conquest. Well, Sir, I agree with my noble friend who moved the Amendment, that such a declaration by the right hon. Gentleman was an unusual declaration, and not a very wise declaration. Provided that our territories are free and our military superiority asserted, what matters it at what time or at what place a settlement is arrived at? What does matter is the nature of the settlement; and, as regards the objects to be kept in view in that settlement they could not be better laid down than they were by my right hon. friend the Member for East Fife to-day, who classed them under four heads. He said that the settlement must be a permanent and not a patched-up settlement. He said, and I agree, that it must effectually guard against any armed invasion or quarrel of this kind. He said it must provide for political equality, and he said, lastly, that it must guard against racial ascendancy. I do not know four heads that could better express a wise policy in this matter. But, after all, what can sound diplomacy, what can generous and equitable considerations do, in face of the bitter feelings and memories which will be left behind after this war.

Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman.

Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman.

is over? The Colonial Secretary the other day said he thought that, after this particular war, there would be no bitter memories and no bitter feelings. But a few years ago he spoke of the enmities which a war would excite, and which it would take generations to extinguish. I fear that his earlier forecast was more trustworthy than his later one. The large-hearted British people will be ready to do all that forms, arrangements, and settlements and constitutions can do to bring the mixed races together, but the efficacy of all these must depend upon the spirit in which they are framed and administered. I vote for this Amendment to-night because it condemns the errors and failures in the past which, if renewed after war is over, must inevitably again be fatal to the harmony and good government of South Africa.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: It is the duty that falls to the Leader of the House on these occasions to go through the process of what is called winding up the debate, and winding up the debate is usually supposed to signify a survey of all the arguments, or of the main general line of arguments, which have been adopted by the various Opposition speakers during the course of the debate, and an attempt to concentrate against those arguments the reply of the Government for whom the Minister speaks. If that be the duty of the Minister who has to sum up the debate, I ought frankly to preface the ont very long observations which I intend to address to the House by informing them that it is a duty which I do not mean on this occasion to perform. I do not believe it would be possible within the compass of a reasonable speech to traverse the vast field of discussion deliberately opened to the House by this Amendment; and, if it were possible, I would say that it would be inexpedient. There is nothing connected with South Africa between 1895 and the present time—nay, there is nothing between 1895 and the future settlement of the South African problem just raised by the right hon. Gentleman—which has not been touched on, indeed elaborated, by one speaker or another in the course of the five nights debate in which we have been engaged. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Monmouthshire found even this extended border insufficient for his gigantic activity, and he went back to 1879, 1880, and 1881, and actually asked the House of Commons, called together in the face of an important crisis, and at the time of a great war, to consider the internal politics of the Cabinet of which he was a member in those years.

SIR WILLIAM HARCOURT: I was challenged to that course by the speech of the Prime Minister.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: Yes. It is a peculiarity of the right hon. Gentleman that he always insists upon answering speeches made in the House to which he does not belong, rather than dealing with speeches made in the House of which he is a most distinguished ornament. But even the right hon. Gentleman will admit that for me to attempt, in the first place, to reconcile his version of what happened in 1881 with the versions given by other members of the same Cabinet, and then to travel slowly down the stream of time until I get to 1895, work through all the Blue-books down to the beginning of the war, then deal with the war and all questions raised by the war, and then plunge into the realms of prophecy, like the right hon. Gentleman, would be a task beyond my intellectual powers and the powers of endurance of the House whom I am addressing. But, if I do not propose to touch on these questions even in the most distant way, I may, a fortiori, be forgiven for dealing with a very small personal matter, which I should scorn to allude to if it had not been brought up in every single speech of every single right hon. Gentleman who has spoken from the Front Opposition bench, and also referred to in the debates in another place by these right hon. Gentlemen's colleagues in that House. That is that small, and I think quite unimportant, controversy raised by the speech which I made not very long ago in Manchester. I do not mean to occupy the House with a defence of that speech. Judging from the debate, there are a great many gentlemen opposite who would still learn a great deal as to the war and the circumstances which led up to it if they would peruse what I have said in that speech in an impartial spirit. [A LIBERAL MEMBER: Have you read it yet?] Yes, I have refreshed my memory in regard to it. But in any case, holding these views, the House, I am sure, would feel that it is due to them that I should not spend their time in explanations, and, I will add, it is still more due to myself that I should not spend their time in apologies. I leave these relatively unimportant matters to ask the House, now about to proceed to a division—what is the object of the Amendment, what is the object with which it was moved, what is the object which it is likely to attain? We might have supposed, from the course of the public controversy, which took place before the House met, that there would be an attack, or a very serious criticism, upon one department of the Government at all events—I mean the War Office. There has been no such attack, no such criticism. The noble Lord who moved the Amendment occupied a great deal of his speech in defending the War Office. The right hon. Gentleman who has just sat down in a few words took the same line; and had there been anybody disposed to make a harsh or unjust criticism of that Department in the early stages of the debate, I am sure that desire would be removed by the most brilliant defence that I have heard in my time of that Department, made by the Under Secretary for War on Thursday last. But, in truth, I think the House and country are beginning to realise that whatever may be said about the conduct of the war—and a great deal may be properly said about it—the fact remains that the War Office is not open to the charge which there is always the danger that the War Office would be open to after a long period of peace. The danger which our military machinery runs, after long periods of peace, is that the War Minister who is responsible for the conduct of the department may come down year after year and tell the House of Commons, and tell the country, that the War Office can do this and can do that, can put so many men and so many guns in the field, and then, when the day of trial comes, when the country is placed in the position which France was placed in just before the Franco-German war, or which this country was placed in just before the Crimean war, it may be found that this military machine, so successfully defended session after session in Committee of Supply, and in general debate, may, after all, be found utterly incapable of carrying out the functions which it professed to be able to carry out. Whatever charges may be made against the conduct of this war, that question will have to be thoroughly examined. It cannot be said that professions have been made by the War Office during the last five years which the War Office, when the time of trial came, were found incapable of fulfilling. That, in my judgment, is great praise. I admit it is asking no more of the War Office than the War Office was bound to do. But it did it; it did it in overwhelming measure; it did it, and it did much more than it ever promised to do—it is now doing much more than it ever promised to do, and it is doing it, broadly speaking, without a hitch, without difficulty, and without friction. Let us give praise where praise is due. The doctrine of responsibility was insisted upon by the right hon. Gentleman. I admit that we who sit on this bench, who had nothing to do directly with the administration of the War Office, are yet responsible for its failure and responsible for its success. But, after all, I think the House will admit that, speaking at this moment, I stand sufficiently outside the details of that administration to be able, without egotism, to praise it; and, when I say it has carried out those duties, it is not with any intention of asking praise for the Government as a whole, but it is for the purpose of giving praise where praise really is due—namely, to those responsible for War Office organisation. Well, Sir, I leave that; no serious criticism has yet been made, though I daresay it will be made, of the War Office, and it would be unpardonable of me to spend more time on a subject which has apparently fallen outside the scope of this Amendment. Then, Sir, if this Amendment was not an attack upon the War Office, on whom was it an attack? [An Hon. Member: The Government.] It was an attack on the Government? That I am coming to directly. I have listened to the speeches night after night, and gradually the conclusion has been impressed on my mind that this was not an attack upon the Government, except in form, but that in substance, in truth, and in reality, it was an attack on my right hon. friend the Secretary of State for the Colonies. It was not the conduct of the war, it was not the foresight or provision of the Government that really interested hon. Gentlemen opposite. No; whenever a speech flagged or an orator felt he was not holding the attention of his friends, he had only to make an attack on my right hon. friend and immediately from a small but vocal part of the House a hearty response was obtained. I think my right hon. friend may well ignore these persistent and reiterated attacks. He may remember, and we may remember, that it is during his term of office as Colonial Secretary that the British Empire as a whole has first shown its full and corporate consciousness of what it is and what its destinies are. I admit that he alone is not responsible for that being done. Others have worked in that fertile vineyard, other architects have contributed to build that stately edifice; but my right hon. friend may surely justly boast—[AN HON. MEMBER: He will boast.]—that it was during his term of office, and in no small degree through his great administrative abilities, that that dramatic moment occurred for the first time in our history—[AN HON. MEMBER: Magersfontein.]—when every British colony joined with the mother country to carry out a great Imperial campaign. When all these petty and contemptible charges against the Government are buried in the oblivion they so well deserve, his name will be for ever associated with that great moment in our history. [Mr. W. REDMOND: "Great slaughter."] I fully recognise that some more worthy purpose was intended by the Amendment than any mere attack on an individual or set of individuals. What was that purpose? I listened with astonishment to the version given of the Amendment by its authors. They have told us, over and over again, that an Amendment is an occasion for criticism. Right hon. Gentlemen opposite know that our proceedings offer ample opportunity for criticism at this stage, at all events, of the session, without moving any Amendment of this kind. We could have heard the eloquent speeches of the right hon. Members for East Fife and West Monmouthshire, or that of the right hon. Gentleman who has just sat down, without any Amendment at all on the Queen's Speech, which affords occasion for criticism not intended to be followed by a vote of censure. That was the natural and obvious course. It has not been adopted; but instead of that there has been adopted a course which makes this motion not only an ordinary vote of censure, which an ordinary Amendment to the Address in reply to the Queen's Speech is, but a motion brought forward with all the pomp and trappings and importance which can be given to it by the fact that it is moved on the Queen's Speech by a member of the Front Opposition bench. Why was that done? And are we responsible for the importation of party politics into the debate? The right hon. Member for the Forest of Dean reproached me the other night because some remarks of mine had been in a party and controversial spirit.

*SIR CHARLES DILKE: On the question of artillery.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I was not aware that it was as limited as that. But I grant that I did make remarks comparing the late Government with the present in their capacity for dealing with military organisation and administration. How could I help it? This motion is to substitute gentlemen opposite for us. If this motion means anything it means that A is to be put out of office and B put in, and in order to know whether the motion is to be carried you ought to know whether A or B is the more qualified to carry on the work of the country. But the right hon. Gentleman opposite went further. He started the doctrine of Ministerial responsibility—to which none of us object. We do not repudiate any responsibility that can be thrown upon us. We are responsible for all that has occurred at home and abroad. But, after all, is not this a rather barren doctrine, when the problem before us is who is to carry on the government of the country? If your object is to judge the Government, not according to any abstract doctrine of responsibility, but according to the doctrines which ought to regulate the conduct of each of us in our private life, you will consider what the Government knew and what they ought to have known at each successive stage of these negotiations or military transactions; you will put yourselves, by an effort of historical imagination, into the place of the Government you condemn. If you come to the conclusion that the Government, knowing what they did, took the wrong course, or that they ought to have known, and had the means of knowing, what they did not know, you will justly condemn them. But to judge by what happened in the field in November, December, or January is to apply principles to the selection of a Government which you would not apply to the selection of an errand boy. But Sir, I do not wish to defend the Government. I do not think the time has come to do it. I wish really to ask what is the course which each member of the House ought in conscience to adopt with regard to the division in which he is to take part. The Opposition, as far as I can make out, are divided in this matter of the war into three quite separate camps. There are those who think the war is unjust and inexpedient, and therefore ought no longer to be prosecuted, and that peace should be as hastily as possible patched up. That is one section of opinion; and I know what gentlemen mean who say that; I think I can gauge their motives; at all events, I think I understand their policy. A second division into which I will venture to divide the Opposition is, those who regard the war as unjust and the diplomacy that led to it as extremely blundering, and who, nevertheless, think that the war should be prosecuted. I have great difficulty in understanding that point of view, and I fear those who take it are so little clear in their own minds on this topic that no argument I can use is likely to have much effect upon them. But there is a third class among the ranks of the Opposition who think, as we think, that the war is just, who think, as we think, that it should be prosecuted, but who, nevertheless, intend to vote for this Amendment. Now, I confess I am utterly unable to understand how hon. and right hon. Gentlemen can by any conceivable process of logic make their opinion harmonise with the course they are going to pursue. Let me assure them I do not attack their motives. The right hon. Gentleman who has just sat down, the right hon. Member for East Fife, and the hon. Member for Leith Burghs, who spoke earlier in the evening, seem to think that we accuse them of some sinister transaction, some curious design by which they may obtain a party advantage which it is difficult to understand. I honestly avow I do not believe they are animated by any motive other than the public good. We profess no monopoly of patriotism and public spirit, and, as we ask the House to believe that we are not moved by party motives; so I am ready to give these gentlemen the greatest credit for being animated by principles of action not less elevated than those which we claim for ourselves. But is it a wise and, in result, a patriotic course they mean to pursue? What is it at this moment that the country has to fear? What is it at this moment that the House of Commons can do for the country? What the country has to fear is that foreign nations and Transvaal politicians may think that in our division is to be found their opportunity, and that that which they cannot expect from the fortune of war they may expect from party divisions and the party system of this country. I do not imagine for a moment that there is any Boer leader of importance who supposes that if the duel between the two nations is indefinitely prolonged success in the long run can rest with them. What is it that they look forward to?

MR. WILLIAM REDMOND (Clare, E.): God.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: They have their hopes in the first place in the possibility of some foreign complication embarrassing to this country, and, in the second place, that this country, distracted by internal dissension and wearied by the cost and sacrifices of a long war, may agree to a dishonourable and insecure peace. Now, it seems to me, that is an answer to my first question. My second question was, what can the House of Commons do to help our arms under these circumstances? The House of Commons cannot do much, but this it can do. It can show that behind our soldiers in the field there is a united and undivided country. There have been many speeches from that side of the House with almost every word of which I am in complete agreement—I am in complete agreement, for instance, with the speech of great ability of the hon. and learned Member for South Shields, the speech of the hon. Baronet the Member for the Berwick Division—though a good deal of that speech was occupied in abuse of myself—and, in the main outline, with the speeches from the two Members for Fife, and other speeches which will be in the recollection of the House. Those speeches were so good that on an ordinary occasion I would gladly say, "Give me your speech and vote as you like"; but I cannot say so on an occasion like this, because, after all, these speeches will not penetrate beyond that comparatively narrow circle who take interest in the details of our Parliamentary life, but the record of votes will go forth far and wide, and these votes will be held as indicating the policy of those who give them towards the war. Be it as you like, no subtlety of argument can get over the fact that a Parliamentary victory which would destroy this Government would destroy the policy of which those right hon. Gentlemen and hon. Gentlemen have made themselves such brilliant and courageous advocates in this House. If they say, as I daresay they do say, "We are ready to vote because we know that our votes will not turn out the Government," that is something very like—as I think my hon. and gallant friend said earlier in the evening—a Parliamentary fraud, if I may use that word with no unkind significance towards any individual. Every man in this House when he gives a vote ought to wish that that vote should lead to the conclusion to which it points; and I cannot believe that those who have spoken in the sense which I have indicated would regard otherwise than with absolute horror a victory for themselves in the lobby into which I understand they are about to go. Well, I do not think that is sound Parliamentary morality or sound Parliamentary tactics, but I dare say many of us have in our time given votes which we should be very sorry to see called into action, and I do not wish to play the moralist on this occasion or to preach any impossible standard of Parliamentary action. I would appeal more directly to the patriotism of these gentlemen; I would venture to point out to them that even if they do not defeat the Government—and I do not affect to suppose that they will—every abstraction from the Government lobby of the votes of men who agree with the Government in the main policy is really a weakening of the forces of their country in the field. Every such vote tends, and must tend, to prolong this contest. Can they contemplate with equanimity that their very first action in the session of Parliament meeting in the circumstances in which we meet should be to weaken a Government whose hands they profess to desire to strengthen, whose hands I believe they genuinely desire to strengthen, in every succeeding operation connected with this war? Can they contemplate with equanimity the reflection that possibly their vote may lengthen the war, and, by lengthening the war, may increase that tragic list of losses by the war which we already have to contemplate? If, in giving their vote, they add one fraction to the chances of a European complication, one fraction to the chances that an unnecessary life may be lost or a family thrown into mourning who in different circumstances might have looked back without regret on this war, can they easily reconcile that with their duty to their own principles and to that country of which they are, I believe, as devoted servants as we are upon this side of the House? Well, I think not. I think it is a violation of every Parliamentary tradition that men who desire to keep a Government in office should vote for an Amendment which, if carried, would turn out that Government, and that it is contrary to every patriotic instinct to vote even in a minority against the Government when the size of that minority may affect the whole course of European policy, the whole course of the South African war. I have stated the problem as it presents itself to my mind; I know them to be men of conscience and men of honour, and I must leave it to them to decide the problem, each man as his own conscience and honour dictate. But to the House at large I can only make one appeal in conclusion; it is that we who are the representatives of the country may rise to the height reached by those whom we represent. I ask no more, and I can ask no more of this House than that they should imitate—for they cannot exceed—the courage, the steadfastness, the resolution, the firmness under adversity, the calmness of temper with which our countrymen all over the world have dealt with the difficult situation in which we find ourselves. If the House of Commons, as I doubt not they will, imitate the conduct of those who have sent them here, then, Sir, who can doubt that the clouds by which we are at present surrounded will in a short time be dissipated, and that the Empire will issue from the struggle in which it is now engaged stronger not only in its own consciousness of strength but in the eyes of the civilised world?

Mr. HARWOOD (Bolton): I rise to make an appeal to the noble Lord who moved this Amendment to save the House from a division. I make this plea—with great trepidation and hesitation—only because I feel that such a course is most in harmony with the true dignity of the House of Commons. It is not that I fear a party defeat—I am too used to them—but I would appeal to hon. Members in this crisis of our history to rise above trumpety party considerations, and follow a course most consistent with the traditions and glory of the House of Commons. It is not that I condemn this Amendment in itself. I think most Members of the House would agree with it as an abstract proposition. I think it is true that there never was a war since the Norman Conquest in which the Government did not show some want of foresight and judgment and some lack of preparation. Nor do I disagree with our having had this discussion. But I would plead with the noble Lord and his friends that at a time like this we should think of something higher than ordinary party considerations. I plead on two grounds. In the first place, in a crisis of this kind there are only two courses open to us; we ought either to knock down the Government or back it up; we have no hope or desire of being able to knock down the Government, therefore I say it is our duty to back it up. In the second place, I plead with the House to consider the effect of this motion, not in this House itself, nor in England where we understand these matters, but throughout the world. I am quite sure that not only will foreigners misjudge us but that the Boers will misjudge us also. We have all read of the glory of Parliament, and I hope the House of Commons will now rise to the greatness of that glory and show that at a time like this they are able to present a united front to the world.

MR. C. E. SHAW (Stafford): I rise to second the appeal which has just been made to the noble Lord to withdraw his Amendment even at this late hour. It places many of us on this side of the House in a very invidious position, and no Members could be placed in a more invidious position than the fifteen who had the courage of their convictions and voted with the Government in October last. I had hoped against hope, day after day, that this Amendment would be withdrawn, and even up to ten o'clock this evening there was a strong movement on this side of the House to have it withdrawn. The Amendment is divided into two parts. With regard to the first part, which distinctly states that the war is unjust and unnecessary, all I can say is that my vote in October last has cleared me of that charge. I believe this war is just and necessary. With regard to the second part I am very largely in agreement with it. I think that the Government have not gone far enough, and I stated in June last and again in September that they ought to safeguard the position by pouring troops into South Africa. The speeches of the hon. Member for Dover and the Colonial Secretary will enable me to support the Government to-night. The country has been asking for a lead in this matter; they have been asking for something strong from the front bench, and I venture to say that in those two speeches they have got a very definite lead. I may be asked why, if I cannot vote for the Amendment, I do not abstain. I am not sent to this House to abstain. I certainly should not feel myself at rest if I found myself in the same lobby as the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Montrose or the hon. and learned Gentleman the Member for Dumfries. I am sorry to part company with the hon. Baronet the Member for the Berwick Division and those who think with him, but I think my action is more consistent. I for one am not deaf to the appeal made by the Leader of the House: I want this House to present a united front to the world, and I have never given a vote in this House with greater pleasure and with greater determination than the vote I shall give in support of the Government to-night.

Question put.

The House divided: — Ayes, 139; Noes, 352. (Division List No. 3.)

AYES.

Abraham, William (Rhondda)
Allan, William (Gateshead)
Ashton, Thomas Gair
Asquith, Rt. Hon. H. Henry
Atherley-Jones, L.
Austin, Sir John (Yorkshire)
Baker, Sir John
Barlow, John Emmott
Bayley, Thomas (Derbyshire)
Beaumont, Wentworth C. B.
Billson, Alfred
Bolton, Thomas Dolling
Broadhurst, Henry
Brunner, Sir John Tomlinson
Bryce, Rt. Hon. James
Buchanan, Thomas Ryburn
Burns, John
Burt, Thomas
Buxton, Sydney Charles

Caldwell, James
Cameron, Sir Chas. (Glasgow)
Cameron, Robert (Durham)
Campbell-Baunerman, Sir H.
Causton, Richard Knight
Channing, Francis Allston
Clark, Dr. G. B. (Caithness-sh.)
Colville John
Dalziel, James Henry
Davies, M. Vaughan (Cardigan)
Dewar, Arthur
Dilke, Rt. Hon. Sir Charles
Edwards, Owen Morgan
Ellis, John Edward
Emmott, Alfred
Evans, Samuel T. (Glamorgan)
Farquharson, Dr. Robert
Fenwick, Charles
Ferguson, R. C. Munro (Leith)

Fitzmaurice, Lord Edmond
Foster, Sir Walter (Derby Co.)
Fowler, Rt. Hon. Sir Henry
Goddard, Daniel Ford
Gold, Charles
Gourley, Sir E. Temperley
Grey, Sir Edw. (Berwick)
Gurdon, Sir William Brampton
Haldane, Richard Burton
Harcourt, Rt. Hon. Sir Wm.
Harwood, George
Hayne, Rt. Hon. Charles
Hazell, Walter
Hedderwick, Thomas C. H.
Hemphill, Rt. Hon. Charles H.
Horniman, Frederick John
Humphreys-Owen, Arthur C.
Hutton, A. E. (Morley)
Johnson-Ferguson, James E.

Mr. Harwood.

Joicey, Sir James
 Jones, D. Brynmor (Swansea)
 Jones, Wm. (Carnarvonshire)
 Kay-Shuttleworth, Rt. Hon. Sir U.
 Kinloch, Sir John George Smyth
 Kiteon, Sir James
 Labouchere, Henry
 Langley, Batty
 Lawson, Sir Wilfrid (Cumb'lnd)
 Leese, Sir Joseph F. (Accrington)
 Leng, Sir John
 Lewis, John Herbert
 Lloyd-George, David
 Lough, Thomas
 Lyell, Sir Leonard
 McCrae, George
 McEwan, William
 McKenna, Reginald
 M'Leod, John
 Maddison, Fred.
 Mead, Sigismund Ferdinand
 Montagu, Sir S. (Whitechapel)
 Morgan, J. Lloyd (Carmarthen)
 Morley, Charles (Breckonshire)
 Morley, Rt. Hon. John (Montrose)
 Norton, Capt. Cecil William
 Nussey, Thomas Willans
 Oldroyd, Mark
 Palmer, George Wm. (Reading)

Pearson, Sir Weetman D.
 Pease, Alfred E. (Cleveland)
 Pease, Joseph A. (Northumb.)
 Pease, Sir Joseph W. (Durham)
 Perks, Robert William
 Philipps, John Wynford
 Pickersgill, Edward Hare
 Price, Robert John
 Priestley, Briggs (Yorks.)
 Randell, David
 Reckitt, Harold James
 Reid, Sir Robert Threshie
 Rickett, J. Compton
 Roberts, John Bryn (Eifion)
 Roberts, John H. (Denbighs.)
 Robertson, Edmund (Dundee)
 Robson, William Snowdon
 Runciman, Walter
 Samuel, J. (Stockton-on-Tees)
 Schwann, Charles E.
 Scott, Chas. Prestwich (Leigh)
 Shaw, Thomas (Hawick B.)
 Sinclair, Capt. J. (Forfarshire)
 Smith, Samuel (Flint)
 Soames, Arthur Wellesley
 Souttar, Robinson
 Spicer, Albert
 Steadman, William Charles
 Stevenson, Francis S.

Stuart, Jas. (Shoreditch)
 Tennant, Harold John
 Thomas, A. (Carmarthen, E.)
 Thomas, Alfred (Glamorgan, E.)
 Trevelyan, Charles Philips
 Ure, Alexander
 Wallace, Robert
 Walton, J. Lawson (Leeds, S.)
 Walton, J. (Barnsley)
 Warner, T. Courtenay T.
 Wason, Eugene
 Wedderburn, Sir William
 Weir, James Galloway
 Whiteley, Geo. (Stockport)
 Whittaker, Thomas Palmer
 Williams, J. (Carvell (Notts))
 Wills, Sir William Henry
 Wilson, Fredk. W. (Norfolk)
 Wilson, H. J. (Yorks, W.R.)
 Wilson, J. (Durham, Mid.)
 Wilson, John (Govan)
 Woodhouse, Sir J.T. (Hudd'rsfld)
 Woods, Samuel
 Yoxall, James Henry

TELLERS FOR THE AYES—
 Mr. Herbert Gladstone and Mr. McArthur.

NOES.

Acland-Hood, Capt. Sir Alex. F.
 Aird, John
 Allhusen, Augustus Henry E.
 Allsopp, Hon. George
 Anson, Sir William Reynell
 Archdale, Edward Mervyn
 Arnold, Alfred
 Arnold-Forster, Hugh O.
 Arrol, Sir William
 Atkinson, Rt. Hon. John
 Bailey, James (Waltham)
 Baillie, James E. B. (Inverness)
 Baird, John George Alexander
 Balcarres, Lord
 Baldwin, Alfred
 Balfour, Rt. Hon. A. J. (Manch'r)
 Banbury, Frederick George
 Banes, Major George Edward
 Barnes, Frederic Gorell
 Barry, Rt. Hon. A. H. Smith- (Hunts)
 Barry, Sir Francis T. (Windsor)
 Bartley, George C. T.
 Bathurst, Hon. Allen Benjamin
 Beach, Rt. Hon. Sir M. H. (Bristol)
 Beach, Rt. Hon. W. W. B. (Hants)
 Beckett, Ernest William
 Begg, Ferdinand Faithful
 Benrose, Sir Henry Howe
 Bhowmaggree, Sir M. M.
 Biddulph, Michael
 Bigwood, James
 Bill, Charles
 Blakiston-Houston, John
 Blundell, Colonel Henry
 Bolitho, Thomas Belford
 Bond, Edward
 Bonser, Henry Cosmo Orme
 Boulnois, Edmund
 Bowles, Capt. H. F. (Middlesex)
 Bowles, T. Gibson (King's Lynn)
 Brancey, Albert
 Brodric, Rt. Hon. St. John
 Brookfield, A. Montagu
 Brown, Alexander H.
 Brymer, William Ernest
 Bullard, Sir Harry

Butcher, John George
 Campbell, J. H. M. (Dublin)
 Carlile, William Walter
 Carson, Rt. Hon. Edward
 Cavendish, R. F. (N. Lancs.)
 Cavendish, V. C. W. (Derbysh.)
 Cayzer, Sir Charles William
 Cecil, Lord Hugh (Greenwich)
 Chaloner, Captain R. G. W.
 Chamberlain, Rt. Hon. J. (Birm.)
 Chamberlain, J. A. (Worc'r)
 Chaplin, Rt. Hon. Henry
 Charrington, Spencer
 Chelsea, Viscount
 Clare, Octavius Leigh
 Clarke, Sir Edward (Plymouth)
 Clough, Walter Owen
 Coddington, Sir William
 Coghill, Douglas Harry
 Collings, Rt. Hon. Jesse
 Colomb, Sir John Chas. Ready
 Colston, Charles E. H. Athole
 Cook, F. Lucas (Lambeth)
 Cooke, C. W. R. (Hereford)
 Corbett, A. Cameron (Glasgow)
 Cornwallis, Fiennes Stanley W.
 Cotton-Jodrell, Col. E. T. D.
 Cox, Irwin Edward Bainbridge
 Cripps, Charles Alfred
 Cross, Alexander (Glasgow)
 Cross, H. Shepherd (Bolton)
 Cubitt, Hon. Henry
 Currie, Sir Donald
 Curzon, Viscount
 Dalbiac, Colonel Philip Hugh
 Dalkeith, Earl of
 Dalrymple, Sir Charles
 Davies, Sir H. D. Chatham)
 Denny, Colonel
 Dickinson, Robert Edmond
 Dickson-Poynder, Sir John P.
 Digby, John K. D. Wingfield-
 Disraeli, Coningsby Ralph
 Dixon-Hartland, Sir F. Dixon
 Donkin, Richard Sim
 Dorington, Sir John Edward

Doughty, George
 Douglas, Rt. Hon. A. Akers-
 Douglas-Pennant, Hon. E. S.
 Doxford, Sir Wm. Theodore
 Drage, Geoffrey
 Duncombe, Hon. Hubert V.
 Dyke, Rt. Hon. Sir Wm. Hart
 Egerton, Hon. A. de Tatton
 Elliot, Hon. A. Ralph Douglas
 Fardell, Sir T. George
 Fellows, Hon. Ailwyn Edw.
 Fergusson, Rt. Hon. Sir J. (Manch'r)
 Field, Admiral (Eastbourne)
 Finch, George H.
 Finlay, Sir Robert Bannatyne
 Firbank, Joseph Thomas
 Fisher, William Hayes
 Fison, Frederick William
 Fitz Wygram, General Sir F.
 Flannery, Sir Fortescue
 Fletcher, Sir Henry
 Flower, Ernest
 Folkestone, Viscount
 Forster, Henry William
 Foster, Colonel (Lancaster)
 Foster, Harry S. (Suffolk)
 Fry, Lewis
 Galloway, William Johnson
 Garfit, William
 Gedge, Sydney
 Gibbons, J. Lloyd
 Gibbs, Hn. A. G. H. (City of Lon)
 Gibbs, Hon. Vicary (St. Albans)
 Giles, Charles Tyrrell
 Gilliat, John Saunders
 Godson, Sir Augustus Fredk.
 Goldsworthy, Major-General
 Gordon, Hon. J. Edward
 Gorst, Rt. Hon. Sir J. Eldon
 Goschen, Rt. Hon. G. J. (St. Geo's)
 Goulding, Edward Alfred
 Graham, Henry Robert
 Gray, Ernest (West Ham)
 Green, W. D. (Wednesbury)
 Greene, Hy. D. (Shrewsbury)
 Gretton, John

Greville, Hon. Ronald
 Gull, Sir Cameron
 Gunter, Colonel
 Guthrie, Walter Murray
 Hall, Rt. Hon. Sir Charles
 Halsey, Thomas Frederick
 Hamilton, Rt. Hon. Lord Geo.
 Hanbury, Rt. Hon. Robert Wm.
 Hanson, Sir Reginald
 Hardy, Laurence
 Hare, Thomas Leigh
 Haslett, Sir James Horner
 Heath, James
 Heaton, John Henniker
 Helder, Augustus
 Henderson, Alexander
 Hermon-Hodge, Robt. Trotter
 Hickman, Sir Alfred
 Hill, Rt. Hon. A. Staveley (Staffs.)
 Hill, Sir E. Stock (Bristol)
 Hoare, E. Brodie (Hampstead)
 Hoare, Sir Samuel (Norwich)
 Hobhouse, Henry
 Hornby, Sir William Henry
 Houldsworth, Sir Wm. Henry
 Houston, R. P.
 Howard, Joseph
 Howell, William Tudor
 Howorth, Sir Henry Hoyle
 Hozier, Hon. J. Henry C.
 Hubbard, Hon. Evelyn
 Hudson, George Bickersteth
 Hughes, Colonel Edwin
 Hutchinson, Capt G. W. (Grice-
 Hutton, J. (Yorks., N.R.)
 Jackson, Rt. Hon. W. Lawies
 Jebb, Richard Claverhouse
 Jeffreys, Arthur Frederick
 Jenkins, Sir J. Jones
 Jessel, Capt. Herbert Merton
 Johnston, Wm. (Belfast)
 Johnstone, Heywood (Sussex)
 Kennaway, Rt. Hon. Sir J. H.
 Kenyon, James
 Kenyon-Slaney, Col. William
 Keswick, William
 Kimber, Henry
 Knowles, Lees
 Lafone, Alfred
 Laurie, Lieut. General
 Lawrence, Sir E. Durning (Corn
 Lawrence, W. F. (Liverpool)
 Lawson, J. Grant (Yorks.)
 Lea, Sir T. (Londonderry)
 Lecky, Rt. Hon. Wm. E. H.
 Lees, Sir E. (Birkenhead)
 Leigh-Bennett, H. Currie
 Leighton, Stanley
 Llewellyn, Sir Dillwyn (Swans.
 Llewellyn, Evan H. (Somerset)
 Lockwood, Lt.-Col. A. R.
 Loder, Gerald W. Erskine
 Long, Col. C. W. (Evesham)
 Long, Rt. Hon. W. (Liverpool)
 Lopes, H. Yarde Buller
 Lorne, Marquess of
 Lowe, Francis William
 Lowles, John
 Lowther, Rt. Hon. James (Kent)
 Lowther, Rt. Hon. J. W. (Cumb'land)
 Loyd, Archie Kirkman
 Lucas-Shadwell, William

Lytton, Hon. Alfred
 Macartney, W. G. Ellison
 Macdonald, John Cumming
 MacIver, David (Liverpool)
 Macleure, Sir J. William
 MacArthur, Charles (Liverpool)
 Macalmont, Col. J. (Antrim, E.)
 McIver, Sir L. (Edinburgh, W.)
 McKillop, James
 Malcolm, Ian
 Manners, Lord Edward W. J.
 Maple, Sir John Blundell
 Marks, Henry Hananel
 Martin, Richard Biddulph
 Massey-Mainwaring, Hn. W. F.
 Maxwell, Rt. Hon. Sir H. E.
 Mellor, Col. (Lancashire)
 Melville, Beresford Valentine
 Meysey-Thompson, Sir H. M.
 Middleton, J. Throgmorton
 Milbank, Sir Powlett C. J.
 Mildmay, Francis Bingham
 Milward, Colonel Victor
 Monckton, Edward Philip
 Monk, Charles James
 Montagu, Hon. J. S. (Hants.)
 Moon, Edw. Robert Pacy
 Moore, William (Antrim, N.)
 More, Rt. J. (Shropshire)
 Morgan, Hn. F. (Monmouthsh.)
 Morrell, George Herbert
 Morrison, Walter
 Morton, A. H. A. (Deptford)
 Mount, William George
 Munz, Philip A.
 Murray, Rt. Hon. A. G. (Bute)
 Murray, Chas. J. (Coventry)
 Murray, Col. Wyndham (Bath)
 Myers, William Henry
 Newdigate, Frns. Alexander
 Nicholson, William Graham
 Nicol, Donald Ninian
 O'Neill, Hon. R. Torrens
 Orr-Ewing, Charles Lindsay
 Parkes, Ebenezer
 Pease, H. Pike (Darlington)
 Penn, John
 Phillpotts, Captain Arthur
 Pierpoint, Robert
 Pilkington, R. (Lanc. Newton)
 Platt-Higgins, Frederick
 Plunkett, Rt. Hon. H. Curzon
 Pollock, Harry Fredk.
 Powell, Sir Francis Sharp
 Pretymann, Ernest George
 Pryce-Jones, Lt.-Col. Edw.
 Purvis, Robert
 Pym, C. Guy
 Quilter, Sir Cuthbert
 Rankin, Sir James
 Rasch, Major Frederic Carne
 Renshaw, Charles Bine
 Rentoul, J. Alexander
 Richards, Henry Charles
 Richardson, Sir T. (Hartlep'l)
 Ridley, Rt. Hon. Sir Matthew W.
 Ritchie, Rt. Hon. C. Thomson
 Robertson, Herbert (Hackney)
 Robinson, Brooke
 Rollet, Sir Albert Kaye
 Rothschild, Hon. Lionel Walter
 Round, James

Russell, Gen. F. S. (Cheltenham)
 Russell, T. W. (Tyrone)
 Rutherford, John
 Ryder, John Herbert Dudley
 Samuel, H. S. (Limehouse)
 Sandys, Lieut.-Col. T. Myles
 Sassoon, Sir Edward Albert
 Saunderson, Rt. Hon. Col. E.
 Savory, Sir Joseph
 Scoble, Sir Andrew Richard
 Seely, Charles Hilton
 Seton-Karr, Henry
 Sharpe, Wm. Edward T.
 Shaw, Charles Edw. (Stafford)
 Shaw-Stewart, M. H. (Renfrew)
 Sidebotham, J. W. (Cheshire)
 Sidebottom, T. H. (Stalybr.)
 Sidebottom, Wm. (Derbysh.)
 Simeon, Sir Barrington
 Sinclair, Louis (Romford)
 Skewes-Cox, Thomas
 Smith, Abel H. (Christchurch)
 Smith, J. Parker (Lanarks.)
 Smith, Hon. W. F. D. (Strand)
 Spencer, Ernest
 Stanley, Edw. J. (Somerset)
 Stanley, Sir Henry M. (Lambeth)
 Stephens, Henry Charles
 Stewart, Sir M. J. M. Taggart
 Stirling-Maxwell, Sir John M.
 Stock, James Henry
 Stone, Sir Benjamin
 Strauss, Arthur
 Strutt, Hon. C. Hedley
 Sturt, Hon. Humphry Napier
 Sutherland, Sir Thomas
 Talbot, Rt. Hon. J. G. (Ox. Univ.)
 Thorburn, Sir Walter
 Thornton, Percy M.
 Tollemache, Henry James
 Tomlinson, Wm. E. Murray
 Tritton, Charles Ernest
 Ushorne, Thomas
 Verney, Hon. Richard Greville
 Vincent, Colonel Sir E. E. H.
 Wanklyn, James Leslie
 Ward, Hon. Robert A. (Crewe)
 Warr, Augustus Frederick
 Webster, Sir R. E. (I. of Wight)
 Welby, Lieut.-Col. A. C. E.
 Wentworth, Bruce C. Vernon
 Wharton, Rt. Hon. John Lloyd
 Whiteley, H. (Ashton-under-L.)
 Whitmore, C. Algernon
 Williams, Colonel R. (Dorset)
 Williams, J. Powell (Birm.)
 Willoughby de Eresby, Lord
 Willox, Sir J. Archibald
 Wilson, John (Falkirk)
 Wilson, J. W. (Worcestersh. N.)
 Wilson-Todd, W. H. (Yorks.)
 Wodehouse, Rt. Hon. E. R. (Bath)
 Wortley, Rt. Hon. C. B. Stuart
 Wylie, Alexander
 Wyndham, George
 Wyndham-Quin, Major W. H.
 Wyvill, Marnaduke D'Arcy
 Yerrburgh, Robert Armstrong
 Young, Commander (Berks, E.)
 Younger, William
 TELLERS FOR THE NOES—
 Sir William Walrond and
 Mr. Anstruther.

Main Question again proposed. Debate arising.

Debate further adjourned till to-morrow.

Adjourned at twenty minutes after Twelve of the clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Wednesday, 7th February, 1900.

PETITIONS.

GOVERNMENT PROPERTY (EXEMPTION FROM RATES).

Petitions for alteration of law, from Fulham; St. Giles-in-the-Fields and St. George, Bloomsbury; and Ratchiff; to lie upon the Table.

GROUND VALUES (TAXATION) (SCOTLAND).

Petition from New Monkland, for alteration of law; to lie upon the Table.

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS ON SUNDAY BILL.

Petitions in favour, from Leeds; Kingsbridge; and Fulham (two); to lie upon the Table.

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS TO CHILDREN BILL.

Petitions in favour, from Barrowford; Colne (three); Hull; and Yeovil; to lie upon the Table.

TOWN COUNCILS (SCOTLAND) BILL.

Petition from Kirkcudbright, in favour; to lie upon the Table.

VIVISECTION.

Petition from Wandsworth, for prohibition; to lie upon the Table.

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

TRADE REPORTS (MISCELLANEOUS SERIES).

Copy presented,—of Diplomatic and Consular Reports, Miscellaneous Series, No. 521 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

TRADE REPORTS (ANNUAL SERIES).

Copy presented,—of Diplomatic and Consular Reports, Annual Series, No. 2378 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

VOL. LXXVIII. [FOURTH SERIES.]

UNITED STATES (No. 1, 1900).

Copy presented,—of Convention between Her Majesty and the United States of America, supplementary to the Convention of 19th April, 1850, relative to the establishment of a communication by Ship Canal between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. Signed at Washington, 5th February, 1900 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

NEW BILL.

TRUSTEE SAVINGS BANKS BILL.

"To amend the Trustee Savings Banks Acts," presented and read the first time; to be read a second time upon Monday next, and to be printed. [Bill 69.]

ADDRESS IN ANSWER TO HER MAJESTY'S MOST GRACIOUS SPEECH.

[SEVENTH DAY'S DEBATE.]

Order read for resuming Adjourned Debate on Main Question [30th January], "That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, as followeth:—

Most Gracious Sovereign,

We, your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Captain Pretyman.)

Question again proposed.

Debate resumed.

MR. JOHN REDMOND (Waterford): Mr. Speaker, I do not rise for the purpose of endeavouring to renew discussion about topics which have been the subject of the debate for the last week. I have no intention of perpetuating the wearysome and shameful story of the inefficiency and insincerity of the diplomacy which has led this country into a war for an ostensible object which could easily have been obtained by a little patience and goodwill, and a little conciliation. Still less do I desire to enter into any criticism of the political and military blunders which have brought disaster on your arms since the commencement of the war. My object is entirely different. I desire as far as possible to leave the past alone. I may say, I have no particular sympathy with the recriminations which have passed between both the front benches as to the responsibility for this war. In my view both are responsible, though in different degrees, for its initiation, and both are equally responsible for its prosecution. My object is to explain and justify the feeling of Ireland upon this subject, and that will be evidenced by the votes of eighty Members of this House, who think and will act as one man. The sympathy of Ireland is with the two South African Republics. We abhor this war; we call for its stoppage, and we declare our intention to do all that in us lies to maintain the independence of these two little Republics, which was won by untold sacrifices, and defended by a heroism which is without a parallel in the history of the world. I know, of course, that putting this view forward in this assembly must be unpalatable to many Members on both sides, but every sober-minded man must agree with me, that if a large body of Members hold this view, it is well that the view should be expressed; and I trust the expression of opinion of eighty Members of this House, representing the majority of the people of Ireland, will be listened to, if not with respect, at any rate with patience. The sympathy of Ireland is with the Boers. Why is this? On what foundation is it based? What is the explanation of it? I propose to answer shortly those questions. We in Ireland have been accused of being indiscriminate in our sympathies and our views of this war; we are told we know nothing of the merits of the quarrel, and that our sympathies with the Boers have one real and only motive, which is antagonism to England; that we should be against England, right or wrong; and I have even heard it said that if it was Germany who was fighting, and England was defending the Boers, we should turn right round. And it was alleged that if England had gone to war, as she undoubtedly ought to have done, three years ago to avenge the massacre of the Armenian Christians, our sympathies would have been on the side of the Great Assassin. I want to be perfectly frank and candid. There is both truth and untruth in that charge. It is true that wherever the Empire is involved in a difficulty or complication which diminishes its great strength, a feeling of hope and satisfaction stirs through the veins of men of the Irish race both at home and abroad. This is a fact which stares you in the face, and it is folly to conceal it. It is one of those facts which statesmen should study and observe and try to understand. It is not our fault that it is a fact, but yours. It is the fault of the history which you and your predecessors have made. You thought you had got rid of the Irish question when in 1895 you overwhelmed Home Rule by a majority of 150. You thought you had got rid of it in 1800 when you abolished the Irish Parliament, because, twenty years before, when you were engaged in your wicked American war, a war which particularly compares with the present war, you were confronted with this same phenomenon of the Irish seeking to take advantage of your difficulties and sympathising with your foe. Why was Ireland prone to these views then as it is now? It does not lie in the cussedness of the Irish, it is due to the simple fact that Ireland one hundred years ago felt she was treated with systematic injustice and deprived of her true rights. She had the same feeling before, and the same cause will at all times produce the same result in the history of nations. Some day, not perhaps far off, in that Ireland which you are about to create for yourselves in South Africa, you may find white people rejoicing in the Empire's difficulties and sending messages of sympathy to your foes. I would urge this country, before it is involved more deeply in this ill-fated war, to endeavour to learn something from the history of your own experience in Ireland and the American colonies, and from contrasting the history of other great portions of the Empire, and to beware of pursuing to the bitter end the chapter which, whatever way the military operations may go, whether you succeed in this war or not, can only be a story of misfortune and disgrace. I admit, in the frankest manner, that the feeling of the mass of the Irish people is hostile to the Empire. At this moment it would be hypocrisy for me to attempt to deny it, and it would be the utmost folly for you to attempt to minimise it. One of the greatest Englishmen of our time, John Henry Newman, in speaking of Irish discontent, drew a picture which explains to some extent this feeling that I have spoken of and admitted. He describes the feelings of an Englishman travelling in Ireland. He says—

2 H

Seventh Day

“He finds that the wrongs which England has inflicted are faithfully remembered, her name and fellowship are abominated, the news of her prosperity heard with disgust, the anticipation of her possible reverses nursed and cherished as the best of consolations. The success of France or Russia over her armies, of Yankee or Hindoo, is fervently desired as the first instalment of a debt accumulated through seven centuries, and that even though those armies are in so large a proportion recruited from the Irish soil. If he ventures to ask for prayers for England he receives one answer, a prayer that she may receive her due. It is as if the air rang with the old Jewish words, ‘Oh, daughter of Babylon, blessed shall he be who shall repay thee as thou hast paid to us.’”

I admit, therefore, the sympathy of Ireland with the Boers in this matter is, to a certain extent, due to the feeling which I have described. But having said so much I entirely deny that the attitude of the Irish people towards this war is governed wholly or even mainly by that sentiment. Irishmen are just as capable as anyone else of judging the policy and the merits of the conflicts in which this Empire chooses to embroil itself, more especially when, as in the present instance, an impoverished and over-taxed country is called upon to pay so heavy a proportion of the cost, and when so many thousands of Irish families, rich and poor alike, are called upon to pour forth the still more precious treasure of their children's blood. Do not imagine that this war does not come home to us in Ireland. It is scarcely an exaggeration to say that there is scarcely a family in Ireland, from the poor people who live in Dublin slums to the highest in the land, that is not represented, in one shape or other, upon one side or other at the front. This is more the case with regard to Ireland than it is here, because in proportion to the population a larger number of our people take to soldiering for the mere love of the calling than with you, and when they do get to the front a far larger proportion of them are thrust into dangerous posts. I candidly admit that in one sense I cannot but rejoice that so many Irishmen are fighting in this cause. I recognise the duties and obligations of the soldier's calling—“His not to reason why; his but to do or die”—and recognising that, I, as an Irishman, cannot help feeling a thrill of pride at the record of the heroism of the Irish lads from Mayo and Roscommon, who have suffered so terribly in this war. I could not help noticing that, while those brave and devoted press correspondents who have sent accounts of the operations to this country have paid generous tributes to the gallantry of these Irish regiments, in the official reports from General Buller and other officers in command no such mention has been made. I saw a calculation made the other day in a newspaper as to the number of men killed and wounded of various nationalities, and it was shown that since the war commenced there were 120 Irishmen killed or wounded to 56 Englishmen, and when it is remembered that these Irishmen are, as I have said, boys from Roscommon and Galway and other Irish counties, Catholics in creed, Nationalists every man of them practically in their sentiments, I can understand the impatience, almost the disgust, with which the taunt of the hon. and gallant Member the other night was heard by this House.

COLONEL SAUNDERSON (Armagh, N.): I never made any such taunt.

MR. JOHN REDMOND: I will not enter into any conflict with the hon. Gentleman. What he said is in the recollection of the House. It is not only that Irishmen are entitled to judge of this war, and the merits and policy of this enterprise, but as a rule their judgment is more likely to be sound than yours. For one thing, Irishmen are not subject to those passions of Imperial greed and pride and arrogance which habitually obscure the judgment of large classes of Englishmen on these occasions. They are not as materialistic in their aims, and they have, moreover—and it has often been accounted one of their weaknesses that they have—what is called a sympathetic temperament. They have a faculty for understanding other races, and so long as it is true that no Imperial policy can be wise or sound which is not morally right, so long I maintain that these instincts are more likely to lead the nation to a sound conclusion than, say, the instincts of the average modern jingo in this country. By this means the Irish people, by a perfectly natural and, as I think, unerring process, have come to entertain a genuine abhorrence of this war, and a genuine admiration for the little heroic Republics that are facing and thwarting your effort to destroy their independence. I assert emphatically that the sympathies of the Irish people would be in precisely the same direction if England were not concerned in the matter at all. Our sympathies would be on the side of the independence of these Republics, no matter what was the Power that was attempting to act as the bully and the oppressor in South Africa. If you look back over your own history you will see that in every war of this kind in which the Empire has been engaged the sympathies of Irishmen have always gone in the right direction, and not their sympathies only but their counsel and advice, and their counsel and advice have invariably been disregarded and rejected. Go back for a moment to the conflict which lost you America, and the memory of which is the real reason why to-day you cannot win the friendship and alliance of the United States. Go back to the history of that war. Who led the Opposition; who inspired, who planned, who worked through steadfast years in opposition to that luckless war? An Irishman, and in doing so he poured forth a wealth of political wisdom which has been the nourishment of your wiser statesmen ever since, and which if it could be only understood and acted upon by your statesmen of to-day would induce you even now to retrace your steps, and by an early peace to retrieve to some extent what I believe is the worst mistake of your Imperialism. Yes, Burke and Sheridan and Grattan and the mighty Irishmen of that day took precisely the same stand in that eventful controversy that we their humbler countrymen take to-day upon the question of this war. They had to face the self-same abuse, the same unstinted criticism that we have to do. But who in the world of politics dares to say now that they were not absolutely in the right? No; the organised and obstinate pride of the rulers of that day would not accept advice from the treacherous Irish Members, and America was lost. In crises like this your best advisers have always been Irish statesmen and Irish soldiers. But you have always distrusted their advice, whether in the case of the present war or in other struggles. Had you taken the advice and heeded the warning of one who was your representative in South Africa until recently—I mean General Butler (who was described as labouring under the disadvantage of being an Irishman and a Catholic), had you hearkened to his advice, instead of the advice of Sir Alfred Milner, you would not be the spectacle of humiliation before the civilised world which you now are. I say, therefore, that we arrive by quite a natural process at our sympathies with these Republics. How could it be otherwise? We would be stocks or stones if our admiration were not aroused by one of the finest spectacles that the world has witnessed since Thermopylæ—the resistance of these two little Republics to the most powerful Empire of modern times. I think I am speaking the sentiments of all generous-minded men in this House—no matter what view they take of the war—when I say that we admire the pluck and heroism of the old grey-bearded Boer side by side with the dauntless courage of the Boer of sixteen in the stand they have already made against this mighty Empire in defence of what they believe to be right. Do they surrender their independence without a struggle? Do the Free Staters, thinking only of their crops, abandon their brothers in the Transvaal? Had they done so we should all, without distinction of creed or party, have heartily despised them; and it seems to me that but for this bloody struggle the world would have been robbed of one of its most stirring episodes. I think the world at large owes a deep debt to these two little Republics for showing, in this degraded age, that there are other things to fight for than gold, and for which they are prepared to lay down their lives. Sir, the cant we have heard that this war was set on foot to remove the grievances of the Uitlanders, to obtain for them the five years franchise, no longer deceives anyone. If that had been the object of this country, it could have easily been obtained without war, as the question was on the eve of settlement on the 19th August, when the five years franchise was offered. And it is clear from the course of the diplomacy and the discussions in this House that the responsibility for the breaking off of negotiations rests with this country. However, that is not worth while arguing now, because after the speech of the Colonial Secretary the other day no man will deny that this war between Boer and Briton is to establish the supremacy of the British in the two Republics, and if that be so I for one pray God that the effort will be frustrated. Sir, these may sound strong words, but do you remember the words uttered by one of the greatest of your Parliamentary figures, one of the greatest of your orators, and one of the greatest of Imperialists? I refer to Lord Chatham when, speaking of the American war, he said—

Mr. John Redmond.

“The Americans struggling for their rights I love and admire. It is the struggle of free and virtuous patriots. The time demands the language of truth. In a just and necessary war, to maintain the rights and honour of my country, I would strip the shirt from my back to support it. But in such a war as this, unjust in its principle, impracticable in its means and ruinous in its consequences, I would not contribute a single effort or a single shilling. I am glad the Americans have resisted. Resistance was as necessary as it was just.”

Let me then add as to this attitude of Ireland that it is not governed either slightly or mainly by hostility to England, but is based on the merits of the struggle. It is not Ireland alone which takes this view. It is England that stands to-day in isolation, in splendid, may be, but disgraceful isolation; for all the nations on the earth, as far as one can make out, share our antipathy to the war. The solitary exception whose sympathy you win is Turkey. [Interruption.] Does anyone doubt that? [“Yes.”] I am judging by your own newspapers. The other day in the Standard newspaper there were published extracts from articles from all the leading papers from all the capitals of the world—from Vienna, Berlin, Brussels, St. Petersburg, Madrid, Paris—and, not least, from America. Every one of these expressions was hostile to you and was exactly the same as the expressions which we make to-day on behalf of Ireland. Let me take the case of America. I myself have recently been in the United States, and I there had the pleasure of meeting, not merely prominent Irish-Americans, but many leading statesmen of purely American extraction, and while I admit that public official expressions of hostility to you are not heard, chiefly because America, being embroiled in the Philippine war, does not feel herself in a position to rebuke you, as she otherwise would—still the overwhelming opinion of the leading statesmen of America and of the mass of the people is hostile to you.

In the issue of the Standard to which I have referred there were extracts from the New York Herald, which, like The Times in this country, generally throws in its lot with the strongest side, but which may be taken very fairly to express the dominant view for the moment. The New York Herald in the article to which I am alluding declared that the overwhelming mass of opinion was against England in this war, and the New York Sun, which was the most pro-British organ in America, addresses a remonstrance and expresses its fear lest the experience of Lord North in America should be repeated in South Africa, and asks whether the animosity of the Afrikanders would be lessened by years of war, even though they result in victory through the slaughter of all their kinsmen, whose children would simply inherit an implacable blood feud. That is the view expressed in what has been of recent years the most pro-British paper in the United States. They think it is an unjust war, and they desire to induce you to bring it to a speedy termination in accordance with the views that I am expressing here. I do not want to use a rather hackneyed illustration, but it is worth repeating. The universal opinion of the civilised world being against France in the Dreyfus business was quoted by all the organs of public opinion in this country as conclusive proof in itself that France was wrong. I ask now does this universal opinion of Christendom against you to-day count for anything, and is this war to be allowed to go on until the Union Jack waves over Pretoria or until tens of thousands of brave men have been slaughtered, and perhaps hundreds of millions of treasure have been expended, and all in an enterprise which cannot bring you credit or glory, but which must undoubtedly end in the establishment of a state of eternal enmity between the white races in South Africa? Let me ask, if this war is persisted in to the bitter end, what will be the result? I do not mean will you get to Pretoria. I take that for granted. As we were reminded some time ago, eleven armed men are more than a match for one man in his shirt. I conclude that if you continue to pour in troops the end is inevitable. But that is not the result I am speaking of. What will the future of South Africa be? The Boers have added a new page to the annals of political and military heroism. Do you think you can blot out that page, that you can trample upon it and that it will be forgotten? Do you think with such a page behind them you can wipe out Boer nationality? I say the only chance of retrieving the mistake is this. You may devastate these two Republics; you may exterminate the entire male population. If so, what then? Well, I say let a woman answer. This woman is the sister of the Prime Minister of Cape Colony. I think I heard some one smile at that. Why is he Prime Minister of Cape Colony? Why, because he has at his back the support of the majority of the white races in South Africa. This lady says—

"You may see all of the fighting men in arms slain. But what of the women? If there were left but 5,000 pregnant South African-born women and all the rest of their people destroyed, those women would breed up again a race like the first. Grandchildren and great grandchildren of the men who lie under the stones, who are not English or Dutch, but only African, will say as they pass those heaps, 'There lie our grandfathers or great-grandfathers who died in the great war of independence.'"

With these facts staring you in the face, how can any man look with confidence to the future of South Africa? It may be asked what can be done now. I said at the commencement of my remarks that I would not go back as far, at any rate, as the past is concerned. The situation now is that you are at war. Even if you wrongly went to war, hon. members say you must go on. [AN HON. MEMBER: Hear, hear!] Ah! "hear, hear" says a feeble voice. I do not think that even the Colonial Secretary would cheer that sentiment. This war in my view, and in the view of those for whom I speak, was an unjust war in its inception. We say that the only course for you is to recognise that at once, and, before further slaughter takes place in South Africa and before the future of South Africa is further imperilled, to retrace your steps and allow these Republics to maintain their independence. We call, therefore, for the stoppage of this war. We ask that the independence of these gallant Republics shall be guaranteed and maintained. In the words of the hon. and learned Member for Plymouth, we ask for some settlement honourable to that brave people whose conduct in this war has vindicated for them the right to maintain their independence. Yes, Sir; those are brave and courageous words, and it is a singular coincidence that they are almost identical with words used in this House with regard to the Boer War in 1881 by the late Mr. Parnell. In 1881 Mr. Parnell gave notice of the following motion—

Mr. John Redmond.

"To call attention to the Transvaal War, and to move that in the opinion of this House the Boers by their gallant resistance have earned the right to their independence."

To-day, after eighteen years, we make the same declaration, the only change in the situation being that the gallantry of the Boers in those days has been completely eclipsed by the gallantry of the Boers of to-day. In conclusion I cannot do better than say that we desire to put this case before the House with moderation, but with clearness. We do not desire to be guilty of the hypocrisy of pretending that we are solely moved by the merits. While admitting frankly that in these cases we are prejudiced to a certain extent by an antecedent hostility, at the same time in most cases in the past we have been right, and in this case we have been undoubtedly influenced by the merits of the controversy. We ask you in time to reconsider your position. We believe that you can do it without injury to yourselves, certainly with far less injury than must come to you if you persist in going on to the end of the chapter and imperilling the future of the white races in South Africa. We at any rate make our position perfectly clear. We are not influenced one whit by the odium that may come upon us because of our action. We know that we are a small minority in this House—possibly some people say a contemptible minority. We look back on the past, and we know that when Chatham and Burke were right in denouncing the American War they were in contemptible minorities, and were the objects of odium and misrepresentation. We know that when in the Crimean War John Bright attempted to stem the flood of war passion he was in a contemptible minority, and was a mark for odium and taunts. And we care still less for the threats of injury to the cause of Home Rule. We know that we are right, and are profoundly convinced that Ireland our country has nothing to lose, but has everything to gain, by raising her voice on the side of justice and liberty. I therefore beg to move the Amendment standing in my name.

MR. POWER (Waterford, E.): I have been asked to second this Amendment, and I do so with pleasure, only regretting that I had not longer notice. It has often been said that Irish Members have one voice when addressing audiences in Ireland and another when addressing the House of Commons. I do not think that that could ever be said, but certainly on this occasion it could not with any degree of truth. Before this war was entered upon Mr. Davitt and others protested in the name of Ireland against the policy of the Government, and here to-day, speaking for the vast majority of the people of Ireland, my hon. friend who has just sat down has expressed in terms unmistakable the feeling of Irish people on this question. The pity of the thing is that all must recognise that this war was distinctly preventible. It is within the recollection of this House that when an angry debate was proceeding during the autumn session of last year, and when passions on both sides were considerably inflamed, an hon. and gallant Gentleman on the other side of the House rose and deprecated the tone in which the debate had been conducted, and paid a high tribute to the gallantry and bravery of the foes with whom you are fighting.* Those few words from the hon. and gallant Member changed the whole tone of the debate, and a debate which would probably have been prolonged for another day was brought to a conclusion. I think we often find that the braver a man is the more considerate he is for the feelings of his opponent. My hon. friend has spoken of Ireland's voice on this question. Looking at it from a financial point of view, of course we have to pay the piper for this most iniquitous war, and very much more than our proper share. But I hope and believe that if we were a self-governing country to-day the voice of the Nationalists of Ireland would be raised for the weak against the strong in protest against this most unjustifiable conflict. I may be told that we do not speak for the majority of our people in this matter, and that the blood of Irishmen which has been so freely spilt is proof that they sympathise with this war. We are a martial race, and a military life will always have its attractions for the Irish, but at the same time—and anyone who doubts the truth of what I say, if he takes the trouble of inquiring among the masses of the Irish people, will find that it is correct—in those families where the twos and the threes of young men have laid down their lives for your cause—because we all recognise that when a man is in a post of danger he must do his duty—but even under those conditions you will find that the prayers of the people of these very families are offered almost nightly for the success of the Boer arms. I must say that I have not feelings of satisfaction with regard to the way in which Irish blood has been spilt in this war and in many other wars. I think our most bitter enemy must acknowledge, if he studies the history of this country, that Irish brains, Irish arms, and Irish blood have done their part in building up, extending, and maintaining your kingdom. And when I look at the sacrifices which Irishmen have made on your behalf I ask what has been done for us to justify them? We have been far too prodigal with our blood in your causes. Our country is a byword, and as for poverty, is not the present reign the most hideous, from an Irish point of view, since the time of Elizabeth? The First Lord of the Treasury, I believe, in one of his much criticised Manchester speeches, made mocking allusions to the “union of hearts” between England and Ireland, and certainly the Irish Secretary spoke in that vein at Leeds; they say that events have proved the insincerity of that “union of hearts.” On that subject I may be allowed to say that the Irish people have approached the English on this matter in a spirit of friendliness and, to some extent, of honourable compromise, but we must recollect that if there was any breakage of the contract entered into it was a breakage by the English people, who on two different occasions rejected the treaty proposed by Mr. Parnell and also proposed by Mr. Gladstone in 1886 and 1895. Upon occasions when treaties have been entered into between England and Ireland, Ireland has not been the country to break them. I will not enter at any length into the merits of the case, because it has been so ably and amply stated by my hon friend the Member for the City of

* See The Parliamentary Debates, Fourth Series, Vol. lxxvii, p. 475. (Speech of Col. Kenyon-Slaney, 20th October, 1899.)

Waterford. The fact that you have Irish regiments fighting under your colours wherever fighting is to be done does not disprove the statement that the vast majority of the Irish people disapprove of this war. We should be unworthy of the sacrifices made for our cause if we did not detest this war, and as a protest against it we shall have the satisfaction of, at any rate, recording on the part of those who sent us here the fact that Ireland hates and detests this war and wishes for the success of a people who, by their conduct, have merited the right of free men.

Amendment proposed—

"[At the end of the Question, to add the words, 'But we humbly represent to Your Majesty that the time has come when the war at present being waged in South Africa should be brought to a close, on the basis of recognising the independence of the Transvaal and the Orange Free State.'"] — (Mr. John Redmond.)

Question proposed, "That those words be there added."

MR. J. H. M. CAMPBELL (Dublin, St. Stephen's Green): I have not either the intention or the desire to question in the slightest degree the sincerity of the motives or the convictions of hon. Members opposite who have already, or may later on, take part in this debate. It would be impossible to deny that the sentiment of this Amendment and the language of the speeches just delivered is calculated to fill hon. Members' from Ireland who sit on this side of the House with an acute sense of despair and indignation. I say despair, because I believe the proceedings in this House of to-day are fraught with injury and disaster to the best interests of our country. Not merely are they calculated to deter the inflow of English capital and English commerce into our country, but they are certainly calculated to widen the breach which already exists between hon. Members opposite and hon. Members from Ireland who sit on this side of the House. Even at the present day there is much in the financial and commercial policy of Great Britain that is beneficial to the best interests of Ireland, and a hope had sprung up in recent years that it would be possible by the united efforts of Irishmen sitting on both sides of this

Mr. Power.

House to obtain some redress for recognised grievances. The Unionist Members from Ireland claim to be as sincere patriots as any of the hon. Members opposite.

AN IRISH MEMBER: You show it by your votes here.

MR. J. H. M. CAMPBELL: Our interests for the present and our future and all that belongs to us are all centred in this country. Such actions as these are calculated to postpone indefinitely, if not to destroy all hope or prospect of ever securing an amicable settlement of our differences. We also have a very strong feeling of indignation that such speeches as these are a slander on our country in the face of the civilised world, for they present a scene of disloyalty and disaffection which is opposed to the best interests of the Empire. At the present moment, and for some months past, Irish valour and Irish bravery has been conspicuous in the forefront of this war. It has not been merely the rank and file of the soldiers, but it has been the bravery of General White, of General French, and last, but not least, the fact that Lord Roberts, with the weight of years and the weight of domestic affliction upon him, responded nobly to his country's call and placed his services at the disposal of Her Majesty. As we read of the efforts of our Irish soldiers, we find that no blood flows more freely, and that none is more dearly avenged in this war than that of our fellow-countrymen. I say it is a slander upon their manhood and their courage that our country should be exhibited as a hotbed of disloyalty and disaffection. It was suggested in the speech of the hon. Member for the City of Waterford that Irishmen were not receiving their proper recognition for their services in this campaign. I do not know whether within the last few days the attention of the hon. Member was called to a Gazette in which the names of four persons were honourably gazetted for the Victoria Cross for distinguished bravery in the field, and two of these were Irishmen. But it is not merely in the front and at the front that Irishmen have vindicated their loyalty and devotion to Queen and country. Even at home we find, if you judge it by any standard capable of recognition, that the assumption of hon. Members opposite that they represent the feelings of the majority of the Irish race is contradicted. Test it by the subscriptions to the various funds for the relief of the suffering and the wounded; test it by the number of those who have volunteered for service at the front, and by the number of those who are being recruited. What has Ireland done in the interests of the Boers? I know that a subscription list was started for the assistance of the people of the Transvaal. I have in my hands a record of the magnificent total which has been obtained after six months efforts, and it amounts to £300. That, so far as I can make out, is the only active sign on the part of any Irishmen of sympathy with the Boers in this war. Perhaps I can best dispose, once and for all, of the pretence that hon. Members opposite are entitled to speak for the majority of the Irish people, by reading an article from an Irish newspaper. The authority, I think, will not be challenged from the other side, for it is an article in the United Irishman of the present week, which is the recognised organ of the physical force party in Ireland, and I will read from this article a description of how the Irish people look upon this war. It says—

“The Irish people are satisfied with the present system of Irish government, as their deeds testify. A community works for its government and shows its satisfaction with it by supplying it freely with men and money. Ireland supplies these quite as willingly as England, or more so. And so long as Ireland supplies men and money of her free will she is prima facie contented with her Government and her complaints are merely the popular grumbling—a little exaggerated, being Irish—and a little more of it because we have more leisure time, that is all. The Irishman's patriotism is not strong enough to keep him from entering the army of his conqueror. In both of these vital matters, therefore, those of taxes and of physical forces, the practice of the Irish people gives the lie to their professions. The latter cannot be taken seriously, and they are no so taken by any Englishman or foreigner who knows the facts. Deeds are the true test of sincerity. The North Cork Militia are loyal because they work for England; the Irish people are also loyal because they work for England. In both cases deeds are the proof, not words.”

MR. T. M. HEALY (Louth, N.): Is that an argument for Home Rule?

MR. WILLIAM REDMOND (Clare, E.): I have no desire to interrupt the hon. Member, but as he has quoted an extract from that paper, I should like to ask him whether in that very same paper, and every issue of it that has been printed, there is not an article containing a strong denunciation of the enlistment of Irishmen in the British Army, and an appeal to Irishmen not to enlist at all?

MR. J. H. M. CAMPBELL: I am quite prepared to admit that the fact is as stated by the hon. Member, but it is a strong corroboration of the argument which I am endeavouring to advance, that a paper which on the admission of the hon. Member has been for months struggling to prevent Ireland aiding and assisting England in this war should have to admit that in the end the English people will judge Ireland not by words but by deeds, and that if that test were applied to the deeds of Ireland, beyond all question Ireland is in favour of this war. It has been suggested by the hon. and learned Member for Waterford that the unity of the Irish Members opposite on this question is a convincing proof that Ireland is opposed to the war. “Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity.” Judging by appearances, however, one would hardly imagine that the Irish Members are enjoying that goodness and pleasure to the extent they would wish, but it may be internal and not external gratification. Be that as it may, is it true that this war has been the cause of unity? Has it not rather been the occasion? Let me quote from a source which I think will be recognised and admitted as an authority on this matter. I refer to the Evening Herald, a well-known Nationalist newspaper published in Dublin. To what does it attribute this sudden outburst of unity? Is it to feeling on the Transvaal War? Here is its explanation—

“Unity has become necessary because funds have only empty boxes, because American support has become estranged, and at home subscriptions for any purpose have died a sudden death. This state of affairs could not continue.”

But what is the real cause of the present demonstration—if I may so describe it without meaning any offence—of disloyalty and disaffection on the part of hon. Gentlemen opposite? It is to be found in the simple fact that at the present moment in Irish Nationalist politics the party of physical force is, for the time being, in the ascendant. It is true of every Nationalist movement in Ireland for all time that there is behind it and in control of it this party of physical force—a party which though in a minority among Nationalists is yet irresponsible, unscrupulous, and dangerous, and has been able at all times to suggest the tune though hon. Gentlemen opposite may perform the dance, and I think that the best illustration of this is to be found in the fact that it is the increasing strength and power of the United Irish League—

*MR. SPEAKER: The hon. Member is quite at liberty to discuss the attitude of the Irish party—if I may call it so—towards this war, but he is not entitled on this Amendment to discuss the attitude taken up generally by them in Parliament.

MR. J. H. M. CAMPBELL: Knowing all this, I wonder why hon. Gentlemen opposite attempt to disguise the truth by the suggestion that this present movement arose out of sympathy with the Boers. "England's difficulty is Ireland's opportunity," and whether we are at war with savage or barbarian enemies, or with brave and valiant foes like the inhabitants of the Transvaal, it is not to love for our enemies, but to that implacable hostility to the English race and the English Constitution that has always dominated a section of the Irish people that is to be attributed the disloyal demonstration of to-day. I have heard it said by hon. Gentlemen opposite that it is idle to talk about the grievances of the Uitlanders, that Irishmen at home are subject to greater grievances than ever the Uitlanders were victims of. I can hardly believe that that is seriously meant. Does any Irishman who comes to this country and makes his home in England fail to enjoy to the fullest extent every right and privilege the ordinary English citizen possesses? I would test this statement by taking two illustrations, which I consider are two of the greatest possessions which free men can hope to enjoy—I refer to freedom of speech and the liberty of the press. With regard to freedom of speech, I would like to ask

Mr. J. H. M. Campbell.

hon. Gentlemen opposite what would be the fate of the unfortunate Uitlander who at a meeting of his countrymen in Johannesburg advised them if they were compelled to take service with the Boers to turn their weapons upon their own officers. Yet in this distressed and tyrannised country of Ireland the hon. Member for Kilkenny has been allowed to do that without objection or remonstrance. If a Uitlander did that in Johannesburg, he would receive a fate which, on account of the amiable and active personality of the hon. Member for Kilkenny, I would very much regret to see carried out in his case. Then with regard to the freedom of the press, the Evening Herald of Dublin, on November 18th, published the following—

"Fallen.—We publish great news to-day. Ladysmith is reported to have fallen into the hands of the Boers. Ladysmith has fallen. If it is proved to be true and that the Irish Brigade contributed to so dire a British reverse, the hearts of Irishmen the wide world over will thrill with a keen delight they have not experienced in our time before. 'God send it is true' will be the fervent prayer in many an Irish home—stead to-day."

A country or a constitution that tolerates such language in the press at a time when that country is at war with the country of which it is written can hardly be open to the charge that the fullest liberty of the press is not allowed. With regard to the grievances of the Uitlanders and the extent to which they have brought about this just and righteous war, I do not at this stage propose to enlarge on them. There can be no doubt that the Uitlanders by their efforts and their energy succeeded in realising the enormous mineral resources of the Transvaal, which the Boers were either too indolent or too indifferent to realise, and that as a result of their industry they were compelled to pay these exactions which the Boers have spent in building strong fortifications, in the accumulation of immense military stores, and in perfecting their splendid military equipment, which have enabled them to carry on this war with such success, while at home the English nation had been lulled into apathy by hair-splitting diplomacy about the franchise. It was not until the Jameson raid that the English people for the first time became really awake to a few of the indignities and outrages that their fellow-countrymen were suffering at the hands of the Boers, and, speaking for myself, I can only say that, while there were many bad features in that raid, the worst was its failure, and the best was that it awoke the English nation to a sense of these indignities, while it encouraged President Kruger to throw off the mask and put forward the insolent pretence that the Transvaal was a sovereign State, and had a constitutional right to ill-treat the subjects of the Queen. The British Empire has always been believed to be able and willing to assist its subjects in any part of the world, and it is that feeling which is not only the cause but the justification of this war, and which has swept aside all these squabbles in reference to suzerainty and all differences of party and politics in this country, and has enabled the British Empire to present a united front to the foe. Many hard things have been said of the Government in the course of these debates, and more especially of the Colonial Secretary. All I can say is, speaking on behalf of hon. Members from Ireland who sit on this side of the House, that we are never likely to forget what we owe to that statesman for his splendid efforts in the cause of the integrity of the Empire, and I do not think the nation is likely to forget what they owe to him also.

*MR. SPEAKER: If the hon. Member reads the terms of the Amendment now under discussion he will observe that it states "that the time has come when the war at present being waged in South Africa should be brought to a close." I quite understand it is impossible to deal with the question without expressing an opinion as to the justice or injustice of the war, but the hon. Member is now going into the discussion of matters dealt with on the last Amendment, namely, the policy of the Government leading up to the war, and that is not in order.

MR. J. H. M. CAMPBELL: Just a word or two as to the latter portion of this Amendment. I confess that I listened with considerable amazement and curiosity to the speech just delivered, having regard to the contribution which it contained for the solution of the present difficulties between England and the Transvaal. Because, so far as I understood the purport and tenor of the observations of the hon. Members who proposed and seconded this Amendment, the solution of the difficulties that recommends itself to them is that, after our colonies have been invaded by the Boers, this Empire is to content itself with getting rid of the invader, and to retire on the laurels of a disgraceful and humiliating peace. I do not think that is a policy to recommend itself to the English nation. It seems to me very much as if, having found a burglar in possession of your house and of your goods, which he had ransacked from your house, you were asked to be content with politely showing him to the door. I believe that the English nation will require that this war should be pursued to the proper and vigorous vindication of the nation's honour, which requires that these attempts at invasion shall be impossible in the future, and that our fellow-subjects in South Africa may rest assured for all future time that they and their possessions shall be free from depredation. I do not expect or imagine that what I have said will have much effect upon hon. Members opposite. They are entitled, of course, to the fullest credit for honesty and sincerity of conviction and purpose, but on the other hand, I think it is of some importance that this country should know what is the real extent and anticipated effect of this demonstration of disloyalty and disaffection. It is well the country should see that this cloud, by which they have attempted to obscure the picture of patriotism and loyalty presented by the Empire generally, must be dwarfed to its proper dimensions, and that they should know that the discordant note which has come from hon. Members opposite can have little effect upon the harmonious chorus of loyalty and patriotism which has been re-echoed to the furthestmost corners of the world in which are gathered the subjects of the Queen.

*DR. CLARK (Caithness-shire): So far as I could see any argument pertinent to the Amendment in the speech of the hon. and learned Gentleman who has just sat down, it seems to be this—that we must not pass this Amendment, that we must not have a peace upon the basis of the independence of the Boer Republics, because British subjects want to win the same electoral rights in these States as Irishmen get when they come from Ireland to England, because there will not be the same freedom of speech in the Transvaal as here; further, because they would not have the same liberty and licence of journalism in these countries as in this. Well, these arguments only show the confusion of thought of which we have seen a great deal on these benches during the last fortnight. Some Hon. Members appear to think that we are engaged in a just and holy war in behalf of the Uitlanders; but hon. Members who have listened to the speech of the right hon. the Colonial Secretary, which brushed aside all that, and said that the franchise had nothing to do with this war. The Colonial Secretary is right, the franchise has nothing to do with the war. You cannot object to the franchise in the Free State. The problem involved is much more serious than the franchise, and the hon. Gentleman, like many others, is utterly ignorant of all the fundamental facts underlying this question. Does the hon. Gentleman know that if a Boer from the Orange Free State or the Transvaal came to this country he would require to remain five years the same as a Frenchman or a German, then petition the Home Secretary, who might or might not give him naturalisation? The Boer position in this country is entirely different from that of the Irishman. Why does the able and learned Gentleman come before the House of Commons to offer us an argument of that kind? There is equal freedom of speech in the Transvaal, as we have here. The same law obtains in Johannesburg as in London. The British can meet anywhere in a public hall, or a private assembly, but not in the streets. In London you cannot have a meeting in the streets unless you get the consent of the authorities.

Seventh Day.

THE SECRETARY TO THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD (Mr. T. W. RUSSELL, Tyrone, S.) dissented.

*DR. CLARK: Does my hon. friend say I am wrong?

MR. T. W. RUSSELL was understood to say that the limitation of public meeting in London only applied to Trafalgar Square.

*DR. CLARK: My hon. friend is wrong there. There are regulations. What took place in Manchester? What was Mr. Brocklebank sent to prison for? You lay down here rules for public meetings in the streets; the Boers do the same. I have had some experience of freedom of speech in London. I went to a meeting in Trafalgar Square where there were 30,000 people present, who allowed me free speech by howling, and throwing stones and knives. I went to Birmingham, where there was a great crowd of people, and I talked to the reporters for half an hour, because they only could hear me. Half a dozen meetings were being carried on in the hall at the same time. Why, there is no freedom of speech here at present; you cannot get a hearing. There is no freedom of speech scarcely in this House, as I knew to my cost last session. The last time I spoke an hon. Baronet told me that my speech was paid for. As to freedom of the press, there is no country in the world, not even excepting France, where you had, as in the Transvaal, treason written daily in all the papers. I support the Amendment because I think it is the wisest and best solution of the Boer problem. This Boer problem is a serious one for the British Empire. It may be solved on lines that will strengthen and consolidate the Empire, or on lines that will weaken it, and the settlement will test the ability and wisdom not only of our statesmen but also of our people. I will tell you what the Boer problem is. You have not got a dying race in South Africa, but a very virile race. When in 1814 we got possession of South Africa by purchase, we found 30,000 unwilling Dutch subjects, who objected to our buying them without their consent. These 30,000 have grown until they are 500,000. They are the most virile race in the world. They attain maturity, legal and physical, at sixteen; they marry early, and no race on the globe has developed so quickly. Again, in other countries the aboriginal blacks have disappeared before the white man; but in South Africa the Kaffir race has increased in almost as great a ratio as the Boers. This is therefore a virile people with whom you are dealing. They are now in a majority in the two Republics, and in one of the colonies. In Natal only have you men of British race in the majority. If you refuse the solution suggested by the Amendment, I take it that the only other solution is that you are going to destroy the independence of these two Republics—to destroy for the first time in a hundred years two Christian States. Well, I shall drop Christianity, as we are told there is a good deal of cant in that phrase—but two civilised States. Poland was destroyed, but the descendants of those responsible for its destruction rather feel inclined to wish that their forefathers had not done so. Is it likely that men of British birth will ever outnumber the Boers in South Africa, and so from that standpoint solve the problem? We have a certain number of men who every year leave this to go to foreign countries.

Dr. Clark.

We have three great continents competing with each other for our surplus population, the first and most important section of which has only got its manual labour to dispose of. America wants them, Australia wants them, but does South Africa want them? I must put a qualification on America wanting them, because black labour obtains in the Southern States. Now, all manual labour in South Africa is done by black men. The standard of comfort is such that no white men will go to South Africa to engage in manual labour, although of course you have there skilled artisans like blacksmiths, joiners, etc., who get 20s. to 30s. a day as wages. Next to the gold fields the most important industry in South Africa is agriculture, in which there are very few British born people engaged; but 95 per cent. of those engaged in that industry in the Cape and in the two Republics are Afrikanders. Both as regards agriculture and manual labour Australia and America offer greater advantages than South Africa.

We have, of course, got the diamond mines and gold fields there, but will the development of these enterprises draw more men to South Africa? The oldest industry is the diamond industry, and twenty years ago the population there was twice as great as it is now. Kimberley was then a thriving town with 200 companies, and I do not know how many private claims. Now you have but one company and a few white men to overlook the natives, who are kept in the compounds, where they have to buy everything they want of the company, and where the only things they can do are to drink and gamble. What is taking place in Johannesburg? Nine-tenths of the mines are in the hands of four firms—Rhodes and Co., Wernher, Beit, and Co., J. B. Robinson, and Barnato Brothers—and within six months of the settlement of the present dispute you will probably have them all consolidated into one, and things will go on at Johannesburg as they have done at Kimberley. There is consequently no evidence that a sufficient number of men of British birth will be drawn to South Africa to swamp the Boer population, and thus pave the way for a practical and permanent solution of the existing difficult problem by getting rid of the two Republics and establishing one great British colony, either federated or in its present form. Hon. Members opposite seem to think that when we have thrashed the Boers we shall be able to change them from free citizens into loyal subjects. People who say that do not know the history of South Africa; they know nothing about the people. They are not of the Celtic race: they are the most stubborn people on the face of God's earth. Their forefathers fought as great an Empire as the British, with odds against them just as great. They were defeated again and again, as I believe you will be able to defeat them. This is our fourth Boer war. It will not be the last if you settle it on the basis of converting these free citizens into unwilling subjects. What reasons are we to give for the course we are taking? There has already been a great deal of misrepresentation, but we must, as the Colonial Secretary recognises, give some reason for destroying these two sovereign independent States. I call them sovereign independent States deliberately: I say there is no difference in international law between them and the free States of North and South America. The Orange Free State attended the Hague Conference in the same way as the American Republic, as Belgium, and as Russia. Is not Russia a sovereign free State? Yet you extorted from her the right of having her own ships in her own waters.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis): No.

*DR. CLARK: The Black Sea belongs to Russia.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES: Several countries own the Black Sea.

*DR. CLARK: I am speaking generally. Russia owns a large portion of it, and you took away from her the right to have her warships in her own waters. The sole right you have in South Africa is.

the right of veto which they conceded to you, and they no more lost their status as sovereign independent States by conceding that to you than we have lost our status by giving special preference for trade or any purpose whatever to any other State. Why are we going to destroy these two nations? The Colonial Secretary casts doubt on their right to claim to be sovereign independent States. We occupied South Africa, and we did it in order to prevent the French doing so. In 1814 we bought from the Dutch a portion of their possessions. The people objected, and in twenty years the great bulk of them left our territory. An attempt was made to stop the Great Trek, but the Attorney General of the day declared that the people had an absolute right to go from British dominions, and to form a State for themselves, so long as they went beyond our territory. They did so, and they started their Republic. We have had four wars with them. In one we captured Natal, and we have kept it. In our second war we captured the Orange Free State, and after holding it for six years we almost forced the people there to become a sovereign independent State. That was done by the British Government. We also recognised the South African Republics, and I say that their status in international law is exactly the same as the status of the North and South American Republics. What is the basis of your interference with them now? Why should you crush a native free State? Your interference in the Transvaal is based upon the two Conventions, and it is doubtful if one of those is now in existence. If you have a suzerainty, you cannot replace it by a sovereignty. It may be argued that the 4th Article of the Convention of 1884 does create a kind of suzerainty, but I cannot admit that that is a fair interpretation. But did the Boers ever consent to the 1881 Convention? The right hon. Gentleman says we can no longer permit them to remain an independent State because by their bad faith they have made it impossible for us to live with them in South Africa. The first act of bad faith was in 1881, when the Boers tried to break away from the Convention. But what really happened then was that a preliminary peace having been established, a Convention was drafted by three High Commissioners, who with some difficulty obtained the signature of the Boer triumvirate; but the Convention was to be ratified within three months by the Volksraad. The Volksraad refused to ratify it, and instructed agents to commence negotiations de novo. They complained that Great Britain took greater powers under the suzerainty than under sovereignty, and they refused to ratify the Convention. Yet we are told the Boers are guilty of bad faith. They never acknowledged your right in the first instance, but it was said by Lord Kimberley, "Oh, give the thing a trial," and they gave it a provisional trial. Then in 1884 they met Lord Derby, and in order to get rid of the suzerainty and all control by Great Britain they gave up the whole of the western border, and now we are told—

*MR. SPEAKER: Order, order! This appears to relate more to the Amendment already disposed of. The hon. Member is going into the whole history of the Transvaal. The question before the House now is whether the war should go on or not.

*DR. CLARK: Perhaps I have gone rather too much into detail. I was trying to rebut the argument of the Colonial Secretary.

*MR. SPEAKER: A different question was then before the House.

*DR. CLARK: The question we are discussing now is whether we will end the war on the basis of independence of the two Republics, and I take it that this subject underlies the whole discussion. If we recognise the independence of these States, war will at once cease. The Colonial Secretary has said we cannot do that, but must take steps to prevent in South Africa what will militate against the predominance of Great Britain. So long as you have those two States you cannot have predominance, and that is the problem which the present war is trying to solve, and which I do not think it will determine. I am trying to rebut that argument of the Colonial Secretary, and show that there has been no bad faith on the part of the Boers. The right hon. Gentleman gave three reasons for this war—bad faith on the part of the Boers immediately after signing the Convention—

*MR. SPEAKER: Order, order! The hon. Member will be out of order in dis-

Dr. Clark.

curring any negotiations which took place before the war.

*DR. CLARK : Very well, Sir ; I think there is no proof that any convention or treaty has ever been broken by either of those States, and one great reason why we should end this war is because of the bad faith, not of the Boers, but of the British. The right hon. Gentleman the Leader of the House said at any rate the Orange Free State had no complaint against Great Britain. He evidently has not read the controversy in the Nineteenth Century, or he would know that the Orange Free State had good cause for complaint. There was the stealing of the diamond fields from the Free State, and the payment of £90,000 which was given to the Free State for them. Had he read that discussion he would have been able to see why the Free State was fighting. The Boer States have carried out faithfully their obligations, and the blame of broken treaties lies, not with them, but with the British. This is the fourth war we have had in order to arrive at a permanent settlement. In my belief the only way in which we shall obtain a permanent settlement will be a policy on the lines of this Amendment. You have tried the Colonial Secretary's policy in Ireland for 700 years, and to-day you have had a lesson from which you may learn if you will. If you continue this war with the idea of crushing absolutely these little States I believe you will fail. At the same time, I do press this House and the country to carry this Amendment, and put an end to the war on lines honourable alike to the Boers and British, and so secure that friendly feeling between these races so necessary for the peace and prosperity of South Africa.

*MR. T. M. HEALY : As we left the House last night in consequence of a resolution of our party declining to take any side between the British parties upon an Amendment with which we had no sympathy, the hon. Gentleman the Member for West Belfast cried out after us in derision, "There go the Clanna-Gael !" That expression, intended as an insult, we take as a compliment. It sums up the position taken by the Irish party in regard to the past debate. No one, I think, Sir, is entitled to complain that in discussing a question of this kind the condition and prospects of Ireland should first engage our thoughts. For myself I dislike very much entering into any debate that is not concerned with Ireland. I have no Imperial soul. As I was born, so I will remain a parish politician. I am concerned first of all with my own country, its privations and misfortunes and struggles ; consequently no one can complain that in dealing with the Transvaal we see in the vast distance the figure and the form of Irish nationality. Now, Sir, as to this Amendment, I confess that the note which has struck me in the course of the late debate as the most remarkable, in exposure of the British mind, was the phrase which dropped from the First Lord, in, I think, his opening address, when he said that the conduct of the Free State was "idiotic." I think one will acquire from it some illumination of the English mind, and the English point of view as to this war when such a man could employ such an extraordinary ejaculation. Do Englishmen think that ties of brotherhood, kinship, language, and race are idiotic ? Why, then, is it strange to see one Afrikaner, one Dutchman holding out the hand of comradeship and the rifle of salvation to another. Yet the First Lord of the Treasury could find no other definition of a character like that than that of an idiot, and he lays down the principle that these Free States must be afflicted with imbecility, and be actuated by the ties and impulses of blood and kinship, although, indeed, they were also bound by treaty with the Transvaal, and are impliedly called "idiots" for not breaking it. Yet the right hon. Gentleman in the same breath and at the same moment hails with acclaim, and with wondering surprise and admiration, the fact that when the British drum-beat sounded, your own distant colonies have come to your assistance. And this is British statesmanship. It is deemed idiotic that the Free State should go to the assistance of its brother across the border ; whereas it is the highest patriotism, the noblest deed of loyalty and devotion for distant New Zealand and Australia to rush into the breach to the aid of the British in South Africa. Sir, if you wish to get into the interior tabernacle of the British mind you must take that sad illustration I have just given you from the speech of the First Lord of the Treasury as the key to its recesses.

We are here to-day to consider on this Amendment what policy you will adopt during the war, and what policy you should adopt when the war is over; but we know in advance that our voices and our expressions will fall on deaf ears, and yet is there no lesson for the Tory party to learn in this fact that whether the inception of this war dates from Majuba or from October last, it is brought about by the Liberal Unionists? Do you hear no warning voice in this, that if you pursue towards the Transvaal and the Free State a policy founded on the doctrines of Liberal Unionism, it will land you in the same mess as it has landed you in Ireland? I think, Sir, that the Irish may well say that the defeat of the Home Rule Bill was avenged at Spion Kop. The Tory party proper have had nothing whatever to do with this war, and they will have nothing to do with this settlement. You ancient gentlemen of England will be excluded, and all the clauses and articles of the arrangement will be signed, sealed, and delivered between the Unionists at the Colonial Office and the Unionists at the Cape—Chamberlain, Milner and Co. This war has been made, and the settlement is to be made, by the right hon. Gentleman who declared yesterday, in answer to an interruption, and when twitted by the right hon. Gentleman the Member for East Fife with the suggestion how much he would enjoy the task, if he could, of editing his speeches; and he declared that he would not alter one word of them. That is to say, of course, not one word since 1894. There are three members of the Liberal Unionist party in the Cabinet to-day; there were three in the Cabinet of Majuba. The right hon. Gentleman the Colonial Secretary was himself leader of the Majuban host; the Duke of Devonshire was, I will not say his aide-de-camp, but at all events he was his disciple. The noble Duke once excused himself for some inconsistency by explaining that his "financial conscience" was in Mr. Gladstone's keeping, but who kept his warlike conscience in 1881? Lord James and another distinguished member of the Unionist party were answerable for the Treaty of Majuba. They are all to-day the presiding geniuses of this war, and will preside when the terms of settlement come to be made in the Transvaal, the Tory party lying outside the breastworks. I think we have had a very considerable revenge for 1886. And it is a remarkable fact that now, in 1900, we hear exactly the same platitudes about Africa which we then heard about Ireland: "Twenty years of firm and resolute government" and "an unlimited secret service," and that by the joint effect of these two operative causes, in a brief time the two opposing races will become mingled in a common blend, and will stand shoulder to shoulder in defence of the Empire. How utterly history contradicts this, not merely our version of history, but the Tory version of history as we understand it in Ireland! Spion Kop was only yesterday, but who gets up celebrations in Ireland of the Battle of the Boyne? Who is it that sports sashes, at the annual "closing of the gates" of Derry? Yet you think the Boers will be more likely to forget their triumphs than your own "garrison" in Ireland. We are dealing with a race who, at the present time, have only two feast days in their calendar—Dingaan's Day and Majuba Day. You have now given them Buller's Day, Methuen's Day, Gatacre's Day, Yule's Day, Warren's Day, and Symons' Day. [Cries of "Shame!"]

Mr. T. M. Healy.

*MR. SPEAKER: Order, order! Cries of "Shame" are out of order.

*MR. T. M. HEALY: There is no man in the House who has a greater respect than I have for the memory of General Symons. One of the noblest and most touching incidents of the war is the correspondence which passed between General Symons in his dying moments and the Boer commander. It was an episode worthy of both sides, and the only touch of unworthiness in it was the action of the English in turning their backs on their dying general.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL (Donegal, S.): Why do you not cry "Shame" now!

*MR. T. M. HEALY: I was saying that, dealing with people with these stubborn memories, we have now given them a long list of further celebrations, and do you think, from your point of view, whose chief glory in Ireland is to celebrate the Battle of the Boyne, and Derry, and Aughrim, that these tenacious Dutchmen will not keep up all these days, especially if they add to them White's

Day or perhaps a day of Kitchener? How can you, in approaching this question of a settlement from any reasonable point of view, suppose that you can extirpate from the Dutch heart that which you are unable to expel from your own? The most eloquent speeches that were made against us six or ten years ago were those of the Colonial Secretary when he asked, "Are you going to desert the loyal minority whom you settled in that country, who fought with such vehemence at the Battle of the Boyne, Aughrim, and Derry?" These were the speeches that were made at that time, when we were reminded of your "Dutch Deliverer," and to-day, I say, we have our revenge. It would not be human in us if we did not regard as the worst heritage of Tory policy, and as the greatest infliction on a party which at all events boasted of a love for liberty and truth, that they should have got themselves into this impasse, into this mess, into this disgrace, by the action, statesmanship, and policy of the persecutors of Ireland. A compliment was paid, and I think justly, to Lord Salisbury the other day by a distinguished speaker on his own side, and I do trust that when the terms of settlement come to be arranged with the Dutch people—if you ever get to that stage (I am not a prophet)—personal feeling, the suggestion of individual revenge, the crafts of "crooked statesmanship" will be laid aside, and that some man who is not always boasting of Imperialism with his lips, but who has it in the recesses of his breast, will for the sake of your own domestic peace arrange the terms and clauses of the treaty. But is your ultimate triumph so certain? It seems to be in the minds of some Englishmen that the Almighty has given them a lease for ever of the universe, and they treat any reverse which arises as a sort of breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment. For all through this debate, and all through your newspaper press, when you are arranging where the Boers will make their last stand—it is dotted out on the map—how long the siege of Pretoria will take, and whether the dividends of the Goldfields Deferred will be 15 or 45 after the war, you seem to leave the Almighty out of the process; He does not enter into your calculations. I admit that at this very moment, while one great Protestant nation is slaughtering another great Protestant nation, you are sending out missionaries to the heathen in Africa to teach them how these Christians love one another. This, no doubt, must greatly edify the blacks. Is there no warning for you from history? Is there no warning for you from Ireland? Do your colonies give you no warning? You boast of the bonds between the colonies and yourselves, and we heard the First Lord of the Treasury re-echoing the Colonial Secretary and rejoicing at the support of the colonies, your great self-ruling communities, and at how they had rallied to your trumpet call. All these things have no warning for you, for actually in the name of freedom and self government you declare that you will wipe out in blood the independence of these two peoples. If we are to believe the doctrine of Napoleon that Providence is always on the side of the best artillery, you will succeed. But I do not think that God is going to be always English. Greater empires than yours have passed away and perished. And as to the threat that by our attitude on this war we have woven the winding-sheet of Home Rule, I answer, "My brothers, we can wait." We are not tired; we will carry on the cause. A successful issue may not be achieved in our time; it may not be in our children's time; but the same tenacity that the Irish race have shown through all these centuries will continue. Never will you make Ireland a British hinterland. Even from your benches to-day two voices are heard. One voice says, "In sympathising and actively showing your sympathy with these people and your determination that peace shall be concluded with them on an honourable basis, you are forfeiting the sympathies of England and destroying the chances of Home Rule." That is one argument. The other argument we have heard to-day, that we do not represent Ireland at all—that whereas the brewers and distillers of Ireland have sent out a hospital train and subscribed £10,000, the poor and lowly have only subscribed £300 for the Boers. If you bring everything to the test of £ s. d. we are nowhere at all. I grant you that. I heard a poor man, whose son is at the front, the other day give expression to this sentiment: "My son," said he, "is fighting for the English in Africa, but I would rather hear of his death than of an English victory." That is unaccountable to you; we are unaccountable to you, and you are prepared and determined—I know it—you make no secret of it—that so long as you can rule over us with the arm of oppression so long will you do so without ruth or regret. The Colonial Secretary the other day was taunted with the fact that he could have made a settlement with the Boers if he would consent to submit the matter to arbitration. He was taunted with the fact that at the Blomfontein Conference he could have made a settlement if he would give a guarantee that he would make no further intervention. But he would not, because, he said, "we could not break our word." Seeing that you have broken other Conventions again and again, was not this squeamishness excessive? Why should you not break your word for the fifteenth time? You made treaties with us. I will not allude to the Treaty of Limerick, because that was a treaty between armies in the field, which you would not suffer your Dutch Deliverer to keep. You made a treaty of Union; you did not keep it. This House made a solemn treaty with Ireland, of which I will read one sentence, in the English Act of Renunciation in 1783—

"Be it enacted that the said right claimed by the people of Ireland to be bound only by laws enacted by His Majesty in the Parliament of Ireland in all cases whatever and to have all actions and suits at law and equity which may be instituted in that Kingdom decided in His Majesty's Courts of Law without appeal from thence shall be and is hereby declared to be established and ascertained for ever, and shall at no time hereafter be questioned."

Seventeen years later you bribed your way to the Act of Union. You broke three treaties with us in two centuries, and you could easily have broken another with the Boers. No nation can ever depend or will ever depend on the honour of England. In saying that, perhaps I should add this qualification—so long as statesmanship of the type which now reigns at the Colonial Office, the statesmanship of the Stock Exchange, prevails in the mind and spirit of your countrymen. In this matter may I say one word in vindication—I have no right or claim to do so—of the statesmanship of Mr. Gladstone. It was directed alike and almost at the same time to this trouble across the channel and across the seas. Those who talk about Majuba Hill and taunt him with having been the author of that settlement, and who now declare that in the next peace treaty there is to be no hint of Majuba, little reflect upon the position of Africa and of England in February, 1881. You had at that time there six or seven regiments, scarcely a good regiment among them, composed, some of them, of raw recruits from Whitechapel, men who would not stand fire. I am not throwing discredit upon the bravery of the British Army taken as a whole, because that surely is beyond question. I am dealing with the material that that statesman had at the moment, without railways in that country, far from transport, oppressed at that time, 1880-81, with troubles piled up for him in Bulgaria and Armenia by the statesmanship of Lord Beaconsfield. I say that instead of being taunted as his memory has been, if Mr. Gladstone had never had to his name anything except the treaty he made with the Boers after Majuba, his action and his fame would serve to defend British honour, and to enlarge the British name for magnanimity when your broken treaties and your treacheries might well make you hide your heads. We are told that you have gone to war to get the franchise from the Boers. You have gone to war for the franchise, and yet the first act of the Tory Lord Lieutenant, on taking office in Ireland, was to move the House of Lords to reject the Irish Municipal Franchise Bill. We are told that the Uitlanders were overtaxed, and that you were entitled to go to war on the question of taxation. But the Uitlanders had no treaty with the Boers. We had a Treaty of Union with you. You made it part of the Treaty of Union that Ireland was to be entitled to exemptions and abatements. But now we are to be crushed with war taxes, in order that more German Jews may have houses in Park Lane. Why should we not be against this war? Why should we not be in favour of an immediate peace? Some English interests may benefit by this war. Your ships, your foodstuffs, your armaments—I can well understand Birmingham and Sheffield being in favour of the war. I can well understand those who run cordite manufactories refusing to re-echo the cry, "Blessed are the meek," and refusing to join in that other blessing in favour of the peacemakers. But what is the position of Ireland, our wretched country—for you have made it wretched; you have destroyed our manufactures, and you are emigrating our people — what is our position to-day? The more our population sinks the higher our taxes rise. English taxes have gone down per head on a declining scale since the Union; Irish taxes have risen in the other proportion. What have we to gain by this war? You do not buy in Ireland if you can help it; you do not expend the price of a percussion cap. I heard a story the other day about your war supplies which is worth telling at a time when you are importing foreign meat, foreign wheat, and foreign emperors to sustain you. For ten years you were paying the Dublin Tramway Company, under some system of war arrangement which I do not profess to understand, £600 a year for the option of taking their horses—a pretty good bargain for the tramway company. You wanted horses, as I understand, six-year-olds, that is, fairly good working horses, and your price was £65 per horse. The Dublin trams have just been electrified, and the 4,000 or 5,000 horses they had were suddenly thrown out of work. The Dublin Tramway Company, as they had been getting £600 a year for nothing from the British, wrote over to say, "You are giving £65 to London bus-drivers for horses; we will give you the pick of our horses for £30 apiece." The War Office wrote over to say they were not having any such horses, although London tram managers are complaining that their stables are denuded by the war. The only thing Irish the Government want are Irish fools. We have heard a good deal of praise of the Irishmen at the front. I read a message the other day from Mr. Winston Churchill, the honoured son of an honoured father, who in this House never showed us anything but kindness. I read his description of an Irish regiment at Spion Kop—

Mr. T. M. Healy.

"The Irish regiment was exposed to an annoying cross fire from Creuzot and Maxim shell guns. The casualties were, however, slight—about a dozen up to noon. The demeanour of the troops under this fire—which they have now borne passively for three days—has been most admirable. The quality of the private soldiers is wonderful. During the morning I visited the Irish infantry, remaining half an hour, in which time eleven shells discharged from a Maxim shell gun exploded in a place where the sheltering soldiers were smoking and playing cards or sleeping, utterly unmoved. They are still the finest infantry in the world—cheery, dignified, magnificent."

Most English papers copied that from the Morning Post. It had put the Morning Post to some expense to telegraph that message, and even to telegraph the word "Irish," I suppose, must have cost them half-a-sovereign. But the papers which copied that message nearly all omitted the word "Irish." It was a British economy of type-setting. If it be true, as the hon. Member for West Belfast said when we were asking why Irish militia regiments were withdrawn from Ireland—the hon. Gentleman, with his soul full of 1688, and charged with memories of the Boyne, said, "Because they were rebels."

MR. WILLIAM JOHNSTON (Belfast, S.): He never said that.

*MR. T. M. HEALY: That is his correction. I should have said South Belfast, not West. The hon. Gentleman is most anxious that I should associate the name of South Belfast with that affair.

MR. WILLIAM JOHNSTON: I wish to do justice to my colleague.

*MR. T. M. HEALY: These are the people you want to put over the Dutch in South Africa. You want a settlement. You want the two races to mingle hand in hand waving the Union Jack and singing "Rule Britannia," and you would put in ascendancy over the Dutch such men as have made their ascendancy in Ireland hateful, and who call your own Irish soldiers "rebels." What wonder, then, if there is disaffection! I understand the principles of Pirate Smith who hoisted his black flag at Bristol and made war with all and sundry for the sake of booty. He had not a Bible on board. He swore by the Jolly Roger and not by the Ten Commandments. You want to syndicate Christianity, and take the Twelve Apostles into your limited liability company. Then you hold up your hands like the pharisee and invite other nations to rejoice that the English possess such virtues. The Irish people are a feeble folk, and the only advantage which the Irish have is that we are able to contemplate your virtues at close quarters. But the Dutch, you see, are 7,000 miles away. Therefore misunderstandings may crop up between you and the Dutch. They have not the advantage which the Irish have in this House of seeing the British constantly, of reading your newspapers, and chanting Rudyard Kipling. But I am told that Rudyard Kipling is an author whom it is extremely difficult to translate into Dutch. Therefore, I am inclined to doubt the theory that in the furnace of this war the Afrikaner and the Briton will be fused by the bloody flux of battle. No, we are here to-day to testify in the name and for the cause of race nationality. As I have already said, you may win. All your calculations are based upon that. If you win you will think that the results have justified your efforts. You will not think of the statesmanship of Gladstone, who held that there were bounds beyond which empire should not go, that there were limits even to British strength, and that by excessive effort, the extensor and contractor muscles of even the British right arm might tire. You disdain Gladstonian Councils, and you will go on and on and on in so far as time and circumstances permit you, and as long as you are successful you chant hosannas to the glories of your jingo statesmen. Is this wisdom? By what means do you hope to keep the Empire you have got? By what means do you hope to conciliate the races which you govern? Do you think the excuses on which you annex territory satisfy anyone but yourselves? I remember in 1879, when you were thinking of annexing Burma. The Tory Government was about to go out, but nobody knew that in India, where Reuter's telegrams are the great adjunct of civilisation, as anybody who turns up the history of that time will see. There came over suddenly one day a telegram from Rangoon, "King Thebaw is drinking." I do not think the hon. Baronet the Member for Carlisle was much disturbed at that. I had never heard of King Thebaw myself, and I was a little more surprised when I read the next day, "The king is drinking still." A week elapsed, and then came a telegram, "King Thebaw has murdered his mother-in-law and three maiden aunts." Nothing more was heard for two days, and then there arrived another telegram, "Thebaw is drinking still." Shortly after this there were troops on the frontier. This was something like the Uitlanders' grievance. But before righteousness could invade Burma the Beaconsfield Ministry fell, and another five years elapsed in which Thebaw and his misfortunes, his want of temperance and the loss of his maiden aunts were entirely ignored by the British public. In June, 1885, a most appropriate circumstance occurred, for we put out the Gladstone Government over a dispute about the whisky tax, and within a week Baron Reuter telegraphed from Burma, "Thebaw is drinking still," and within a month or two after that you made war on Burma and King Thebaw was himself a Uitlander. Your pretext for taking Johannesburg is just the same. There, there is gold, and in Burma there were rubies, and commercial principles must triumph over backward native ways. Your policy is a policy of grab, and I do think it is pitiable that a nation whose qualities are great, whose courage is indomitable, whose resources are endless, should have, at this day, the canker of corruption eating at her heart. The principles which made you great are forgotten. The principles which make the British name a terror are represented by a statue of Cromwell outside Westminster Hall. You put up that statue to the memory of the author of the massacre of Drogheda after "quarter" had been promised to its garrison, at the very moment when your own forces are besieged in Ladysmith. Where was your historic conscience? We represent a small country and a small fraction of the Queen's dominions, but we have memories and we have hopes, and here lift up the voice of that country in protest against your policy, and we declare that the men of Ireland will never join you in any composition of wrong or of injustice.

Mr. T. M. Healy.

*MR. GIBSON BOWLES: I have listened with much pain to the hon. Member for North Louth. His speeches are always brilliant, but I think I have rarely heard from him a speech characterised at once by so much bitterness towards this country delivered within the precincts of this House; by so inappropriate a levity, producing roars of laughter from the Irish benches; and by so little relevancy and regard for the seriousness of the subject under discussion. When I heard the peals of laughter provoked by his jokes following each other with great rapidity, it seemed to me as though the Irish party had set itself the task of discrediting this House, and come here not to assist in Parliamentary work, but to throw discredit upon England and the Parliament of England and to give encouragement to the enemies of the Empire. The hon. Member for Waterford and the hon. Member for North Louth himself are never tired of telling us that they are a small and insignificant minority, but if one cannot regard without serious misgiving the attitude which they have taken up upon this occasion. I congratulate the Irish party upon their choice of a leader in the Member for Waterford, for he has, in my opinion, improved on the tone of the speeches which we so often have to deplore from the benches opposite. He has lifted the tone of debate and improved the style of oratory, and as we heard him those of us who are most anxious to do all we can for Ireland did cherish the hope that perhaps with such a leader there might come some chance of removing those bitter feelings which have hitherto existed. With regard to the Amendment itself, it is one of the greatest possible importance. It declares that this is the time to make peace, and it declares the terms of that peace. But from whom does this advice come? It comes from those who have avowed that their main purpose is hatred of England. Surely that throws a certain amount of suspicion upon the advice itself, a certain amount of improbability over the theory that this advice is for the good of England, and a certain amount of possibility that it may be intended to lure her to destruction. I am glad to know that all Irishmen do not share this hatred of England, and that there are gallant Irishmen in South Africa who are spending their blood in defence of the United Kingdom. Even the Commander-in-Chief is an Irishman. With what feelings will those Irish soldiers and generals read the account of this debate, filled with jibes and jeers and laughter, and embodying to them this message: that they should cease to fight for the cause which they are fighting. With what feelings will they receive that message? Not with encouragement, I think. The war, as I have said again and again, is a most lamentable war. Even if it were inevitable I should have wished and striven to postpone it as long as possible. I deplore it. I never looked forward with confidence to the prospects it opened. I expected reverses and calamities, and I have seen in front of us prospects of the very greatest difficulties and even of calamities. I do, however, declare that this time is the most inappropriate time of all to end the war. Where do we stand? Our country is invaded, we have lost 10,000 men killed, wounded, and prisoners, and have not yet repelled the invader. We are under the stress of reverses unmatched in our history, for reverses of this kind and quality we have never had before. Therefore, I say of all moments this is not the moment for us to sue for peace. Much as I deplore this war, I do declare for myself, and I believe for many sitting around me, that rather than sue for peace, at this moment and under these circumstances, I would sell the shirt from off my back and give my last possession to carry on the war. What would the hon. Member for North Louth say if Ireland were in the same position? Suppose Ireland had been invaded, had lost 10,000 soldiers, and were in the same position as our South African colonies? I know he would be the first to protest against the action of any Irishman who proposed to make peace with the enemy at that time, and under those conditions, upon any terms whatever. The Member for Waterford told us that England is isolated. It is true that she is isolated, but notwithstanding this I believe that France still entertains friendly feelings towards us. There is, however, no doubt that the Powers of Europe are closing ominously round us in various directions. No doubt there is an ominous movement of Russia towards the Indian frontier. There is a revival of that ancient and notorious movement by which Germany has long sought to bring Holland into the German Empire. And there is the invariable, secular, necessary alliance, always existing though not always avowed, between Russia and Germany, which may before long be turned against us. We are isolated, but is that a reason for making peace? By suing for peace under the stress of such a feeling you would only add to your isolation and to the hatred and contempt of foreign countries. If you want to provide against isolation it is at any rate only to be done by making good your own claim to your own territory, by expelling the foe from the land on which they stand now. Then alone you will be able to deal on equal terms with foreign nations. This argument is one of the strongest against even a suggestion of peace at this moment. It is said in this resolution that peace shall be made on the terms of maintaining the independence of the Transvaal and the Orange Free State. I do not know that the independence of the Transvaal was threatened before the war, though now it is quite another matter. What the end of this war may bring we do not know, for who can tell what incidents may occur? President Kruger has said that before this war ends a price will have to be paid which will stagger humanity. Suppose then that some awful, horrible, unheard of event such as has never happened before in history should occur? Suppose some terrible revenge should be taken? Surely that would change the situation. We cannot at this moment commit ourselves to any such declaration as that, at the end of the war, the fullest independence will be granted. I have always held that there is very little to be gained by this war, and have always hoped that the independence of the Transvaal would be respected. But at a moment when you are entirely unaware of what may happen it is absolutely impossible to pledge yourselves to the future. The hon. Gentleman the Member for North Louth has said that we should send out a man who will be competent to make good terms of peace, and I agree with that. I was much struck by the suggestion made by my hon. friend the Member for Plymouth that Lord Rosebery should be sent out for that purpose. I believe he would be a very good man, for he is under no suspicion of stock jobbing, under no suspicion of being an object of dislike to the Cape Dutch or of having used offensive language to or concerning them, and he is therefore to that extent specially qualified for the delicate task of negotiating terms of peace, and even if he did displace Sir Alfred Milner he has occupied such high positions in the State that this would be no slight to that functionary. There is one other subject cognate to this resolution. Sir Alfred Milner has issued a notice declaring invalid all transfers of Transvaal property effected by the Transvaal Government during the war, and I desire to know how far that extends. Does Sir Alfred Milner assume that Her Majesty's Government can and should interfere with the transfer of property of foreign subjects, as between French and German, for instance, or as between Boer and Boer, or between Englishman and Boer? I can hardly suppose it, but to my mind this notice is one of the most amazing I have ever seen, and I should like to hear some explanation of it from Her Majesty's Government. And are the terms of this notice to be made part of the terms of peace? I do not know whether any Minister on the front bench will be able to answer that question, but it is an important one, and should be answered. As for this Amendment on which we are to vote to-night, it is on the face of it little less than an absurdity. This is not the time to make peace, and when the time does come you cannot now say that it should certainly include the independence of the Orange Free State and the Transvaal. Were it not for the frank expression of hatred to England we have heard from the benches opposite, I could not understand the proposition being mooted at all, but certainly when our territory is in the possession of the enemy, that is not the moment when England should either declare or feel herself ready to treat for peace.

MR. FLYNN (Cork, N.): The hon. Member for King's Lynn said this is an unfortunate time to bring forward an Amendment of this character. He also called the Amendment an absurdity. When does the hon. Gentleman suggest that it should be brought forward? Is it when Pretoria has been taken, and when thousands of lives have been lost on both sides in this conflict? This resolution possesses the great merit of going directly to the question, which is, as far as we on these benches, and not a few hon. Members above the gangway, are concerned, that this war is unjust and unnecessary, and that the sooner it is ended the better. The whole controversy, according to the hon. Gentleman who has just sat down, turns on the independence and integrity of the two South African Republics; but the Colonial Secretary takes quite a different view, and notwithstanding the Conventions of 1881 and 1884, declares that the whole controversy turns on the question of British supremacy in South Africa. Now it would have been thought that when the abstruse term "suzerainty" was got rid of by the sanction of Parliament, hon. Members would hear no more about it; but "British supremacy" is a still more sinister phrase, and when the Boers come to know that that is the view of the Colonial Secretary, I very much fear it will increase the intensity of the struggle by forcing on them the conviction that their independence is aimed at and that no settlement short of placing them under the heel of this country will satisfy the elements now moving the politics of this country. The question of suzerainty has been very much discussed during these debates, but it cannot be too often insisted upon that it is the pivot on which the whole controversy turns. I read with some astonishment a speech made by Lord Salisbury in the House of Lords.

Mr. Gibson Bowles.

*MR. SPEAKER: The hon. Member should not refer to a speech delivered in the House of Lords.

MR. FLYNN: I shall not further refer to it, Sir. The question of suzerainty is inextricably mixed up with the justice or injustice of this struggle, and is accordingly relevant to the Amendment. The Convention of 1881 unquestionably contained in its preamble a reference to this question of suzerainty, but the Prime Minister himself has declared that President Kruger was so anxious to get rid of the word "suzerainty" and all that it conveyed that he made considerable sacrifices of territory for that purpose. I am sure the House listened with great attention to the speech of the hon. Member for Caithness, which was closely packed with arguments and facts giving us the inner history of these transactions as it had not been previously given. He proved to the satisfaction of every fair-minded man that the Boers were dissatisfied with the Convention of 1881, and refused to ratify it in their Raad, and that a final settlement was based on the Convention of 1884. The Colonial Secretary in this House, on behalf of the Government and for the enlightenment of the British people, defended the abolition of the word "suzerainty" and the settlement of 1884. I would ask is this Government entitled, if it finds a Convention inconvenient, or the terms of a treaty unsatisfactory, to tear it in pieces? I was very much struck by a very forcible expression in the speech of the right hon. Gentleman the member for Montrose to his constituents. He asked—

"If you are going to tear up this treaty and Convention, what is going to become of the little pieces?"

To any man not carried away by the dominant spirit of aggressive jingoism the answer to that question is one of the greatest importance. Have the Boers violated the Convention of 1884 or not? No such allegation has been made during these debates; not in one valid particular have the Boers violated that Convention. Why, therefore, did the Government tear it to pieces? The grievances of the Uitlanders might meet with sympathy, but you had no right to go behind the Convention of 1884. This Government, or any Government, had only the right to make strong representations to the Boer Government with a view to the removal or modification of these grievances. The hon. and learned Member for the St. Stephen's Green Division stated in his speech that there was no free speech in the Transvaal and no absolute liberty of the press. Why, Sir, in Ireland within the last month three meetings at which members of this House were announced to address their constituents were suppressed on the unsupported affidavit of an unknown policeman before a resident magistrate, and yet this Government is prepared to pour out blood and money to establish free speech in Johannesburg. Where is the consistency? We are told that trade follows the flag. Will it follow the flag of death; and will your relations with the Transvaal and the Orange Free State be improved after the bloody massacre on both sides? There is something connected with this war entirely outside the question of the Uitlanders' grievances or breaches of the Convention. Politics in this country are in a bad way when they are dominated by Stock Exchange considerations; and if there is one thing more patent than another to every patient reader of the Blue-books, it is that the members of the South African League, directed by the Stock Exchange, are the men who are really responsible for this disastrous war. With regard to the Uitlanders' grievances, we now know in connection with the franchise that it was a matter of only two years difference.

*MR. SPEAKER: That was one of the matters raised by the debate which ended last night. The question now is, war being declared, what are the terms on which it is to be closed.

MR. FLYNN: It will not be necessary for me to follow that line of argument, because it has been sufficiently discussed already. I think every thoughtful man must come to the conclusion that the time has arrived when peace ought to be made. This Empire can gain nothing by pursuing this war to a bitter and bloody close. It may satisfy those who believe in the policy of "wiping something off the slate." That is a policy which the Tory Poet Laureate has commended in doggerel verse. It is a policy which is applauded in the music halls and in a portion of the press of the country; but is it not a reversal in the face of the world of the noble policy Mr. Gladstone inaugurated fifteen years ago? In pursuance of this policy you are prepared to drench the veldt with still more blood, and to squander millions of money; and instead of pacifying the Boers, all who survive and their descendants will be the irreconcilable enemies of the British Empire and the British race. The hon. and learned Member for North Louth drew a very apt comparison of the unfortunate results of this policy in Ireland. If you are going to extend that policy to another latitude and longitude, then continue the war. But if this Empire is to revert to the noble traditions which helped to build it up, if you are prepared to listen to wise councils of humanity and Christianity, then, even if this Amendment be not accepted, I trust the Government will take prompt steps to pursue a course similar to that now suggested.

MR. WILLIAM MOORE (Antrim, N.): I should like to contribute a few remarks to this debate mainly on one ground; I believe that the experience of mankind is that if a certain statement is repeated often enough the person repeating it eventually comes to believe it. I have often heard it asserted by hon. Gentlemen opposite that they have an absolute monopoly of Irish nationality and of aspirations for the good of our common country. They have repeated it so often that they now consider it is absolutely true, but with this effect, that they ignore the loyal Irish minority. It is unfortunate that we, the loyal Irish minority, have not taken on ourselves on all occasions the duty of representing to the people of the United Kingdom our own existence and our own power as a political force, and of establishing to the satisfaction of our fellow-subjects that we are prepared to share in the burdens as well as in the glory of the Empire. I regret, as an Irishman first and a Unionist afterwards, that on this occasion it is not possible for us to take common ground on one topic in which our countrymen are much interested. Ireland has contributed to the Army of the United Kingdom 27,000 men, and it would have been at least a graceful thing on the part of hon. Members opposite if they had joined in paying a tribute to the courage and valour of these soldiers. As regards the Unionists in Ireland, the matter is one of which we are all proud. I have an intimate knowledge of my own constituency, and it is no exaggeration to say that the name of Sir George White is revered there as if he were the hero of the hour. There is one matter, however, in which I am in accord with the hon. Member who has just sat down, and also with the hon. and learned Member for North Louth. The hon. and learned Member said that Ireland was now having her revenge for the rejection of Home Rule. I do not care for these maxims and suggestions of revenge. The only way in which a country can be prosperous is if the dead past is allowed to bury its dead. But putting questions of revenge out of the way, I agree there is a very important lesson to be learned from the policy of this country as regards the Transvaal in 1884. When the Transvaal was given its own Parliament and its own independent legislature, it was stated it was sufficient to satisfy all the aspirations of the people and to make them firm and loyal friends of England in South Africa. That was the policy which hon. Gentlemen opposite suggested would have the same effect if set up in Ireland. The policy, fortunately, was rejected in the case of Ireland, but it was carried out in South Africa. Can we now point with any satisfaction to the results of that policy? Has England received that loyal support from the Dutch majority, from Mr. Schreiner, Mr. Hofmeyr, and other members of the Cape Parliament? I would thank the hon. and learned Member for North Louth for one of the declarations he has made. He declared the unalterable determination of his party to insist on Home Rule, notwithstanding the fact that time after time when they have made proposals in this House their votes have left them in a minority. That is a declaration of war which every Unionist will lay to heart. I am glad the hon. and learned Gentleman has given it to us, because we shall know how to meet it. With reference to the speech of the hon. and learned Member for Waterford, I should like to express my sense of the dignified position he took up, but I should also like to add that the tone he adopted, although so worthy and befitting, is entirely different from the language and sentiments he indulges in across the Channel. I venture to say that he has never claimed on an Irish platform the right to tender advice to the House of Commons as to what its conduct should be in the present position, although of course he has a perfect right to do it. He justified himself by saying that he was only treading in the footsteps of Chatham, Burke, and Grattan. I should like to be satisfied that his sentiments towards this country are similar to those of Chatham, Burke, and Grattan. I find in a newspaper of which the hon. and learned Member is a director a reference to the rumoured fall of Ladysmith, a portion of which has been already read in the House by the hon. and learned Member for St. Stephen's Green. The remainder of the extract is as follows—

"For if it is indeed the case that this important strategic point has come into the hands of the brave Boers it marks the beginning of the end, not alone of British prestige, but of the whole robber system that has for so long plundered and dominated so large a portion of the habitable globe. Therefore it is that we join heartily in the universal prayer of the Irish race to-day."

These are the gentlemen who are now offering us friendly advice, and who claim to be the humble followers of Chatham, Burke and Grattan. Does the hon. and learned Member agree with the sentiments of Grattan? Speaking on the 27th of May, 1782, Grattan said—

"Common interest, a perpetual connection, the recent conduct of Great Britain, a native affection to the British name and nation, together with the constitution we have recovered and the high reputation we possess, must ever decide the wishes as well as the interest of Ireland to perpetuate the harmony, stability, and glory of the Empire."

Is the hon. and learned Member following in the footsteps of Burke? Burke was never treated as a traitor, and I cannot find any suspicion or suggestion that he was disloyal. Speaking on the 14th December, 1778, when he heard that the American colonies claimed independence, Burke said—

"On the day that he first heard of the American states having claimed independency it made him sick at heart, it struck him to the soul, because he saw it was a claim essentially injurious to this country, and a claim which Great Britain could never get rid of."

These were the sentiments of Grattan and Burke with regard to this country, and when we find the hon. and learned Member for Waterford approving of these sentiments, and advising the House of Commons, surely we should think of the quarter from which the advice comes. I should like to understand what motive the hon. and learned Member has in giving us this advice. Is it to strengthen and encourage the enemies of the Empire? Is it to humiliate Great Britain? When I remember that the party which the hon. and learned Member represents has cheered the Zulus and the Mahdi, it seems to me extraordinary that he should display such disinterested sympathy. The statement has been made by hon. Gentlemen sitting opposite that the whole civilised world is against England in this struggle, and in support of the Boers. I think it is hardly right or respectful—I am not a member of their Church—for any of them to declare that the civilised world is against us, when a cardinal priest of their own Church has blessed the war. Is it suggested that he would do that if he did not believe that the war was just, or that he is not a member of a civilised community? The explanation of the whole thing is, I believe, well summed up in the expression which we borrowed from America, and which is mainly used with reference to authors—log-rolling. Hon. Gentlemen would be very glad indeed if they were able to establish the principle of independent legislatures in the two Republics in South Africa, because by so doing they would be increasing the chance of the same policy being applied in Ireland. That is the obvious explanation of the interested advice of the hon. and learned Member, and I hope that the House will give it the attention it deserves. This war has established one principle for which as an Irish Unionist I am grateful. We have heard a great deal about the affection which the colonies have shown the mother country, but I value still more, as an Irish Unionist, the loyalty which the mother country has felt bound to extend to her colonies. We have had in South Africa a loyal British community, which has been subjected to Dutch domination for years. They sent their complaints to this country, and the policy of conciliation, as applied in Ireland, was adopted, and these complaints of our fellow-subjects in South Africa were treated with contempt. But there comes a time when the last straw breaks the camel's back, and this country is now determined to assert in South Africa, and every part of the globe, the right of our loyal fellow-subjects to ordinary liberty, and to a recognition of their loyalty. If in Ireland, where our loyal fellow-subjects have for long complained of a domination of a majority, there is to be a recognition in the future that you will abide by your own people, and distinguish friend from foe, then I shall welcome the adoption of that principle. It was suggested that the Government had made one mistake in committing themselves to the defence of Northern Natal. I do not know whether strategically that was a mistake, but I venture to say that politically there could be no mistake about it.

*MR. SPEAKER: The hon. Gentleman is now entering on a matter discussed on the previous Amendment.

MR. WILLIAM MOORE: Sir, I bow to your ruling at once. It was with the object of surrender that this Amendment was moved. There are times when surrender can be considered, but I venture to think that these are only two in number. You may surrender after a victory, after a gigantic success; and then that surrender would be called magnanimity. Or, again, you may surrender when you cannot lift another arm, or wield another sword, in the crushing gloom of defeat. That surrender is not magnanimity. At present we have reached neither the one stage nor the other; and any surrender could only be treated as having one meaning, the meaning of cowardice. We have given up territory, we have lost valuable lives, we have shed blood and treasure. Is all that to be in vain? If we were to surrender now, would hon. Members call it magnanimity? Sir, the country would have none of that. The City of York would have none of it; and the feeling exhibited there will be exhibited in every town in England and of loyal Ireland. I hope that this war will be prosecuted, I need hardly say with success, but until a termination has been arrived at which will satisfy the wishes of all real patriotic lovers of the Empire.

Mr. William Moore.

*MR. T. W. RUSSELL: I recognise that the terms of the Amendment submitted to the House by the hon. and learned Member for Waterford are exceedingly narrow, and that it is perfectly impossible for anyone to argue the general question of policy upon it. The hon. and learned Gentleman, I am bound to say, introduced his Amendment with great moderation, and in the most temperate language. He put what he believed to be the Irish Nationalist point of view strongly, and I am very far from denying that he has behind him a considerable amount of Irish public opinion. I cannot help saying that I admit the seriousness of the fact. I think it is a lamentable fact that, with practically the whole of Great Britain on one side, with the whole of the self-governing colonies ranged behind us in this war, there should be an Irish party of eighty members in this House who, from whatever motives, will vote against England in this matter. Whether it comes from hatred of England or from a mistaken view of the facts, the fact is there, and I am not in the least inclined to underrate it. But it is, I confess, a rather curious condition of affairs that the representatives of a country which they claim to be an oppressed country, although I am not prepared to agree to the oppression to the extent they believe, should stand behind what I cannot help calling one of the most odious tyrannies of the century. [HON. MEMBERS on the Irish benches: Oh, oh!] Hon. Gentlemen opposite may disagree, but facts are facts. Now what would have been the position of the Irish people had they been in the condition of the British population in the Transvaal? if they were denied the franchise? [An

HON. MEMBER: So they were till the other day.] If they had had an embargo put upon the education of their children? [HON. MEMBERS: So they have! What about the university?] If they had had the right of public meeting suspended? [HON. MEMBERS: Hear, hear!] If freedom of the press had been abolished? I know that hon. Gentleman will tell me that all this has happened in Ireland. [Cheers from the Irish benches.] Yes, but what was the view of the Irish Members in regard to it, and what did they say in this House about it? They never ceased to protest against it, and in many respects they succeeded in getting a remedy for great wrongs. But here they are ranged, not in protest against this iniquity, but in defence of it. [IRISH MEMBERS: No, no!] I say it is one of the most extraordinary facts of the situation that the representatives of a country claiming to be oppressed, and protesting against these things, should be standing in line for the oppressor. [AN IRISH MEMBER: For his independence only.] The hon. and learned Member for Waterford had an analogy, used repeatedly in this debate, of the most extraordinary character. He claims to stand in the position of Chatham and Burke, in protesting against the war with the American colonies. What was the net issue involved in that war? [AN IRISH MEMBER: A tax on tea.] Was not the grievance taxation without representation? But that is the grievance here, or one of them. The Uitlanders contribute most of the taxation of the Transvaal without an atom of representation.

MR. JONATHAN SAMUEL (Stockton): Have you not aliens in this country without representation?

*MR. T. W. RUSSELL: Yet hon. Gentlemen shelter themselves behind the great names of Chatham and Burke, altogether oblivious of the fact that these men stood for a principle; and that they are revering that principle and standing for the opposite: taxation without representation. They are not alone to blame in that matter, for on the front bench opposite the same position has been taken. The hon. Member for Caithness had some debate with me as to the right of public meeting in the Transvaal. He advanced the extraordinary argument that the law of public meeting in Johannesburg was precisely what it was in London. That is not so. And then the hon. Member went on to describe how he himself had been pelted with stones in Trafalgar Square. But that is not the law. Next, he went on to tell us that he had gone to Birmingham, and had been refused a fair hearing. Yes, but there is one place where he has not gone, where the law of public meeting is perfectly free. He has not gone to Caithness, his own constituency. He has gone up and down the country, but his own constituents have been clamouring for his presence and advice; and although the law of public meeting is perfectly safe in Caithness, he has not gone there. The hon. Member for North Louth, opposite to whom I have sat for fourteen years, and who never makes a speech, whether I agree with it or not (and I often agree with a great deal of what he says), but what I enjoy most heartily, spoke of the Boers having two gala days in the year, but that they were about to add many more. There is one which will never be added—the day on which this Parliament surrenders to most ignominious conditions like those of the Parliament of 1881, suggested by this Amendment. Sir, a good deal has been said during these debates about judgment and forethought. I have not seen much of it on the oppositese, and precious little of it in the Amendment before the House; and probably hon. Members are aware of it. This is not a question of forethought at all. He who runs may read. What are the terms of the Amendment now submitted to the House? The hon. and learned Gentleman does not pretend, because he is incapable of making a pretence, to prejudice the matter. What are the terms on which the war should be stopped? The Leader of the Opposition, the other night, finessed a good deal in his speech on that point. He committed himself almost, and then drew back. What he did commit himself to, if he committed himself at all, was that peace should be made when our territory was clear of the invader. [AN HON. MEMBER: Why not?] I am not saying why not; but it is a very different thing to make peace when the invader is on our territory. There is no mistake what this Amendment means.

The Irish Members know what they are doing. They have been perfectly logical and consistent in the whole of their proceedings. They refused to vote for the Amendment of the noble Lord the Member for Cricklade, because they did not approve of it. But this is an Amendment seeking to pledge the House of Commons to stop the war—now, with part of Natal and parts of Cape Colony in the hands of the enemy. All I have got to say is, that there are a great number of people in this country who think there was a shameful surrender after Majuba—I believe the majority of the people of the country think so—but the surrender of 1881 would be as nothing to the surrender of 1900, if this Amendment were carried. I say it is an impossible Amendment, and the sooner the House of Commons comes to a division upon it the better.

SIR WILFRID LAWSON (Cumberland, Cockermouth): The hon. Member who spoke last but one suggested that to accept the Amendment would be an act of cowardice. I think that it would be an act of the greatest cowardice for anyone to refuse to admit that he is in the wrong, if he is in the wrong. I am very glad that this Amendment has been brought forward, and for one reason—that it is a clear Amendment which we can all understand. We have had five or six nights debate over an Amendment which people did not seem able to understand, and of which they gave different explanations. But this is one we can all understand. I congratulate my Irish friends on having brought it forward. It is one of the first-fruits of that reconciliation which we have heard of; and for my part I take this opportunity of congratulating them on that union, which I hope and trust will be both firm and prosperous. They could not have done anything better than by bringing forward, on such an occasion, a motion in the sacred interests of peace and goodwill. I think the Amendment may be considered in another light; it condemns no one. It deals simply with the present, and suggests the means of getting out of the terrible position in which we find ourselves. It is a motion of peace and goodwill, and I, for my part, do not think that the war policy, so far, has done us any good. Is there any good thing that comes from such a policy? We have an enormous expenditure; we have a long roll of gallant dead; we have our wounded, suffering, and misery in thousands of homes, and our prestige that you talk about is gone. [HON. MEMBERS: No, no!] I can only say I read a letter the other day from one of the greatest Tories of the kingdom, Mr. Frederick Greenwood, who declares that our prestige is gone irretrievably; and the Prime Minister says we are in a state of humiliation; while I read in the Tory newspapers that the Empire is at stake. All this is the result of your war policy. The question brought forward by this Amendment is—"Is it worth while to go on with that policy, or to go on in a wiser course?" I know that the "war-at-any-price party" say, "Go on fighting, with more expenditure of treasure and with more disgrace to this country." [HON. MEMBERS: No, no!] Well, it is a disgrace. Whoever is to blame, whoever began it, surely it is a scandal and a disgrace for two so-called Christian nations to be cutting one another's throats. Why are they cutting one another's throats? It is to prove, if I understand the argument, which is the stronger. I voted in the autumn session with a very few colleagues against this war altogether, and against the money and the men. And I will tell you why I did so. I will quote my right hon. friend the Member for Wolverhampton, though I do not agree with him about this war. I am a man of peace; he is a man of war. I think he stated the case very properly when he went down to his constituents after the autumn session. He said that—

Mr. T. W. Russell.

"He held to the opinion clearly that war was a terrible and awful calamity, and unless it was absolutely unnecessary was a gigantic crime. Now, holding that opinion, he could not and would not spend a single shilling or sacrifice a single life in the prosecution of a war which he held to be unjust."

That is my standpoint. I hold this war to be unjust, and I voted at every opportunity against the money and the men; and I shall do so to the end of the chapter, unless somebody can show me a different way of settling this dispute. I have alluded to our misfortunes. We cannot regain the millions spent, we cannot recall the lives of the heroes who are dead, or bind up the hearts broken by all this misery; but I do think it still remains in our power, by conciliation and adopting the Amendment under consideration, to put a stop to what is going on. I think it is possible, even now, that a wise statesmanship may be able to stand between the living and the dead. The First Lord of the Admiralty in his speech alluded to the Amendment brought forward by the Front Opposite Bench as unpatriotic. I do not accept that description for this Amendment; it at any rate proposes a Christian intervention in these horrible proceedings. But I would prefer another Amendment like the one I put on the Paper, which more correctly expresses my views, and although I cannot now move it, I may be allowed to read it—"And we humbly pray your Majesty to direct your Ministers to take immediate steps for making known to the two Republics with whom we are at war the terms on which an honourable peace may be concluded, with a view to stopping further loss of life and expenditure of treasure in military operations." I think that would have been a better way of expressing my own feelings. It does not say "Stop the war," but only takes the means probable to stop the fighting. Now I know that in this House that is not a popular line to take; and in the country it is very difficult to express any opinion in favour of peace. But, Sir, I am proud of this House; I think it is the only place that is left at this moment in which a man is allowed to say what he will on this matter. I am proud of the debate. I am an old Member of the House, and I think some of the speeches made during last week have been the finest I have ever heard, such as those of my right hon. friend the Member for Bodmin, my right hon. friend the Member for Dumfries Burghs, my right hon. friend the Member for West Monmouthshire, the Member for Battersea, and, above all, that of the hon. Member for Carnarvon Burghs, whose was one of the very finest I ever heard in this House. I am sure that the House listened to these speeches graciously and quietly, and I rejoice that they have been put before the country. Of course it is said that we cannot do anything because of the invasion of our territory. That appears to me to be only a part of the argument. Really we were making war against the Transvaal when we were sending out our troops there; and it was only because the Boers had the first chance that they crossed the frontier. Of course there is the feeling which animates our Yeomanry and Volunteers, that they are going out to defend our territory; but nobody can expect any military glory from this war, for if we have 180,000 men opposed to 60,000, that is three to one, how can you possibly find glory in it? As to the bravery of our troops, who disputes it? We know they are brave, and will be brave. But, on the other hand, the Boers are equally brave. When this war is all over you will have to arrange somehow to settle matters. All I ask is, let us try and arrange matters before we kill all these men. If we want to arrange matters, however, we must be clear what is wanted. There is no doubt these Republics made war on us because they believed that we were attacking their independence. If that be so, and if we are merely fighting to repel an invasion, say so, and let them understand it. If we are fighting about the franchise, say so. If we are fighting about monopolies, say so. Lord Rosebery says we are fighting against a corrupt and despotic oligarchy. [An Hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear!] I hear somebody say, "Hear, hear." I suppose he does not belong to an oligarchy. If we are fighting against a giant despotic oligarchy, I only say, let us put our own house in order before we attempt to put the Transvaal House in order. [An Hon. MEMBER: The liquor laws.] I merely suggest various reasons that have been stated for the war. The hon. Member says it is to put down the liquor traffic. Well, the liquor traffic supplies a third of our revenue and two-thirds of the House of Commons. We have heard, over and over again, about fighting for supremacy; and the First Lord of the Admiralty made a distinct Ministerial statement on that point. What are the Boers to think when they know that that is the policy of the Government? What does it mean? It means the extermination of the Boers. It is said that if this war goes on the women will take up arms. That shows it is to be a war of extermination. The Colonial Secretary says that one of the lessons of this war is to be found in the enormous power possessed by Volunteer troops when fighting in defence of their own country. Is not the same power possessed by the Boers? By this motion

Seventh Day.

we are not condemning the past, we are suggesting, instead, a gleam of hope for the future, and the first step towards securing a settlement is to come to a clear understanding. This war is the outcome of a miserable misunderstanding which has cost much suffering and the loss of many lives. Let us have no more misunderstandings. My right hon. friend the Member for South Aberdeen said we were bound to make our authority manifest to the world. Can we not do something better than that, and make our honour, truth, and humanity known to the world? That would be much more effectual than any display of armies and armaments. In his speech the Under Secretary for War—and I congratulate him heartily on being able to make so charming a speech on so horrible a subject—said that the Amendment moved by the front bench would not be understood by the taxpayers here or by our foreign critics or by our fellow subjects in Natal. I venture to assert that none of these people can understand the way we are going on now, and they will be unable to understand it until we have a clear and distinct statement of what our intentions and designs are in this war. Such a statement is due, not merely to the people of this country, but to our neighbours throughout the world. Why can we not try to stop this horrid slaughter? I see nothing before me but a long vista of horrible and ceaseless massacres of mankind. In a speech which the Colonial Secretary made in the autumn session, he appealed to some deity which he himself invented—he appealed to the God of Battles. Of course, if we are to worship him, if we are his subjects, we must go on as we are, sacrificing thousands of men. But if any of us have regard to the teaching and worship of the Prince of Peace, then I implore Members of this House and the Government to make an honest and earnest effort to sheath the sword and to spare mankind.

COMMANDER BETHELL (Yorkshire, E.R., Holderness): As I had not an opportunity of addressing the House in the course of the debate which was brought to a close last night, I am very anxious, being one of the few Members on this side in the House who hold opinions different from those entertained on this war by the great body of our party, to place on record my agreement with my right hon. friend the Member for Bodmin and the hon. and learned Gentleman the Member for Plymouth. I have not, since the outbreak of this war, addressed this House, and I wish now to say that it is my clear opinion and my firm conviction that this war is an unjust war. I am bound to say that in common generosity to my two hon. friends, but I shall not annoy the party to which I have the honour to belong by any investigation of the reasons which have led me to this conclusion. This is scarcely the proper moment to do that, even if I had any desire. But I would like to say a few words in regard to the future, words which I do not think will cause annoyance to anybody. I do not believe that the sword can settle this South African question. It is a racial question. We can, it is true, if we wish, and as we shall, remove the grievances which have been complained of. We can sweep away the armed camp, but we cannot settle a racial question by the sword seven thousand miles away from this country. I pray you to remember that the British Empire after all is an Empire in virtue of its free institutions, and it is as certain as I am standing here that, if not by the present Government, then by gentlemen in some other part of the House, free institutions must be restored to the Republics at the end of this war. How do those institutions work? You have a Dutch population increasing in a much more rapid degree than the English population, and it is pretty certain that in twenty-five years from now the old difficulty will reappear. Remember what has happened within the last twenty-five years. Remember what happened after Majuba. The Afrikaner Bond was started and dominated South Africa, and we may be sure that after this war a similar ramification will spread over the whole of South Africa. Do you really believe that after we have given the Dutchmen a beating they will consent to live comfortably beside us? I am afraid that the Secretary of State for the Colonies has misread history most woefully. Have we not before us the history of the Dutch in Europe? Have we not, too, the history of the Dutch in South Africa? Do you believe that a race so tenacious as they have proved themselves to be will accept defeat at our hands and consent to live beside us in peace? No, Sir; much as I grieve for the war and the causes which started it, what I regret much more is the profound mistake of my hon. friends in hoping and believing that the sword can settle this racial question, a question which in history never has been settled by the sword, excepting in the case, perhaps, of small countries bordering on the country with which the difficulty arose. As far as the Amendment of the hon. Member for Waterford goes, I certainly am not going to support that. I did not take any part in the division last night, because I could not see my way to express approval of the negotiations which preceded this horrible transaction. No doubt, technically, the Republics made war upon us; but in my opinion, morally, we made war on the Republics. I frankly admit that mistakes have been made by the Governments of the Republics, but I am not going to consent to any Amendment which would suggest that we should offer terms of peace while the enemy is still upon our soil. I beg to associate myself as earnestly as I can with the speech of my hon. and learned friend the Member for Plymouth and with that of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Bodmin. While it is essential that we should repel the intruder from our territory, it is not essential merely for the glory of defeating the enemy to continue the war after proper and honourable proposals for peace can be made. I further wish to associate myself with the words of my hon. and learned friend the Member for Plymouth, which, I am afraid, gave some dissatisfaction on this side of the House. I feel bound to support his view that when the time comes to make peace, that when it is possible to undertake negotiations to put a stop to this bloody war, when we can once more hope to give peace to South Africa, then it would be shocking if those who are mainly responsible for the war having broken out—I mean among others the Secretary of State for the Colonies—should be entrusted with the negotiations.

Sir Wilfrid Lawson.

MR. ARNOLD (Halifax): When this House was prorogued last August, I am sure it was the wish of all of us that there should be no war at all, and I believe the great majority of the Members of this House and of the people of this country believed that not a shot would be fired. But in consequence of the ultimatum war has commenced, and if proposals for peace are to be made they should come from the other side. With reference to the Amendment now before the House in favour of recognising the independence of the Republics when the war is over, I trust, and I think we all hope, that peace will be made upon the terms so eloquently described yesterday by my right hon. friend—terms dictated by fairness and justice and not by a spirit of vengeance, but when we come to discuss the question of the independence of the Republics I think we are bound to consider what the possession of that independence led them to do. They so arranged the taxation of their country that the dominant clique paid practically nothing, while the great majority of the inhabitants, who were citizens of this country, had to contribute eight or nine times as much as the Boers. And when they got the money, what did they do with it? They spent millions of pounds in erecting in the Transvaal an arsenal for the construction and storage of the direst implements of war. They created a splendid artillery, and they engaged the services of the best military strategists they could find. Why did they establish their arsenal in such close proximity to one of our most loyal and peaceable possessions—namely, Cape Colony? It would be idle to dispute the fact that their real object was to seize that colony whenever the opportunity offered itself. If they are to be allowed to retain their independence and to do that sort of thing again, then this war will have been undertaken in vain, and we shall have expended our treasure and, what is more precious, many valuable lives, to no effect. I think we may safely leave it to the Government, who know the intentions and wishes of the people of this country, to settle this question, and to insure that wherever the British flag is to be found there shall be equal liberty for all, and that no one race shall domineer over another.

Seventh Day.

MR. FIELD (Dublin, St. Patrick): The Amendment brought forward by the united Irish party denounces the war as unjust and unnecessary. As a member of that united Irish party— [Ironical cheers.] —hon. Members opposite may sneer, but, judging from the difference of opinion that exists amongst the members even of the great Unionist party, I claim, as a member of the Irish party, that in this matter we are more united than the Unionists. We declare that this war is unjust. It is the opinion in Ireland that the war is unjust, because the jingo party of Great Britain has practically endeavoured to take away the independence of the two Republics, and because the war has been engineered through the means of certain Cabinet Ministers. If I were to make a suggestion to this great and honourable House, I would say, in all seriousness, that no war should be declared until the question has been debated by this House. I made such a proposition in the newspapers, and it was not received with favour; but I do hold that the question of peace or war should be determined by the House of Commons and not by a particular Minister. I am delighted to have an opportunity of showing that we, the united Irish party, are not in line with, but are entirely separated from, other parties in the House of Commons. It is a mere pretence to say that this war is necessary. It is simply a war of capitalists. It is a gold and diamond war, brought about through the agency of the Stock Exchange. It is a war of shareholders in gold mines and diamond fields. It is not the result of international complications, it is simply the result of pressure which has been brought to bear on the Government by gentlemen who control the purse-strings of the community. I do urge the House to take measures to put a speedy end to this war. I made some remarks a few months ago, and hon. Gentlemen laughed at the idea of this being a serious war. I tell you now, as I told you then, that this war is not a matter to be laughed at. The French nation went into their war with Germany with a light heart—so one of their Ministers said. You hon. Members opposite went into this war with a light heart, and you scoffed at Members on this side who urged that it had a serious side. I ask you to-day, have you any consideration for the widows and orphans created by this war?—and I again ask you to declare that this war is unjust and unnecessary, and that measures should be taken to secure a speedy peace.

Question put.

The House divided:—Ayes, 66; Noes, 368. (Division List No. 4.)

AYES.

Abraham, Wm. (Cork, N.E.)
Am rose, Robert
Austin, M. (Limerick, W.)
Barry, E. (Cork, S.)
Blake, Edward
Burns, John
Carew, James Laurence
Carvill, P. Geo. Hamilton
Clancy, John Joseph
Clark, Dr. G. B. (Caithness-sh.)
Commins, Andrew
Condon, Thomas Joseph

Crean, Eugene
Crilly, Daniel
Curran, Thos. B. (Donegal)
Curran, Thomas (Sligo, S.)
Daly, James
Doogan, P. C.
Engledaw, Charles John
Farrell, James P. (Cavan, W.)
Farrell, Thomas J. (Kerry, S.)
French, Peter
Field, William (Dublin)
Flavin, Michael Joseph

Flynn, James Christopher
Fox, Dr. Joseph Francis
Gibney, James
Hammond, John (Carlow)
Harrington, Timothy
Hayden, John Patrick
Healy, Maurice (Cork)
Healy, Thomas J. (Wexford)
Healy, Timothy M. (N. Louth)
Hogan, Thomas Francis
Jameson, Major J. Eustace
Jordan, Jeremiah

Mr. Arnold.

Kilbride, Denis
Lawson, Sir W. (Cumberland)
Macaleese, Daniel
MacDonnell, Dr. M. A. (Qn's C.)
MacNeill, John Gordon Swift
McCartan, Michael
McDermott, Patrick
McGhee, Richard
McHugh, Patrick A. (Leitrim)
Mandeville, J. Francis
Molloy, Bernard Charles

Murnaghan, George
O'Brien, James F. X. (Cork)
O'Brien, Patrick (Kilkenny)
O'Brien, P. J. (Tipperary)
O'Connor, Arthur (Donegal)
O'Connor, James (Wicklow, W.)
O'Connor, T. P. (Liverpool)
O'Malley, William
Parnell, John Howard
Pinkerton, John
Power, Patrick Joseph

Redmond, John E. (Waterford)
Redmond, William (Clare)
Roberts, John Bryn (Eifion)
Roche, John (East Galway)
Sullivan, Donal (Westmeath)
Sullivan, T. D. (Donegal, W.)
Tully, Jasper
Young, Samuel (Cavan, E.)
TELLERS FOR THE AYES—
Sir Thomas Esmonde and
Captain Donelan.

NOES.

Aird, John
Allan, William (Gatehead)
Allsopp, Hon. George
Anson, Sir William Reynell
Archdale, Edward Mervyn
Arnold, Alfred
Arnold-Forster, Hugh O.
Arrol, Sir William
Asher, Alexander
Aquilith, Right Hon. H. H.
Atkinson, Rt. Hon. John
Austin, Sir John (Yorkshire)
Bailey, James (Walworth)
Baillie, J. E. B. (Inverness)
Bainbridge, Emerson.
Baird, John George Alexander
Balcarres, Lord
Baldwin, Alfred
Balfour, Rt. Hn. A. J. (Manchester)
Banbury, Frederick George
Barnes, Frederic Gorell
Barry, Rt. Hn. A. H. S. (Hunts)
Barry, Sir Francis T. (Windsor)
Bartley, George C. T.
Bathurst, Hon. Allen Benjamin
Beach, Rt. Hn. Sir M. H. (Bristol)
Beach, W. W. Bramston (Hants.)
Beaumont, Wentworth C. B.
Beckett, Ernest William
Begg, Ferdinand Faithfull
Bethell, Commander
Bhownaggee, Sir M. M.
Bigwood, James
Bill, Charles
Billson, Alfred
Blakiston-Houston, John
Blundell, Colonel Henry
Bolitho, Thomas Bedford
Bonsor, Henry Cosmo Orme
Boulnois, Edmund
Bowles, T. G. (King's Lynn)
Brassey, Albert
Brodrick, Rt. Hon. St. John
Brookfield, A. Montagu
Brown, Alexander H.
Bullard, Sir Harry
Butcher, John George
Buxton, Sydney Charles
Caldwell, James
Cameron, Sir C. (Glasgow)
Campbell, J. H. M. (Dublin)
Campbell-Bannerman, Sir H.
Carson, Rt. Hon. Edward
Causton, Richard Knight
Cavendish, R. F. (N. Lancs.)
Cavendish, V. C. W. (Derbyshire)
Cecil, Lord Hugh (Greenwich)
Chaloner, Captain R. G. W.

Chamberlain, Rt. Hn. J. (Birm.)
Chamberlain, J. Austen (Worce'r)
Chaplin, Rt. Hon. Henry
Charrington, Spencer
Chelsea, Viscount
Clarke, Sir E. (Plymouth)
Coddington, Sir William
Coghill, Douglas Harry
Collings, Rt. Hon. Jesse
Colomb, Sir John Chas. Ready
Colston, Chas. Edw. H. Athole
Cook, Fred. Lucas (Lambeth)
Cooke, C. W. Radcliffe (Hereford)
Corbett, A. C. (Glasgow)
Cornwallis, Fiennes Stanley W.
Cotton-Jodrell, Col. E. T. D.
Cox, Irwin Edward Bainbridge
Cripps, Charles Alfred
Cross, Alexander (Glasgow)
Cross, Herb. Shepherd (Bolton)
Cubitt, Hon. Henry
Currie, Sir Donald
Curzon, Viscount
Dalkeith, Earl of
Dalrymple, Sir Charles
Davies, M. Vaughan (Cardigan)
Denny, Colonel
Dickinson, Robert Edmond
Disraeli, Coningsby Ralph
Dixon-Hartland, Sir Fred. D.
Donkin, Richard Sim
Dorington, Sir John Edward
Doughty, George
Douglas, Rt. Hon. A. Akers-
Douglas, Charles M. (Lanark)
Douglas-Pennant, Hon. E. S.
Doxford, Sir Wm. Theodore
Drage, Geoffrey
Duncombe, Hon. Hubert V.
Dunn, Sir William
Dyke, Rt. Hn. Sir William Hart
Egerton, Hon. A. de Tatton
Elliot, Hn. A. Ralph Douglas
Emmott, Alfred
Evans, Sir Francis H. (South'ton)
Fardell, Sir T. George
Farquharson, Dr. Robert
Fergusson, Rt. Hn. Sir J. (Manchester)
Field, Admiral (Eastbourne)
Finch, George H.
Finlay, Sir Robert Bannatyne
Firbank, Joseph Thomas
Fisher, William Hayes
Fison, Frederick William
Fitzmaurice, Lord Edmund
Flannery, Sir Fortescue
Fletcher, Sir Henry
Flower, Ernest

Forster, Henry William
Foster, Harry S. (Suffolk)
Foster, Sir W. (Derby Co.)
Fowler, Rt. Hon. Sir Henry
Fry, Lewis
Galloway, William Johnson
Garfit, William
Gedge, Sydney
Gibbons, J. Lloyd
Gibbs, Hn. A. G. H. (C. of Lond.)
Gibbs, Hn. Vicary (St. Albans)
Giles, Charles Tyrrell
Gilliat, John Saunders
Gold, Charles
Goldsworthy, Major-General
Gordon, Hon. John Edward
Gorst, Rt. Hon. Sir J. Eldon
Goschen, Rt. Hn. G. J. (St. George's)
Gourley, Sir Edward Temperley
Graham, Henry Robert
Gray, Ernest (West Ham)
Greville, Hon. Ronald
Grey, Sir Edward (Berwick)
Gull, Sir Cameron
Gunter, Colonel
Guthrie, Walter Murray
Haldane, Richard Burdon
Hall, Rt. Hon. Sir Charles
Hamilton, Rt. Hon. Lord George
Hanbury, Rt. Hn. Robert Wm.
Hanson, Sir Reginald
Hare, Thomas Leigh
Harwood, George
Haslett, Sir James Horner
Heath, James
Heaton, John Henniker
Hedderwick, Thomas Chas. H.
Helder, Augustus
Henderson, Alexander
Hermion-Hodge, Robt. Trotter
Hickman, Sir Alfred
Hill, Sir Edwd. Stock (Bristol)
Hoare, Edw. B. (Hampstead)
Hoare, Sir Samuel (Norwich)
Hobhouse, Henry
Hornby, Sir William Henry
Horniman, Frederick John
Houldsworth, Sir Wm. Henry
Houston, R. P.
Howard, Joseph
Howell, William Tudor
Howorth, Sir Henry Hoyle
Hozier, Hon. James H. Cecil
Hubbard, Hon. Evelyn
Hudson, George Bickersteth
Hutchinson, Capt. G. W. Grice-
Hutton, John (York, N. R.)
Jenkins, Sir John Jones

Jeasel, Capt. Herbert Merton
 Johnston, William (Belfast)
 Johnstone, Heywood (Sussex)
 Joicey, Sir James
 Jones, D. Brynmor (Swansea)
 Kay-Shuttleworth, Rt. Hon. Sir U.
 Kearley, Hudson E.
 Kennaway, Rt. Hon. Sir J. H.
 Kenyon, James
 Kenyon-Slaney, Col. William
 Kinloch, Sir John Geo. Smyth
 Kitson, Sir James
 Knowles, Lees
 Lafone, Alfred
 Laurie, Lieut.-General
 Lawrence, Sir E. Durning (Corn)
 Lawrence, W. F. (Liverpool)
 Lawson, John Grant (Yorks.)
 Lea, Sir Thos. (Londonderry)
 Lecky, Rt. Hon. W. Edw. H.
 Leese, Sir Jos. F. (Accrington)
 Leigh-Bennett, Henry Currie
 Leighton, Stanley
 Leuty, Thomas Richmond
 Llewellyn, Evan H. (Somerset)
 Llewelyn, Sir Dillwyn (Swansea)
 Lockwood, Lt.-Col. A. R.
 Loder, Gerald W. Erskine
 Long, Col. C. W. (Evesham)
 Long, Rt. Hon. W. (Liverpool)
 Lopes, Henry Yarde Buller
 Lowther, Rt. Hon. J. (Kent)
 Loyd, Archie Kirkman
 Lucas-Shadwell, William
 Macartney, W. G. Ellison
 Macdona, John Cumming
 MacIver, David (Liverpool)
 Macleure, Sir John William
 McArthur, Chas. (Liverpool)
 McArthur, Wm. (Cornwall)
 McCalmont, Col. J. (Antrim, E.)
 McCrae, George
 McIver, Sir L. (Edinburgh, W.)
 McKenna, Reginald
 McKillop, James
 Malcolm, Ian
 Manners, Lord Edward Wm. J.
 Marks, Harry H.
 Martin, Richard Biddulph
 Massey-Mainwaring, Hn. W. F.
 Maxwell, Rt. Hon. Sir H. E.
 Mellor, Rt. Hon. J. W. (Yorks)
 Mendl, Sigismund Ferdinand
 Meysey-Thompson, Sir H. M.
 Middlemore, J. Throgmorton
 Milbank, Sir Powlett Chas. J.
 Mildmay, Francis Bingham
 Monk, Charles James
 Montagu, Hon. J. S. (Hants)
 Montagu, Sir S. (Whitechapel)
 Moon, Edward Robert Pacy
 Moore, William (Antrim, N.)
 More, Robt. Jasper (Shropshire)
 Morgan, J. L. (Carmarthen)
 Morrell, George Herbert
 Morrison, Walter

Morton, A. H. A. (Deptford)
 Mount, William George
 Muntz, Philip A.
 Murray, Rt. Hon. A. Graham (Bute)
 Murray, Charles J. (Coventry)
 Myers, William Henry
 Newdigate, Francis Alexander
 Nicholson, William Graham
 Nicol, Donald Ninian
 Norton, Capt. Cecil William
 Nussey, Thomas Willans
 Oldroyd, Mark
 O'Neill, Hon. Robert Torrens
 Orr-Ewing, Charles Lindsay
 Parkes, Ebenezer
 Paulton, James Mellor
 Pease, Herbt. P. (Darlington)
 Pease, Joseph A. (Northumb.)
 Penn, John
 Perks, Robert William
 Phillips, John Wynford
 Phillipotts, Captain Arthur
 Pierpoint, Robert
 Pilkington, R. (Lancs. Newtown)
 Pilkington, Sir G. A. (Lancs. SW)
 Platt-Higgins, Frederick
 Plunkett, Rt. Hon. Horace C.
 Pollock, Harry Frederick
 Powell, Sir Francis Sharp
 Pretymann, Ernest George
 Pryce-Jones, Lt.-Col. Edward
 Pym, C. Guy
 Quilter, Sir Cuthbert
 Rankin, Sir James
 Rasch, Major Frederic Carne
 Renshaw, Charles Bine
 Rentoul, James Alexander
 Richardson, J. (Durham, S.E.)
 Richardson, Sir T. (Hartlepool)
 Rickett, J. Compton
 Ridley, Rt. Hon. Sir Matthew W.
 Ritchie, Rt. Hon. Chas. Thomson
 Robertson, Herbert (Hackney)
 Robinson, Brooke
 Robson, William Snowdon
 Rollit, Sir Albert Kaye
 Rothschild, Hon. Lionel W.
 Runciman, Walter
 Russell, Gen. F. S. (Cheltenham)
 Russell, T. W. (Tyrone)
 Rutherford, John
 Ryder, John Herbert Dudley
 Samuel H. S. (Limehouse)
 Samuel, J. (Stockton-on-Tees)
 Sandys, Lieut.-Col. T. Myles
 Sassoon, Sir Edward Albert
 Sanderson, Rt. Hon. Col. E. J.
 Savory, Sir Joseph
 Scoble, Sir Andrew Richard
 Seton-Karr, Henry
 Sharpe, William Edward T.
 Shaw, Charles Edw. (Stafford)
 Shaw-Stewart, M. H. (Renfrew)
 Sidebotham, J. W. (Chester)
 Sidebottom, T. Harrop (Stalybr)
 Sidebottom, W. (Derbyshire)

Simeon, Sir Barrington
 Sinclair, Capt. J. (Forfarshire)
 Sinclair, Louis (Romford)
 Smith, Abel H. (Christchurch)
 Smith, Jas. Parker (Lanarks.)
 Smith, Hn. W. F. D. (Strand)
 Soames, Arthur Wellesley
 Spencer, Ernest
 Spicer, Albert
 Stanley, E. J. (Somerset)
 Stanley, Sir H. M. (Lambeth)
 Stephens, Henry Charles
 Stewart, Sir M. J. M. Taggart
 Stirling-Maxwell, Sir J. M.
 Stock, James Henry
 Stone, Sir Benjamin
 Strachey, Edward
 Strauss, Arthur
 Start, Hon. Humphry Napier
 Sutherland, Sir Thomas
 Talbot, Rt. Hon. J. G. (Oxford Univ)
 Tennant, Harold John
 Thomas, Abel (Carmarthens, E.)
 Thorburn, Sir Walter
 Thornton, Percy M.
 Tollenmache, Henry James
 Tomlinson, W. E. Murray
 Trevelyan, Charles Philips
 Tritton, Charles Ernest
 Ure, Alexander
 Usborne, Thomas
 Vincent, Sir Edgar (Exeter)
 Wallace, Robert
 Walton, Joseph (Barnsley)
 Wanklyn, James Leslie
 Ward, Hon. Robert A. (Crewes)
 Warner, Thomas Courtenay T.
 Warr, Augustus Frederick
 Wason, Eugene
 Webster, Sir Richard E.
 Welby, Lieut.-Col. A. C. E.
 Wentworth, Bruce C. Vernon
 Wharton, Rt. Hon. John Lloyd
 Whiteley, George (Stockport)
 Whiteley, H. (Ashton-under-L.)
 Whitmore, Charles Algernon
 Williams, Colonel R. (Dorset)
 Williams, J. Powell (Birm.)
 Willoughby de Eresby, Lord
 Willox, Sir John Archibald
 Wills, Sir William Henry
 Wilson, John (Falkirk)
 Wilson, John (Govan)
 Wilson-Todd, Wm. H. (York)
 Wodehouse, Rt. Hon. E. R. (Bath)
 Woodhouse, Sir J. T. (Hudders.)
 Wylie, Alexander
 Wyndham, George
 Yervill, Marmaduke D'Arcy
 Yerrburgh, Robert Armstrong
 Young, Commander (Berks, E.)
 Younger, William

TELLERS FOR THE NOES—
 Sir William Walrand and
 Mr. Anstruther.

Original Question again proposed.

Debate to be resumed To-morrow.

Debate arising; and it being after half-past Five of the clock, the debate stood adjourned.

Adjourned at a quarter before
 Six of the clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Thursday, 8th February, 1900.

SAT FIRST.

The Lord Vivian sat first in Parliament after the death of his father.

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

ALIEN IMMIGRATION.

Return of the number of aliens that arrived from the Continent at ports in the United Kingdom in each month of the year 1900: ordered to be laid before the House (the Lord Churchill).

UNITED STATES (No. 1).

Convention between Her Majesty and the United States of America supplementary to the Convention of 19th April, 1850, relative to the establishment of a communication by ship canal between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans; signed at Washington, 5th February, 1900.

TRADE REPORTS (ANNUAL SERIES).

No. 2378. Portugal (Trade for the years 1897 and 1898).

SOUTH AFRICA.

Notice issued by the High Commissioner for South Africa, on 26th January, 1900, relating to forfeitures, etc., of property situated in the South African Republic or in the Orange Free State declared subsequently to 10th October, 1899.

Presented (by Command), and ordered to lie on the Table.

ARMY (MILITARY SAVINGS BANK).

Statement of amount due to depositors on the 31st March, 1898, and of the receipts, interests, and disbursements during the year ended 31st March, 1899, etc.

ST. LUCIA.

Regulation amending Rule 282 of the Prison Regulations, with respect to interviews between prisoners awaiting their trial and their legal advisers.

VOL. LXXVIII. [FOURTH SERIES.]

IMPERIAL OTTOMAN GUARANTEED LOAN, 1855.

Account for the year 1899.

Laid before the House (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table.

ALIEN IMMIGRATION.

Return (in part) respecting: Laid before the House pursuant to order of this day, and to be printed. (No. 8.)

PETITION.

VIVISECTION.

Petition for suppression of the practice of; of a Meeting held at Rushmere, Wandsworth Common; read, and ordered to lie on the Table.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—TELEGRAMS TO SOLDIERS ON SERVICE.

*THE EARL OF LICHFIELD: My Lords, I beg to ask the Secretary of State for War if he contemplates establishing a registered telegraphic address for each battalion or unit of our forces in South Africa; and if so, whether the scheme will be brought into operation at an early date. Your Lordships are aware, many of you from personal experience, of the great expense involved in sending telegrams to those who are at the front in South Africa. Each word costs 4s., and it is very difficult to make out a telegram to any friend at the front costing less than £2 for the address alone. It must be obvious that, under these circumstances, it is impossible for poor people to use the telegraph as a means of communication with our soldiers in South Africa; but if a system such as I have suggested in my question were adopted, no doubt many who have hitherto been unable to use the telegraph would be enabled, owing to the reduced cost, to avail themselves of it. I believe that if the noble Marquess the Secretary of State for War is able to adopt a system of registered telegraphic addresses, it will be possible to address a telegram to a private soldier at the front in two words—one giving his regimental number and the other the registered telegraphic address of his regiment. I am assuming that the words "Cape Colony" or "South Africa" would be included in the word representing the registered telegraphic address. If, further, there was a code word to signify "in hospital," it would be possible to address a message in three words to a wounded officer or soldier. I am quite sure that if the noble Marquess can see his way to adopt a plan such as I have indicated it will be greatly appreciated by the people of this country and by the soldiers who are fighting so bravely for us in South Africa. I would merely add that I hope, if any scheme is introduced, it will be as comprehensive as possible, and will include our Colonial contingents.

*THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR (The Marquess of Lansdowne): My Lords, my noble friend made this suggestion to me some weeks ago, and it certainly struck me as a most reasonable one. I was sure that all the Departments concerned would gladly co-operate in order to give facilities to persons in this country desiring to communicate with their friends in the field force in South Africa. I lost no time in communicating with the Post Office on the subject. The Post Office has considered it in conjunction with the Eastern Telegraph Company; a list of code words has been framed, and has been sent out to South Africa, and, I think, must have arrived there two or three days ago. As soon as the telegraphic authorities at the Cape have informed us, as they no doubt will do by telegraph, that they are able to accept the code, the new arrangement will come into force, and will be made known by the Post Office here. The procedure that will be followed will be this:—The senders of telegrams will continue to address them as they have hitherto done, giving the name of the person to whom the message is addressed and the full title of his regiment; but the telegraph authorities will translate that of their own motion into the code word. That will have the effect in the case, for example, of a regiment which has a long title of substituting for such long title a single word. The difference between the suggestion of my noble friend and the arrangement proposed to be carried out is merely this—that the translation of the address into the code word will be made, not by the person who sends the telegram, but by the telegraph authorities who transmit it to the Cape. I think that is certainly an improvement. As to the further suggestion that code words should be introduced as the equivalents of such expressions as "in hospital," I shall be glad to have it considered, but it did not form part of the original proposition.

*THE EARL OF LICHFIELD: I beg to thank the noble Marquess for the extremely satisfactory answer he has been able to give to my question; only I do not quite understand how under the scheme the sender is to know how much he will have to pay. I should have thought it would have been better to publish the code at every post office. I hope the press will take notice of the scheme and make it as public as possible, so that everyone concerned will understand how it will be put in force.

*THE MARQUESS OF LANSDOWNE: Instructions will be issued by the post office on the subject. When the sender delivers his message at the post office he will find that he is charged for the full title of the regiment as if it was condensed into one word.

SPION KOP—BOER TREATMENT OF BRITISH WOUNDED.

THE EARL OF CAMPERDOWN: My Lords, I rise to ask whether it is true, as reported in the newspapers, that after the battle of Spion Kop wounded Uitlanders and Colonial soldiers were shot by the Boers on the field of battle. On Monday last, a telegram from Durban appeared in several of the newspapers to this effect, and with your Lordships' permission I will read the version of the telegram which appeared in the Standard. It was as follows—

"The wounded soldiers here (Durban) say that the Boers showed a marked vindictiveness against the colonial troops during the fighting at Spion Kop, even going so far as to kill, in cold blood, numbers of their wounded. This barbarous conduct accounts, it is said, for the exceedingly heavy losses sustained by Thorneycroft's Mounted Infantry and the Imperial Light Infantry. Some of the Regulars even gave their regimental badges to their colonial comrades, in order to save their lives, should they happen to be left on the field."

Of course, it is possible, and I hope it is the fact, that the statement is not well founded, but if it is well founded a very barbarous crime has been committed. We must remember who these colonials and Uitlanders are. The two corps which have been mentioned—Thorneycroft's Mounted Infantry and the Imperial

Light Infantry—are mainly composed of Natalians and Cape Colonists, whose country has been invaded and whose property has been looted, and they have as good a right, and, indeed, a much better right to fight in defence of their country than the Boers have to invade it. As I say, I hope the statement I have quoted is not correct. One is glad to think that some of the statements reflecting upon the Boers have been found, on further examination, to be inaccurate; on the other hand, some of the statements to their prejudice, such, for instance, as wanton looting of property in Natal and compelling Englishmen resident in the Free State to fight against this country, are, unfortunately, only too true. I wish to ask the noble Marquess the Secretary of State for War whether he can give us any information on the subject, and, if not, whether he will cause, at the proper time, inquiries to be made into the matter.

*THE MARQUESS OF LANSDOWNE: My Lords, we have no corroboration of the extremely painful story to which my noble friend has referred. I suggest to him that the better course will be to wait until we receive, as I have no doubt we shall, a despatch giving an account of this particular engagement, and should there then be any confirmation of this sinister rumour, it will be our business to make further inquiries.

LORD WENLOCK: Might I ask the noble Marquess if it is true that the Colonial troops are dressed differently to the Imperial troops?

*THE MARQUESS OF LANSDOWNE: I fancy they are all dressed in khaki, but whether there is any distinguishing mark between the two I cannot say.

House adjourned at a quarter before Five of the clock, till To-morrow, half-past Ten of the clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Thursday, 8th February, 1900.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

LLANDRINDOD WELLS WATER BILL.

Ordered, That the Examiners have leave to examine the Llandrindod Wells

Water, Petition for Bill, as to whether the Standing Orders have or have not been complied with, provided that notice of such examination shall have been once previously published in a newspaper published in the district, and in the London Gazette.

Ordered, That Memorials complaining of non-compliance with the Standing Orders shall be deposited in the Private Bill Office three clear days before the day appointed for the examination of the Petition.—(The Chairman of Ways and Means.)

METROPOLITAN POLICE PROVISIONAL ORDER.

Bill to confirm a Provisional Order made by one of Her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, under the Metropolitan Police Act, 1886, and the Metropolitan Police Courts Act, 1897, relating to lands in the parishes of St. Mary Stratford Bow, East Molesey, and Clerkenwell, ordered to be brought in by Mr. Jesse Collings and Secretary Sir Matthew White Ridley.

METROPOLITAN POLICE PROVISIONAL ORDER BILL.

"To confirm a Provisional Order made by one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, under the Metropolitan Police Act, 1886, and the Metropolitan Police Courts Act, 1897, relating to lands in the parishes of St. Mary Stratford Bow, East Molesey, and Clerkenwell," presented accordingly, and read the first time; to be referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, and to be printed. [Bill 70.]

PETITIONS.

LOCAL AUTHORITIES SERVANTS' SUPERANNUATION.

Petition from Blean, for alteration of law; to lie upon the Table.

RATING OF WOODLANDS.

Petition from Wirral, for alteration of law; to lie upon the Table.

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS TO CHILDREN BILL.

Petition from Hulme, in favour; to lie upon the Table.

TOWN COUNCILS (SCOTLAND) BILL.

Petition from Helensburgh, in favour ; to lie upon the Table.

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

ARMY (SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATE, 1899-1900).

Copy presented, of Estimate of the additional number of men and of the further amount required in the year ending 31st March 1900, in consequence of the War in South Africa [by Command] ; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 36.]

CIVIL SERVICES AND REVENUE DEPARTMENTS ESTIMATES, 1900-1901.

Copy presented of Estimates for Civil Services and Revenue Departments for the year ending 31st March 1901, together with a copy of the Memorandum by the Financial Secretary to the Treasury relating thereto [by Command] ; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 37.]

IMPERIAL OTTOMAN GUARANTEED LOAN OF 1855.

Copy presented, of Account for the year 1899 [by Act] ; to lie upon the Table.

PAPER LAID UPON THE TABLE BY THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE.

Bank of England.—Copy of all applications made by the First Lord of the Treasury and the Chancellor of the Exchequer to the Governor and Deputy Governor of the Bank of England for Advances to Government authorised by Parliament, from 5th January, 1899, to 5th January, 1900 [by Act] ; to be printed. [No. 38.]

Naval Expenditure and Mercantile Marine (Great Britain, &c.)—Return ordered, “showing Aggregate Naval Expenditure on Seagoing Force ; Aggregate Revenue ; Aggregate Tonnage of Mercantile Marine ; Annual Clearances of Shipping in the Foreign Trade ; Annual Clearances of Shipping in the Coasting Trade ; Annual Value of Imports by Sea, including Bullion and Specie ; and Annual Value of Exports by Sea, including Bullion and Specie, of various Countries, exclusive of China and South American Republics, but including British Self-governing Colonies, for the year 1899 (in continuation of Parliamentary Paper, No. 310, of Session 1899).”—(Sir John Colomb.)

EVENING CONTINUATION SCHOOLS.

Return ordered, “under administrative counties and county boroughs, of particulars with respect to the Evening Continuation Schools inspected for the year ended the 30th day of April, 1899.”—(Mr. Hobhouse.)

ALIEN IMMIGRATION.

Return ordered “of the number of Aliens that arrived from the Continent at ports in the United Kingdom in each month of the year 1900.”—(Mr. Ritchie.)

Return presented accordingly ; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 39.]

CIVIL CONTINGENCIES FUND.

Copy ordered “of Accounts showing—

1. The receipts and payments in connection with the fund in the year ended the 31st day of March, 1899 ;
2. The distribution of the capital of the fund at the commencement and close of the year ;

together with the correspondence of the Comptroller and Auditor General thereon.”—(Mr. Hanbury)

Copy presented accordingly ; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 40.]

QUESTIONS.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—BRITISH PRISONERS AT PRETORIA.

MR. S. T. EVANS (Glamorganshire, Mid): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War what is the number of British officers, non-commissioned officers, and men now prisoners of war at Pretoria ; and whether any and, if so, what steps can or will be taken in the event of Pretoria being besieged by the British forces for the protection of the lives of the British prisoners of war in Pretoria, in case of failure of the Transvaal food.

supply, and in case of the shelling of Pretoria by the British forces.

THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR (Mr. WYNDHAM, Dover): According to the latest return 2,283 officers and men are "missing." We have no certain knowledge how many of them are prisoners. The matter referred to in the second paragraph of the hon. Member's question must be left to the discretion of Lord Roberts.

EGYPTIAN GUNS AND STORES.

MR. WILLIAM REDMOND (Clare, East): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether any stores and arms belonging to the Egyptian Government have been despatched to the Transvaal, and under what authority.

THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS (Mr. BRODRICK, Surrey, Guildford): Six Maxim guns have been obtained from Egypt for Her Majesty's forces, with the consent of Her Majesty's Agent and Consul General and of the Sirdar. They will be replaced from this country.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL (Donegal S.): Were the guns removed with the consent of the Egyptian Government? That is the question.

[No answer was given.]

COMPOSITION OF THE BRITISH FORCE AT THE FRONT.

MR. BARTLEY (Islington, N.): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether he would state approximately how the 180,600 of our troops which, in the estimate of the Government, are expected to be in South Africa in the next fortnight or three weeks are made up—namely, how many are British and Irish, Regulars, Yeomanry, Militia, and Volunteers; how many have been raised in South Africa; and how many are from our colonies other than South Africa.

MR. WYNDHAM: The composition is as follows in round numbers:—Regular Army, 126,000; Royal Navy, 1,000; Militia, 9,000; Yeomanry, 5,000; Volunteers, 10,000; Colonial Troops, 26,000. Total, 179,000. I have left out odd numbers. The exact total is 179,846, of which about 20,000 were raised in South Africa, and about 6,000 come from other colonies. I may add that since I gave this figure to the House, it has been decided to send 17 additional battalions of Militia, and that 3,000 additional Yeomanry have been raised and will be sent out; bringing the total of Militia to something over 20,000, the total of Yeomanry to 8,000, and the grand total of forces of all kinds to about 194,000. Perhaps I ought also to warn any hon. Members who are not familiar with the conditions of campaigning that very large deductions must be made from the total numbers sent to find the total number at any time available in the field. But I have excluded all killed and missing.

SHOOTING OF BRITISH SUBJECTS COMMANDEERED BY THE ENEMY.

MR. BRYN ROBERTS (Carnarvonshire, Eifion): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether he will add to his inquiries concerning the men reported to have been shot in the Orange Free State for refusing to be commandeered, the query whether they are burghers, native or naturalised, of the Free State, and have been granted naturalisation, on the terms of their being subject to all the obligations and liabilities of burghers.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES (Mr. J. CHAMBERLAIN, Birmingham, W.): The Governor of Natal has been asked whether, assuming there was any truth in the report, there were any circumstances tending to exonerate the authorities of the Orange Free State. This includes the hon. Member's query.

ALLEGED SHOOTING OF BOERS AT DE AAR.

MR. SHEE (Waterford, W.): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War, with reference to the statement attributed to ex-Police Constable Sharp of the Blackburn Police, now a private in the 1st Shropshire Regiment serving with Lord Methuen, that, while that regiment was at De Aar, seven Boers and two Irishmen were taken out and shot, whether, as neither Lord Methuen nor any other commanding officer has made report on such an incident, inquiry will be made of him whether there is any foundation for such a statement.

MR. WYNDHAM: If the hon. Member will refer me to the authority on which this statement is attributed to Private Sharp I will make inquiries, if the statement affords any basis upon which a question to Lord Roberts can be formulated.

CONTRABAND OF WAR—RIGHT OF SEARCH—THE "HERZOG."

*MR. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Admiralty is he aware that the ship "Herzog" was detained by Her Majesty's ship "Thetis," and taken in to Durban on suspicion of carrying contraband of war; that there was on board the "Herzog" a large party of men professing to be an ambulance party; that these men were armed, some of their arms being in charge of the captain; that, besides these, there were some forty second-class passengers with no recognised status, affecting to belong to Geneva red cross societies; also that the "Herzog's" papers showed that among her cargo were numerous cases professing to contain macaroni, which there is reason to believe contained rifles; and that there were also large quantities of tinned provisions, coffee, boots, cyanide, and other things of use in warlike operations, most of them consigned to Mr. Potts, the Transvaal Vice Consul at Delagoa Bay, and others of them consigned to well-known Transvaal agents there; will he say by whom and in virtue of what authority the "Herzog" was released without any examination being made of her cargo or passengers by the Prize Court, and were Her Majesty's Government consulted with reference to the release of this vessel; and was the release of the vessel ordered by Her Majesty's Government; and if so, why.

*MR. BRODRICK: The "Herzog" was detained by Her Majesty's ship "Thetis" and taken into Durban on suspicion of carrying contraband of war. She was released by order of Her Majesty's Government, as summary search did not reveal guns or ammunition, and assurances of a satisfactory nature had been given by the German Government on behalf of the company she belonged to. No contraband was found among her cargo at Lorenzo Marques; the fact of members of an ambulance corps carrying revolvers would not disqualify them from claiming to be non-combatants. The officers of the British Army Medical Corps carry swords, and occasionally revolvers. It is not known that these revolvers were in charge of the captain.

MILITARY HOSPITALS.

DR. FARQUHARSON (Aberdeenshire, W.): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether his attention has been called to statements as to the defects in the military hospitals in Cape Colony and Natal; and whether he has any information which he can communicate to the House with a view of relieving the anxiety of those who have relatives or friends among the sick and wounded in South Africa.

*MR. WYNDHAM: In reply I will read selections from two telegrams on the matter from Lord Roberts and Sir Redvers Buller. Lord Roberts, telegraphing from Cape Town, January 22, 1900, 7.45 p.m., says—

"There is no real foundation for report reflecting on hospitals at the Cape. I am perfectly satisfied with all arrangements for reception and treatment of wounded. The quality of cooking was indifferent for first week; nothing more can be complained of, and this was rectified as soon as possible. . . ."

Sir Redvers Buller telegraphed to Lord Roberts, January 30, 1900, 10.50 a.m.—

"One of the Natal papers is attacking the management of the military hospitals, and, as some of the false and ridiculous statements may cause anxiety at home, I think it right to say that Mr. Treves assures me there is no possible ground for complaint, and that I may rest satisfied that all the medical arrangements are completely satisfactory to him. I pressed him if he could suggest improvement, and he said he could not. . . . I have given the matter every consideration, and can only express my admiration of the arrangements made by Colonel Galway and the Royal Army Medical Corps, and Mr. Treves assures me that he entirely agrees with me."

HAY CONTRACTS.

MR. PHILIPPS (Pembrokeshire): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury whether large quantities of hay for South Africa are being purchased in North and South America; if so, what prices are being paid; and what attempts have been made to buy similar hay in Great Britain, and what prices were offered.

*THE FINANCIAL SECRETARY TO THE WAR OFFICE (Mr. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS, Birmingham, S.): Large quantities of hay for South Africa are being purchased in North and South America. The prices at which contracts are placed are not made public. Tenders have been invited for British hay, but the prices at which home-grown hay has been offered involve a much heavier total cost on delivery in South Africa than is incurred for the American hay, while the hay itself is not so suitable for the purposes of the present campaign.

MR. T. M. HEALY (Louth, N.): Is it not a fact that large quantities of foreign-bought hay have turned out to be rotten?

MR. D. A. THOMAS (Merthyr Tydvil): Is not the freight on hay from this country less than from America?

*MR. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS: The total cost of hay is less when sent from America than when sent from this country. I have no knowledge of large consignments of hay from America having been found rotten.

MR. T. M. HEALY: I did not refer merely to American hay. Is it not the case that a large quantity of foreign-bought hay has had to be condemned by the authorities?

*MR. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS: I do not know of any having had to be condemned.

BOOT CONTRACTS.

MR. CHANNING (Northamptonshire, E.): I beg to ask the Financial Secretary to the War Office whether the War Office has obtained from Indian factories a large quantity of boots for the use of the troops in South Africa; what number of pairs of boots have been thus obtained; at what price they have been supplied, and at what prices Army boots, both hand sewn and machine made, have been contracted for this past year in Northamptonshire and other shoe manufacturing districts in England; whether very large tenders of boots have been made by English firms this past year, and only small orders placed with such firms on the ground of price; whether it was found that the Indian made boots supplied to Lord Kitchener's forces in the Soudan proved unsatisfactory, while English made wire sewn and riveted boots stood the campaign exceedingly well; and whether the leather out of which Indian boots are made is thinner, and therefore unsuitable for rough travelling in stony country; whether the Indian boots supplied to the South Africa forces were, before the decision to purchase, submitted to the usual examination of the Army boot inspectors in this country; and whether, in arranging for the present and future requirements of the troops, the War Office will take the proper steps to secure the soundest and strongest boots from approved English firms at a fair price, having regard to the increase in the price of sound leather and to the cost of British labour.

*MR. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS: In order to meet a very urgent demand 60,000 pairs of boots have been ordered from India, at prices equal to the lowest price paid in England. They could not have been obtained as quickly from any other source. Contract prices are not disclosed. The Indian boots supplied for the Soudan, as well as the English made wire-sewn and riveted boots, were found quite satisfactory. The Indian boots were subjected to the usual inspection in India, and were shipped thence to South Africa. Orders for boots have, during the past year, been placed at home with all firms offering supplies at reasonable prices. The offers declined were from makers whose quotations were much above the mass of tenders received. As a rule, the boots of the British Army are obtained from home manufacturers, but in a time of emergency, when immediate delivery is necessary, other sources of supply have occasionally to be resorted to.

MR. CHANNING: May I ask why these requirements were not anticipated in time to get the boots in England? Have not tenders for 300,000 pairs been issued within the past week?

[No answer was given.]

IRISH MILITIA REGIMENTS ON FOREIGN SERVICE.

MR. FIELD (Dublin, St. Patrick): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War, will he explain in what manner Irish Militia regiments who are stated to have volunteered for the Cape offered such service; whether the men were individually consulted by their commanding officer; and whether any opportunity was subsequently afforded to them of reconsidering their decision.

*MR. WYNDHAM: The mode of calling on Militia units for service abroad has been left to the commanding officers, who have received explicit orders to allow no pressure to be put on the men. It has been usual in the case of embodied units to ask the men on parade, in the case of disembodied units to send to each individual a reply-paid postcard. In all cases an opportunity is given to the men of reconsidering their decisions. The general officer, or an officer deputed by him, inspects the unit on parade before its departure and asks any man who does not volunteer to step out of the ranks and say so. Of this opportunity a few men have taken advantage.

YEOMANRY COMMISSIONS.

MR. BARLOW (Somersetshire, Frome): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War why it is that gentlemen who have only done a few weeks training in Yeomanry cavalry have been granted commissions as majors and captains in the Imperial Yeomanry and Mounted Infantry force, while Reserve officers with from five to eight years service in the Household Brigade and cavalry and infantry of the line are only given the rank of lieutenant.

*MR. WYNDHAM: The selection of all the regimental officers of the Imperial Yeomanry has been entrusted to the Yeomanry Committee, subject to the approval of the Secretary of State, and he does not doubt that they have made their selection in the manner most conducive, in their opinion, to the efficiency of the corps.

THE DEVONSHIRE YEOMANRY.

SIR CAMERON GULL (Devonshire, Barnstaple): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War will he explain why the Devonshire company of the Imperial Yeomanry has been notified that it will not embark for another three weeks, although it has been in continuous training for a month and has been very favourably reported on both by the inspecting officer and by the colonel commanding.

*MR. WYNDHAM: Transport is assigned for companies of Yeomanry on the application of the Imperial Yeomanry Committee; and the order in which the companies are taken rests entirely with that Committee. The Committee's requisition for transport for the Devonshire Company was received on the 29th January; but by that time all ships available for the carriage of horses had been appropriated for other companies and for the 4th Cavalry Brigade. No further horse transports can now be available till the 21st instant.

VOLUNTEER OFFICERS' COMMISSIONS.

MR. M'CRAE (Edinburgh, E.): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether the Government are prepared to introduce a short amending Act to allow Volunteer officers to volunteer for active service, and to permit of their services as officers being accepted, where approved, by the War Office.

MR. LEES KNOWLES (Salford, W.): I beg at the same time to ask the Under Secretary of State for War what is the provision in the Volunteer Act that disables Volunteer officers who are willing to serve Her Majesty outside Great Britain from being appointed officers in the regular Army by commission or acting commission, in the same way as gentlemen who are not Volunteer officers; and whether the acceptance of a commission or acting commission in the regular Army in itself binds the person accepting it to serve Her Majesty wherever called upon to do so.

*MR. WYNDHAM: It has been found possible to effect the object sought without an alteration of the Act. It was at first considered necessary to enlist officers as well as men in order to bring them under military law. The War Office is, however, now advised that the grant of a temporary commission will effect this object.

MR. LEES KNOWLES: Does that apply to Imperial Yeomanry commissions as well?

*MR. WYNDHAM: Yes.

OFFER OF A BATTERY, WITH MEN, BY MESSRS. ARMSTRONG AND THE COUNTY OF NORTHUMBERLAND.

MR. J. A. PEASE (Northumberland, Tyneside): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether Messrs. Armstrong, Whitworth, and Co. have at any time within the past six months offered to either the Imperial or Colonial Governments guns for use in South Africa, which have have been declined; if so, whether he can state the number and character of the guns offered, and why they were declined.

MR. WYNDHAM: In December last a battery of six 15-pounder guns, similar to those with which our field batteries are armed, was offered by Sir Andrew Noble for the use of the Natal colonial forces. This offer was transmitted to Natal, and a reply was received to the effect that the Natal colonial forces were at that time unable to accept the battery; at the same time it was asked that the offer might be kept open. Meanwhile, a further offer was made by Lord Grey, with the consent of Sir Andrew Noble, to send out this same battery of 15-pounder guns, manned by Volunteers, on behalf of the county of Northumberland. This offer has been accepted, and the battery is now being prepared for embarkation to South Africa.

SLEEPING HELMETS.

MR. BROADHURST (Leicester): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War if he is aware that on the recommendation of those acquainted with the South African climate some of our troops have been supplied with sleeping helmets at the instance of private donors; that such helmets are regarded as an absolutely necessary protection against pneumonia and other lung troubles; and if the War Office will cause all the troops to be furnished with them.

MR. WYNDHAM: The question of providing some head-dress for sleeping in is under consideration.

RESERVE OFFICERS' OUTFITS.

MR. BARLOW: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether by the regulations Reserve officers when called out for active service are entitled to a sum of £100 to provide their outfit; and will he explain why, seeing that it was published in the official papers that Reserve officers might apply for commissions in the Imperial Yeomanry, the War Office refuses to give these officers this grant of £100, so that although the Imperial Yeomanry Fund gives them £65, yet they do not obtain the full allowance prescribed by the regulations.

MR. WYNDHAM: A member of the Reserve of Officers if called out for duty is entitled to an outfit allowance of £100, but such officers of the Reserve as have joined the Imperial Yeomanry have not been called out and are merely volunteers for that corps. As such, they are not entitled to more outfit allowance than the other officers who have volunteered.

DELAGOA BAY RAILWAY.

SIR E. T. GOURLEY (Sunderland): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs if he will be good enough to inform the House who is receiving the traffic money of the Delagoa Bay Railway which belongs to the British creditors who built the line upon land assigned by Portuguese concession; whether he has considered the propriety of taking such steps as would protect the property and its revenues in the interests of British subjects, seeing that no award has yet been obtained from the arbitrators after ten years' consideration of the subject; has he received any explanation or reason why the award, which in the last session he assured the House would be delivered in October last, was not made, and has not yet been made; and is there any reason to believe that the Boer and Portuguese Governments have influenced the delay of the award in order that this English railway should continue to be made the means of transporting, for Boer service, volunteers and arms and munitions of war; and can he assure the British shareholders of the railway that some immediate effort will be made by Her Majesty's Government to protect their interests by insisting on an award being made without further excuse or delay.

MR. BRODRICK: The railway is in the hands of the Portuguese Government. Her Majesty's Government have been given no reasons or explanations as to the delay in the delivery of the award, nor are they aware of the cause of the delay, which they consider regrettable. They cannot interfere with the proceedings of the tribunal.

ROYAL MARINES—SEPARATION ALLOWANCES.

ADMIRAL FIELD (Sussex, Eastbourne): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Admiralty whether the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty have considered the inequality in the treatment of the Royal Marine forces, who have been landed with the Naval Brigade, in the matter of separation allowances as compared with the other armed forces in South Africa with a view to the removal of such inequality; will he explain why under present regulations the marines if married are deprived of the lodging allowance of 3s. 6d. per week when ordered for embarkation afloat, whilst the soldier's wife who is married on the strength of the regiment is granted separation allowance of 8d. per day with 4d. per day for each child; and whether the lodging allowance of 6d. per day now granted to the marine when married on shore can be continued in all cases when embarked afloat.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY (Mr. GOSCHEN, St. George's, Hanover Square): The question raised by the hon. and gallant Member is inherent in the conditions of service in the Royal Navy, and the regulations governing the allowances of the Royal Marines cannot be made throughout identical with those obtaining in the Army. No distinction is made between Marines when serving afloat, and when landed from one of H.M. ships for shore operations, as a portion of a Naval Brigade while still borne on ships' books, as in operations in which the services of the Marines are lent for a time as an adjunct to the land forces. When not borne on ship's books and serving with the Army, a Marine receives all Army allowances at existing Army rates. With regard to the last general question, I am not prepared to revise the scale of pay of the Marines after the concession which I was glad to be able to make to them last year.

SOLDIERS' EFFECTS FUND.

SIR J. LENG (Dundee): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War

what is the present amount of the Soldiers' Effects Fund; what has been the average sum by which it has been augmented during the last three years; and whether as the Royal Commissioners have reported there are still many hundreds of widows of Crimean soldiers whose claims have not been met, this fund can be applied for their benefit.

MR. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS: The present amount of the fund is £159,683, and the average sum by which it has been augmented during the last three years is £6,278. The fund is a diminishing fund, and is not available for cases of widows whose husbands did not die on service or within six months of discharge.

GOVERNMENT CLERICAL ESTABLISHMENTS.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether, in filling up the existing vacancies in the clerical establishments in the Royal Ordnance Factories, in the Army Clothing Factory, in the Type Writing Department of the War Office, and in the Army Nursing Service, the Secretary of State will endeavour to favourably consider the applications of the sons and daughters of officers of the Army and Navy who have been killed in action, or who have died from wounds received or from illness contracted whilst on active service, and whose families have been left in necessitous circumstances.

MR. WYNDHAM: The Secretary of State will gladly take these cases into consideration, where appointments are not reserved by Order in Council for public competition; but almost all the clerical appointments mentioned, except those for typists, are so reserved.

COAL EMERGENCY CONTRACTS.

MR. D. A. THOMAS: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Admiralty if he will state when and under what circumstances steam coal has ever been taken by the Admiralty on emergency contracts; whether the Government has notified foreign Powers that a state of war exists between the British Empire and the South African Republics; why none of the contracts for the supply of steam vessels' coals to the Government in times of emergency have been put into force during the past few months; and when he makes the proposed modifications in the present form of emergency contract, will he consider the desirability of securing the right to claim all the produce of collieries entering into the contract at the market price of the day during the period of an emergency, and of paying some small subsidy in consideration, as is now done to shipowners and owners of horses.

*MR. GOSCHEN: The answer to the hon. Member's first question is—In 1888 for the naval manœuvres. Since then the emergency contracts have not provided for the case of the annual manœuvres; the answer to the second question is in the affirmative; the answer to the third question is that the circumstances at the time did not render it necessary to draw coal under the emergency contracts—we have done better without them: in regard to the last question, care will be taken when new emergency contracts are made to consider every reasonable suggestion which is made, but the hon. Member will not, I am sure, expect me to say more.

MR. D. A. THOMAS: Is it not a fact that the Government pay a much higher price?

*MR. GOSCHEN: I do not think I ought to say much about prices.

THE EXPLOSION ON THE "REVENGE."

ADMIRAL FIELD: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Admiralty if he can give any information as to the cause of the recent explosion of cordite in the magazine of the flagship "Revenge" in the Mediterranean; whether the temperature of the magazine was abnormally high; whether the system of ventilation was defective; and whether any improvement can be suggested for reducing the temperature of magazines in which high explosives are stored.

*MR. GOSCHEN: An inquiry has been held as to the recent small explosion of cordite in H.M.S. "Revenge," and the whole of the evidence obtained has been referred to the War Office for the opinion of the Ordnance Committee. Until this has been obtained, nothing can be said as to the probable cause of the explosion. There is no evidence, so far, tending to show that it was due to high temperature, the temperature of the magazine not having been abnormally high for some considerable time before the explosion took place. During the summer the recorded temperatures were somewhat high. In reply to the last question of the gallant Member, steps are being taken to reduce the temperature of magazines in which high temperatures have been recorded.

CHIPPING RIFLE RANGE.

MR. TOMLINSON (Preston): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether the Government, in considering the question of providing additional rifle ranges, are also proposing to deal with that of improving the access to existing ranges, and whether, in particular, it is intended to encourage or assist the making of a light railway from Longridge, near Preston, to Chipping, in order to facilitate the use by Volunteers and others of the range at Chipping, on which a large amount of money has been expended by the present and the previous Government.

*MR. WYNDHAM: The question of providing additional rifle ranges is receiving the special attention of Her Majesty's Government, but the War Office has no knowledge of the light railway referred to.

MR. TOMLINSON: Will inquiry be made?

*MR. WYNDHAM: I shall be happy to pay attention to any communication addressed to me on the subject.

BASUTOLAND—NATIVE LABOUR.

MR. BAYLEY (Derbyshire, Chesterfield): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether his attention has been called to the speech of Earl Grey, one of the directors of the South African Chartered Company, at a meeting of the company on 14th December, 1899, in which he advocates the imposition of a hut tax of £1 per hut as an incentive to labour, in conformity with the practice which exists in Basutoland, and with the permission of the Imperial authorities, the establishment of a labour tax which able-bodied natives should be required to pay who are unable to show a certificate of four months' work; whether the Imperial authorities have been approached on this subject; and whether they have agreed to the labour tax as suggested by Earl Grey.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: The answer to the first part of the question is in the affirmative. In reply to the second and third I have to say that no proposals on the subject have been as yet placed before me by the company.

GOLD COAST—RAILWAYS.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies what progress has been made with the Government railway between Cape Coast Castle and Axim in the Gold Coast Colony; and whether he will consider the advisability of extending the system of State railways from the town of Winnebah to Acasu, Akropong, Kumassi, and Brandfordville, with a view of opening up to commerce the fertile plains in the hinterland of that colony and protectorate.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: No railway is being made along the coast from Cape Coast to Axim, but one is being made from Secondee to Tarquah, and will be completed in the course of this year. The question of making other railways is under consideration, and preliminary surveys have been made of two different routes to Coomassie, one of which starts from Appam, near Winnabah.

INDIAN EXPENDITURE COMMISSION.

SIR MANCHERJEE BHOWNAG-GREE (Bethnal Green, N.E.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India if he can inform the House when the Report of the Royal Commission on Indian Expenditure is likely to be issued.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA (Lord G. HAMILTON, Middlesex, Ealing): I understand from the Chairman of the Commission that it is expected that the report will be signed on the 14th of February.

INDIAN FAMINE.

SIR W. WEDDERBURN (Banffshire): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India whether his attention has been drawn to an allegation contained in a circular letter, dated 27th December last, from the Government of India to the local governments, to the effect that the people in the famine districts are extremely ready to throw themselves on the charity of the State, and to avail themselves of every form of relief; whether he is aware that this statement has excited surprise and dissatisfaction in India; and whether he will state the evidence upon which the allegation is made, and since what period it is suggested that this feature has developed itself in the Indian character.

LORD G. HAMILTON: I have seen the circular letter dated the 27th December to which the hon. Member's question refers, but I cannot accept his description of its contents without some important qualifications, and I am not aware that it has caused dissatisfaction in India. The circular suggests, as the result of practical experience and investigation of the relief system as now worked, that care should be taken not to allow the revenues of India to be expended for the benefit of persons who are not actually in need of it; but it further states that the Government of India fully approves the prompt action which has been taken to organise famine relief on a large scale, and that they share the anxiety of the local Governments that relief shall be made accessible from the outset to the people.

THE BROTHERS NATU.

SIR W. WEDDERBURN: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India whether the release of the Natu brothers is unconditional; and whether, in view of the conspicuous loyalty exhibited by the Indian people at this critical time, he will make a statement regarding the Natus which will satisfy the public that the measures taken in their case were prudent and necessary.

LORD G. HAMILTON: The answer to the first question is in the affirmative. I fully appreciate the loyalty exhibited by the princes and peoples of India; but I do not propose to add anything to the statement I have already made with regard to the recent detention of the Natu brothers.

WORKMEN'S TRAMS.

MR. LOUGH (Islington, W.): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether his attention has been drawn to the model clause which is now inserted in Tramway Bills to ensure a service suited to workmen; and if he would consider whether, having regard to the time that has elapsed since it was framed and to the general adoption of electric traction, the existing clause could be amended in respect of the lateness of the hour in the morning at which workmen's cars are provided, the number of these cars that must be run daily, and the amount of the fare charged; and, if so, whether the Board of Trade will undertake to amend the clause in these respects, or to provide a new one.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF TRADE (Mr. RITCHIE, Croydon): The alteration of a model clause in Tramway Bills is a matter for the authorities of Parliament, and not for me. I will bring the matter under their notice.

BUCKLAND MUSEUM OF FISH CULTURE.

SIR MANCHERJEE BHOWNAGREE: I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether, in view of the statement made to the deputation which waited on the Lord President of the Council and himself on Monday last that there was not sufficient room to accommodate the Buckland Museum of Fish Culture at South Kensington Museum, he would consider the advisability of removing it to the branch museum at Bethnal Green.

MR. RITCHIE: Bethnal Green would hardly seem to be a particularly convenient and accessible situation for the Buckland Museum of Fish Culture; but I will take care that the hon. Member's suggestion shall receive consideration, together with all other suggestions which may be made.

SECRET SERVICE FUND.

MR. PHILIPPS: I beg to ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer whether, in view of the fact that in each of the last three years a balance of money voted by Parliament for secret service has been unexpended, he would state the amount, if any, of the Vote for secret service that remains unexpended during the present financial year.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EX-CHEQUER (Sir M. HICKS BEACH, Bristol, W.): It would not be possible, without calling for accounts from the various Departments concerned, to state exactly how much of the total Vote for the current year remains unspent at the present time. But I anticipate that, at the end of the year, there will be only a nominal balance to be surrendered.

NICARAGUA CANAL.

MR. DUNCOMBE (Cumberland, Egremont): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether England has relinquished all her rights under the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty in respect to the Nicaragua Canal; and, if so, what compensating advantages, if any, have been secured in exchange.

MR. BRODRICK: The Convention supplementary to the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty, signed at Washington on the 5th instant, has been laid before the House. There has been no question of compensation, the advantages in the former Convention relative to the neutrality of the canal, and the protection of commerce under conditions of entire equality, being fully maintained.

RUSSIAN LOAN TO PERSIA.

SIR MANCHERJEE BHOWNAGREE: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs if he has any information regarding the offer of the Russian Government to give financial help to the Shah of Persia with a view to pay off the Anglo-Persian Loan of 1892, and whether the offer of Russia has been accepted by his Majesty the Shah; and, if so, what are the terms of the offer. Will the right hon. Gentleman also state the full extent of the loan?

MR. BRODRICK: I have no further information to give respecting the Russian loan to Persia than that contained in my answer of Tuesday to a question by the hon. Member for Chester. Among the conditions of the loan as published is an engagement on the part of Persia to extinguish all its previous external obligations out of the proceeds of the new loan.

ZANZIBAR CUSTOMS DUTIES.

SIR CHARLES DILKE (Gloucestershire, Forest of Dean): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether any customs duties have been recently somewhat suddenly imposed on some and increased on other British goods imported into Zanzibar.

*MR. BRODRICK: On the 15th of September last a notification was issued by the Government of Zanzibar reimposing from and after that date a duty of 5 per cent. ad valorem on all goods, with certain specified exceptions, entering the port of Zanzibar. The exceptions were—coins, coals, hippopotamus teeth, ivory, rhinoceros horns and hide, rubber and tortoiseshell. The notification contained a proviso that goods, on which duty was not already charged, would, if at sea before September 15th, be admitted free. The notification was issued without previous warning.

ORPHAN HOMES OF SCOTLAND.

*MR. CAMERON CORBETT (Glasgow, Tradeston): I beg to ask the Lord Advocate if the orphan homes of Scotland are still compelled to pay school rates, while the children are refused the public education to which the homes have to contribute.

*THE LORD ADVOCATE (Mr. A. GRAHAM MURRAY, Buteshire): I understand that the orphan homes under the management of Mr. Quarrier at Kilmalcolm, to which I presume the hon. Member refers, are subject to the usual rates. The School Board of Kilmalcolm does not hold itself to be under an obligation to provide accommodation in board schools for the large number of children in these homes, in place of the school provision which was made for them up to last year in the homes by those responsible for bringing these children to the parish. The Department has offered, and is still prepared to entertain an application for, annual grants to a school conducted by the authorities of the homes, and if such a school were placed on the annual grant list it would be exempt from assessment in respect of its premises.

ELEMENTARY EDUCATION IN AGRICULTURAL DISTRICTS.

MR. HOBHOUSE (Somersetshire, East): I beg to ask the Vice-President of the Committee of Council on Education if any circular has yet been sent to the local authorities, directing their attention to the provisions of the Elementary Education Act which came into force on the 1st January last, and in particular to its effect on agricultural districts; and if his Department have issued, or intend to issue, any model bye-laws for adoption by local authorities who take advantage of the agricultural provision of the Act.

*THE VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF COUNCIL ON EDUCATION (Sir J. GORST, Cambridge University): Such a circular has just been issued. The circular suggests a form of addition to the bye-laws which, if adopted by the local authority, will carry out the agricultural provision of the Act.

SPECIAL REPORTS ON EDUCATIONAL SUBJECTS.

MR. HOBHOUSE: I beg to ask the Vice-President of the Committee of Council on Education how many copies of the excellent series of Special Reports on Educational Subjects, issued from his department, are distributed to educationalists in this country; if he is aware that in the United States of America public interest in education has been greatly stimulated by a free distribution of similar reports; and whether, if he cannot promise a free distribution, he will at any rate take steps to lower the price of the volumes, and to make their existence better known to the public.

*SIR J. GORST: Seven hundred copies of Volume I. and five hundred of Volumes II. and III. respectively were placed at the disposal of the Education Department for gratuitous distribution. Nearly all these have been distributed in this country. The answer to the second paragraph of the question is in the affirmative. The Committee of Council have no control over the price at which the volumes are sold.

MR. HOBHOUSE: What department will supply them?

*SIR J. GORST: The Stationery Office, which is under the control of my right hon. friend the Secretary to the Treasury.

"THE PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES"

MR. LOUGH: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury whether such Members as express a wish to do so can have The Parliamentary Debates bound in volumes instead of in separate parts in paper covers.

THE FINANCIAL SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY (Mr. HANBURY, Preston): Yes, Sir. I have made arrangements to have this done.

MR. JAMES LOWTHER (Kent, Thanet): Does that answer apply exclusively to the volumes for 1900, or will it equally apply to those for 1898 and 1899? The right hon. Gentleman will remember that the late contractor failed to keep his contract to supply hon. Members.

MR. HANBURY: With regard to last session, we bought all the copies the contractor had on hand, and these can be supplied to members.

MR. JAMES LOWTHER: And as to 1898?

MR. HANBURY: I can say nothing as to that.

INCOME TAX EXEMPTIONS.

MR. HOBHOUSE: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury if he is aware that the district surveyors constantly assess to the income tax small owners who are entitled to exemption, and much troublesome correspondence is required before they can get exemption or repayment; if he will direct the surveyors to be more careful in the future; and if he will extend to such correspondence the privilege of free postage, which is at present allowed to correspondence with the officials at Somerset House.

MR. HANBURY: It is the general practice of surveyors of taxes when once a claim to exemption from income tax has been established to see that the assessments on the property concerned be discharged for subsequent years, so long as the circumstances remain the same. The instructions issued to surveyors on the point are specific; and it is to their interest—on the score of subsequent saving of time and labour—to carry them out so far as possible. It is, of course, essential in the interests of the revenue that “small owners” should, in the first instance, adduce full and satisfactory evidence in support of any claims to relief. I will consider whether any steps can be taken in the direction indicated in the last paragraph of the question.

PROMOTION OF ABSTRACTORS.

COLONEL DALBIAC (Camberwell, N.): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury if he could state how many assistant clerks or abstractors have been promoted to the Second Division under Clause 15 of the Order in Council of the 29th November, 1898; in what office have such promotions been made; and the number of men promoted in each case.

MR. HANBURY: The total number of assistant clerks or abstractors so promoted up to the 6th inst. is thirty-six. It would not be possible to state the numbers promoted in the respective offices within the usual limits of an answer, but I shall be happy to give the information privately to the hon. and gallant Member.

ORDNANCE SURVEY STAFF.

SIR BARRINGTON SIMEON (Southampton): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Agriculture whether he has yet been able to lay before the Treasury any scheme by which pensions could be granted to the temporary civil assistants of the Ordnance Survey, after a service of a sufficient number of years; and, if so, whether he can state what answer the Treasury gave to his suggestion.

MR. HANBURY: The Board of Agriculture have submitted such a scheme to me semi-officially. There are, of course, serious objections in principle to granting pensions to men whose salaries have been based on the clearly-stated fact that they would not be entitled to pension; and even if those objections did not exist, I understand that the Board of Agriculture cannot name the particular civil assistants whose services will now be permanent. Permanency of employment is, of course, one of the conditions of pension rights.

SIR FRANCIS EVANS (Southampton): Is there no intention on the part of the Government to make this concession?

MR. HANBURY: Subject to what I have said, if it can be shown to us that the staff is of the same character as in other departments, we shall look favourably on the granting of pensions.

SOUTH WEXFORD POSTAL SERVICE.

MR. FFRENCH (Wexford, South): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether he is aware that the following changes in the postal system of South Wexford are urgently needed, viz., that a mail be run direct from Wexford via Murrinctown, Bridgetown, to Kilmore Quay; that the railway be used for the conveyance of mails to Drinagh and Rosslare; and that Kilrane, Broadway, Tagont, and Churchtown be served by a mail car from Rosslare Harbour; and whether he will order an inquiry into the matter with a view to making these alterations.

MR. HANBURY: The Postmaster General will cause inquiry to be made as to the practicability of adopting the changes advocated by the hon. Member, and the result shall be communicated to him in due course.

FOOT AND MOUTH DISEASE.

MR. CHANNING: I beg to ask the President of the Board of Agriculture whether the Board obtains from time to time information as to the prevalence of cattle diseases in other countries; whether the Board has any information as to the alleged recent prevalence of foot and mouth disease in Normandy; and whether information and warnings as to the prevalence of disease in other countries cannot be issued promptly in this country.

*THE PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. LONG, Liverpool, West Derby): Yes, Sir, we obtain from time to time all the information we can with regard to the prevalence of disease in cattle in foreign countries; and with regard to Normandy, we know that foot and mouth disease has rarely been absent in recent years from the northern departments of France. I scarcely think that any advantage would be gained by the adoption of the suggestion, the fact that the importation of animals from any particular country is entirely prohibited being of itself a clear indication that the country is a dangerous one so far as the possibility of the introduction of the disease is concerned.

COLONEL GUNTER (Yorkshire, W.R., Barkston Ash): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Agriculture if he is able to give any reason for the recent outbreak of foot and mouth disease in this country; and if it can be in any way attributable to the importation of foreign hay, straw, or other forage.

*MR. LONG: So far as our inquiries have as yet proceeded, no explanation has been obtained as to the origin of the recent outbreak of foot and mouth disease in this country. Nothing has been elicited which would point to the introduction of the disease in the particular manner suggested.

MR. CHANNING: I beg to ask the President of the Board of Agriculture whether a thorough investigation of the circumstances of the recent outbreak of foot and mouth disease in Norfolk will be made; and whether steps will be taken to secure the prosecution of the persons who concealed the outbreak.

*MR. LONG: We have been already making and we shall continue to make every possible effort to trace the origin of the recent outbreak of foot and mouth disease in Norfolk and if it should appear that any failure to comply with the requirements of the law as to the notification of disease has occurred action would be taken against the persons responsible.

SIR SAMUEL HOARE (Norwich): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Agriculture whether he can give any information as to the probable length of time during which it may be necessary to enforce the present restrictions on the movement of cattle in Norfolk; and whether he will consider some revision of the regulations with the view of lessening, so far as can be done with safety, the great inconvenience and loss which the farmers and the cattle dealers in Norfolk are experiencing owing to the present unfortunate outbreak of cattle disease.

*MR. LONG: The continuance of restrictions on the movement of cattle in Norfolk must necessarily depend upon the course which the disease may take, and I cannot therefore make any definite announcement on the subject. But I quite realise that the existing orders can only be kept in force for a comparatively short period, and with a view to meet some of the more pressing difficulties to which they give rise we passed an order yesterday, which is to come into operation on Friday, giving facilities for the movement of animals from one part of a farm to another, and from places outside the infected district into the boroughs of Norwich, Lowestoft, and Yarmouth. I may add that I fully realise the loss and inconvenience to which the hon. Baronet refers, but I have thought it my duty to make every effort to prevent the disease, if possible, from becoming epidemic throughout the country.

IRISH POOR LAW EXPENDITURE.

MR. J. P. FARRELL (Cavan, W.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that dissatisfaction exists amongst poor law boards in Ireland on the increase in expenditure forced upon them by recent rules and orders of the Local Government Board, including the dispensary rules and the orders regulating fees to be paid to clerks, doctors, and other persons usually employed by these Boards; and whether, as these burdens are daily becoming heavier, he will see that no further regulations of this kind are made by the Local Government Board.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL FOR IRELAND (Mr. ATKINSON, Londonderry, N., for Mr. G. W. BALFOUR): A few boards of guardians have expressed dissatisfaction with the new dispensary regulations issued by the Local Government Board, but, so far as the Board are aware, their recent orders and regulations have been generally accepted without disfavour by the local authorities. The charges referred to are not daily becoming heavier, as alleged in the second paragraph. There is no power to require the Local Government Board to abstain from making regulations which it is legally incumbent upon them to make.

MR. DALY (Monaghan, S.): Can the right hon. Gentleman state how many boards of guardians have protested against the increase of fees by the Local Government Board?

MR. ATKINSON: If the hon. Gentleman will give notice I will enquire.

IRISH ROAD CONTRACTS.

MR. J. P. FARRELL: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that since the passing of the Local Government (Ireland) Act and the creation of the new bodies it is almost impossible to get the roads made in consequence of the objections made by landlords and agents to admit road contractors to quarries formerly quite free to all; whether he will advise the Local Government Board to issue and order under seal empowering magistrates to appoint arbitrators for the owners in case they refuse to name arbitrators themselves; and whether he will advise the issue of a circular to magistrates directing them to so appoint arbitrators to fix the value of land to be taken for quarry purposes.

MR. ATKINSON (for Mr. G. W. BALFOUR): The Local Government Board have received representations from one county only—namely, Longford—complaining of the difficulty experienced by road contractors in obtaining access to quarries. The Board have no power to issue an order under seal for the purpose specified in the second paragraph. Under the 162nd Section of the Grand Jury Act of 1836, as adopted by Order in Council, magistrates can make an order authorising the contractor to enter and take stones and gravel where the same cannot be conveniently found elsewhere, and they are also obliged to name a householder as arbitrator in the event of the refusal or neglect of a surveyor or contractor to name one. It is the person in occupation, whether owner or tenant, who has power to appoint the third arbitrator. If he declines to do so, he cannot obtain compensation under the section. The answer to the last paragraph is, therefore, in the negative.

MR. J. P. FARRELL: Will it not bring the whole proceedings to a standstill if the right hon. Gentleman declines to issue the order?

MR. ATKINSON: Not at all.

THE WARDEN ESTATE, KENMARE.

MR. T. J. FARRELL (Kerry, S.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether any ejectment decrees were obtained at the late Kenmare Quarter Sessions by local landed proprietors named Warden against their tenants; whether he can state how many of the tenants proceeded against were judicial tenants, and how many, if any, were future tenants; and whether he can also say how many evicted farms are in the Warden estate.

MR. ATKINSON: The number of ejectment decrees referred to in the first paragraph of the hon. Member's question appears to have been four. The Government cannot undertake to advise as to the legal status of the tenants proceeded against, and it would be contrary to practice to furnish information of the nature indicated in the concluding portion of the question.

MR. FLAVIN: Is the right hon. Gentleman aware that this landlord has converted existing tenants into future tenants?

MR. SPEAKER: Order, order!

OGILBY ESTATE, CO. TYRONE.

MR. MURNAGAN (Tyrone, Mid): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland if he is aware an order was made in 1891 by the Land Judge's Court to sell the Ogilby Estate, in the county Tyrone, final notice and schedule being then served on the tenants; whether he is aware the tenants made application to the Court two years ago to purchase their holdings; will he explain why has the necessary valuation in response to the application not been made; and will steps be taken to hasten the sale of this estate to the tenants.

MR. ATKINSON (for Mr. G. W. BALFOUR): The estate referred to is presumably the Omagh, not the Ogilby estate. I am informed by the solicitors having carriage of the sale that the incumbancers objected to the sale being proceeded with in 1891. In February of last year, not two years ago, as stated in the second paragraph, application was made to the Land Judge on behalf of the tenants that the case should be listed under the 40th section of the Land Act of 1896. The case was accordingly listed, but the rental has not yet been finally settled. The case has been adjourned by the Land Judge until June next, before which date the solicitors hope the settlement of the rental will be completed.

EXTRA POLICE IN COUNTY KERRY.

MR. FLAVIN (Kerry, N.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord

Lieutenant of Ireland (whether he is aware that a petition was presented to the magistrates at Sneem (County Kerry) Petty Sessions in May, 1899, praying for the removal of extra police stationed in that sub-district; whether he has seen the copy of the memorial which was sent to him, signed by the local Catholic and Protestant ministers as well as others; and whether, as the magistrates in attendance approved of the petition owing to the peaceable condition of the district, any and what steps have since been taken by the Government to remove from the Sneem district the extra force of police stationed therein.

MR. ATKINSON (for Mr. G. W. BALFOUR): The reply to the first and second paragraphs is in the affirmative. There are no extra police at Sneem chargeable to the district. It is true there is a small force stationed there, but their employment involves no expense whatever upon the ratepayers, and it is not proposed to remove the police from the locality.

OUT-NURSING IN IRISH UNIONS.

MR. DALY: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that boards of guardians in Ireland have not the power of out-nursing children whose parents are in the workhouse; whether he is aware that out-nursed children become more industrious and useful members of society than if reared in the workhouse; and whether he will alter the Local Government rule and allow boards of guardians to out-nurse all children under their charge.

MR. ATKINSON (for Mr. G. W. BALFOUR): The answer to the first paragraph of this question is in the affirmative. The system of boarding out of pauper children is found to be advantageous to the children, if it is carried out under careful supervision. As a rule this method of providing for orphan and deserted children is found to be more satisfactory than maintaining them in the workhouse. Boarding out provisions are restricted to orphan and deserted children by law, and not by any rule of the Local Government Board. It would require legislation to carry out the change suggested in the last paragraph.

MR. FLAVIN: Will the right hon. Gentleman advise that legislation be introduced?

[No answer was given.]

STEAM TRAWLING IN WEXFORD BAY.

MR. FFRENCH: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that the following steam trawlers were discovered fishing in Wexford Bay inside prohibited limits, the "Pembroke Castle," "Acknora" of Milford, "Bournemouth" of Bristol, and the "Hydranca"; whether those names have been forwarded to the Inspectors of Fisheries; and, if so, why has there been no prosecution; and whether the Government will send a small gunboat to protect Irish fisheries.

THE VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE AGRICULTURE DEPARTMENT FOR IRELAND (MR. PLUNKETT, Dublin Co., S.): Perhaps I may be permitted to reply to this question. The cases referred to in the first paragraph were reported to the Inspectors of Fisheries and by them to the Irish Government, who were advised, after very careful inquiry, that there was not sufficient evidence to justify a prosecution. The question in the last paragraph should be addressed to the Admiralty, but I may say that the new Department of Agriculture will consider the desirability of having a special vessel to facilitate the protection of Irish Fisheries from the depredations of these trawlers inside the prescribed limits.

MR. FFRENCH: May I ask if it was impossible to find the owners of the trawlers discovered fishing in prohibited waters?

MR. ATKINSON: Perhaps I may answer this, as it is a legal question. Although the trawlers were found in prohibited limits, it is absolutely necessary before any prosecution can be undertaken to ascertain the names of the men on board in charge of the operations. It has been found impossible to obtain them.

MR. T. M. HEALY: Has not the same answer been given by successive Attorneys General for years? Have not the Admiralty always refused to give Irish fisheries any protection?

MR. WILLIAM REDMOND: Will the First Lord of the Admiralty take steps to send a gunboat to protect Wexford Bay from the encroachment of these foreign steam trawlers?

MR. T. M. HEALY: Or let us do it ourselves?

MR. GOSCHEN: I must ask for notice of the question.

CASE OF MICHAEL CURTIN.

MR. AUSTIN (Limerick, W.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland under what circumstances and for what reason the Crown at the Winter Assizes in Cork declined to proceed with the prosecution of Mr. Michael Curtin on the charge of being implicated in the poisoning of hounds in West Limerick; whether the resident magistrate who returned Mr. Curtin for trial gave no opportunity for him to be legally represented, and refused bail, although such was forthcoming to the extent of several thousand pounds; could he state what was the nature of the evidence offered upon which Mr. Curtin was detained in custody and committed to County Cork gaol for a fortnight; and, considering the circumstances, what steps will be taken to recoup Mr. Curtin for the expense he has incurred in providing legal means for his defence against a charge with which the Crown did not proceed.

MR. ATKINSON (for Mr. G. W. BALFOUR): Mr. Michael Curtin was returned for trial for this offence by Mr. John French, R.M., on the 28th November to the Winter Assizes at Cork, which commenced on the 1st December. There was no time in the interval to obtain an analysis of the contents of the stomachs of the hounds alleged to have been poisoned, and accordingly the Counsel representing the Crown, Mr. Matthew Bourke, Q.C., directed that a bill should not be sent up to the Grand Jury, and that the accused should be discharged from custody. The evidence contained in the depositions disclosed a case of strong suspicion against Mr. Curtin, but was insufficient, in the opinion of counsel to justify putting him upon his trial. I cannot in reply to a question give the evidence in detail. Mr. Curtin was detained in custody for seven days, and the expenses of his witnesses, amounting to £17, were paid by the Crown. There is no foundation for the statement that the committing magistrate refused to give Mr. Curtin an opportunity of obtaining legal assistance. Mr. Curtin was arrested at 9 a.m., and his case was not taken up by the resident magistrate until the afternoon. He had ample time to obtain that assistance if he so desired. At the time of his arrest he was asked by the police if he desired to retain a solicitor to defend him, and replied in the negative. After the depositions had been completed Mr. Curtin asked for an adjournment in order to employ a solicitor, but his request was properly declined. The magistrate, in his discretion, refused bail. There is no fund available to pay the expenses mentioned in the last paragraph.

MR. FLAVIN: Can the right hon. Gentleman say whether the political action of Mr. Curtin at the last local government elections had anything to do with the prosecution?

MR. AUSTIN: What course does the Crown propose to take with regard to the witnesses who were examined before the resident magistrate?

MR. ATKINSON: They will be examined again should there be a second trial.

MR. AUSTIN: Will they not be prosecuted for perjury?

*MR. SPEAKER: Order, order!

LIFFORD COUNTY COURT HOUSE.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that, on Monday last, Mr. Hardman, D.L., the High Sheriff of County Donegal, with a posse of the Royal Irish Constabulary under District Inspector Dagg, turned out of the county court house at Lifford a contractor and his workmen who were employed in making some alterations in that building according to the directions of the county council; and by whose directions were the Royal Irish Constabulary employed for this purpose.

MR. ATKINSON (for Mr. G. W. BALFOUR): The High Sheriff, as legal custodian of the county court house, applied for and obtained the assistance of the police, to which he was entitled, to resist the attempt of the contractor of the county council, without the High Sheriff's consent, to make structural alterations in what is claimed to be a portion of the court house, and which, if made, would in the opinion of the Sheriff interfere with the administration of justice. The plans of the proposed alterations are, I believe, to be submitted to the High Sheriff, and I have every hope that the matter in dispute will be amicably arranged.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: Having regard to these continual altercations between High Sheriffs and county councils, will the right hon. Gentleman bring in an amending Bill placing full power in the hands of the county councils?

[No answer was given.]

IRISH NATIONAL SCHOOL TEACHERS.

MR. GIBNEY (Meath, N.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland what provision is to be made to recoup the teachers of national schools in Ireland, and national education generally, for the sum of £78,000 handed over to the new Board of Agriculture in Ireland last year.

MR. ATKINSON (for Mr. G. W. BALFOUR): I am not able to make any statement in reply to this question at present.

CARRIAGE LICENCES IN DUBLIN.

MR. FIELD: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether, seeing that in the cities of Great Britain the revenue derivable from carriage and car licences is available to their respective corporations, he will take measures to have this system extended to the city of Dublin.

MR. ATKINSON (for Mr. G. W. BALFOUR): Hackney vehicles are placed under the control of the Commissioner of Police in Dublin by the Act 16 & 17 Vict. cap. 112, and Section 6 of this Act directs that the duty levied on these vehicles shall be applied towards the expenses of the force. The constitution of the Dublin Metropolitan Police is similar to that of the London Metropolitan Police, in which the same rule prevails as to the appropriation of receipts for hackney carriage licences. Moreover, in the case of neither of these forces is there local control. It is true that in other cities in England, where the control of hackney vehicles is in the hands of the local authorities, the revenue derived from vehicles is paid to these authorities for municipal purposes, but it must be borne in mind that in these cities a much larger proportion of the cost of the police is paid from local rates than is the case in Dublin.

MR. T. M. HEALY : Is it not the fact that since the right hon. Gentleman came into office the Irish Office have insisted on putting in a local Bill a provision affecting hackney carriages which has brought in an additional revenue of £700 a year ?

MR. ATKINSON : I must ask for notice.

LABOURERS' COTTAGES AT NEW-CASTLE WEST.

MR. AUSTIN : I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland if he could explain why the arbitrator has not visited Newcastle West to value the lands under the Labourers (Ireland) Acts, a scheme of cottages having been sanctioned by the Local Government Board inspector many months back.

MR. ATKINSON (for Mr. G. W. BALFOUR) : The provisional order confirming the scheme became absolute only on the 3rd ultimo. The maps and schedules for arbitration purposes were not lodged by the district council until the 19th ultimo, and after these had been examined the Local Government Board appointed an arbitrator on the 6th inst. The requisite statutory advertisements must be published by the district council before the arbitrator can hold his inquiry or value the lands.

IRISH AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT.

SIR T. G. ESMONDE (Kerry, W.) : I beg to ask the Vice-President of the Agricultural Department for Ireland whether his attention has been called to a motion adopted on the 5th instant by the Municipal Council of Dublin urging upon the Lord Lieutenant the desirability of transferring the control and management of the Science and Art Department in Ireland to the new Agricultural and Industrial Department ; and, whether he could inform the House if it is the intention of the Lord Lieutenant to exercise at an early date his own powers under Section 2 (1), (e), (f), (g) of the Agricultural and Technical Instruction (Ireland) Act, 1899.

MR. PLUNKETT : My attention has been called to the motion referred to in the question. It is the intention of the Lord Lieutenant to transfer to the Board of Agriculture and Technical Instruction, as from April 1st, the Science and Art Department's institutions in Dublin—namely, the Royal College of Science, the Museum, the School of Art, the National Library and the Botanical Gardens ; but the grants in aid of science and art teaching will continue, for the present, to be administered, as heretofore, from South Kensington.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN (Stirling Burghs) : I wish to ask the Leader of the House whether he can say anything as to the business for the early part of next week, and whether on Monday the promised statement will be made relating to the military forces. What other business is to be taken ?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY (Mr. A. J. BALFOUR, Manchester, E.) : The right hon. Gentleman assumes that the debate on the Address will be finished to-morrow, and I also assume it. I feel sure that the House will regard a fortnight all but a single day as allowing sufficient latitude for the debate on the Queen's Speech, and it is of the first importance that the House should at once proceed to that financial business which will no doubt occupy a very large portion of our time before the Easter holidays. If, as I hope, the debate on the Address is finished either to-night or to-morrow, my hon. friend the Under Secretary for War will, as soon as we have obtained certain facilities with regard to Tuesdays, proceed to introduce Supplementary Military Estimates, and make a full statement upon various questions of public military policy in which the country and the House are deeply interested. I shall also propose to submit the Supply Rule in its old form on Monday in the hope that it may be passed without serious debate; but if hon. Members indicate a desire to discuss it, then I would defer it for a day.

*MR. LOUGH: May I ask whether, in accordance with the promise given by the right hon. Gentleman last October, an opportunity will be afforded for the discussion of general questions raised by the Amendments to the Queen's Speech. Does not the right hon. Gentleman think more time should be given to these?

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I think that the hon. Member has misinterpreted what I said in October. I thought then that it would have been possible to dispense with the Queen's Speech at the beginning of the present sittings; but we had to arrange otherwise. Still, I think hon. Members will agree that the House has had a very full opportunity of dealing with the subjects in which it is interested. The war has no doubt absorbed a very large portion of time, and the reason is that the war is the topic—I had almost said the only topic—in which either the House or the country is interested. I hope, therefore, no objection will be raised to the conclusion of the debate on the Address at the time which both the Leader of the Opposition and myself are agreed should be the extreme limit.

MR. JOHN REDMOND (Waterford): Will an opportunity be afforded for a discussion of the financial relations between England and Ireland? I fear that if the course indicated by the right hon. Gentleman is persisted in we Irish Members will have no opportunity of discussing questions of vital importance to us.

MR. JAMES LOWTHER: May I suggest that an opportunity might be given for the discussion of other topics mentioned in the Queen's Speech after the House has heard the statement of the Under Secretary for War and disposed of essential Government business.

MR. WOODS (Essex, Walthamstow): May I point out that I have an Amendment down on the Paper which has never been discussed. It is one in which all Government workers are deeply interested, and I would suggest it would be only fair if the right hon. Gentleman allowed the debate on the Address to continue until Wednesday next.

SIR T. G. ESMONDE (Kerry, W.): Cannot a day be set apart for the discussion of the Catholic University question, if we agree to the right hon. Gentleman's proposal to end the debate on the Address to-morrow?

MR. D. A. THOMAS: Will the right hon. Gentleman give the House some indication of the intentions of the Government in regard to the question of the redistribution of seats?

MR. T. M. HEALY: If the First Lord of the Treasury meets the reasonable request of the Irish Members time will, in the long run, be saved.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I will answer as many of the numerous questions put to me as possible. It is a mistake to suppose that on the Queen's Speech it is expedient that everything which interests everybody should be discussed at length. If it were, it is manifest that the whole session would be occupied in the process. Of course, the Irish land question has always been with us, but the questions of financial relations and Irish University education has been recently very fully debated, and I should have thought that a comparatively brief discussion would have sufficed, or even that there need not be any discussion at all. There are two full nights before us, and I do not see why we should not get through some of the more important Amendments on the Paper before the end of the sitting to-morrow night is reached, and I suppose it will be expedient to suspend the twelve o'clock rule to-morrow in order that the debate may be concluded. As to the Government taking Tuesdays, we feel obliged to ask for privileges before Easter for financial business, and respecting the question asked by the hon. Member for Merthyr Tydvil, I may at once say that redistribution of seats before the general election is entirely outside the scope of the matters which are now interesting the House. The Government have not put it in the Queen's Speech, and they do not intend to introduce in the course of the present session any Redistribution Bill.

MR. JOHN REDMOND: I hope the right hon. Gentleman will not suspend the Twelve o'clock Rule to-morrow. There are one or two topics which are considered of great importance by the overwhelming majority of the Members for Ireland, and although we do not desire to have long first class debates on them we do think they should not be excluded from discussion, as it is quite conceivable they will be if the debate is closed to-morrow night. We have no desire to put off unnecessarily the statement on military affairs, but surely under the circumstances our request is a reasonable one.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I have given the House my honest opinion with regard to the real inwardness of the situation, and I cannot alter my view that I think the debate should end to-morrow night. Surely the hon. Gentleman can find by then an opportunity of discussing the topics in which he is interested.

ADDRESS IN ANSWER TO HER MAJESTY'S MOST GRACIOUS SPEECH.

[EIGHTH DAY'S DEBATE.]

Order read for resuming Adjourned Debate on Main Question [30th January], "That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, as followeth:—

Most Gracious Sovereign,

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Captain Pretyman.)

Question again proposed.

Debate resumed.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR (APPLICATION OF PATRIOTIC FUND).

*MR. KEARLEY (Devonport): It cannot be denied that two of the principal features of the present war which redound to the nation's credit have been the bravery of our troops—whether they be members of the Regular Army, the Navy, or the Volunteers—and the determination on the part of the public to endeavour by their generous contributions to make provision for the dependents of those who have been called to the front, and to succour permanently the widows and children of those who lose their lives. The amount of money that has already been collected for this purpose is undoubtedly large, and I am confident it will be increased. But, at the same time, the needs will increase, the strain upon these resources will be heavy, and I do not think they will be found to be adequate. I have, therefore, felt it my duty to call attention to existing funds subscribed by the generosity of the public for kindred purposes, which have available surpluses and accumulations which, in my opinion, ought to be applied to the needs of the present war. The spirit of generosity actuating the country at the present time is highly commendable. It is no new experience. The same has always manifested itself in times of war or of catastrophe. During the Crimean War the sum of £1,500,000 was collected, and resulted in the Royal Patriotic Commission being issued in 1854. Its object was, to quote the actual words of the Royal Commission, "to aid the just and faithful distribution of" the money subscribed. Her Majesty at that time appointed a body of Commissioners, and they were solemnly charged "to make full and diligent inquiry into the best means by which the subscriptions can be best applied according to the generous intentions of the donors thereof," and also to make it their duty and concern to "secure the most impartial and beneficent distribution of all such sums as may hereafter and from time to time be received." I have set myself to-day the task of endeavouring to show—and I think I can successfully show—how little the "generous intentions of the donors" have been respected and how the Commissioners have failed utterly to appreciate what was intended by a "just and faithful distribution." I would like at the outset to ask a question and supply the answer myself, and I think the House will agree with both. What is the intention of subscribers to such funds as are administered by the Patriotic Commissioners? My conception is that those who subscribe to a fund for a particular set of sufferers desire, undoubtedly, that it should be gradually but completely exhausted for their benefit. I think that is the motive which actuates everybody who subscribes at the present moment. I shall be able to show that that has not been the conception of the Patriotic Commissioners in dealing with the various funds which have been handed over to them, for their policy has been something quite contrary to that. They have not only disregarded the "generous intentions of the donors," but they have paid scant regard to the public opinion which has been raised against them time after time; in fact, their policy has been one of hoarding the funds entrusted to them. I do not think that there is a general knowledge as to what these funds are that are administered by the Patriotic Commissioners. Everybody appears to know of the fund which became associated with the Crimean War, but the funds administered by the Patriotic Commissioners are very numerous. They amount to as many as eighteen individual funds, most of which have been subscribed by the public for a specific set of sufferers, and in addition to that they control large and permanent educational endowments which have been set aside by them from moneys subscribed by the public to the original Crimean Fund. Now, I propose to examine some of the funds in detail, in order to criticise the method of the Patriotic Commissioners, and I date my examination back from 1881, for a reason which I will presently make clear. The first fund I will take is that of the original Patriotic Fund subscribed in 1854, or about forty-six years ago. The original amount subscribed was £1,500,000. There remains of this to-day £607,000, or about two-fifths of the original amount, which includes the educational endowments. Here I might say that the setting aside of sums of money from this fund for permanent educational endowments is contrary to the wishes of the public and to the instruction of the proclamation of the Queen which called the Commissioners into being. They had no more right to devote money to permanent educational endowment than would the Lord Mayor to-day have to build and permanently endow a school or institution from the funds now being collected under his ægis. From the moment the Patriotic Commissioners took that course they got into difficulties, and they had continued from then until now to bear the weight of their original sin. A Government inquiry was, however, held, and in the result they condoned that offence and passed an Act legalising the illegality. Now, in 1881 the capital, excluding the permanent education endowments, which amounted to £237,500, amounted to £481,000, and the liabilities on the Fund were to 2,306 widows and 303 orphans, and there was a surplus of assets of £62,000. I will pass now to 1896, and what do we find? The liabilities had fallen for widows from 2,306 in 1881 to 1,244, and for orphans from 303 in the former period to 16, while the surplus assets had mounted up to the enormous sum of £109,000, the capital remaining at practically £400,000. Over all this area of time the surplus was augmented, and over all the liabilities were naturally decreased. In spite of these facts, however, no attempt whatever was made to administer this surplus for the benefit of the poor persons for whom the Fund was originally subscribed. The next fund, which I will deal with only briefly, is the "Captain" Fund. It was subscribed thirty years ago, in 1870, the original amount being £40,000. Of this there is still £37,000 remaining. Now, when people subscribe to these funds they have a right to demand that they shall be exhausted for the benefit of the people whom it was sought to benefit. Let us see what happened. In 1881 I will tell you presently why I take 1881—the capital stood at £31,700. The liabilities were as to 109 widows and 77 orphans, and there was a surplus of £7,500. Last year, in 1898, that is, the number of widows had fallen to eighty, and all the children had disappeared; but the surplus had mounted up to £17,000. Now, no additional annuitant had been put on this fund of the dependents of those men who lost their lives in Her Majesty's ship "Captain"; and the terms of my Amendment are framed with a view to detaching these surpluses, and making them applicable to the present war. The next fund is that of the "Eurydice," which was subscribed to relieve the necessities of the relatives of those who were lost in H.M.S. "Eurydice," which went down in 1878. The original amount subscribed was altogether £19,000, £3,000 of which was devoted to the Royal Naval Reserve Fund, leaving the amount appropriated to the "Eurydice" Fund at £16,000. After the twenty-two years which have elapsed since the Fund was subscribed there now remains £15,100, or nearly the whole of the original amount subscribed. In 1881 the capital stood at £15,000. There were thirty-eight widows and forty-seven orphans. Moreover, the surplus, which in the first year was £930, stood in 1898 at £4,800. To-day the capital is £15,100, and there are receiving relief thirty-three widows and one child. The Zulu War Fund is the next I deal with, and it is in a similar condition. It was subscribed in 1879, the original amount being £25,500; and to-day it stands even higher than it did at its inception, for it amounts to £27,500. There are certain particular features about this fund that I would like to lay before the House, all pointing to the defective policy pursued by the Patriotic Commissioners in distributing this fund. It was considered to be a poor fund, and the Royal Patriotic Commissioners arranged originally that the widows of those who were under the rank of an officer, that is to say, of non-commissioned officers and privates, should receive no more than 3s. 6d. per week and 1s. for every child. A large percentage of these widows remarried and went off the fund. That took place within three or four years of the conclusion of the Zulu War, and this fund, supposed to be a poor one, showed a surplus of over £6,200 in 1883. The Commissioners then decided to raise the pensions of the widows of the non-commissioned officers. But here is a most curious fact which I would like you to consider, viz., that while the non-commissioned officers' widows had the increase, the allowance to the widows of privates was not increased. They continued to receive the 3s. 6d. per week and 1s. per child. Up to 1883 the surplus assets amounted to £6,200. In 1886, in spite of the increase to widows of non-commissioned officers, the figures went up higher still, and in 1889 the surplus increased to £12,500. At that moment the Commissioners were spending less than their income, and yet the pensions to the widows of privates remained the same. In 1892 the surplus had become further augmented to £12,600; and then, and then only, the widows of the most needy class of recipients received an increase on that miserable pittance of 3s. 6d. per week which they had been receiving for nine years. It was raised to 5s. per week, and 2s. per child. May I say, here, that these figures are not my own; I took them from the Patriotic Commissioners' reports, hence they cannot claim ignorance of these facts. The Royal Naval Relief Fund is the next. It was started in 1879; but it was not a fund to which the public had subscribed. It consisted of a sum detached from the "Eurydice" fund, of £3,000, and also a fund subscribed in relief of the sufferers by the explosion on board H.M.S. "Thunderer" of £2,000. Out of the original combined total of £5,000 there remains a sum of £8,000. Now the average expenditure of this fund has never exceeded £50 a year, though the total subscribed amounts to no less than £8,000. It is burdened with no more than two widows and two orphans. I pass on to the Rodriguez Fund, which will certainly require some explanation. It was bequeathed in 1857, and was the bequest of Don Francisco Rodriguez, of Manilla, who in a generous moment presented a large sum of money to this country "for the relief of the families of English subjects wounded or dying in the wars." The original amount handed over to the Commissioners in 1865 was £7,400; and there remains to-day of this bequest no less than £16,000. The fund has been hoarded all these years till it has reached that sum. Now, since 1863—when the fund was partially handed over—the balance being handed over in 1865—up to 1880 not a single penny was spent. Can anybody assert for a single moment that nobody was wounded or died in the wars whose necessities did not command alleviation in that period under the bequest? [AN HON. MEMBER: What about the indigent families?] The question seems to be whether or not the Commissioners were handicapped by certain conditions imposed by the trust. Certainly it depends upon the conditions of the fund; but I would remind the hon. Member that the Act of Parliament swept away all those conditions. Another bequest of a Greek merchant, Sir Constantine Zervudachi, is that known as the Zervudachi Fund, instituted in 1883 with the gift of £1,300. It has increased to £2,000; but not a penny was spent till the Parliamentary Committee held its inquiry, since when about £30 a year has been distributed. I now pass to a fund to which I have already made some reference in the course of my speech, one not subscribed by the public at all. It is the Soldiers' Effects Fund, being formed of the unclaimed balances of soldiers' effects transferred by the War Office under the Regimental Debts Act of 1863. It would appear that a sufficient number of persons eligible to utilise this fund could not be discovered, and it was said by the Commissioners, "we have had no application for relief," though its scope was of the widest character, including death by wounds in war, accident, and, in short, any cause attributable to service. The War Office was guilty of a grave dereliction of duty to allow money to pass out of their hands to be administered by a foreign body over whom they had no control. The first instalment was paid over in 1884 by the War Department to the Patriotic Commissioners. The sum was £44,000; in 1890 this had augmented to £93,000; in 1895 it had increased to £134,000; in 1898 to £155,000; and to-day, in reply to a question, my hon. friend mentioned that the fund had increased to £160,000. The income of the Soldiers' Effects Fund for the last four years has been £20,676, yet out of it all the insignificant sum of £4,513 has been spent, or practically only one-fourth of the whole. Sir, whatever may be the explanation of this hoarding up to the present time, for the future there will be plenty of beneficiaries who will require all the assistance they can get, in respect of the benefits they are entitled to. I have endeavoured, Sir, to set out these funds in detail in order to prove my case, and I submit that there are, firstly, available surpluses from many funds that cannot now by lapse of time be applied to their original purpose and that therefore they ought to be detached and utilised for kindred purposes; secondly, there are accumulations—I distinguish between accumulations and surpluses; arising from the fact that the uncharged capital has not been utilised at all. I ask if there is any justification for this policy of accumulation of these funds? Have there been any fettering restrictions? My hon. friend suggested that some are subject to restrictions. Now in 1881, as the result of the departmental inquiry into the maladministration of the Patriotic Fund, the Government expressly passed an Act of Parliament to enable the Commission to deal with all their surpluses as they might accumulate from time to time, and whatever justification they may have had prior to then, no valid excuse could be offered for all this continued hoarding, because the Commissioners had this Act of Parliament whereby an application could be made to the Secretary of State for War in order to make the surpluses available. But I would like the House to bear with me for a moment, while I examine the case as presented by the Patriotic Commissioners themselves. The Chairman of the Executive Fund of the Royal Patriotic Commission is a gentleman who bears an honoured name—Lord Nelson. He is the Chairman of the Finance Committee of the Royal Patriotic Commission. He did me the honour to reply in the press a few weeks ago to certain strictures I had passed on their policy, complaining of their delay in not having availed themselves of this Act for utilising their surplus funds. "Our answer is"—Lord Nelson states—"that we were continually applying to successive Governments to extend the power of the original Commission, but only obtained power to deal with the surplus of the Patriotic Fund in 1897." Well, what are the facts? Sir, no application was made to any Government until after the Parliamentary Committee was appointed, and yet the Chairman of the Executive and Finance Committee assures us that repeated applications were made to "successive Governments." The Select Committee was appointed in February, 1895, and it was not until April of that year that the Royal Commissioners showed a feverish anxiety to put this Act into force. The Secretary of State for War at that time was the present Leader of the Opposition, and in reply to the application which was made he said that he preferred to await the Report of the Select Parliamentary Committee appointed to inquire into and report upon the Patriotic Funds. In June of that year the Rosebery Government fell and Lord Lansdowne went to the War Office. A renewed application was made, which brought the following caustic reply—

Eighth Day.

Mr. Kearley.

Mr. Kearley.

"Whilst fully recognising the position in which the Commissioners of the Patriotic Fund are placed by the receipt of many deserving applications for relief, which the Commissioners are unable to afford, though possessed of ample funds, he could not consent to the proposal of the Commissioners, pending the report of the Parliamentary Committee."

So much for the excuse proffered by the Chairman of the Patriotic Commissioners for their delay. Well, now I will deal with the excuse he offers for the hoarding of these funds. He admits practically all my figures as to the surpluses, and he also admits there are large accumulations. But he meets us with the startling proposition that for certain of these funds, notably the "Soldiers' Effects Fund" and the "Rodriguez Fund," they are only indirectly responsible. Lord Nelson said—

"The Soldiers' Effects Fund is administered by us under directions from the War Office, and it will be for the War Office and not us to say whether the interest only or the capital is to be dealt with."

That was not true, for the War Office had nothing to do with the Soldiers' Effects Fund, which is administered and regulated by Royal Warrant; and if the House will bear with me for a moment, I will read the terms of the Royal Warrant which alone regulates its distribution. It directs—

"All residues and income and accumulations of income so to be paid over or transferred as aforesaid from time to time, shall form one fund to be called the 'Soldiers' Effects Fund,' to be under the management and control of the Executive Committee for the time being, of Our Commissioners for the time being of the said Patriotic Fund, but subject to and under such orders and regulations as may from time to time be made by Our said Commissioners, or any three or more of them, and shall be applied in payment of such compassionate, annual, or other allowances, to the widows and children or other dependent relatives of soldiers dying on service, or within six months after discharge, and generally in such manner for the benefit of such widows and children or other dependent relatives of soldiers dying as aforesaid, as the said Executive Committee, or any two or more of them, shall, from time to time, think fit, preferential consideration being given to the widows and children of soldiers on the married establishment, who—

"(a.) Were killed in action, or died of wounds received in action, or from illness which can be directly traced to fatigue, privation, or exposure incident to active operations in the field, within twelve months of sustaining such wound or contracting such illness.

"(b.) Died from an injury directly traceable to military duty within twelve months of sustaining such injury.

"(c.) Died from illness directly traceable to fatigue, privation or exposure in the performance of military duty.

"The widows and children of mobilised Army Reserve men dying as aforesaid shall be considered as on the married establishment."

As regards the accumulation of the Rodriguez Fund, Lord Nelson says—

"There were peculiar clauses which required legal definition causing some delay."

It is rather an extravagant excuse to say that there were legal difficulties and clauses which require definition in regard to a fund which was handed over in the year 1863, because those difficulties ought to have been discovered and dealt with long ago. I should have thought the Commissioners would have got rid of all those difficulties during the time which they have been hoarding up this fund. An explanation may be offered by somebody who will probably speak in this debate that it is the actuarial advice which governs the action of the Patriotic Commissioners in this matter. The Commissioners employ one of the most distinguished actuaries of the day, for he is a man well known and at the head of his profession. He is employed to audit their accounts, and possibly my hon. and gallant friend may attempt to explain some of these matters by saying that the Commissioners acted upon the advice of the actuary. But the actuary has no advising power in connection with the Royal Patriotic Commission, and he attempts to give no advice whatever. [An HON. MEMBER: Oh, oh!] I cross-examined the actuary myself before the Committee upstairs, and he assured that Select Committee that his position began and ended at this—that he gave no advice whatever, but when there was a specification handed to him setting out so many widows, so many re-married women, and so forth he made a report upon it. The Select Parliamentary Committee found that there were surpluses of £107,000 available, and accumulations of £160,000 which ought to be utilised. But notwithstanding this finding nothing has happened since except that the accumulations have gone on accumulating, and the surpluses have gone on increasing. They applied to the Minister for War for a supplementary Commission, which they obtained, but it was a mere sham and delusion. They set aside a surplus amounting to £110,000 of the original Patriotic Fund, on the pretence that they were going to utilise it. What has happened? It was set aside in 1897, and in the first year they spent £230 only. The next year this fund amounted to £117,000, and they spent £3,700. They have placed on the fund a number of aged and decayed widows, whose husbands fought for us in the Crimea forty-five years ago. To show the cruelty of this belated policy, let me ask the House to bear with me a little longer while I mention the ages of the pensioners who have just been put on this fund, and who ought to have been put on many years ago. I will take 362 recipients. Of this total 65 are of an average age of 70 years, 116 average 75, 117 average 80 years, 53 average 85 years, and 11 have an average of over 90 years of age. It seems incredible that these Patriotic Commissioners should have had the heartlessness to keep these poor old women out of the benefit of the money for so many years. They may argue that these poor people were not entitled to it at all, but I say that if the Commissioners had done their duty the fund would have been exhausted on behalf of those who were originally intended to be benefited. I would now like to say one or two words in the nature of a historical survey of the career of this body. The Patriotic Commissioners have entirely lost the confidence of the public, in fact they lost that confidence forty years ago. The Commission has been in hot water either with the Government or the public throughout the whole of its career. In 1881 a joint departmental inquiry was held, Sir Robert Hamilton and Mr. Lefroy being entrusted with it. After that inquiry Mr. Childers and Lord Northbrook came to the conclusion that the only cure for the Royal Patriotic Commission was to dissolve it, and they gave them notice to that effect, and they only afterwards escaped dissolution by the skin of their teeth. But even this did not reform them, and they never will be reformed. Let me remind the House what happened in 1893 in connection with the "Victoria" disaster. Then the nation made large contributions, and £70,000 was handed over to the Patriotic Commissioners in June. But not until the following November—four months after the disaster—did these Commissioners distribute a single penny, the delay being defended on the ground that other funds were being administered and they were desperately afraid of overlapping. We succeeded at that time in awakening public opinion. The amount it was originally intended to give to the widows was only 3s. 6d. a week, and the result of the agitation was that the pensions were nearly doubled. What explanation did the Commissioners offer? Did they admit the truth, that it was fear and fear alone of public censure which made them increase these pensions? No, they asked us to believe that the original allotment was purely provisional. I myself moved in this House for a return of the pensions they had allotted. They made that return on the lower scale of pensions, and, as I argued before the Committee upstairs, and as I repeat now, it was a most improbable thing that the Patriotic Fund Commissioners should have made a return to this House of a scale of pensions altogether different from that which they finally intended to allot. They had no intention whatever of fully utilising the Victoria Fund. They intended to hoard it precisely as they had hoarded other funds. Well, I am glad to say we secured a more liberal distribution of that fund, and I hope that the result of this debate will be that the other funds in the possession of the Commissioners will be similarly dealt with. After all, the question is, what is to be done? I have followed this matter since 1893, and I believe that nothing but Government intervention will rid the country of this abuse. It may be a question of reforming or dissolving the body—I care not which, though if I had my choice I would prefer that it should be dissolved—but there should be an independent valuation of the whole of the funds controlled by these gentlemen. When I speak of an independent I mean an actuarial valuation. I am not suggesting that Mr. Finlaison should not be consulted, but that the examination should partake of the character of that carried out by our great insurance offices. Let there be an investigation as to the liabilities and the contingent liabilities to provide for the beneficiaries, but do not let us go on year after year with these visible surpluses, especially when a time of national distress has arrived in connection with our losses in the present war, when every penny is required. I assert that if the Government will only carry out our suggestion they will find they can get at once from the Patriotic Commissioners' hoard a sum not less than £500,000, not including the £270,000 which unfortunately was handed to them by the Lord Mayor recently. It amounts to this, that there is practically within the grasp of the Government for the benefit of the widows and orphans of those who have lost, or may lose, their lives in the war, a sum larger than the amount subscribed to the Mansion House Fund. How can they afford to disregard this appeal? Can they offer the excuse that what I have said is not true? I have given details, and I hope I have convinced the House that a great scandal exists which ought to be brought to an end. Some of us have tried for many years to bring that about. The Commissioners are a most influential body. We are not attacking them individually, but those managing the fund entrench themselves behind such great names as the First Lord of the Admiralty, the Secretary of State for War, and the Governor of the Bank of England, who are Commissioners, but who take no active part in the administration of the fund. The fact is that the fund is managed by the permanent secretary and a small coterie, and that there is, therefore, maladministration. A letter was published the other day from Sir George Hayter Chubb in reply to something I had said, and it merely quoted the names of the distinguished men on the body, and asked, "What is the good of anyone attempting to suggest that this fund is not properly administered?" These great names make up what is called in financial circles a good "front page." The fund is not properly administered. A million of money is concerned; it wants proper control, and I hope the Government will now take steps in the matter. I beg to move the Amendment standing on the Paper in my name.

Mr. Kearley.

MR. BAYLEY (Derbyshire, Chesterfield): My first duty is to congratulate my hon. friend on the very able and lucid statement he has given in reference to the Patriotic Fund, and my second to associate myself with the view that perhaps the greatest trouble of our brave soldiers, who are in a difficult and trying position at the front to-day, is, if they should be killed or wounded to-morrow, what would become of those dependent on them? And I consider it is the duty of this House to do everything possible to make our soldiers' minds as comfortable as we can, and also the minds of their dependents at home—their mothers, wives, and children—who have a right to our sympathy, and who number hundreds of thousands. There is one fact not disputed in connection with these funds, and that is that they are badly administered, and not administered in a businesslike manner. That is a proposition which I believe anyone who has looked into the reports must acknowledge. My second proposition is that although we appointed a Committee to inquire into and report on this matter, practically nothing has been done, and what little has been done has not touched the real grievance. My third proposition is that a public duty attempted to be performed by charity has been an absolute failure. A few years ago the Colonial Secretary brought in an Employers' Liability Bill, whereby the dependents of any person killed or any person injured had a claim against the employer concerned. Why not apply the same principle to our soldiers and sailors when killed or wounded on active service as is applied to the soldiers of industry? That is a suggestion which I hope the Colonial Secretary, with his great power in the Cabinet, will consider and carry out. I believe it would be most popular in the country, and I am sure the Government do not desire that the servants of the State should be in a worse position than other employees. Doing this business by charity has failed and failed ignominiously, notwithstanding the great names attached to the fund, as these gentlemen do not give an hour's work to it, and cannot be expected to. I will give one illustration not mentioned by my hon. friend to show how the fund has been administered. I refer to the administration of the Balaclava Fund. A sum was subscribed for the men who survived the Balaclava charge. About twenty-three of them are alive now. The common-sense principle would have been to purchase annuities for these men; but nothing of the sort was done, and when the last man on the fund is dead there will be about £2,000 left. If the last man or the two or three last men went to a clever solicitor, and if the matter were brought into the courts, I believe they could claim every penny. The money was subscribed absolutely for them, and the Royal Patriotic Fund has neither a legal nor a moral right to keep the money from them. While I speak with the highest respect of the very honourable men connected with the fund, I must say they neglected their duty in allowing some of these men to go into the workhouse because they did not receive the money which belonged to them. I sincerely hope the Government will now go seriously into this question and settle this fund on the basis of the recommendations of the Committee of this House. I hope they will go further and relieve the anxiety of our soldiers, who are fighting well under the most difficult and trying circumstances with which the British Army has ever had to contend. I beg, Sir, to second the Amendment.

Eighth Day.

Amendment proposed—

"At the end of the Question to add the words, 'But we desire humbly to represent to Your Majesty that it is the duty of Your Majesty's present advisers to take immediate and effective action to ensure that the accumulations and available surpluses of various funds administered by the Royal Patriotic Commissioners should be applied for the benefit of the widows and children of officers and men of Your Majesty's military and naval forces who lose their lives in the war in South Africa.'"—
(Mr. Kearley.)

Question proposed, "That those words be there added."

*ADMIRAL FIELD (Sussex, Eastbourne): I feel it my duty to offer a few observations in reply to the hon. Gentleman, as a member of the executive committee of the "Captain" Relief Fund. The hon. Member for Devonport deserves much credit for the interest he has shown in the general administration of the Patriotic Fund, but when he says that the public have lost confidence in the Patriotic Fund Commissioners, I think the hon. Gentleman must bear a great deal of the responsibility for that want of confidence. He has brought charges of a very serious character against the Commissioners, and obtained a Parliamentary Committee of Inquiry; but the result of that investigation was practically to absolve the Commissioners from the serious charges brought against them. I have not much fault to find with the form in which he has brought forward his Amendment—

"That the accumulations and available surpluses of various funds administered by the Royal Patriotic Commissioners should be applied for the benefit of the widows and children of officers and men of the military and naval forces who lose their lives in the war in South Africa."

I think that suggestion is not objectionable, and might be fairly well entertained. But the hon. Member did not seem to have sufficient regard, in his attack on the administration, to the fact that many of those funds to which he alluded are governed by distinct trusts and conditions.

Mr. Bayley.

I am not competent to deal with all the funds, but only with the "Captain" Fund, for it was mainly at my suggestion that that fund in 1872 was handed over to the Patriotic Commissioners. It was handed over under a distinct trust deed, the terms of which were settled with legal assistance.

MR. KEARLEY: Does my hon. and gallant friend maintain that the "Captain" Fund is still subject to that deed? If he looks at the schedule of the Patriotic Fund Act of 1881 he will find that the fund was expressly scheduled there with many other funds, so that the surplus could be applied irrespective of the trust deed.

*ADMIRAL FIELD: It is possible that the surplus may be given to some other naval object. There is a provision in the deed that after every care has been taken to meet the claims of every widow and orphan who had a claim on the fund the balance should be handed over to the Royal Naval Relief Fund. This was, in fact, the first nucleus of the Royal Naval Relief Fund. Surely my hon. friend will not deny that it is necessary to make actuarial calculations when you have to deal with widows and children, and the actuary has to allow a considerable margin for epidemics of disease. I believe that the "Captain" Fund, as well as all the other funds, has been admirably administered. The hon. Gentleman stated that the surplus of the "Captain" Fund has grown to such dimensions that it now amounts to £37,000. But the hon. Gentleman forgot that that might be due to the wisdom with which the funds were invested. It was at first proposed to invest the whole of the "Captain" Fund in Three per Cent. Consols. I opposed that tooth and nail, and at my suggestion one-third was invested in New South Wales Government Stock, one third in Canadian Stock, and one third in Indian railways. These investments have largely grown. The pensions and scale of allowances to widows and children with a claim on the fund were based on the same lines as those applied in the administration of the Crimean funds. There must be some principle in the administration of every fund. The Commissioners are trustees for the subscribers, but I do not share the view of my hon. friend, who goes so far as to say that the funds subscribed should be used entirely for those for whom they were subscribed, without any reservation whatever. For if the nation were to subscribe an enormously large amount to a fund, as has been the case in the present war, it might be that the widows would be placed in the position of being infinitely better off than if their husbands were alive. My hon. friend is illogical, for by the terms of his Amendment he proposes to depart from the principle he has laid down, and to take away the accumulations of the old funds, and apply them to sufferers from the war in South Africa. I do not object to that, for I agree that it would be a very good thing if a reasonable amount of these surpluses were applied to widows and orphans of men who have lost their lives in the South African War. At the present time, however, I do not think the Commissioners would be justified in transferring the whole surplus of the "Captain" Fund to the Royal Naval Relief Fund. The hon. Member for Chesterfield may have possibly some ground of censure of the Patriotic Commissioners for undue delay in granting relief. I believe that that mode of administration has been remedied. I quite agree that immediate relief is necessary, even if it be only a small sum, until adequate inquiry has been made; but my belief is that the delay is caused by the enormous number of applicants, and it takes time to make the necessary enquiries. The Patriotic Fund Commissioners have worked laboriously and well, particularly the Secretary, who is one of the ablest men I have ever come across in administering charitable funds. The public mind had been unduly poisoned against the administration of the Fund. The hon. Gentleman expressed the hope that the fund would be transferred to the War Office. I trust that that will never be done, for the War Office has enough to do with its proper duties. In the present administration there is a most admirable machinery, tested by the experience of years. It may require some reform; then reform it by all means, and make it a perfect machine. It ramifies all over the country, and, with the aid of district paymasters and the Post Office, I do not know that the mind of man could much improve on it. If there be defects, let them be remedied; but do not let the hon. Member offer up to public opprobrium and scorn the efforts of men who have been labouring to do their duty to the nation and as trustees for the subscribers to the funds. I hope the hon. Gentleman will not press his motion to a division.

MR. GALLOWAY (Manchester, S.W.) said that if proof were needed of the necessity for reform, it was supplied in the defence of the Patriotic Fund Commissioners which the House had just heard from the hon. and gallant Member for Eastbourne. A paper had been issued, stating that the Commissioners were perfectly right in hoarding up their funds, as long as one person existed with a claim on the funds. That meant that the £220,000 subscribed to the Lord Mayor's Fund for widows and orphans in the present war was not to be touched so long as one widow or orphan remained.

*ADMIRAL FIELD: I do not go so far as that. Provided you leave a sufficient margin for the widows and orphans, I am quite willing that the balance should be transferred to the Royal Naval Relief Fund and the Royal Military Relief Fund.

MR. GALLOWAY said the hon. and gallant Gentleman held that the Commissioners had the confidence of the public. He denied that, and would show how that confidence had been lost. When the Lord Mayor opened the Mansion House War Fund, he announced that the money, except sums ear-marked for any particular purpose, would be handed over to the Patriotic Commissioners, and £220,000 subscribed was disposed of in that way. At the Mansion House Conference the whole question of the administration of the Patriotic Fund Commissioners was brought before the public, and the Lord Mayor took the right to deal with the funds as he thought fit. Since then, another £100,000 had been subscribed. Her Gracious Majesty, through the Home Secretary, suggested what was now known as "Queen's Sunday," and the result was that the magnificent sum of £60,000 was raised in the churches throughout the country. That money was dealt with by the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, and they expressly stated the objects to which they wished that money to be devoted. Amongst these objects was not found the Patriotic Fund. He maintained that the public had entirely lost confidence in the Patriotic Fund Commissioners. His hon. friend had suggested that the surpluses should be devoted to the widows and orphans of the soldiers and sailors who had fallen in the present war. To that no one would offer the slightest objection; but how were the surpluses to be applied in the future? He held that a very grave duty devolved on Her Majesty's Government in regard to these funds. At the present time utter chaos reigned in the administration of the various funds. There was overlapping in all the various funds, and the policy of the Commissioners had vacillated so much that he was at a loss to understand whether they had any policy of dealing with the widows and orphans of the present war. There was another fund in which the country had full confidence. The Daily Telegraph Fund was dealt with almost entirely on the lines of the hon. Gentleman who seconded the Amendment. The widows and orphans were provided for by purchasing Post Office annuities, and that was the only practical way in which the widows and orphans could be dealt with. He thought the Daily Telegraph deserved the highest praise for having come forward, at a time when something definite was needed, with their scheme, and for having got the money which would have gone to the Patriotic Commissioners if these Commissioners had had the confidence of the country. There were the Imperial War Fund and local war funds, and all these funds should be added to the surplus of the Patriotic Fund, the whole taken over by the Government and administered by the War Office, or somebody under the War Office, so that an end might be put to the absolute chaos which at present reigned in the administration.

*THE FINANCIAL SECRETARY TO THE WAR OFFICE (Mr. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS, Birmingham, S.): I certainly have no complaint whatever to make of the manner in which my hon. friend the Member for Devonport has brought this matter before the House at the present moment. He has always shown, if I may say so, a most intelligent and patriotic interest in this question, and has made himself a complete master of it. Undoubtedly at the present moment our deepest sympathies are enlisted on behalf of the widows and orphans of our soldiers and our sailors. I suppose there is nothing at the present time which is more deeply moving our population than the present war; and the generous response to appeals on behalf of our brave soldiers' widows and orphans is sufficient proof of it. But, Sir, in regard to the particular motion, we have to deal not with the past, but with the future, and therefore I shall not attempt to follow my hon. friend in the history of the Patriotic Fund which he has laid before the House. In some points I should not be able to entirely agree with the hon. Member, but for the most part what he has told us is substantially accurate. I am afraid that the course which the Patriotic Fund Commissioners have adopted for many years has not had the full approval of the public; but it must be remembered that they are trustees, and it is certainly true that they have only acted as they believed they were bound to do, as honest and honourable guardians of the money placed at their disposal. We may differ from them as to the methods they have adopted or as to the views they have held; but unquestionably they have been guided by one motive only, and that is the interest of the beneficiaries committed to their charge. At the same time I am afraid that public opinion about them is that they have conducted their operations very much upon the principles which are supposed to govern a very interesting bird called the magpie, who always hides the coin. Well, Sir, some observations were made by my hon. friend with regard to the actuarial advice, or actuarial calculations, by which they had been guided. Now, it is perfectly true that the results arrived at are very largely guided by the specification and by the circumstances of each case, and I do not follow my hon. friend when he says that there is very much room for error. When you have so many persons of such and such an age, receiving a certain weekly sum, it is not a very difficult calculation to make when you have the facts before you, and therefore I think that in all probability, in respect to what my hon. friend has said, the results which Mr. Finlaison has from time to time laid before the Patriotic Commissioners are practical results, and such as should guide them. For myself I think that all these funds ought to be administered on the same principle. I do not think that the corpus of one fund ought to be kept—unless there is an enactment to that effect—and the corpus of another fund distributed. It would be a good thing, in my opinion, if not only the funds which we are discussing, but every fund which is now being distributed, could be administered by one hand and on one principle. Great waste and much overlapping would be avoided if something of that kind could be brought about, and I think it would be a very patriotic and beneficial action if some influential person would take the matter in hand and get a body of persons together in whom the country and the contributors to the funds would have confidence. Administered thus on one principle it might operate for the benefit of the relatives of all soldiers and sailors who would ever come upon their country for support. In regard to the Soldiers' Effects Fund I would like to impress upon the House what my hon. friend behind me said—that it is a diminishing and a dying fund. It is largely made up of deferred pay, which is practically abolished, and therefore it would not be a matter for astonishment if, in the course of a very few years, it were to cease to exist altogether. But in regard to this fund we are tied down by the terms of the Act of Parliament. The Royal warrant provides only for the distribution of the interest and not the corpus of the fund.

Mr. Galloway.

*MR. LOUGH (Islington, W.): Does that apply to all the funds administered by the Patriotic Commissioners?

*MR. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS: No, only to the Soldiers' Effects Fund. My hon. friend made some observations as to the course taken in regard to that fund. He expressed his opinion as to the taking over of the fund by the Patriotic Commissioners. It was found that there had been overlapping in the relief of some individuals. It was also found that in all probability the Patriotic Fund Commissioners had means of information far wider and far more accurate at their disposal than the War Office possessed; and it was for this reason that it was thought desirable that the fund should be put into the hands that now administer it. Now, in regard to these matters, I would like to remind the House of what the position is. The Patriotic Fund was originally subscribed, as the House is aware, for certain widows and children of soldiers and sailors. There was, at the time of the new Commission, a certain number of widows and children upon the fund, and the actuarial calculation is that when the claims of those at present on the fund are exhausted the fund will have left in it only about £17,000. That is the calculation to-day.

MR. KEARLEY: Is the hon. Member referring to what is now called the Crimean Patriotic Fund?

*MR. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS: Yes. In respect to the persons for whom the fund was originally subscribed the surplus on the actuarial calculation is only £17,000 at this moment. But that is not an excessive sum to have to provide for contingencies. The actuarial calculations might prove inaccurate; the claimants on the fund might live longer than expected, and it is desirable that there should be some kind of surplus. [AN HON. MEMBER: Is that the face value in December, 1895, or the selling value of the securities in 1896?] I take the figures which the hon. Member has in his hand, the actuarial valuation of the securities, not their face value. When the new Commission was issued, under which not only widows and children, but other dependents of persons for whom the fund was subscribed, became entitled to relief—that is, not merely the widows of soldiers who lost their lives, but who only served in the Crimean War—it provided for the fund to be distributed, and a new fund was set up; and the Commissioners now annually transfer the surplus of the old fund to the new one. My hon. friend is entitled to this explanation that the new fund is not administered upon the principles of the old one. The old fund is being exhausted not only in regard to the income, but also as to the corpus, for the benefit of the persons for whom it was subscribed. With regard to the new fund, it is the income only which is being distributed. If I am asked to explain why, I do not know why there should be a difference of distribution between the two. I do not know why the new fund should be hoarded and the old one distributed. That is a point for the Commissioners. When all the claimants who are on the old fund have passed away there will not, in all probability, be a surplus of more than £10,000, according to the actuarial calculation.

Mr. KEARLEY said there was a very important point involved in this "passing away," and asked for some information as to its purport.

*Mr. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS: The passing away of the old claimants does not really matter. The answer of the Commissioners in regard to that is this: We have taken upon the new fund a little over 500 widows older in age, regarding them as the more deserving. But in addition to these 500 there are, we are told, 800 more widows who, under the new Commission, are entitled to the benefit of the fund, but who cannot receive it because the Commissioners had not the funds to give them relief. Now, the course the Commissioners take, therefore, is this: they only spend the income of the fund for the time being, because if they spent the corpus, the total of the new fund will be distributed over only a comparatively small number of recipients entitled to benefit. Now, I can promise that it is our intention, on behalf of the Government, to urge upon the Patriotic Commissioners not only that they should get a new valuation of their assets, but also to go seriously into the whole question. That is to say, that Lord Lansdowne will make a communication to the Patriotic Fund Commissioners, informing them that the terms on which their calculation is based have been challenged in this House, and so get the whole thing looked into in order to see that the calculations they make are based upon accurate figures. I think I may say on behalf of my noble friend Lord Lansdowne that we are prepared to go into the question with a view to seeing if any re-arrangement be possible of the methods governing the distribution, and the terms of the trust upon which the money is held. Under these circumstances I trust my hon. friend will not press his motion to a division, but will rest satisfied with this assurance that the Government fully realise the importance of this question and quite see the force of the criticisms which he has addressed to us in his able speech.

*CAPTAIN NORTON (Newington, W.): I do not propose to detain the House at any considerable length, more especially as my hon. friend the Member for Devonport has dealt so exhaustively with this question. I am sure that there is no man who wears the Queen's uniform who will not be grateful to my hon. friend the Member for Devonport for the vast amount of time and attention he has given to this question for many years past, and it is almost solely due to his exertions that the question comes before the House at such an opportune moment. Now, the hon. Gentleman the Financial Secretary to the War Office has made, in my opinion, but a very faltering defence of the Patriotic Commissioners. If we look into the past, how do we find that this body has done its duty? We find that they controlled a sum of one and a half millions, and they proceeded to deal with that sum by misdirecting the use of the money committed to their charge. They erected, amongst other things, a school without properly endowing it; they got into grave financial difficulties, and their conduct was inquired into by the Government. They endeavoured to minimise the surplus of the various funds, and after having taken into consideration every contingency they actually instructed Mr. Finlaison, their auditor, to arrange a sum of no less than £6,000 in addition to that. And I ask the House, therefore, in face of these facts, whether or not they have followed out the intentions of Parliament in regard to this matter—that is to say, to ensure the full distribution of the fund as expressed in the Acts. I say they have failed in their duty to the widow and orphan. My other point against them is this: that they seem to have been influenced by narrow sectarian motives. For instance, there were large numbers of men who were Catholics in the Crimean War. When they erected these schools (it was true they permitted Roman Catholic children to enter these schools) they were not availed of by the Roman Catholics as they might have been, for everybody knows that adherents to the Roman Catholic faith will go to great lengths to have their children educated in a Roman Catholic institution. Large numbers of these children were kept waiting for entrance into the various Roman Catholic schools, and when there was an outcry about the matter there was allocated a very small sum, out of all proportion to the number of children who were waiting, for their support. I now come to the question of the increase of the assets. The Commissioners acknowledge that for fifteen years these assets were constantly increasing, and it was only when they had accumulated to such an extent the Commissioners were shamed into doing it, that they consented to replace the re-married widows upon the establishment. Until 1895 they refused applications over and over again, and dealt with these poor widows in a narrow and highly regrettable spirit. As regards the Zulu War Fund, the corpus of which was something like £25,000, handed over to the Commissioners in 1879, that fund after a period of sixteen years stood at almost the same figure, and yet these Commissioners never increased the paltry sum of 3s. 6d. per week which was allowed to the people who were entitled to every penny of the fund. The Soldiers' Effects Fund has been dealt with, but I would point out that between 1885 and 1893, the surplus of that fund grew from £21,000 to £106,000. I know it was receiving constant support from the War Office, that constant accretions came in from the effects of soldiers dying intestate in the field, but what is the excuse of the Commissioners for not dealing with this fund? They had power under the Act to deal with applicants under three different headings. They dealt with them under heading (a), but they objected to deal with those under headings (b) and (c); because, forsooth, they were unable to relieve all the applicants they decided to relieve none. I think that fully justifies the mover of this Amendment in saying that they followed a policy of hoarding up. Then there is the Rodriguez Fund, which had an income of £508, and yet the demands never exceeded £104 per annum. As to the Victoria Fund, the Commissioners themselves were obliged to acknowledge that they had pursued a tardy and parsimonious policy. The way in which that fund was administered gave rise to a discussion in the public press and in this House, and had the pensions been continued on the original scale we have the actuary's statement that little more than 11s. 6d. out of every £ would have been expended. In fact, the Commissioners never attempted to administer the funds in the spirit in which the donors gave them until public opinion brought pressure to bear upon them. Their excuses as regards this particular fund were these:

Mr. J. Powell-Williams

that they had knowledge that local relief was going on; that the Admiralty were acting on the one hand; that the inadequacy of the pensions given to the different applicants was only a temporary measure; and that Miss Weston was at work locally giving relief to those who were in need of it. That is to say, they were in constant fear of overlapping. Could we have a stronger case for the whole of these funds being liberated, due provision being made for the present beneficiaries, than out of the mouths of the Commissioners themselves, when they acknowledge that they did not act up to their duty for fear of overlapping? In fact, because of the unfortunate jealousy which exists amongst those who administer these various charitable funds, as they are called. As regards the Royal Naval Relief Fund, it was established by Royal Commission in June, 1875, but no effort was made on the part of the Royal Commission to attract public attention towards it. There have been many cases where the widows of men who lost their lives while on duty or in the Naval Service might have been relieved by this fund, but they never came on to the fund because they had no knowledge of its existence. As a consequence, when the Royal Naval Exhibition had a large fund at their disposal they objected to hand it over to the Royal Commissioners, deciding to administer it themselves. They have administered it with very good effect and in the most satisfactory manner. In other words, the contention of the mover of the Amendment that the Commissioners have lost the confidence of the public has, in my opinion, been proved up to the hilt. There are two further important funds, as well as a number of funds outside the control of the Royal Commission, which we would like to see dealt with, inasmuch as the corpus of these funds amounts to £370,000. Our contention is that an enlargement of powers is wanted. But if an enlargement of powers is about to be given, is it right and proper that those enlarged powers should be given to a body which has manifestly failed to do its duty? I do not desire to make a vindictive attack upon the Royal Commissioners as a whole. On the contrary, I consider, with the one exception that they have not managed the funds in the way intended by the donors, that they have acted up to the letter instead of the spirit of the law, their affairs have been extremely well managed. They possess as secretary one of the most able and capable men for the purpose that could be found in the kingdom. Their position is that they have lost the support of the public at large, that they are damaging the interests and the welfare of the widows and children of our soldiers who may be killed in the present war, because large numbers of people who would give willingly to a fund for the purpose of assisting those people fail to give now in consequence of not being certain that the money will be managed as they would like. The policy of the Commissioners has been, as I say, if they cannot relieve all of a class to relieve none at all. What do we who take an interest in this subject recommend? We recommend that these Commissioners, if they are not abolished and reconstituted, if a completely new body is not constituted, should be brought into harmony with public opinion; that the new body should not be drawn from one particular class, but that in it there should be a sprinkling of the different classes who take a deep interest in the Army and Navy, that it should contain a certain proportion of distinguished non-commissioned officers and a certain proportion of distinguished business men, who will see that the matter is run on business principles. We would like to see the co-operation with this body of the naval and military authorities, and, above all, the co-operation with that body of the staffs of various other associations throughout the country. It is well known that through the want of publicity many women entitled to come on these various funds have not done so, simply because they were ignorant of their right. There should be local committees at local centres, and above all we contend that there should be a "token" vote in Parliament to enable the country at large to exercise some control over the vast funds which their fellow-countrymen have subscribed in the interests of the widows and children of soldiers who have given their lives for the country. This is a national duty. It is a duty which should not be left haphazard to a large number of societies here and there throughout the kingdom. Quite recently the country has subscribed to the Mansion House fund some £640,000, and to the fund of a London daily newspaper something like £115,000, while if you include all the other agencies which have collected money for the sufferers by this present war, you get a total of something like £1,500,000. If that £1,500,000 be added to the £1,000,000 already possessed by the Royal Commissioners, you have the magnificent sum of £2,500,000 available for the widows and orphans of the soldiers who may be killed in the war. The hon. Member for South-west Manchester pointed out quite recently that the Archbishops of Canterbury and York objected to hand over to these Royal Commissioners the money they had succeeded in obtaining—partly, perhaps, because of the danger of overlapping. I was glad to hear from the Financial Secretary to the War Office that he hoped there would be no difference made between the widows of men on the strength of the regiment and those off the strength of the regiment. I hope there will be as little difference as possible made, although, in the first instance, no doubt there must be some. After all, whether a man is married with or without leave, his wife and children are undoubtedly just as dear to him, and the least we can do for our gallant soldiers who to-day are fighting in the front is to give them the consolation that if they die in their country's cause those whom they hold near and dear will not be neglected. Unfortunately we have on record a very black page in the history of this country. There is no man who has read the life of Nelson but has blushed with shame to think that England's greatest naval hero had his dying request neglected by the nation, and that the woman he loved died in actual want and penury in a foreign land. I hope that no such cant will enter into any arrangements that are made for the soldiers at the front. If there ever was a moment when such an appeal should go to the hearts of Members of this House this is the moment. There are few Members who have not some relative or friend engaged in this conflict, in connection with which we are led to believe there is fighting now going on in almost every area of the theatre of war. It would be the greatest consolation to every man engaged in that struggle if he could feel confident and certain, not that money would be showered into these funds, but that the funds would be publicly administered by a body appointed by Parliament, that the funds would be controlled by Parliament, and that those near and dear to him would not suffer pecuniarily by his death.

Captain Norton.

COMMANDER BETHELL (Yorkshire, E.R., Holderness): There is a fundamental difference of opinion which, I believe, lies at the bottom of all our troubles, and I am sure it is reflected in the minds of the House, and especially in the mind of my hon. friend who moved the Amendment. The point is this: The minority of the Committee thought that fund for a special cause ought to be exhausted in the assistance of beneficiaries under that special cause. That is the view of the minority. The majority take the view that it would not be right, when large sums of money were contributed, to exhaust them in favour of the beneficiaries. It was felt that perhaps it would not be fair to others to put widows in a much better position in life than they would have been had they not, unfortunately, lost their supporters. That has been the difficulty with which the Commissioners have had to deal in giving relief. The public have got hold of the idea that the funds which have been supplied for the sake of special purposes, instead of being given to beneficiaries, have been hoarded. That is the fundamental question which the House of Commons ought to decide, and to instruct the Commissioners upon: whether, when a sum larger than is required for a specific purpose is contributed, it is to be expended in favour of those beneficiaries, or whether it is proper and legal that it should be hoarded up, put aside, and afterwards applied to some other special purpose. I expect the House of Commons will agree that it is better that the whole of the money should not necessarily be applied in favour of the persons for whom it was given, but that if there is too much money it should be put on one side and afterwards used for the benefit of others who may be more or less suffering under certain circumstances. The Committee recommended that the surplus funds should be lumped together in two classes, one for the Army and one for the Navy. In fact, if their recommendation had been carried out, I rather think that all that my hon. friend now wants would substantially have been obtained. At any rate, whatever the War Office do, they ought to try to grapple with that admitted fundamental question which I have submitted to the House, and to guide the Commissioners on that point.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY (Mr. A. J. BALFOUR, Manchester, E.): May I venture to make an appeal to the House on the subject of this Amendment. I am perfectly aware, of course, that this is a question which has always excited some interest—a good deal of interest in the minds of those concerned with this and analogous matters—but that interest sinks into insignificance compared with the public attention now devoted to this subject in consequence of the war, and the whole subject of the provision for the widows and orphans of those who are killed is naturally, and in my opinion quite properly, deeply engaging the public mind and conscience. I do not feel that I have enough detailed knowledge of the management of the Patriotic Fund, or of the controversy which has centred round that management for some years past, to be able usefully to give to the House any personal opinion. But I will undertake that some consideration shall be given to this matter, and not to this fund alone, but to the whole question raised by these great funds, to see whether by better organisation they may be so directed as to benefit those for whom they were intended in the manner which will produce the maximum of good. The public, both at the time of the Crimean War and on the occasion of the present war, have shown themselves generous beyond hope and expectation; and I verily think the Government and the House ought to give the public every assistance in their power for the purpose of securing that that generosity shall not be wasted, and that their efforts shall not be permitted to be fruitless. If that promise on my part at all contents the hon. Gentleman who has raised this question, I should certainly feel grateful in the interests of the business of the House that we should conclude the discussion of this particular subject as soon as possible. There are many important and interesting matters on the Paper on which a certain number of Members desire to speak, and I think, perhaps, it might be considered that this subject has been sufficiently debated.

*MR. LOUGH: Would the right hon. Gentleman say more definitely what is the promise he makes, because I would be glad as far as I am concerned to assist in bringing the debate to an end if the promise is definite and satisfactory.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: The promise I make is that the Government, or those who represent us, will do their best to consider with those who are responsible for the new funds and the old funds some method of general organisation by which those funds may be turned to the best advantage.

MR. KEARLEY: Will the Government give those who have some knowledge of these funds an opportunity of expressing their views? You would receive a plausible answer from the Patriotic Commissioners, I have no doubt, but I am afraid no ultimate good would ensue.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I shall endeavour, of course, to see that those who have knowledge of, and have taken interest in, this question shall have an opportunity of expressing their views.

MR. ALLAN (Gateshead): I will not occupy the time of the House for more than a few moments, but I desire to impress upon the First Lord of the Treasury that this is a matter he ought to take up. The real fact of the matter is that the Patriotic Commissioners are antiquated and altogether out of touch with the real and ostensible object of the provision of the money. There is no mistake about that when one remembers that this war has really been paid for by the wives and children of our soldiers. Men who were earning 25s. a week have gone to the front, and their wives are only getting now 10s., so that they are practically paying for the war. The First Lord of the Treasury ought to take the matter in hand in a strong and forcible manner, and clear out the whole of the Commissioners. They are absolutely granting pensions to the relatives of their own secretaries, and the Secretary of the job is now in South Africa receiving his pay, and at the same time drawing his salary from the Patriotic Commission. That is not right, and I hope the First Lord will deal with the matter in a business-like manner as a Scotsman would do, and settle the job properly.

*MR. LOUGH: I will not detain the House, but I want to address one more
Mr. Lough.

question to the First Lord, and if he makes a satisfactory reply I shall be glad if my hon. friend will withdraw the Amendment. This debate has been much too technical. The First Lord of the Treasury has, if I may say so without presumption, anticipated a great deal of what I was going to say. I will not go into the whole subject; I will only refer to the widows and orphans who will arise from the present unfortunate military proceedings. That is really the substance of the Amendment. We did not have a very satisfactory reply from the hon. Gentleman who replied in the first instance, but if I understand the First Lord correctly, I think he has met my hon. friend nearly as far as could be expected. But there was one point in the right hon. Gentleman's statement to which I must refer. He stated that the Government would take this matter in hand, and consider what provision it was proper to make for the widows and orphans; and then he added that they would discuss the matter in conjunction with specialists, or words to that effect. We fear that that means the Patriotic Commissioners. We have faith in the Government in the matter, but we have no faith in the Patriotic Commissioners. Perhaps I am not judging the right hon. Gentleman fairly. If he would go to the length of saying that the Government would consider the large and grave question to which he has rightly attached importance—that is, the grave question of the widows and orphans created by this war—and that when they have considered it they will make some statement, which I feel sure would be satisfactory to the House and to the country, I think the Amendment might be withdrawn.

MR. YOXALL (Nottingham, W.): May I ask whether the reference to this Departmental Committee, or to whatever authority the matter is referred, will consist merely or mainly of the provision for widows and orphans by private benevolence, or whether the right hon. Gentleman will undertake also that the question of making provision for the widows and orphans of soldiers and sailors out of State funds shall be fully considered. We ought not to depend upon eleemosynary efforts for the performance of this public duty, and I hope the right hon. Gentleman will add that subject to the reference to the proposed Committee.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: The motion on the Paper relates simply to the Patriotic Fund, and I have already gone beyond that. The hon. Gentleman wants to press me still further, but the matter to which he refers is really not relevant to this motion. Any inquiry we may make will be on the responsibility of the Government, and we shall get every assistance we can, not merely from the present trustees of the Patriotic Fund, but also from those who by their connection with the newer fund may be said to be thoroughly in touch with the country on the subject.

MR. KEARLEY: After the very generous promise of the First Lord of the Treasury I would desire to withdraw this Amendment. What I understand the right hon. Gentleman to undertake to do is this—that the Government will take immediate action to ensure that the accumulations of the various funds in the hands of the Patriotic Commissioners shall be applied to the benefit of widows and orphans—

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I think the hon. Gentleman must not press me further.

MR. KEARLEY: I think I must accept the promise as made, and, with the permission of the House, withdraw the Amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

HIGHLAND CROFTING COUNTIES.

*MR. WEIR (Ross and Cromarty), in moving the Amendment he had placed on the paper, said that, in spite of the strong expression of opinion in the Report of the Napier Commission against the diminution for the purpose of afforestation of arable or pasture area, according to two Parliamentary Returns—one in 1891 and the other in 1898—fourteen new deer forests had been created between 1883 and 1891, while between 1891 and 1898 the number had been increased by twenty-one, giving a total since 1883 of thirty-five new forests. While not desiring to interfere with pleasure or sport, he contended it was more important that the glens in the Highlands which were suitable should be used for supporting human beings than for herding deer. Instead of thousands of men being easily procured in a time of conflict such as the present, the glens were desolated and clear of human beings. From 1851 to 1891 the population of Argyllshire had decreased by 20,879, while the decrease in Inverness-shire during the same period was 10,055. The poor rate instead of going down had gone up. In 1852 it was £46,565, but in forty years it had more than doubled, the figures for 1892 being £94,697. It was highly important that this state of things should be investigated. A great deal was heard about going to other lands to redress grievances of so-called Utitlanders, but why were not the grievances of the people at home regarded instead of being ignored, especially in the face of the reports of Commissioners appointed to inquire into these very matters? Two Royal Commissions had stated that these lands in the Highlands were suitable for cultivation and occupation by the people. Instead they were used simply for deer. This extension of deer forests should be arrested. The Crofters Act did arrest it to a certain extent by giving tenants at will fixity of tenure, rents fixed by a commission or land court, and compensation for improvements. The number of applications for fair rents up to 1898 was 19,756; rents had been reduced from £80,373 to £58,910, while arrears of rent to the extent of £123,630 had been cancelled out of a total of £183,776. These figures show to what a vast extent robbery had been going on under the pernicious system which prevailed prior to the passing of the Crofters Act. Leaseholders have, however, remained in the same position as before the passing of the Crofters Act. He had appealed to the Government time after time to look into this question and give these leaseholders some consideration. The leases of these people were entered into when the prices of agricultural produce were high, with the result that the tenants were now unable to pay their rents, and were turned out of their homes. It was very hard that a person living on one side of the road should have the benefits of the Act, while another person on the opposite side of the road, simply because he had entered into a lease, should be debarred from those benefits. Moreover, was it fair that soldiers who went to the front, at a time of crisis such as the present, should on their return find that their families had been turned out of their homes? He sincerely hoped the Lord Advocate would give an assurance that at least the question as regards the leaseholders would be dealt with. The second part of the Amendment referred to the Deer Forest report of 1895, which scheduled 1,782,785 acres suitable for cultivation and occupation, but now used as deer forests. In 1898, the deer forest area had risen to 2,287,297 acres since 1883, and this in face of the Report of the Napier Commission recommending so strongly that no extension of the deer forest area should take place. In the same time there had been an increase of 35 in the number of deer forests. The total area in the crofting counties was 8,412,687 acres, while the deer forest area was 2,287,297 acres, or 27 per cent. of the whole acreage of the five counties. The cultivated land in these counties amounts only to 481,735 acres, whilst there are 1,782,785 acres now under deer suitable for occupation by the people. The hon. Member proceeded to compare this with the state of affairs in England before the Civil War. At that time there were 700 private parks; in England they had now been reduced to 300. In England these lands had been used for the purposes of the people; whilst in Scotland the people were cleared out and the land used for the purpose of creating deer forests. In 1812 there were only 5 deer forests in the whole of Scotland; at the present time there were 136 in the five crofting counties alone. When Sir George Trevelyan brought in a Bill in 1895 to settle the people on some half million acres of the land scheduled by the Deer Forest Commissioners the present First Lord of the Treasury, then in Opposition, said it was not a generous Bill, and that he wanted to do a great deal more for the crofters. But since the right hon. Gentleman had been in office nothing had been done to give effect to that wish. It was, too, a great injustice that the land should be allowed to go out of cultivation. In the report of the county medical officer for the island of Lewis last year it was stated that sanitary progress was much hindered by the lack of encouragement given to fishermen who were able and willing to build better houses if a site and a modicum of land could be obtained; while the Deer Forest Commissioners of 1895 were clearly of opinion that much might be done to effect an improvement in the existing state of matters as to holdings for fishermen. What had the Government done for the fishermen? He (the hon. Member) was not aware of a single house having been built since that report was issued. What had been done for the crofters by the Congested Districts Board? £62,000 had been unexpended of the money voted by Parliament, and only £1,451 had been spent in migrating the crofters and cottars, although the Act was mainly provided for the purpose of migrating people from congested districts to parts less occupied. The whole thing was a farce and a sham; it was simply trifling with the question. On national grounds it was of the utmost importance that the Highland people should be settled in the Highland glens. In a great war the effect of the present condition of things would be felt; it was felt now. The Highland regiments must be filled up, but they cannot be with Highlanders. Highlanders are a martial people. It was not necessary to refer to the many glorious victories won by Highlanders. Surely the Highland soldiers, when they returned from the war maimed and crippled for life, as many would return from this South African War, should be able to settle in their old homes for the rest of their days, and not be liable to be turned out by some grasping landlord. If the Lord Advocate is not prepared to deal with the whole question, surely he should have no difficulty in carrying a short Bill to give small crofter tenants, who in 1886 were leaseholders, the benefits of the Crofters Act.

Amendment proposed—

"At the end of the Question, to add the words, 'But we humbly represent to Your Majesty that in view of the continued increase in the deer forest area in the Highland crofting counties, it is desirable, in order to prevent a still further depopulation of the Highlands, that the benefits of the Crofters Act, 1886, should be extended to all crofter tenants holding under lease at the time of the passing of the Act; and we regret to observe that there is no indication in Your Majesty's Speech that arrangements will be made for the settling of Highland crofters, cottars, and fishermen on some portion of the 1,782,785 acres of land which in March, 1895, Your Majesty's Commissioners scheduled as deer forests, grouse moors, etc., which might be cultivated to profit, or otherwise advantageously occupied by crofters or small tenants.'—(Mr. Weir.)

Mr. Weir.

Question proposed, "That those words be there added."

*MR. HEDDERWICK (Wick Burghs): The matter introduced by my hon. friend is in my opinion of importance not only to the Highlands but to the State, and that is my reason for occupying the time of the House in seconding the Amendment. The Crofters Act of 1886 conferred very great benefits on those people in the Highlands who came within the limits of its operations. I have often in my own mind contrasted the condition of the crofter of to-day with the condition of the artisan in any one of our great towns. Unlike the workman in the town, the crofter breathes the fresh air of heaven; he lives in a better moral atmosphere; he is surrounded by the sweet influences of nature; he is not summoned to a monotonous labour by the clang of the factory bell. He is master of his own circumstances. He is not liable to be dismissed at the caprice of an employer, or in consequence of fluctuation of trade. Secure in his croft, he enjoys the fruits of his toil without fear of molestation. These are inestimable blessings. It is not surprising therefore that those of us who are familiar with the improved condition of the crofter under the Act should be anxious to see the same advantages extended to others who are equally deserving, but as yet without the pale. I confess I have no hope of obtaining in the present session, or indeed from this Government at all such an extension of the Act. To effect such a change a fresh effort of legislation would be required, and it is obvious from the programme which has been laid before us that this is not to be expected. Therefore I regard the first part of this Amendment as scarcely practical. At the same time I agree with my hon. friend in the advisability of the extension. The second part of the Amendment, however, is really and entirely practical, dealing as it does with the desirability of doing something to settle the crofters in the Highlands upon some portion of the millions of acres which were reported by the Commission of 1895 to be capable of cultivation by crofters. In that connection I may remind the Lord Advocate that the Commission which sat under Lord Napier in 1883 gave expression to a very strong opinion with reference to the deer forests then in existence. The Commissioners went so far as to declare that any further extension of deer forests would be opposed to sound policy. What is meant by sound policy? What I understand to have been running in the minds of the Commissioners was that it would be infinitely better for Scotland if that portion of the land then scheduled as deer forests, but suitable for cultivation by crofters, could be brought into cultivation. Such a course would benefit the country in several respects. In the first place, increased cultivation of the land must necessarily give increased employment to many people; and, in the second place, that increased employment must of necessity do something to arrest the depopulation that has been going on for generations and is still taking place in the Highlands. The evidence of those most fitted to judge is that the young men who are leaving the country are of the best class—that is, those of most spirit and enterprise. Last September, when this country was first menaced by the shadow of war, a detachment of one of the Highland regiments marched through part of the Highlands to beat up recruits. I encountered the detachment towards the end of its march, and, on making inquiries as to its success, I found that they had been able to enlist only one young man, the parents of whom the next day came and begged him off. Take another illustration of even more recent occurrence. There was a proposal lately to send a contingent of about 150 gillies to South Africa. It was supposed that a corps of deerstalkers might render valuable assistance to our troops.

MR. WILLIAM JOHNSTON (Belfast, S.): Was that Lord Lovat's scheme?

*MR. HEDDERWICK: I believe it was. Well, Sir A. Orde, who was interested in the movement, went to Glasgow, and in a speech there told his audience that after going over his own extensive estates he could find only some six or seven young men; all the rest of the males on his property were old men or boys; and therefore he had to go to Glasgow to enlist men for this so-called Highland contingent. This is a lamentable state of things. Contrast this state of affairs with the fact that early in this century, when we were at war in the Peninsula, the island of Skye alone furnished some thousands of men to the British Army. Consider for one moment how invaluable it would be to us to-day if instead of going to the purlieus of our great cities to find a few remnants of the descendants of Highlanders, we could furnish from the Highlands, as was formerly the case, thousands of men of the very finest quality. Surely anything which would tend to revive the people would be a signal benefit to the State. But in spite of the warning given by Lord Napier's Commission in 1883, what has taken place? Have any of the deer forests been redeemed? On the contrary, afforestation has gone on increasing. This cannot continue for ever without having a very disastrous effect upon the country. The situation is serious. I do not profess to be at all fanatical on the subject; I am perfectly well aware there are great economic laws always in operation. There is the attraction or the drag of the great towns. There is that which is common to all youth everywhere—the dream which paints the fields that are far off as infinitely more fertile than the fields nearer home. These things one grants; they must operate in the ordinary course of human nature everywhere. But beyond and in addition to all these things, legislation and administration may or may not be contributing causes towards the depopulation of a country or district. What has the Legislature done? It has to some extent realised and attempted to meet the evil of which I complain. In 1897, under pressure, the Government passed the Congested Districts Relief Act, the main object of which was the purchase of land and the extension of existing holdings. It was, it is true, an absurdly inadequate sum which the Government granted, but small as it was there was in it some potentiality, if behind it there had been a mind willing to effect the purpose in view. But what has been done? Has the Government done anything? As far as I can gather there has not been one penny spent on the main object for which the money was granted. The right hon. Gentleman the Lord Advocate told me in reply to a question on Monday that there was in hand a balance of some £62,000, and that £1,451 had been expended on migration. But migration is not the acquisition of land or the extension of holdings. Therefore I am not exaggerating when I say there has not been a single penny spent on the main object of the Act. But the Lord Advocate told me, and I thank him for it, a good deal that I did not ask for. He informed me that there were promises made under recommendations of certain committees with regard to agriculture and public works which would or might involve the Board in an expenditure of something like £27,000; and that negotiations were pending for the purchase of one or two properties which, if concluded, would involve a further expenditure of about £18,000. Then, no doubt feeling that after all it was a very lame account which the Government had to give with regard to the utilisation of the fund, the Lord Advocate added to his reply a little homily. He told me it was much better to proceed with caution rather than by precipitate action to do anything which might operate against economic laws and thereby defeat the main object of the Act. That Act was passed in 1897—nearly three years ago—and yet the Lord Advocate speaks of precipitate action. Nobody doubts the caution of the Lord Advocate, but caution may become a mania. If in three years the Board have not had sufficient time in which to discover some portion of land—although two million acres were marked out in 1895—on which to place some of these crofters in the congested districts without disturbing any of these great economic laws, then in my opinion caution is a veil for another and less admirable quality. I want some definite assurance from the Lord Advocate as to whether the negotiations of which he speaks are at all within reach of a conclusion, and whether we are likely, within the ordinary term of the life of the Government, to see anything done. I am not quite sure for what purpose the money is being heaped up. I am not quite sure that some purpose not within the limits of the Congested Districts Act may not be brooding in the minds of members of the Board, and I think we are entitled to an assurance that the money, which was granted for the specific purpose of relieving the crofter population of the north, by the acquisition of land, shall be devoted, without undue delay, to some substantial extent at any rate, to that purpose.

Mr. Hedderwick.

SIR LEONARD LYELL (Orkney and Shetland): I desire to congratulate my

hon. friend the hon. Member for Ross and Cromarty for taking the only opportunity that may occur during this session of enforcing the bitter complaint of the Highlands at the neglect they have suffered from this House and the Government during the past fourteen years. Previous to 1886 the condition of the crofters was a good deal worse than at present. Since the passing of the Crofters Act in 1886, which really prevented an agrarian revolt in the country, there has been a considerable improvement in affairs; but that Act was an experimental Act, and innumerable small grievances, which might have been remedied, were passed over. If these grievances had been dealt with by amending Acts, which had been proposed by the Highland Members, a good deal of harmony and confidence would have been restored to the north. I refer specially to the grievance that the leaseholders were not included in the benefits of the principal Act. Now, these leaseholders are men of more enterprise, thrift, and foresight than the majority of their neighbours. In fact, it was in order to secure some return for the improvements which they had made on their crofts that they entered into the leases, by which they lost benefits which were conferred on the crofters who held their land only from year to year. I think it is a shame that the best men in the Highlands should have been penalised in that way. Their case has been brought forward in this House again and again, and I think it is desirable that the Members for the crofter constituencies should enter their protest at the unfeeling disregard of their demands by the Conservative Government. Some Amendments to the Act of 1886 have been passed, and the relief of the leaseholders might have been included in them, but it was refused. I do not enter into the question of the deer forests, because in the county I happen to represent there is not a single deer, and a very small amount of game. But there are numbers of crofters in the southern counties who desire to possess land, but cannot get it, although a very large amount of land capable of being divided into crofts was scheduled in the Report of the Deer Forest Commission of 1892. It has been said that the Highland grievances can be dealt with by the Congested Districts Board; but our complaint is that that Board does the things we don't desire, and refuses to do the things we desire, and I am sorry to say that the hopes raised by the appointment of the Congested Districts Board have been falsified, and we are actually in a worse condition than before it was instituted. And for this reason: we have not the same facility to obtain redress of our grievances. Instead of appealing to the House, we must appeal to the Board, which may be partly in Dover House and partly in Edinburgh, and we cannot ferret the members out. It is said that a considerable sum of money has been placed at the disposal of the Board; but, the money being in the hands of the Board, when land is wanted owners immediately raise the price of land. I know that negotiations have been entered into with the Board to obtain possession of the land, but they failed on that account. If the money had been placed in the hands of an independent man, the land could have been bought for a reasonable sum. I shall on another occasion have a better opportunity of dealing with the Congested Districts Board; but in regard to this particular Amendment, which deals with the grievances of which we have to complain, we want to have some responsible person in this House who will be able to deal adequately with the questions which are now referred to the Board, so that we may be able to bring him to book when a remedy is not applied. The fault of the Board is that the members, although they are adequately paid, have no particular business to do. There is, therefore a divided responsibility, and no special obligation to do the work well.

*Mr. GORDON (Elgin and Nairn): I wish to say a few words on the question raised by previous speakers, but I do not promise to vote for the Amendment, as I have no desire to turn the Government out of office. I know of no Government which has done more for the good of the Highlands than the present Government. All I ask is that the attitude of my right hon. friend the Lord Advocate will be as sympathetic as possible, and that he will be able to indicate in his reply what the Government are going to do. The difficulty is in the economic condition of the Highlands, and many men of goodwill have been unable to suggest proper remedies. An appeal to a Government office is always a third-class mode of procedure. I have paid attention to the speeches made on the other side, and have failed to gain any idea of how these hon. Gentlemen opposite would themselves proceed to improve the condition of the Highland population. I know that Railway legislation has been hindered, hampered, and delayed by the action of certain Members on the other side of the House. The economic question of dealing with a rural population living at a high altitude in a severe climate is by no means confined to the North of Scotland. The rural population of Scotland is decreasing, but not necessarily by harsh and cruel methods. There are districts near London where the rural population is diminishing, but that is because the men are intelligent enough not to go on working for 10s. per week when they can get more in the towns. I myself have always divided the Highland population into two classes—first, that class which from an over conservative sense of local patriotism and a natural instinct desire to stay where their forefathers lived and died. I think that portion of the population is well worthy of the attention of the House. The question of deer forests is a very serious one. No doubt deer forests bring capital into poor districts, and improve conditions and methods of living, but at the same time I think that to allow the further unlimited afforesting of large districts in the North of Scotland is quite as worthy of the attention of this House as the carrying of a railway or canal, which may affect the condition of the population adversely throughout extensive areas. I would say that before allowing landed proprietors to afforest their lands it would not be unreasonable to ask them to come before the House by a private Bill seeking the permission of Parliament. The other class of the rural community are far too acute and clever, in these days of travel and inter-communication, to remain where their forefathers lived. They go out into the world to subdue the wilderness in our colonies, or, with the energy and strength to command, to leading armies to victory, or to building great railways, returning Peers of the Realm. One of these sons of the Highlands the other day offered to the Secretary of State for War a regiment of cavalry, fully equipped at his own expense. The question is how to protect that portion of the community which desires to remain at home, without going against the progress of the age. In my own constituency, which is not under the Crofters Act, there are a large number of men who would be called under the English law squatters, who have made improvements on the land they occupy. Under the old families these men are practically safe, but when a property changes hands and a new owner comes in, who has none of the feudal instincts regarding his tenants' rights, or no sense of noblesse oblige, he may seek to appropriate the improvements which morally belong to the crofter. I hope that in the proposed legislation on agricultural improvement foreshadowed in the Queen's Speech, the Government will throw their ægis over these tenants, and secure for them the value which they have really created on a bare soil, so that they may not depend for their security on feudal law or custom, but on the law of Parliament. The hon. Member who moved the Amendment referred to the Ferrintosh case, and left, unwittingly, I have no doubt, a wrong impression on the House. That is an estate belonging to the family of Forbes, whose name is of historic interest, for, without the efforts of Lord President Forbes, during the rebellion of 1745, the House of Hanover would probably not now have been on the throne. The hon. Member for Ross and Cromarty referred to the condition of the crofters on that estate, but their condition is better than that of the landlord, for Culloden House has recently been dismantled, and no member of the family is able to remain in this country for want of financial means. I believe that the true remedy for the position of land tenants in Scotland, not only small but also larger, is to be found in the Government's recent legislation in Ireland for Land Purchase: and I regret most sincerely that when some similar offer was made by the Duke of Sutherland in regard to his crofting holdings, it was coldly received by the advisers of the crofters. I believe that a judicious proposal by the Government, if not in this session, in the near future, towards carrying out a scheme of bona fide land purchase would be the best solution of the land question in Scotland. The only other matter I desire to bring before the House is that the Government should, in connection with a scheme of land purchase in Scotland, also borrow from Ireland the policy of the Irish Labourers' Cottage Act, and consider whether it is adaptable to Scotland. To all these experimental methods, if carried out by the Congested Districts Board, I would give my hearty support, for I believe that if carried out prudently and wisely, it would be the best method of meeting the difficulties now before the House.

Eighth Day.

Mr. Gordon.

MR. MCLEOD (Sutherlandshire): I congratulate my hon. friend the Member for Elgin and Nairn on the manner in which he has discussed this subject, but I challenge his statement that the present Government, of all Governments, has done most to benefit the crofters of the Highlands. If my hon. friend had been in the House longer he would have known that the Crofters Act of 1886, which transferred property amounting to millions that previously to that Act belonged to the landlords, to the crofters, was passed by a Liberal Government. I think that that measure will bear comparison with anything done by the present Government. The hon. Member said that there had not been a single practical suggestion made this evening on this side of the House for the benefit of the Highlands, but I think that a practical suggestion is indicated in the first part of this Amendment, which states that "the benefits of the Crofters Act of 1886 shall be extended to all crofter tenants holding under lease at the time of the passing of that Act." I have no doubt we shall presently hear from the Lord Advocate something of the sacredness of contract, and that it would be going against all the traditions of Tory Governments that they should interfere with written contracts. I would point out that the case of the small leaseholders in the Highlands and islands is exceptional. It is exceptional in this respect, that these small leaseholders are the descendants of men who occupied the same position as the men who obtained the benefits of the Crofters Act. In most instances they were turned into leaseholders against their will. They had carried out improvements on their crofts at their own expense, and could get no compensation from the landlords. It was the men who carried out the most valuable improvements that entered into the leases, because they imagined that in that way they would get security for these improvements. In my own constituency there are few small leaseholders, but in the case of these few the hardship is all the greater. As showing how accidental was the operation of the Crofters Act, in so far as admitting some crofters to the benefit of that Act and excluding others, you find side by side a large community enjoying the benefits of that Act and a small community excluded from them, simply because, in the case of the former, their leases had expired. Then there is the case of Lord Lovat's crofters. The factor on that estate, foreseeing that the Crofters Act would pass, compelled the crofters to accept leases; but when the subject was brought before the Crofters Commission, they stated that these contracts were not contracts at all. There is the case of the crofters on the Ferrintosh estate, nominally owned by a very historical family. On that estate absolutely all the improvements were executed by and at the expense of the small tenants. I do not know whether the House is aware of the fact, but the Culloden family obtained the right of making as much whisky on their estate, duty free, as they could, in return for the services rendered by President Forbes during the Rebellion of 1745-6. The consequence was that a great many people settled on the Culloden property for the purpose of growing barley, and that rents went up high. Holdings which originally were only let for 2s. 6d. were raised to £16. There was one case of a small leaseholder, who proved that he was only in a position to pay £8 instead of £16 during the last few years. Now, if that man's lease had happened to expire just before the Crofters Act was passed, he would have got the benefit of that Act, and have been required only to pay £8. It is nothing short of legalised robbery that that man should pay a rent of £16 when his holding is only worth £8. In my own constituency there is a small estate of the name of Herniss which is unfortunately in the hands of a trustee; and it is impossible for him to give relief to the tenants according to the law. This is not a party matter at all. The representatives of the Tory party have tried to do all they can to relieve these poor people, who in the end, however, are turned out of their holdings. There is not a single argument that can be used in favour of preventing these small leaseholding tenants getting the benefit of the Act, the same as was given to the leaseholders in Ireland, except that they do not happen to be the political force which the leaseholders were in Ireland. We are all aware that the Conservatives do not hesitate to break leases of large as well as small tenants, when it suits their purpose, and when we ask for this in the case of the crofters in the Highlands and Islands we are only asking what is fair and just. My hon. friend the Member for Wick Burghs made it appear as if it was rather a difficult thing to ask the Government to pass legislation this session, on account of other matters engaging the attention of the House: but I can assure the Lord Advocate that it only means a one-clause Bill, and that he will not get any opposition from this side of the House. In regard to the second portion of the Amendment, perhaps the House will bear with me if I say a few words in regard to it. I had the honour to serve on the Royal Commission which made the report to the House that there was an area of £1,782,785 acres of land available for advantageous occupation by crofters and other small tenants. Now, in regard to Royal Commissions, it is generally the practice to quote their Report even when it is only signed by a majority. A strong point in regard to the Report of the Royal Commission of 1895 is that we were absolutely unanimous in our recommendation so far as the area available was concerned, and that it could be advantageously occupied by crofters and small tenants. The only difference was how the people could be settled on the land. I signed the minority Report that the land should be bought, but the view of the majority was that that was not a question for the Commission at all to decide, but for the Government. Since that Report was made there was an attempt on the part of the late Government not only to make it easier for the small tenants who had got the benefits of the Act of 1886 to acquire more land, but to extend its benefits to other counties than what were in the original Act called the "crofting counties," and to put in operation a scheme for the compulsory acquisition of land. That failed, but it is very significant that when that Bill was before the House not a word came from the First Lord of the Treasury or the Lord Advocate against the scheme, or the necessity for drastic legislation. Their whole complaint was that Sir George Trevelyan had not gone far enough. It is an amusing commentary on the value the Scottish Office attaches to its own representations that it was suggested that the small portion of money granted to the Congested Districts Board for land purchase should be applied to education, as they could not find the means of spending it. Now, when the Bill passed, everyone knew that the money provided for the Board was utterly inadequate if the purchase of land was to be resorted to. In the old days it was said that the Highland people did not want the land, but the whole and sole reason why the Congested Districts Board has not been overwhelmed with applications, is that they have no compulsory powers of acquisition. In my own constituency the Board were in treaty for an estate, but the condition of sale by the proprietor was that the prospective tenants were to take over the sheep stock, which they said was absolutely useless for their purposes. Where you have a well-meaning landlord like Sir Arthur Ford of North Uig, difficulties are put in his way by the Congested Districts Board. That gentleman was willing to take a certain number of tenants from the congested districts and put them on a portion of his land, but the Board would not consent unless he put the whole of these tenants under the Crofters Commission, so as to give them the legal status of crofters. My hon. friend the Member for Elgin and Nairn complained that no scheme for the amelioration of the Highlands was forthcoming from this side of the House. I do not know whether he ever did the members of the Highland Land League the honour of reading any of their speeches; but we have for years pointed out a manner of dealing with this question—namely, that the Crofters Commission, which has done its duty in such a way as to command the admiration and confidence of all parties in Scotland, should have its powers enlarged, and the scope of its operations extended. That brings me to the point in regard to the remark of the hon. Member for Elgin and Nairn as to the offer by a proprietor in my own constituency, the Duke of Sutherland, to his small tenants that they should purchase their holdings, and that they had refused to accept that offer under advice. But the hon. Member should remember that the holdings offered for sale were only rented at 25s. per annum, and therefore of a size impossible for a man to make a living out of. In regard to the remedies, I do not think that if any Government is only strong enough to face the situation there can be much difficulty in providing them. It is to be remembered that the case of the Highlands is entirely exceptional, and indeed that was the excuse already made for very special legislation. From the manner in which the Highland people became dispossessed of their land, any Government—even a Conservative Government—is fully justified in saying to the present proprietors in the Highlands and Islands, “You must be prepared to deal with these exceptional circumstances, and, according to the remedy suggested by the hon. Member for Elgin and Nairn, no Highland proprietor in future shall be allowed to add to the area of deer forests without getting a private Bill authorising it.” The other remedy is an extremely simple matter: extend the powers of the Crofters Commission. In regard to this matter of the deer forests, I am quite certain that neither the House nor the country has the slightest conception of the enormous area that has been constantly added to them in the Highlands. The matter has not received the amount of attention it should have, because a good number of the people who speak on the subject speak too loosely, with the result that their opponents have no difficulty in showing that in some respects they are wrong. Now, it is an undoubted fact that formerly a large population was cleared out from the Highlands, and their houses burned down. I owe my presence in this House to the fact that I am the son of a man whose dwelling was so burned down after he had been turned out of it. The whole population of Sutherlandshire, with the exception of that of one little strath—every living soul—was turned out of their homes and driven down to the seaside. These, be it remembered, were the parents of the men who, at that time, were fighting the battles of England on the Continent, men who had been induced to enlist on the assurance that they would be not only doing a duty to their country and their parents, but that they would be able to come home and find a place in which to spend the remainder of their days. But when the survivors returned they found, instead of a home, charred ruins. What is the result? In the most populous parish of Sutherlandshire, where the people are relatively well off, where there is the largest Volunteer company in the county, and where there is all the material for a splendid contingent—not a single man volunteered to go to the front in South Africa. And why? They say, “See what happened under a British Parliament and under a British Government to our fathers; and unless you put that right we won’t go to fight your battles abroad, although we are prepared, as Volunteers, to defend our homes.” Take the case of the Inverness Militia, which was lately taken up to Aldershot under the command of The Macintosh. I have seen these men myself; they were not like Militia, but like troops who had seen service abroad; big stalwart men, well set-up, and finely drilled. When called up, out of over a thousand only fourteen were found unfit for duty. Well, it was put to them whether they would not like to go to South Africa, and they good-humouredly said they would consider it if they got a promise of a farm or a share in a gold mine; but they added they were not going abroad to fight for a shilling a day after the way their forefathers were used. The feeling is there deep and determined, and that is the result of the Highland clearances. As I have said, very few are aware of how enormously the area of the deer forests in the Highlands has increased of late years. In 1883 the figures were sufficiently startling; the area then under deer forests was 1,711,082 acres, whereas in 1898 it had increased to 2,287,297 acres, or an increase of half a million acres in sixteen years. I have been led away by this digression from the point I was illustrating. When the people were cleared off the land for the purpose of putting on sheep, the proprietors did not pay the crofters and small tenants for the improvements which they appropriated, although it was these improvements which produced the grass that made sheep-farming then profitable. In the passing of this little measure of justice I think we can almost claim it by the inherent righteousness of the case. At the same time there is no reason in the world why a clause should not be introduced in the interests of these poor people, and with regard to the utilisation of this large area of land, which is practically wasted in the Highlands, I do not see why that also should not be amended. It is a perfectly good scheme. If this House only realises in a very small degree what the condition of these poor people in the Highlands of Scotland is, I am sure they would not be slow to pass this measure of relief. In my own constituency, which is a rural constituency, I can tell you that the supply of milk for the children is so short that the medical officer has been constantly referring to it in his annual reports to the county council. The area of land is so small that the crofters are not able to keep a sufficient number of cows in one place. They are decent people, who are law-abiding and who pay their rent and taxes; and when this House by its enactments gives relief to the big farmer, but none to the small tenant, it is but natural that a protest should be raised. I do not know a more industrious section of the community than the poor Highlanders. Since the passing of the Crofters Act it is almost incredible to believe what these people have done. One of the greatest agitations that Scotland has ever witnessed was that which broke out in Skye in 1896 after the passing of the Act. It was felt that the crofters were doing something to better their condition, to build new houses to which they might resort in the summer time. There is no desire to keep the Highlander there against his will. In my own constituency, in the best of parishes, emigration is so great among the young people that it is almost impossible to get assistance in the shape of a lad where the small tenant is not able to do the work himself. On the other hand, in the poorest parish there is no emigration at all; they do not breed; and if occasionally one or two of them do go away, they almost always come back. In the better-off parishes the parents are generally able to keep the children at school, and, when they come of age, to give them a decent outfit and a fair start in life. They do fairly well. Well, Sir, that is the class of people whom I would like to see settled. If it be true that there is no great demand for new holdings it makes it all the easier for the Tory party to deal with the question. I can assure the House that there is no more deserving people, no people that will better appreciate legislation in their behalf than these people in the Highlands.

Mr. McLeod.

*THE LORD ADVOCATE (Mr. GRAHAM MURRAY, Buteshire): The first portion of this Amendment deals with a

Mr. McLeod.

now familiar question, as I think the House will remember that this question was really fully argued last year. On that occasion I gave the view of the Government on the matter, and before the present debate I had refreshed my memory on the subject. I do not mean to go into the question at any great length; but I do wish to say this, that I entirely demur to that description of the leaseholder—assumed rather than stated—in the speeches which have been delivered as that of “a cautious crofter.” A good many years ago it is said he was cautious, and now, in the efflux of time we find him in a very much worse condition than the crofter. There are some persons in that position. But the effect of extending the Crofters Act to all leaseholders under £30 would be to include an enormous number of people not in that position, and who, I have again and again explained, were not in the view of the Government to be brought in under a land court system. The Crofters Act introduced a land court for a peculiar people who had an historical reason for being allowed a privilege which no one else was allowed, because, although they had a tenure which by law was precarious, in practice it had always been looked upon as non-precarious, and the law did no more than make legal a tenure which had been practically customary, and this could not apply to those under voluntary contracts. It will be a sad day for Scotland if a land court were introduced between landlord and tenant. In dealing with the second portion of the Amendment in relation to deer forests, the mover passed with a rapid and somewhat confused touch from the early history of the subject to the present time, and did not differentiate in his epithets, which, however appropriate at one time, are so no longer. The “cruel evictions” referred to are things of the past; and, in fact, such increase as there has been in afforestation in recent times has been by the conversion of sheep pastures into deer forests, because in certain places deer pay better than sheep. Another hon. Member has dwelt upon the depopulation which, he said, is still proceeding in the Highlands. But the economic causes that make for depopulation of rural districts are common to the whole kingdom; and if the more intellectual and enterprising young Highlanders seek their fortunes far afield it is not a matter for complaint, and, indeed, it is a Scotchman's boast that his successful countrymen can be found in every part of the world. Reference has also been made to the poor success of a recruiting party, and mention has been made of the fact that from a body of the Inverness Militia not one would volunteer for service in South Africa. I am sorry for it; but throughout Scotland there is no lack of the patriotic fervour that exists in all parts of the kingdom. I do not speculate as to the reasons influencing the Inverness men, confining myself to the hope and belief that they were personal and good reasons. One thing I am sure of, that is that their conduct was not due to any slight or injustice from the Government long ago. So far as deer forests are concerned, the case failed, because the Commission did not find a large extent of forest land available forcrofting, though they did refer to land that could be advantageously occupied by persons suitably chosen, able and willing to stock and cultivate. It was when the land was found that the difficulties began, and the attitude of the Government was shown in the experiments being made by the Congested Districts Board. For the general policy of that Board my noble friend the Secretary for Scotland accepts entire responsibility. A wrong idea has been conveyed by the statement that my noble friend proposes to devote a certain portion of the funds of the Board to education. Advice from those best qualified to give it shows that young Highland people are at a disadvantage when going out into the world from ignorance of the advanced forms of social life and matters of common knowledge to ordinary boys and girls. They do not know really the ordinary operations of building, carpentry, the proper conduct of a dairy, and so on. Thus, when they left their native place to go into service, they are only able to take the lowest place in the scale of labour. Unfortunately, as a lawyer, I had to advise my noble friend that the clauses of the Congested Districts Acts did not cover that class of expenditure, and accordingly my noble friend approached the hon. Member for Sutherland and several other hon. Members who may be termed representative in this matter to see whether he could not get through the House by consent a Bill to enable him to do so.

MR. MCLEOD: The matter was not a subject of complaint, but it showed simply that the Scotch Office relied upon the Congested Districts Board, which was no remedy.

*MR. A. GRAHAM MURRAY: Surely it is a most curious deduction to make that if you have five ways of doing good and you see a sixth way that is a confession of failure in regard to the other five. Although I did get much individual assistance from certain hon. Members, they could not come to that absolute unanimity as to letting the Bill go through, which was the only condition of success, and accordingly the Bill did not pass. There are many forms of benefiting the people other than by the creation of new holdings. Passing over those forms and systems which are quite as important as any other forms, that does not alter the fact that the Congested Districts Board are anxious to try what can be done in that matter. I will answer the questions put to me by the hon. Member who seconded the Amendment. I can assure him that we are not intentionally heaping up the money. We have no ulterior object, and we are only heaping up money because we do not wish to spend it until we can spend it favourably. The real difficulty is not getting the land, but getting suitable tenants, and I should like to read to the House one or two conditions imposed by the Congested Districts Board, to show how extremely liberal their views are if a tenant of the proper kind will come forward. The price of the holding was to be an average of £650. The proposal of the Congested Districts Board is that they are willing to lend that money, and allow it to be paid back at 2½ per cent., spread over fifty years. They would also arrange for the shooting to be paid for, the benefit of the shooting rent to go to the crofter. The way it would work out would be that the crofter would have to pay £23 18s. 11d. yearly for fifty years, when the loan would be repaid. He would get £12 19s. for the shooting rent, and, therefore, the holding would cost him £10 19s. 11d. per year. Now I ask hon. Members is that not a perfectly handsome offer, and is it not a good chance for a man able to better himself that by paying £10 19s. 11d. a year for fifty years he becomes the proprietor of the holding? If the crofter consented to erect upon his holding the proper buildings, the Congested Districts Board offer to lend him £300 towards the buildings, and lend it him upon the same terms as those upon which his holding has been acquired. The difference between our views and those which I rather suspect are held by the hon. Member who moved this Amendment is that we are determined, although we are liberal, we are not going to disregard economic conditions in toto. If you do not insist upon it that the men coming forward shall be men of character and experience, and men who at least have a sufficiency of stock or the means of getting them, then so far from helping the solution of the problem of the crofters in the congested districts you will be doing your very best to make the last state of the Highlands worse than the first.

*MR. THOMAS SHAW (Hawick Burghs): I am bound to say that certain new facts have been brought to light in regard to this problem during the past year which I should have thought would have brought home conviction to my right hon. friend. It is impossible to deny that the state of matters in the Highlands is a state of peace, but of peace which must be followed, unless a change of policy ensues, by a state, I will not say of clamour, but of unrest which may have very serious consequences. Each year that passes over our heads sees us possessed of a smaller and smaller area of land for ordinary economic purposes. This is a serious fact. During the past twelve or fifteen years afforestation has been in a progressive state. Of the entire area of the Kingdom of Scotland, not less than 12 per cent. is now under deer and devoted to the purposes of sport alone. The House will see that this is at least a social problem which may not be without trouble in the future. It is impossible in a country like ours that a Crofters Act can pass without having its consequences, and I think the time has come when the House is able to fully recognise, in view of our past experience, that some extension of that measure is necessary. The Commission which was appointed in 1892 to inquire into a kindred subject gave us clearly to understand how beneficial had been the operation of that Act. The Act is one of which the Government who passed it may justly be proud. In regard to the relation of the crofter and the crofter population to the landlords, the situation had for long been one of chronic debt on the one hand, and chronic pursuit for debt on the other. The result of the Statute economically has been that about 27 per cent. of the entire rental of the crofting area has disappeared, and with regard to the arrears 70 per cent. has been completely wiped out. I venture to say that a policy that has been followed by such peace and contentment in the relations between landlord and tenant, after the passing of that measure, is a result which the authors of that Act can look back upon with much satisfaction. It is not only with regard to the relations between the crofters and their landlords that the Act has been beneficial. The House may remember that in 1892 there was laid on the Table of this House a report from the Deer Forests Commission. The personnel of that Commission was largely identical with the personnel of the Crofters Commission itself. They took that occasion to make certain remarks as to the alterations during the period succeeding the passing of the Crofters Act, and their verdict has been, with regard to the land possessed by the crofters, that such land is now better tilled, better drained, and better fenced than it ever was under the old system. An opinion like that, so manifestly favourable, is bound to have an effect upon the mind of the surrounding population. What has been the history of Ireland in this matter? You would never have had peace in Ireland upon this topic of land occupation unless you had been content to extend the benefit of such a statute to the leaseholder. I remember quoting a sentence from a speech made by Lord Salisbury, in which he brushed aside all those legal and technical subtleties founded on by the Lord Advocate, and said the leaseholder's position was that he held a longer tenure than the tenant at will, but that he was side by side with the tenant at will, and should, like him, have fixity of tenure and other rights. The result in Ireland has been eminently satisfactory, and why should the leaseholders of Scotland have the door slammed in their faces in this matter? I support my hon. friend who has moved this Amendment because I think it is a matter in which it is the duty of Scotch Members to iterate and reiterate, until the mind of the House becomes saturated with the necessity of this reform. On the other hand, the motion has reference to and a considerable bearing upon the operations of the Congested Districts Board, and here I do not think my right hon. friend has done very much service to that Board by laying the whole blame or the whole glory for its operations at one single door, namely, the door of the Secretary for Scotland. Of course I am not going to repeat here what I urged as strongly as I could when the Bill creating that Board was before this House, namely, that unless you give powers for the compulsory acquiring of land you were setting that body into existence tied hand and foot, and so fatally impeded its progress. There are many ways in which the expenditure of money in the Highlands can be undertaken for the benefit of the population. We have the expenditure of money for communication by roads, light railways, and the like; we have the expenditure in the case of the present Government by grants in aid of the taxpayers in agricultural districts. We also have the expenditure of money for industrial purposes under the Congested Districts Board Act; but at the bottom of all that expenditure we ought to have the expenditure of money upon a scheme for enabling crofters, or that class of people, to have land upon reasonable terms, on which they can work out their own betterment in life, and pay their taxes like their neighbours. Unless you do that you are only building a superstructure without laying the foundation. So far as we can gather the result up to the present is that the Congested Districts Board, which has been in existence for two and a half years, has obtained grants from the Treasury to the extent of £70,000. What has it done with regard to assisting the acquirement of land by thecrofting population? The whole figure on that head amounts only to about £1,400 to £1,500.

Mr. A. Graham Murray.

*MR. WEIR: £1,451.

*MR. THOMAS SHAW: Therefore the result of all this is that of this £70,000, the main purpose of which was to bring the people of the proper class back to the land, more especially in the neighbourhood of existing holdings, only 2 per cent. has been expended. What I fear is that the Congested Districts Board lacked power to begin with, and it also lacks nerve and resolution. It is impossible to have listened to such a speech as that delivered by my hon. friend the Member for Orkney without feeling that there is land in abundance in Scotland which could be acquired even without compulsory powers upon reasonable terms. The Treasury, however, has been substantially controlled by the Scotch Board, who will not bring the people back to the land. My right hon. friend made one remark that I cannot say I listened to with very much satisfaction. He gave an instance of the rental arising from shooting and deer forests, and said the latter pays best. Yes, but whom does it pay? It may pay the landlord best, but does it pay the nation best? That other element is one which we may well consider at this moment, when our Highlanders are taking their share in battle for this country. There is another element besides the purely economic aspect of this question, and that is that you are gradually depleting the area of land on which you can grow a healthy and a hardy and a virile population. We know to-day what such people can do in times of war and in times of national trouble, and I want our legislation shaped upon lines and upon economic conditions, which will give the Highlands a chance of flourishing and of replenishing the British Empire in its strength.

DR. CLARK (Caithness-shire): I am surprised that the Lord Advocate has taken the course which he has done to-night and opposed this Amendment. My hon. friend proposed as a compromise that if his very moderate demand were accepted he would give up the still more important portion, but the Lord Advocate does not even concede that which, time after time, before the right hon. Gentleman was Lord Advocate, the leaders of both sides declared should be given. When I listened to his speech to-night, I wished that the Lord Advocate knew really more of the facts of the case. He has told the House that this is a proposal made by those who wish to introduce Irish methods into Great Britain. Why, this proposal was first made fourteen years ago in this House; and by whom does he think? By a noble Lord who was the largest owner of land in Scotland—who owned more than a million acres. This proposal was first made in this House by the present Duke of Sutherland, who was then Marquess of Stafford—not by any crofter or an Irishman, but by a man who owns more land than any other living person. Both sides admit that the leaseholder was in the same position as the holder from year to year. The bulk of the leaseholders are simply crofters who, having made improvements, are desirous of getting security for them, and they required protection much more than any other class. When the Conservative Government came into power they brought in a Bill which at once destroyed over 150,000 leases. We have been told that the Highland tenants were not harshly but generously rented, but fourteen years experience of the Crofters Act has demonstrated that they were more rack-rented than the Irish tenants. So that, as far as the case of the crofters is concerned, it has been made out that it is based upon equity and justice. Of course, the Government now refuse what we ask. My hon. friend in introducing this motion gave some very startling statistics regarding the great decrease of the population in our Highland counties. The facts stated did not give the House the impression that otherwise they might have done. The case is very much worse, as I will explain. Take Argyllshire, for instance. The hon. Member says that during forty years there has been a reduction in the population of Argyllshire of 20,000, and that is perfectly true. But it must be remembered that five or six big towns have grown up in Argyllshire during that period. The decrease in the rural population in the Highlands has been about one-half. What is the economic condition now as shown by the last returns? I won't take Skye or Lewes, which we have had before, but I will take Mull, which I do not think has ever come before us. During the forty years from 1841 to 1881 the population of Mull was reduced from 10,000 to 5,000, or 50 per cent., and what is the picture we get in the last report? It says that there are fifteen farms in Mull with an annual value of over £4,000, and they are now all in the hands of the Duke of Argyll. He has got to keep those farms with their stock, and he has them on his hands. That shows the failure of the old system. If we had a really active Congested Districts Board they would give relief to the Duke and the other great landlords, and take them out of the unfortunate position in which they now find themselves. That congestion in the Highlands is causing the growth of pauperism, and you have all the best people leaving the districts. The Lord Advocate wonders why we object to this, but I cannot see his logic, for if your best people go away and your worst remain, the country must deteriorate either intellectually, morally, or physically. Surely, as a patriotic Scotsman, the right hon. Gentleman cannot desire that. That is the reason why we object to it. Is this the case in Norway and Switzerland? How do we stand in Scotland? Our case has been brought year after year before the House, and our facts have been admitted by the First Lord of the Treasury himself. The principle has been admitted and a remedy suggested, because for many years emigration has been urged by hon. Members on the opposite side of the House. That was tried, and large sums of money were voted by this Parliament for the experiment. It is now admitted that the experiment was a dead failure, and the £20,000 which was voted might just as well have been pitched into the Thames. I have visited one of the settlements in Manitoba, and there was not a single soul left in the houses there. We ask for migration, and we say that there is plenty of land in Scotland. There was the Commission of 1890, and their Report demonstrated that there was plenty of land, and so that is not a mere statement made by us. They classified a scheme which showed that there was 794,000 acres capable of cultivation as new crofts. Half a million acres were recommended as farms of moderate size to give to the more enterprising people, and we did expect that the Congested Districts Board, after it was appointed, would have done something to carry out those recommendations. Two years ago the First Lord of the Treasury said we were in too big a hurry and expected results all at once. What has been the result of nearly three years experience? Why, that rather less than £1,500 has been spent in migrating the population. I admit that they are making arrangements to spend £18,000 more. The whole sum they have spent for every purpose has been about 10 per cent., and this £18,000 is only one half of the sum they will get this year, for they will receive £35,000. They still have £62,000 out of the £70,000 which was voted by this House two years ago. That is the condition of things we have got after nearly three years working of the Board. Having no compulsory powers, we knew from the beginning that they would not be able to do much, and all they have been able to do is to issue advertisements asking Highland landlords to sell their estates. But until you get compulsory powers you cannot get the land. We have been told that we do not suggest any remedy, but we have suggested remedies, and the House has practically admitted that our remedies are just and practical. Want of time during the session might make legislation impracticable, but there is no great question coming before the House which is likely to take up much time this session. There is no great party question being brought forward; the measures proposed are such that all sides might feel inclined to pass. This is a session when there is no great burning political question, and therefore important legislation of this kind might be passed. Now we are told that nothing will be done by this Government, and what is worse, the Government have gone back from the position formerly taken up by the First Lord of the Treasury and the Cabinet by now opposing this matter on principle.

Dr. Clark.

Question put.

The House divided:—Ayes, 113; Noes, 186. (Division List No. 5.)

AYES.

Abraham, William (Cork, N. E.)
Allan, William (Gateshead)
Allison, Robert Andrew
Asher, Alexander
Ashton, Thomas Gair
Asquith, Rt. Hon. Herbert Henry
Austin, M. (Limerick, W.)
Barlow, John Emmott
Blake, Edward
Bolton, Thomas Dolling
Brunner, Sir John Tomlinson
Burt, Thomas
Caldwell, James
Cameron, Robert (Durham)
Campbell-Bannerman, Sir H.
Carew, James Laurence
Carlike, William Walter
Causton, Richard Knight
Channing, Francis Allston
Clancy, John Joseph
Clark, Dr. G. B. (Caithness-sh.)
Commins, Andrew
Condon, Thomas Joseph
Crean, Eugene
Crilly, Daniel
Daly, James
Dalziel, James Henry
Dewar, Arthur
Donelan, Captain A.
Doogan, P. C.
Dunn, Sir William
Emmott, Alfred
Engledew, Charles John
Esmonde, Sir Thomas
Evans, Samuel T. (Glamorgan)
Farquharson, Dr. Robert
Farrell, James P. (Cavan, W.)
Fenwick, Charles
French, Peter

Flavin, Michael Joseph
Flynn, James (Christopher)
Gilney, James
Goddard, Daniel Ford
Griffith, Ellis J.
Gurdon, Sir William Brampton
Hammond, John (Carlow)
Harrington, Timothy
Hayden, John Patrick
Hayne, Rt. Hon. Charles Seale-Healy, Maurice (Cork)
Healy, Timothy M. (N. Louth)
Hedderwick, Thomas Chas. H.
Hemphill, Rt. Hon. Charles H.
Holland, William Henry
Horniman, Frederick John
Jones, Wm. (Carnarvonshire)
Jordan, Jeremiah
Kearley, Hudson E.
Kilbride, Denis
Kinloch, Sir John George S.
Lawson, Sir Wilfrid (Cumb'ld)
Leese, Sir J. F. (Accrington)
Lough, Thomas
Lyell, Sir Leonard
Macaleese, Daniel
MacDonnell, Dr. M. A. (Q'n's Ct.)
MacNeill, John Gordon Swift
McCartan, Michael
McCrae, George
McGhee, Richard
McKenna, Reginald
M'Leod, John
Mandeville, J. Francis
Morton, Ed. J. C. (Devonport)
Murnaghan, George
Nussey, Thomas Willans
O'Brien, Patrick (Kilkenny)
O'Brien, P. J. (Tipperary)

Oldroyd, Mark
O'Malley, William
Palmer, George Wm. (Reading)
Parnell, John Howard
Pearson, Sir Weetman D.
Pease, Joseph A. (Northumb.)
Pickersgill, Edward Hare
Pilkerton, John
Power, Patrick Joseph
Provand, Andrew Dryburgh
Redmond, John E. (Waterford)
Redmond, William (Clare)
Roberts, John Bryn (Eifion)
Roberts, John H. (Denbighs.)
Robson, William Snowdon
Roche, John (East Galway)
Runciman, Walter
Samuel, J. (Stockton-on-Tees)
Shaw, Thomas (Hawick B.)
Sinclair, Capt. J. (Forfarshire)
Soames, Arthur Wellesley
Strachey, Edward
Sullivan, Donal (Westmeath)
Sullivan, T. D. (Donegal, W.)
Thomas, David Alf. (Merthyr)
Trevelyan, Charles Philips
Tully, Jasper
Walton, Joseph (Barnsley)
Wason, Eugene
Weir, James Galloway
Whittaker, Thomas Palmer
Williams, John Carvell (Notts.)
Wilson, Frederick W. (Norfolk)
Woods, Samuel
Yoxall, James Henry

TELLERS FOR THE AYES—
Mr. Herbert Gladstone and
Mr. McArthur.

NOES.

Archdale, Edward Mervyn
Arnold, Alfred
Arrol, Sir William
Atkinson, Rt. Hon. John
Bailey, James (Walworth)

Balfour, Rt. Hon. A. J. (Manch'r)
Barnbury, Frederick George
Barry, Rt. Hon. A. H. S. (Hunts.)
Beach, Rt. Hon. Sir M. H. (Bristol)
Bemrose, Sir Henry Howe

Bethell, Commander
Bill, Charles
Blakiston-Houston, John
Brassey, Albert
Brodrick, Rt. Hon. St. John

Brookfield, A. Montagu
Butcher, John George
Campbell, J. H. M. (Dublin)
Cavendish, R. F. (N. Lancs.)
Cavendish, V. C. W. (Derbysh.)
Ceil, Lord Hugh (Greenwich)
Chamberlain, Rt. Hn. J. (Birm.)
Chamberlain, J. Austen (Worc'r)
Chaplin, Rt. Hon. Henry
Charrington, Spencer
Clarke, Sir Edw. (Plymouth)
Coghill, Douglas Harry
Collings, Rt. Hon. Jesse
Colston, Charles E. H. Athole
Cook, Fred. Lucas (Lambeth)
Corbett, A. Cameron (Glasg'w)
Cornwallis, Fienes Stanley W.
Cox, Irwin Edw. Bainbridge
Cross, H. Shepherd (Bolton)
Cubitt, Hon. Henry
Curzon, Viscount
Dafkeith, Earl of
Dickinson, Robert Edmond
Dorington, Sir John Edw.
Doughty, George
Douglas, Rt. Hon. A. Akers-
Douglas-Pennant, Hon. E. S.
Duncombe, Hon. Hubert V.
Dyke, Rt. Hn. Sir Wm. Hart
Egerton, Hon. A. de Tatton
Fellowes, Rt. Hon. Ailwyn Edward Fergusson, Rt. Hn. Sir J. (Mane'r
Field, Admiral (Eastbourne)
Finch, George H.
Finlay, Sir Robert Bannatyne
Fisher, William Hayes
Fitz Wygram, General Sir F.
Fletcher, Sir Henry
Flower, Ernest
Forster, Henry William
Galloway, William Johnson
Garfit, William
Gedge, Sydney
Gibbons, J. Lloyd
Giles, Charles Tyrrell
Godson, Sir Augustus Fredk.
Goldsworthy, Major-General
Gorst, Rt. Hn. Sir John Eldon
Goschen, Rt. Hn. G. (St. George's)
Goulding, Edward Alfred
Graham, Henry Robert
Gray, Ernest (West Ham)
Green, Walford D. (Wednesb'y)
Greene, Henry D. (Shrewsbury)
Greville, Hon. Ronald
Gull, Sir Cameron
Hamilton, Rt. Hon. Lord George
Hanbury, Rt. Hon. Robert Wm.

Hanson, Sir Reginald
Hardy, Laurence
Hare, Thomas Leigh
Haslett, Sir James Horner
Heath, James
Helder, Augustus
Henderson, Alexander
Hill, Sir Edward Stock (Bristol)
Hornby, Sir William Henry
Hpzler, Hon. James Henry Cecil
Hudson, George Bickersteth
Hutchinson, Capt. G. W. (Grice-
Hutton, John (Yorks. N.R.)
Jackson, Rt. Hon. Wm. Lawies
Johnson-Ferguson, Jabez Edw.
Johnston, William (Belfast)
Johnstone, Heywood (Sussex)
Kennaway, Rt. Hon. Sir John H.
Kenyon, James
Kenyon-Slaney, Col. William
Kewick, William
Kimber, Henry
Knowles, Lees
Lafone, Alfred
Lawrence, Sir E. Durning- (Corn
Lawson, John Grant (Yorks.)
Lea, Sir Thomas (Londonderry)
Leigh-Bennett, Henry Curry
Llewelyn, Sir Dillwyn- (Sw'nsea
Lockwood, Lt.-Col. A. R.
Long, Col. Charles W. (Evesham)
Long, Rt. Hon. W. (Liverpool)
Lopes, Henry Yarde Buller
Lorne, Marquess of
Lowe, Francis William
Lloyd, Archie Kirkman
Lucas-Shadwell, William
Macartney, W. G. Ellison
Macdonald, John Cumming
Maclver, David (Liverpool)
Maclure, Sir John William
McArthur, Charles (Liverpool)
McKillop, James
Maple, Sir John Blundell
Massey-Mainwaring, Hn. W. F.
Maxwell, Rt. Hon. Sir H. E.
Middlemore, J. Throgmorton
Milbank, Sir Powlett Chas. J.
Milward, Colonel Victor
Monckton, Edward Philip
Moore, William (Antrim, N.)
More, Robert Jasper (Shrops.)
Morton, Arth. H. A. (Deptford)
Mount, William George
Murray, Rt. Hon. A. Graham (Bute)
Murray, Charles J. (Coventry)
Myers, William Henry
O'Neill, Hon. Robert Torrens

Orr-Ewing, Charles Lindsay
Parkes, Ebenezer
Penn, John
Phillipotts, Captain Arthur
Pierpoint, Robert
Platt-Higgins, Frederick
Plunkett, Rt. Hon. Horace C.
Pollock, Harry Frederick
Powell, Sir Francis Sharp
Pretzman, Ernest George
Pryce-Jones, Lt.-Col. Edward
Purvis, Robert
Quilter, Sir Cathbert
Rankin, Sir James
Rentoul, James Alexander
Richardson, Sir Thos. (Hart'pl)
Ritchie, Rt. Hn. Chas. Thomson
Robertson, Herbert (Hackney)
Royds, Clement Molyneux
Russell, Gen. F. S. (Choltenham
Russell, T. W. (Tyronne)
Rutherford, John
Ryder, John Herbert Dudley
Samuel, Harry S. (Limehouse)
Sassoon, Sir Edward Albert
Seoble, Sir Andrew Richard
Shaw-Stewart, M. H. (Renfrew)
Sidebotham, J. W. (Cheshire)
Sidebottom, William (Derbysh.)
Simeon, Sir Barrington
Sinclair, Louis (Roufford)
Smith, Abel H. (Christchurch)
Smith, Jas. Parker (Lanarks.)
Smith, Hon. W. F. D. (Strand)
Stanley, Edw. Jas. (Somerset)
Stewart, Sir Mark J. M. Taggart
Stirling-Maxwell, Sir John M.
Stock, James Henry
Stone, Sir Benjamin
Strutt, Hn. Charles Hedley
Sturt, Hon. Humphrey Napier
Talbot, Rt. Hn. J. G. (Oxf'd Univ.)
Thorburn, Sir Walter
Thornston, Percy M.
Tomlinson, Wm. Edw. Murray
Tritton, Charles Ernest
Vincent, Sir Edgar (Exeter)
Webster, Sir Richard E.
Whiteley, H. (Ashton-under-L.)
Williams, Colonel R. (Dorset)
Williams, Joseph Powell (Birm.)
Wilcox, Sir John Archibald
Wyndham, George
Wyll, Marmaduke D'Arcy
Young, Commander (Berks, E.)
TELLERS FOR THE NOES—
Sir William Walrond and
Mr. Anstruther.

Main question again proposed.

TAXATION OF IRELAND.

*Mr. CLANCY (Dublin County, N.), in rising to move, as an Amendment, to add at the end of the Question the words—"But we humbly represent to Your Majesty that the over taxation of Ireland, which promises to become greatly aggravated by the expenditure on the war in South Africa, is a most serious and pressing grievance, and demands the early attention of Parliament with a view to its removal," said: Mr. Speaker, the subject of the Amendment which stands in my name has been before the House several times in recent years, but I make no apology and I offer no excuse for bringing it forward on the present occasion. The first reason why we think it necessary at this stage of the session to bring under the consideration of Parliament once more the financial relations between Great Britain and Ireland is that all Ireland is practically united on this question. There was some doubt, I believe, as to one particular part of Ireland being in disagreement with the rest—I mean the city of Belfast. That stood apart in what Lord Salisbury would call “splendid isolation” on this question. I believe, however, that the hon. Member for South Belfast now occupies a sort of political Spion Kop, where he stands alone in resistance to the assaults of modern degeneracy.

MR. WILLIAM JOHNSTON: The four Members for Belfast are united on the question.

MR. CLANCY: I refer to Belfast for this reason. A short time ago a deputation from the All Ireland Committee waited on the Corporation of Belfast, and, although the hon. Member for South Belfast represents the city on most questions, the Corporation agreed to take a stand with the rest of Ireland on this matter; and when I am told by the hon. Member that the four Members for the city have taken up the same position as he has I would remind him that one of the Royal Commissioners on whose report we base our claim was one of the four Members for Belfast, and as far as I know he has never since recanted his opinion on the question. Ireland is therefore practically united in believing that it has a grievance, and, feeling a grievance, it has naturally forced on the attention of its representatives in this House the absolute necessity of pressing its claim for redress upon every occasion that offers itself, whether it is pleasing to the Government or to the House or not. I am sorry to say that there was ground for disappointment and dissatisfaction last session because an opportunity for ventilating this grievance was not found, and I have only to offer for myself the explanation that the mishap occurred owing to some misunderstanding. The fact that Ireland is united on this question, as well as the frequency and urgency of the demands made upon us to bring it forward, are ample reasons for my standing here to-night, in the name of the united Irish party to propose this Amendment. There is also another reason. We have as the basis of our demand an unexampled verdict in our favour. I think it is a most remarkable circumstance—indeed the most remarkable of its kind in political history—that a Commission constituted as the late Royal Commission on the Financial Relations between Great Britain and Ireland was, should have reported by so overwhelming a majority in favour of the case made by the representatives of Ireland. The House may rest assured that, until redress is afforded, that verdict of the Royal Commission will be heard of session after session. The right hon. Gentleman the Leader of the House has rather sneered at the Commission; he spoke of it as “this intelligent Commission.” The phrase was not used in a complimentary sense, and I think it was a very inappropriate sneer to address to a body composed of the first financial experts of the Empire, most of whom were Englishmen, and many of whom had been actually employed in high positions in the financial departments of the State by different Governments. The third reason why I move this Amendment will obviously occur to the minds of hon. Members. If the present system of indiscriminate taxation results in injustice being done to Ireland, as Ireland contends it does, it is plain that that injustice will be aggravated by every addition to the sum levied in accordance with that system. Of course, I am alluding to the present war, which will probably add tens of millions to the taxation of the country. If you bore that burden yourselves, as you alone are responsible for the war, and you alone will benefit by it if any success accrues from it, I would not have anything to say in the matter; but for every £1 added to the taxation of the country by reason of the war, the injustice done to Ireland by the present indiscriminate system of taxation will be proportionately increased and aggravated. Under these circumstances it would be preposterous if the representatives of the overwhelming majority of the people of Ireland allowed even the preliminary stages of the session to pass without making a stand against that system. For these reasons we have brought forward this question to-night, and I propose to offer neither apology nor excuse for so doing, but I may perhaps relieve the House with the assurance that I do not intend to enter into this question in detail. The reason is perfectly plain. The speeches of the hon. Member for North Longford and the hon. and learned

Member for Waterford, and, certainly not least, the speeches of the hon. and learned Member for Plymouth have so stated our case, and proved it so conclusively, that I am relieved from going over ground so frequently trodden and with such effect. I do not intend, therefore, to do more than glance in outline at our case; and answer, if I may respectfully say so, some points in the last speech delivered on this subject by the First Lord of the Treasury. We take our stand upon what the Unionist Members of this House seem to regard as almost an Ark of the Covenant—I mean the Act of Union, and especially on the seventh article of that Act. I do not know whether hon. Members on the other side, who speak so glibly on this subject against our case, have ever read that article. If they have not, I would, in all humility, advise them to read it, because they will find there the whole justification not only for our action, but for the verdict of the Royal Commission. At the time of the Union Ireland and England had certain debts, and the debt of Ireland was very much smaller in comparison than the debt of England; not only that, but the circumstances of the two countries were very dissimilar, and accordingly the authors of the Union—Pitt and Castlereagh—voluntarily declared that it would be unjust to tax Ireland and England on the same level, and they, consequently, provided that the countries should not be taxed on the same level until their circumstances had become similar and until the debts of the two countries had approached a certain proportion to each other. That seemed a fair offer, and probably would have been a fair offer, if the proportion which Ireland was to pay to the Imperial expenditure had been fixed at a proper figure. But it was fixed at a figure which the Irish House of Lords and all the patriotic party and all unpurchased intellect of Ireland declared would prove the ruin of the country. The natural consequence was that your taxation, owing to your foreign wars, having risen by leaps and bounds, our taxation rose similarly. You broke the treaty as soon as ever it was made, because one of its conditions was that you were to borrow not on the separate credit of each country, but on the joint credit of both, and instead of that, when Ireland could not pay the preposterous sum you demanded of her, you broke the treaty in the first year or two after it was made by borrowing on the separate credit of Ireland. The result was that the provision in the Act of Union that the debt of Ireland should reach a certain proportion of the debt of England before taxation could be equalised occurred in 1816, and then you took advantage of your own wrong. [AN HON. MEMBER: After Waterloo.] Yes, after Waterloo, where the Irish soldiers had saved you, you taxed Ireland on the high level of your own country. What the 7th article provided was that the two countries were to be treated as two separate entities for finance; they were legislatively united, but in finance they were to receive separate treatment, and as a matter of fact, as everyone knows, they did receive separate treatment, to a certain extent, for the first half of the present century, for it was not until 1853, when Mr. Gladstone began his policy of plunder, which was followed impartially by his successors, that the present system, under which Ireland is robbed of £3,000,000 a year, was instituted. But under the Act of Union the two countries were not to be taxed on the same level unless, not only their debts approached to a certain proportion the one of the other, but also unless their circumstances had become similar. Does any hon. Member in this House believe that the circumstances of Ireland and England have ever been similar during the last ninety-nine years? Instead of becoming similar they have been growing more and more dissimilar every year, and consequently never, during the last ninety-nine years, have you been justified in carrying out the transaction of 1817, which, let me observe, cannot supersede the Treaty of the Union. The Act of Union was a treaty made between two nations; the Act of 1817 was made by yourselves. It destroyed one of the fundamental articles of the Act of Union: you had no moral authority to do such an act, and you have no moral authority for continuing it now. Well, but, if all this be so, the Act of Union, as we contend, answers every criticism made in reply to our case. Take the first: the right hon. Gentleman the First Lord of the Treasury says that no injustice is done because everyone is taxed alike in England and in Ireland. Why that is our grievance, that is the very thing we complain of, because we have a right according to the Act of Union to be taxed lower than you are, and merely to put us on an equality is doing us an injustice. Take again the suggestion of the late Leader of the Opposition—I don't know what position he occupies now. He says, "I cannot agree to discriminate in the matter of taxation, but if you Irish Members will only help me to reduce the duty on tea and tobacco and put it on the income tax, I will be quite ready to take that course." He does not see that the benefiting of the poorer classes in England and Ireland equally—which would be the result of such a course—is absolutely shutting his eyes to our case. I say if you reduce the taxation of tea in England and Ireland to-morrow, if you abolish it altogether, it will not abolish our grievance or diminish it one atom, because the poor in Ireland are entitled to be taxed less heavily than their brethren in England. Then again we are told that it is only the individual who is taxed; that it is all a mistake to think that Ireland is taxed. That is the argument of the right hon. Gentleman the First Lord of the Treasury. Well, Sir, I think it is time to give up that sort of argument. I again say that the answer to it is to be found in the 7th Article of the Act of Union. It is the individuals living within a certain prescribed area who were to be taken into consideration, and again I say that the 7th Article is my answer to the right hon. Gentleman when he talks of the individual and not the country being taxed. Then the right hon. Gentleman asks, "Are the existing taxes injurious to the industries of Ireland, or oppressive to the individual?" There is nothing in the Act of Union about taxation being injurious to Irish industries or oppressive to the individual. The Act says that it is Ireland that is to be taken into account. Lord Castlereagh, speaking on this subject, said—

Mr. Clancy.

"As to the future it is expected that the two countries shall move forward together and unite as to expenditure in the measure of their relative resources. Ireland has in the 7th Article of the treaty the utmost possible security that she cannot be taxed beyond the measure of her comparative ability, and the rate of her contribution must ever correspond to her relative wealth and prosperity."

That is the Seventh Article explained. It is not whether taxation is injurious to any particular Irish industries or oppressive to any particular individuals in Ireland, but whether Ireland, as a whole, is taxed beyond her relative taxable capacity. At the same time, it is obvious that not merely some industries, but all industries, and not merely some individuals, but the whole people, must be, if the country as a whole is overtaxed. The arguments on this subject are so plain that I will forbear to go through them. I should like, however, to refer to one or two authorities who will be respected in this House. The First Lord of the Admiralty was, I believe, the first to appoint a Committee to enquire into this question in 1890. The right hon. Gentleman was responsible for the reference to that Committee, and none of the arguments we now hear were raised in that reference. It was not the grievance of the individual that was to be enquired into, but of the country, and when I am told that we are not now to be treated as a fiscal entity, I ask whether the Government have any sense of consistency. Another gentleman who is very much before the public at present—Sir Alfred Milner—wrote a very remarkable article in the Edinburgh Review, in which he answered all the statesmen and politicians who say that Ireland is not now to be treated as a separate entity in matters of finance. He said that the separate consideration of Ireland was recognised in the Act of Union, and to refuse so to regard it, even if defensible, would be in the highest degree cowardly and impolitic. I have no hesitation in saying—I do not mean to speak with disrespect of anybody—that our case has been met by a series of puerilities and inconsistencies, of which their authors ought to be ashamed. Take some of them. The First Lord of the Treasury made a famous speech at Manchester—I do not think he has repeated it in this House—in which he said—

"Where is the grievance? All this taxation is raised from duties on commodities. Stop using these commodities and there is no taxation. It is within the power of the Irish people to put an end to their own grievance."

If this is so, the whole case for Free Trade is gone. Put a tax on food and the right hon. Gentleman would answer in defence of such a policy, "You need not eat bread or bake flour; you have, therefore, no grievance." The case for an income tax is gone too. The taxation of incomes is intended to equalise the difference between the burthens on personal and real property, but if you tax commodities sufficiently, according to the argument of the First Lord of the Treasury, there is no reason for income tax at all, because, if persons choose to buy dutiable commodities, they tax themselves voluntarily. When the right hon. Gentleman says that we need not consume these articles, the answer is, as every man knows who examines his own conscience in the matter, that a man buys articles voluntarily, but pays the duty involuntarily, and perhaps sometimes with the help of the policeman and the excise officer. Then there is another puerile argument. The First Lord of the Treasury says: "Tax Ireland sufficiently, and you remedy all its financial grievances." He was ridiculing the idea that the taxation of Ireland ought to be regulated by the comparative taxable capacity of the country. He says that's all nonsense; if Ireland pays 2½ millions in excess, and if the taxation raised on tea, tobacco, and spirits is increased by that amount, it would be impossible for the poorer classes in Ireland to enjoy these three articles, which they would then cease to consume, and the Irish grievance would disappear, because Ireland would pay nothing if it did not consume any of these articles. Let me present another reductio ad absurdum. There is a better and more effective way of remedying the wrongs of Ireland. Kill the people altogether. Wipe them out. Send over your Nordenfelts, if you can spare any from South Africa, turn them on the Irish people, and all Irish grievances will disappear. Ireland would, according to the argument of the right hon. Gentleman, pay no taxes, but the real fact is that a number of poor people would be deprived of the comforts and necessities of life without any public advantage, and the burden would be changed from a financial into an economic one. Then the First Lord of the Treasury gives us another reductio ad absurdum. He says reduce the duty on tea, tobacco, and spirits, and you may find that the amount paid in taxation will increase. There would be no grievance in that; you would be simply getting tea, tobacco, and spirits cheaper, and if you were paying more duty you would be drinking more tea and spirits and smoking more tobacco at less cost. I now come to the last point made against us. It appears we get a set off. The First Lord admits the findings of the Commission, but he says that there is, after all, no injustice, because there is this set-off. Although I have been accustomed to expect that sort of argument from him and others, he astonished me when he made out in this House that we were getting about £355,000 a year more than we gave. I want to make two or three remarks upon this question of set-off. In the first place I say there can be no such thing according to law. The Act that you yourself here passed in 1817 declared in the most express language that the expenditure out of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom should be made indiscriminately wherever it was required. I have authority here for stating—although I hope I shall not be called upon to read it, because it would delay the House—that the provision in the Act of 1817 regarding indiscriminate expenditure has always up to the present, in the opinion of all your leading statesmen, cut at the very root of the theory of a set-off. You cannot have a set-off according to law. I say, moreover, that theory is intrinsically ludicrous. Suppose it was carried out, then, what are you going to do with Gibraltar? What taxes do you get from Gibraltar? I do not know that you get any at all, but I am perfectly certain that you do not get one thousandth part of what you spend there. Will you, nevertheless, say that, if the inhabitants of Gibraltar complain of over-taxation there is a set-off? Or again, take Portsmouth. You have a tremendous case of a set-off against Portsmouth. Portsmouth must have millions a year spent upon it, and I doubt if it gives you £10,000 a year in taxation. But do you say that set-off applies here? The absurdity of the theory was, however, best demonstrated by the answer of the hon. Member for Plymouth. He says—

"Double the police force of Ireland, and you will remedy Ireland's grievance, because you will give back the money that you take from her."

All the complaint we hear about over-taxation in France, in Italy, in Turkey is all bosh if this theory of a set-off is allowed at all. I have heard question after question asked in this House about the way the Fellaheen of Egypt and the Christian subjects of the Porte in Armenia and elsewhere used to be plundered by excessive taxation. But they get it all back—sometimes in the shape of lead to shoot them, sometimes in the shape of halters to hang them, but at all events they get it back. The money extracted from them is all spent in the country. Every penny that is raised out of Armenia is spent in Armenia. Armenia, therefore, according to the First Lord of the Treasury, has no financial grievance. What compensation is it to the Connemara peasant, who pays for his tobacco and tea a good deal more than his rent every year—what compensation is it to him to hear that the police force in Ireland is doubled? What a great consolation it is to him to hear that the Chief Secretary has spent another £1,000 upon his lodge, or that £100 has been spent in decorating St. Patrick's Hall in Dublin Castle! The thing is too ridiculous to argue. Even if you bought the hay for your troops in Kildare, what would the people gain? They would only get the extra profit which the increased demand for hay would give, that is all. I say that this theory of set-off is therefore not only contrary to law, but is in theory absolutely and intrinsically ludicrous. But it is not merely puerilities, but inconsistencies that are resorted to in order to make up the budget of the First Lord. Sometimes the position taken up is that the place of expenditure is the test; that is when you want to prove a set-off. When you want to establish a set-off you say the place of expenditure benefits, and consequently you have an overwhelming case. There is so much that goes to Ireland, and Ireland gets the benefit of it, and where, you say, is your grievance? But I observe that when you come to find out what is Imperial expenditure, the place of expenditure is not the test at all. For instance, here are items which I think everyone in the House will regard as being of an Imperial character: Volunteers—they are Imperial; War Office—that is Imperial; ordnance factories—that is Imperial; military education, shipbuilding and other things of that kind—all that is Imperial. But it is not Imperial according to your own principle, because all of it is spent in England. If you say that the cost of constabulary is to be charged to the debit of Ireland because the money is spent in Ireland, then I say you ought to deduct the £19,000,000 expended on the items I have pointed out, and debit them to the local expenditure in England. Have some principle, and act upon it; but for Heaven's sake do not go for two principles—one to suit yourselves in the one country, and the other to defeat us in the other country. Let me now take two or three items which in the budget of the First Lord make up the great account against us. There is the constabulary vote. The right hon. Gentleman is quite satisfied to put half of that only to the debit of Ireland. But not even half the constabulary grant ought to be charged against Ireland, because the half which he would now debit us with was expressly made an Imperial charge as compensation for the ruin inflicted on Ireland by the repeal of the Corn Laws. Now you want to take it off the Consolidated Fund to establish, forsooth, this set-off. Then take the Agricultural Grant. The right hon. Gentleman assumes that that is to be treated as local expenditure in Ireland. I deny it. Not a penny of it ought to be treated as Irish local expenditure. It was given as part of a scheme for relieving agricultural distress in the three kingdoms. It was given to Scotland on the same principle; it was given to England on the same principle, and it is plainly an Imperial charge. And, by the way, two years' arrears of this grant is due to us, and I am very much afraid that we may never see the colour of the money, for we have not even got the interest on the insufficient Agricultural Grant. Then the produce of the local taxation licences spent in Ireland is considered again as Imperial expenditure. Why should it be? The very same sort of licences exist in England, and their produce is earmarked for England, and they do not go into the Imperial accounts. The same thing happens in Scotland; they are regarded there as outside the Imperial account. By what audacity can you assume to treat the proceeds of the local taxation licences in Ireland in a different manner? One item really astonished me. The cost of the collection of Imperial taxes comes to about £241,000 a year in Ireland, and actually the First Lord of the Treasury, in order to make up the astonishing budget to which I have already referred, and which makes it appear as if there were an Irish deficit every year of £360,000, debits Ireland with the cost of collecting the revenue, part of which is used for the support of the troops in South Africa. A more preposterous idea I have never heard, and I do not think anybody in his senses ever dreamt of. There are several other items of expenditure which are distinctly Imperial, but which you choose to treat as Irish expenditure in the face of all reason. Take the cost of stationery; you use stationery for your Government offices in Dublin, and you do not buy a sheet of paper in Dublin. In my constituency there are excellent paper mills conducted by a political opponent of mine, a very successful and enterprising business man—a Mr. Drury. Yet you do not get a pound of paper from him; his mills may go idle although he makes excellent paper. You do not buy a single sheet of paper in Ireland, and yet you charge the cost of your stationery to the local expenditure of Ireland, although it is all used for the purposes of the Imperial Government. It is a fraud and a humbug to talk of a set-off at all. Now I have only a few more words to say. We have been met in this matter by puerilities, inconsistencies, and meannesses throughout the whole of this century. You began your series of thefts last century when you increased the Irish debt by palming off all sorts of doubtful characters, whom you dared not provide for in this country, on to our pension list. The Irish pension list, to use the famous words of John Philpot Curran, contained every, description of man, woman, and child, from the exalted excellence of a Hawke or a Rodney to the debased situation of the lady who humbly herself that she may be exalted. Then you endowed Maynooth from Imperial funds, and when you were paying off Maynooth you charged the compensation on to the Irish Church Fund. And then what is it you do? You ask 22½ years' purchase from the Irish tithe-payers, and at the same moment you value your own security—the security of the British Government—for the payment of this annuity at fourteen years' purchase. You robbed Ireland of £370,000, and you robbed Maynooth of £400,000 by this financial trick. And you did not treat the Roman Catholics exceptionally, for there was a grant made to the Presbyterians, your faithful followers in Ireland, and they were treated in the same way—robbed of half their grant, and Ireland robbed of the rest. You are going on in the same way still. The money in the savings banks in Ireland yields to investors only 2½ per cent.—I do not think it gives so much; the Chancellor of the Exchequer will probably correct me—but what have you been doing? You have been lending it through the Board of Works to the Irish local authorities at 3½ per cent. You get the produce of the sale of quit rents in Ireland, and what do you do with that? It is Irish property. A Parliamentary Return contains on its face the unblushing statement that it is used for the purpose of a certain profit to the Treasury of England. Yet the First Lord of the Treasury tells us that England is to treat Ireland because of the past with British generosity and British benevolence. I wish to God she would show it by ceasing to rob us: I for one would prefer to have my own property left to me than to have it taken away and be compensated by your alms. At the same time, I have to say this: that you have robbed us of so much, that you are robbing us still of so much, you are bound to make restitution; and I warn you that, no matter what restitution you make, unless you cease the system of robbing, you will never get any thanks from the Irish people. We do not know what will happen during the next few years, but for my own part I should be untrue to myself and untrue to my constituents and to the interests of my country if I did not say that we regard our case as proved. We are thoroughly convinced that you are robbing us of at least several millions a year; and whatever be the result of this debate in this House, we will go on year after year making this motion and that motion, disturbing your arrangements, and, if necessary, discrediting your Parliament, until we make you stop this system of robbery, which is a disgrace to you, as well as an injury to us. Sir, I beg to move the Amendment.

Mr. Clancy.

Eighth Day.

Mr. Clancy.

Debate adjourned till to-morrow.

Adjourned at Five minutes before
Twelve of the clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Friday, 9th February 1900.

EARL OF MEXBOROUGH.

Report made from the Lord Chancellor, that the right of John Horatio Earl of Mexborough to vote at the elections of Representative Peers for Ireland has been established to the satisfaction of the Lord Chancellor; read, and ordered to lie on the Table.

ADDRESS.

The Queen's Answer to the Address of Tuesday, the 30th of January last, reported, and Address and Answer to be printed and published.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

The LORD CHANCELLOR acquainted the House that the Clerk of the Parliaments had laid upon the Table the Certificates from the Examiners that the Standing Orders applicable to the following Bills have been complied with:—

Aberdeen Police and Improvement.
Airdrie, Coatbridge, and District Water Trust.
Army and Navy Investment Trust.
Aston Manor Tramways.
Baker Street and Waterloo Railway.
Barry Railway (Steam Vessels).
Bedford Gas.
Belfast and County Down Railway.
Bexhill and Rotherfield Railway.
Birmingham Corporation (Stock).
Birmingham (King Edward the Sixth) Schools.
Birmingham University.
Bournemouth Corporation.
Bradford Corporation.
Bray and Enniskerry Railway.
Brewery and Commercial Investment Trust.
Brighton Corporation.
Bristol Corporation.
Bristol Water.
British Gas Light Company (Staffordshire Potteries).
Brompton and Piccadilly Circus Railway.
Buckingham, Towcester, and Metropolitan Junction Railway.
Burnley Corporation.

VOL. LXXVIII. [FOURTH SERIES.]

Bury and District Water (Transfer).
Caledonian Railway.
Charing Cross and Strand Electricity Supply.
Charing Cross, Euston, and Hampstead Railway.
Chelsea Water.
Cheltenham Improvements.
Cheshire Lines Committee.
Church's Patent.
City and South London Railway.
City of London Electric Lighting.
City of London (Various Powers).
Cleethorpes Gas.
Clontarf Urban District Council.
Clyde Navigation.
Colonial Bank.
Commercial Union Assurance Company.
Cork, Bandon, and South Coast Railway.
County of London and Brush Provincial Electric Lighting.
Coventry Corporation.
Cowes Pier.
Crowborough District Water (Gas Transfer).
Croydon Tramways and Improvements.
Crystal Palace Company.
Dearne Valley Railway.
Donegal Railway.
Dorking Water.
Dublin Corporation.
Dublin, Wicklow, and Wexford Railway.
Dundee Harbour.
Durham (County of) Electric Power Supply.
East London Water.
East Shropshire Water.
East Stirlingshire Water.
Edinburgh Corporation.
Edinburgh District Lunacy Board.
Exeter Corporation.
Exmouth and District Water.
Exmouth Urban District Water.
Falkirk and District Water.
Falkirk Corporation.
Farnworth Urban District Council.
Fishguard and Rosslare Railways and Harbours.
Fishguard Water and Gas.
Gas Light and Coke Company.
Gas Light and Coke, Commercial Gas, and South Metropolitan Gas Companies.
Glasgow and South-Western Railway.
Glasgow Building Regulations.
Glastonbury and Street Gas.
Glastonbury Corporation Gas.

Glyncorwg Urban District Council Gas.
 Government Stock and other Securities Investment Company.
 Grantham Gas.
 Great Berkhamstead Water.
 Great Central Railway.
 Great Eastern Railway.
 Great Northern Railway.
 Great Northern Railway (Ireland).
 Great Southern and Western and Waterford and Central Ireland Railway Companies Amalgamation.
 Great Southern and Western and Waterford, Limerick, and Western Railway Companies Amalgamation.
 Great Southern and Western Railway.
 Great Western Railway.
 Great Yarmouth Port and Haven.
 Gun Barrel Proof Act, 1868, Amendment.
 Gwyrfaï Rural District Council Water.
 Halifax Corporation.
 Hamilton Burgh.
 Hartlepool Gas and Water.
 Hastings Corporation.
 Hastings Harbour.
 Hastings Tramways.
 Hemel Hempstead Corporation (Water).
 Higham Ferrers Water.
 Hoyle and West Kirkby Improvement.
 Huddersfield Corporation Tramways.
 Huntingdon Corporation.
 Ilfracombe Improvement.
 Ipswich Corporation Tramways.
 Jarrow and Hebburn Electricity Supply.
 Kingscourt, Keady, and Armagh Railway.
 Kingston-upon-Thames Corporation.
 Kingston-upon-Thames Gas.
 Knott End Railway.
 Lambeth Water.
 Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway.
 Lancashire, Derbyshire, and East Coast Railway.
 Lancashire Electric Power.
 Lancashire Inebriates Acts Board.
 Lancaster Corporation.
 Latimer Road and Acton Railway.
 Lee Conservancy.
 Lincoln Corporation (Tramways).
 Liverpool Corporation.
 Liverpool Overhead Railway.
 London and India Docks Joint Committee.
 London and North-Western Railway.
 London and North-Western Railway (Wales).

London and Saint Katharine Docks and East and West India Dock Companies.
 London and South-Western Railway.
 London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway.
 London County Council (Compulsory Purchase of Land).
 London County Council (General Powers).
 London County Council (Improvements).
 London County Council (Spitalfields Market).
 London Hydraulic Power Company.
 London Sea Water Supply.
 London, Walthamstow, and Epping Forest Railway.
 London Water (Purchase).
 London Water (Welsh Supply).
 Lowestoft Railway.
 Maidenhead Gas.
 Manchester City Railway.
 Manchester and Liverpool Electric Express Railway.
 Manchester Corporation Tramways.
 Manchester Ship Canal.
 Margate Corporation.
 Margate Pier and Harbour.
 Market Weighton Drainage and Navigation.
 Maryport Harbour.
 Menstone Water (Transfer).
 Mersey Docks and Harbour Board.
 Mersey Railway.
 Metropolitan District Railway.
 Metropolitan Water Companies.
 Mid-Kent Water.
 Midland Great Western Railway of Ireland.
 Midland Railway.
 Milford Docks.
 Morecambe Urban District Council (Gas).
 Morley Corporation.
 Motherwell and Bellshill Railway.
 Motherwell Water.
 Mountain Ash Water.
 Muirkirk, Mauchline, and Dalmellington Railways (Abandonment).
 Neath Harbour.
 Newcastle-upon-Tyne Electric Supply.
 Newport Corporation.
 Newport (Monmouthshire) Gas.
 New Russia Company.
 Newtown and Llanllwchaiarn Urban District Gas.
 North British Railway.
 North-Eastern Railway.
 North-Eastern Railway (Steam Vessels).

North Metropolitan Electric Power Supply.
 North Metropolitan Railway and Canal.
 North Warwickshire Water.
 Nottingham Corporation.
 Oldham Corporation.
 Ossett Corporation Gas.
 Ossett Gas.
 Otley Urban District Council Water.
 Paignton Urban District Water.
 Pontefract Park.
 Preston Corporation.
 Purfleet and Gravesend Junction Railway.
 Ramsgate Corporation Improvements.
 Rawmarsh Urban District Council (Tramways).
 Reading Corporation (Tramways).
 Redhill Gas.
 Rhymney Iron Company.
 Rhymney Railway.
 Rickmansworth and Uxbridge Valley Water.
 Rotherham Corporation.
 Rotherhithe and Ratcliffe Tunnel.
 Rugeley Gas.
 St. Alban's Water.
 St. David's Railway (Additional Powers).
 Salford Corporation.
 Scarborough Corporation.
 Scottish American Investment Company.
 Scottish Widows' Fund and Life Assurance Society.
 Sheffield Corporation.
 Sheffield District Railway.
 Southampton Harbour.
 South-Eastern and London, Chatham and Dover Railways.
 South-Eastern Railway.
 South Essex Water.
 South Essex Water Board.
 South Lancashire Tramways.
 South Metropolitan Gas.
 Southport Corporation.
 Southport Extension and Tramways.
 Southport Water.
 South Shields Corporation.
 South Staffordshire Tramways.
 South Wales Electrical Power Distribution.
 Spalding Urban District Council (Water).
 Stockport Corporation Tramways.
 Sunderland Corporation.
 Sutton District Water.
 Taff Vale Railway.

Taunton Corporation.
 Tottenham Urban District Council.
 Tyneside Electric Power.
 Universal Life Assurance Society.
 Vale of Rheidol Light Railway.
 Wakefield Corporation Market.
 Wandsworth and Putney Gas.
 West Bromwich Corporation.
 West Ham Corporation.
 Westgate and Birchington Water.
 Wetherby District Water.
 Whitechapel and Bow Railway.
 Widnes and Runcorn Bridge.
 Wirral Railway.
 Withington Urban District Council.
 Wolverhampton, Essington, and Cannock Chase Junction Railway.
 Wolverhampton Gas.
 Woodbridge District Water.
 Workington Railways and Docks.

And the Certificates that the Standing Orders applicable to the following Bills have not been complied with :—

Airdrie and Coatbridge Tramways.
 County and City of Dublin Electric Lighting.
 Cardiff Corporation.
 Newry, Keady, and Tynan Light Railway.
 Shannon Water and Electric Power.
 Devonport Corporation.

The same were ordered to lie on the Table

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

COMPANIES (WINDING-UP) ACT, 1890.

General Rules made pursuant to Section 26 of the Companies (Winding-Up) Act, 1890, dated 28th December, 1899.

POLLING DISTRICTS (COUNTY OF NORTHUMBERLAND).

Order made by the County Council of Northumberland, dividing into polling districts so much of the Tyneside Parliamentary division of the County of Northumberland as is comprised in the parishes of Camperdown, Longbenton, and Weetslade.

Laid before the House (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table.

LIGHT RAILWAYS ACT, 1896.

I. Orders made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of a light railway—

1. In the county of Essex, from Kelvedon to Coggeshall.
2. In the West Riding of the county of York, from Bradford to Leeds.
3. In the county of Caithness, between Wick and Lybster.
4. In the West Riding of the county of York, in and near the borough of Doncaster.
5. In the county of Kent, between Cranbrook and Tenderden, in extension of the Rother Valley (Light) Railway, and the construction and working of that railway as a light railway.
6. In the county of Lincoln, from Lincoln to Scawby.
7. In the county of Lincoln, from Frodingham and Scunthorpe to Whitton, Winterton, and Winterringham.
8. In the counties of Worcester and Warwick, from Redditch to Astwood Bank.
9. In the county of Stafford, commencing in the parish of Essington and terminating in the parish of Darlaston, with branches.

II. Orders made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade—

1. Amending the Basingstoke and Alton Light Railway Order, 1897.
2. Authorising the Glasgow and South-Western Railway Company to construct and work as a light railway the Cairne Valley Railway, which the said Company have power to construct and work under the Glasgow and South-Western Railway Act, 1897.

Presented (by Command), and ordered to lie on the table.

NEW BILL.

INEBRIATES AMENDMENT (SCOTLAND) BILL [H.L.]

A Bill to amend the Inebriates Acts, 1879 to 1899, for Scotland—Was presented by the Lord Balfour; read 1st; and to be printed. (No. 9.)

House adjourned at half-past Four of the clock, to Monday next, a quarter before Eleven of the clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Friday, 9th February, 1900.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

PRIVATE BILLS [Lords].

Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, that, in respect of the Bills comprised in the List reported by the Chairman of Ways and Means as intended to originate in the House of Lords, they have certified that the Standing Orders have been complied with in the following cases, viz. :—

Army and Navy Investment Trust.
Aston Manor Tramways.
Barry Railway (Steam Vessels).
Bexhill and Rotherfield Railway.
Birmingham Corporation (Stock).
Birmingham (King Edward the Sixth) Schools.
Birmingham University.
Bournemouth Corporation.
Brewery and Commercial Investment Trust.
Bristol Water.
Burnley Corporation.
Bury and District Water (Transfer).
Caledonian Railway.
Church's Patent.
Cleethorpes Gas.
Clyde Navigation.
Commercial Union Assurance Company.
Cork, Bandon and South Coast Railway.
Cowes Pier.
Crystal Palace Company.
Dearne Valley Railway.
Donegal Railway.

Dorking Water.
 Dublin, Wicklow, and Wexford Railway.
 Dundee Harbour.
 East Shropshire Water.
 East Stirlingshire Water.
 Edinburgh Corporation.
 Edinburgh District Lunacy Board.
 Exmouth and District Water.
 Exmouth Urban District Water.
 Falkirk and District Water.
 Falkirk Corporation.
 Fishguard and Rosslare Railways and Harbours.
 Fishguard Water and Gas.
 Glasgow and South Western Railway.
 Glasgow Building Regulations.
 Glyncoirwg Urban District Council Gas.
 Government Stock and other Securities Investment Company.
 Great Berkhamstead Water.
 Great Central Railway.
 Great Southern and Western and Waterford and Central Ireland Railway Companies Amalgamation.
 Great Southern and Western and Waterford, Limerick, and Western Railway Companies Amalgamation.
 Great Southern and Western Railway.
 Gun Barrel Proof Act, 1868, Amendment.
 Gwyrfai Rural District Council Water.
 Hemel Hempsted Corporation (Water).
 Higham Ferrers Water.
 Ipswich Corporation Tramways.
 Kingston-upon-Thames Corporation.
 Kingston-upon-Thames Gas.
 Lancashire Inebriates Acts Board.
 Lincoln Corporation (Tramways).
 Liverpool Overhead Railway.
 London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway.
 London Hydraulic Power Company.
 London Sea Water Supply.
 Manchester Corporation Tramways.
 Manchester Ship Canal.
 Margate Corporation.
 Margate Pier and Harbour.
 Menstone Water (Transfer).
 Mersey Docks and Harbour Board.
 Mersey Railway.
 Midland Great Western Railway of Ireland.
 Milford Docks.
 Morley Corporation.
 Motherwell and Bellshill Railway.
 Motherwell Water.
 Mountain Ash Water.

Muirkirk, Mauchline, and Dalmellington Railways (Abandonment).
 Neath Harbour.
 Newport Corporation.
 Newport (Monmouthshire) Gas.
 New Russia Company.
 Newtown and Llanillwchaearn Urban District Gas.
 North British Railway.
 North Eastern Railway.
 North Eastern Railway (Steam Vessels).
 Otley Urban District Council Water.
 Paignton Urban District Water.
 Preston Corporation.
 Purfleet and Gravesend Junction Railway.
 Ramsgate Corporation Improvements.
 Rawmarsh Urban District Council (Tramways).
 Rhymney Iron Company.
 Rhymney Railway.
 Rotherham Corporation.
 Rotherhithe and Ratcliff Tunnel.
 Salford Corporation.
 Scottish American Investment Company.
 Scottish Widows' Fund and Life Assurance Society.
 Sheffield Corporation.
 Sheffield District Railway.
 Southampton Harbour.
 South Eastern and London, Chatham, and Dover Railways.
 South Eastern Railway.
 South Essex Water.
 South Essex Water Board.
 South Shields Corporation.
 South Staffordshire Tramways.
 Sunderland Corporation.
 Taff Vale Railway.
 Universal Life Assurance Society.
 Westgate and Birchington Water.
 Whitechapel and Bow Railway.
 Wirral Railway.
 Withington Urban District Council.
 Workington Railways and Docks.

And that they have certified that the Standing Orders have not been complied with in the following case, viz. :—

Cardiff Corporation.

PRIVATE BILL PETITIONS (STANDING ORDERS NOT COMPLIED WITH).

Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Reports from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, that in the case of the Petitions for the following

Bills, the Standing Orders have not been complied with, viz. :—

Airdrie and Coatbridge Tramways Bill.
County and City of Dublin Electric Lighting Bill.

Devonport Corporation Bill.

Newry, Keady, and Tynan Light Railway Bill.

Shannon Water and Electric Power
Bill.

Ordered, that the Reports be referred to the Select Committee on Standing Orders.

PRIVATE BILL PETITIONS [Lords] (STANDING ORDERS NOT COMPLIED WITH).

Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table
Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, that, in the case of the Petition for the following Bill, originating in the Lords, the Standing Orders have not been complied with, viz. :—

Cardiff Corporation Bill [Lords].

Ordered, That the Report be referred to the Select Committee on Standing Orders.

ABERDEEN POLICE AND IMPROVE-MENT.]

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Bryce and Mr. Pirie.

AIRDRIE, COATBRIDGE, AND DISTRICT WATER TRUST.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. John Wilson (Falkirk), Mr.
Douglas, and Mr. M'Killop.

BAKER STREET AND WATERLOO RAILWAY.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Sir John William Maclure, Mr.
Halsey, and Mr. Bill.

BEDFORD GAS.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Pym and Mr. Thornton.

BELFAST AND COUNTY DOWN RAILWAY.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Blakiston-Houston and Mr.
M'Cartan.

BRADFORD CORPORATION.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Greville, Mr. Wanklyn, and Mr.
Flower.

BRAY AND ENNISKERRY RAILWAY.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Harrington and Mr. Clancy.

BRIGHTON CORPORATION.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Loader, Mr. Vernon-Wentworth, and Sir Henry Fletcher.

BRITISH GAS LIGHT COMPANY (STAFFORDSHIRE POTTERIES).

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Aird and Mr. Skewes-Cox.

BROMPTON AND PICCADILLY CIRCUS RAILWAY.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Alban Gibbs and Mr. Whitmore.

BUCKINGHAM, TOWCESTER, AND METROPOLITAN JUNCTION RAILWAY.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Sir John William Maclure, Sir
Benjamin Stone, and Mr. Carlile.

CHARING CROSS AND STRAND ELECTRICITY SUPPLY.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Seton-Karr and Mr. Faithfull Begg.

CHARING CROSS, EUSTON, AND HAMPSTEAD RAILWAY.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Bonsor and Mr. Lawson Walton.

CHELSEA WATER.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Boulnois and Captain Bowles.

CHESHIRE LINES COMMITTEE.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Henderson and Mr. Jackson.

CITY AND SOUTH LONDON RAILWAY.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Kimber and Mr. Bond.

CITY OF LONDON ELECTRIC LIGHTING.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Kimber and Mr. Paulton.

CITY OF LONDON (VARIOUS POWERS).

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Sir Reginald Hanson and Sir Horatio Davies.

CLONTARF URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Carson, Mr. J. H. M. Campbell, Captain Phillpotts, and Mr. William Moore.

COLONIAL BANK.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Hoare and Mr. Alban Gibbs.

COUNTY OF LONDON AND BRUSH PROVINCIAL ELECTRIC LIGHTING.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Boulnois and Sir Weetman Pearson.

COVENTRY CORPORATION.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Charles Murray and Mr. Newdigate.

CROYDON TRAMWAYS AND IMPROVEMENTS.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Sir James Fergusson and Mr. Bonsor.

DUBLIN CORPORATION.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Hemphill, Mr. John Redmond, Mr. Field, Mr. Harrington, Mr. T. M. Healy, and Mr. Carew.

DURHAM (COUNTY OF) ELECTRIC POWER SUPPLY.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Atherley-Jones and Mr. Samuel Evans.

EAST LONDON WATER.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Colonel Lockwood, Mr. Banbury, and Mr. Boulnois.

EXETER CORPORATION.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Sir Edward Clarke and Sir Albert Rollit.

FARNWORTH URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Colonel Mellor and Mr. Cawley.

GAS LIGHT AND COKE, COMMERCIAL GAS, AND SOUTH METROPOLITAN GAS COMPANIES.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. James Stewart and Mr. John Burns.

GAS LIGHT AND COKE COMPANY.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Boulnois and Mr. Aird.

GLASTONBURY AND STREET GAS.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Hobhouse and Sir Alexander Acland-Hood.

GLASTONBURY CORPORATION GAS.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Dickinson and Mr. Wodehouse.

GRANTHAM GAS.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Lopes and Mr. Younger.

GREAT EASTERN RAILWAY.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Colonel Lockwood, Mr. Strutt, and Mr. Penn.

GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Jackson and Mr. Fison.

GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY (IRELAND).

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Sir James Haslett and Mr. James H. Campbell.

GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Sir William Wills and Mr. Llewellyn.

GREAT YARMOUTH PORT AND HAVEN.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Sir Harry Bullard and Sir John Colomb.

HALIFAX CORPORATION.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Billson and Mr. Arnold.

HAMILTON BURGH.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Caldwell and Mr. John Wilson (Falkirk).

HARTLEPOOL GAS AND WATER.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Sir Thomas Richardson and Mr. Richardson.

HASTINGS CORPORATION.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Lucas-Shadwell and Mr. Brookfield.

HASTINGS HARBOUR.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Lucas-Shadwell and Mr. Brookfield.

HASTINGS TRAMWAYS.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Lucas-Shadwell and Mr. Brookfield.

HOYLAKE AND WEST KIRBY IMPROVEMENT.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Colonel Cotton-Jodrell, Sir Elliott Lees, and Mr. Yerburch.

HUDDERSFIELD CORPORATION TRAMWAYS.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Sir James Woodhouse, Sir James Kitson, and Sir Albert Rollit.

HUNTINGDON CORPORATION.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Smith-Barry and Mr. Fellowes.

ILFRACOMBE IMPROVEMENT.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Sir Cameron Gull and Mr. Lambert.

JARROW AND HEBBURN ELECTRICITY SUPPLY.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Cruddas and Mr. Joseph A. Pease.

KINGSCOURT, KEADY, AND ARMAGH RAILWAY.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. T. M. Healy, Mr. John Redmond, Mr. Macaleese, and Mr. Daly.

KNOTT END RAILWAY.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Sir John William Maclure, Mr. Firbank, and Mr. T. M. Healy.

LAMBETH WATER.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Lyttelton, Mr. Cripps, and Mr. Talbot.

LANCASHIRE AND YORKSHIRE RAILWAY.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Sir William Hornby and Mr. Lees Knowles.

LANCASHIRE, DERBYSHIRE, AND EAST COAST RAILWAY.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Bainbridge, Mr. Thomas Bayley, Mr. Oldroyd, Mr. Perks, and Mr. Pollock.

LANCASHIRE ELECTRIC POWER.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Macdona and Mr. James Bailey.

LANCASHIRE CORPORATION.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Colonel Foster and Mr. Tomlinson.

LATIMER ROAD AND ACTON RAILWAY.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Oldroyd and Mr. Lawson Walton.

LEE CONSERVANCY.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Sir Frederick Dixon-Hartland, Mr. Evelyn Cecil, and Mr. Courtenay Warner.

LIVERPOOL CORPORATION.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Warr and Mr. Charles M'Arthur.

LONDON AND INDIA DOCKS JOINT COMMITTEE.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Bonsor and Mr. Cripps.

LONDON AND NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Sir William Houldsworth, Colonel Lockwood, and Mr. Macartney.

LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY (WALES).

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Sir William Houldsworth, Colonel Lockwood, and Mr. Macartney.

LONDON AND ST. KATHARINE DOCKS AND EAST AND WEST INDIA DOCK COMPANIES.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Bonsor and Mr. Cripps.

LONDON AND SOUTH-WESTERN RAILWAY.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Beach, Sir Barrington Simeon, and Colonel Williams.

LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL (COMPUL-SORY PURCHASE OF LAND).

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. James Stuart and Mr. John
Burns.

LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL (GENERAL POWERS).

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. James Stuart and Mr. Whitmore.

LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL (IMPROVEMENTS).

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. James Stuart and Mr. Whitmore.

LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL (SPITAL-FIELDS MARKET).

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. James Stuart and Mr. John Burns.

LONDON, WALTHAMSTOW, AND EPPING FOREST RAILWAY.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Lafone and Mr. Wanklyn.

LONDON WATER (PURCHASE).

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. James Stuart and Mr. John Burns.

LONDON WATER (WELSH SUPPLY).

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. James Stuart and Mr. John Burns.

LOWESTOFT RAILWAY.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Lyttelton and Mr. Clough.

MAIDENHEAD GAS.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Palmer and Commander Young.

MANCHESTER AND LIVERPOOL ELEC-TRIC EXPRESS RAILWAY.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Sir James Fergusson, Mr. W. F.
Lawrence, Mr. Schwann, Sir John Willox,
Mr. Galloway, and Mr. Warr.

MANCHESTER CITY RAILWAY.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Sir James Fergusson, Mr. Schwann, and Mr. Disraeli.

MARKET WEIGHTON DRAINAGE AND NAVIGATION.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Grant Lawson and Mr. Wilson-Todd.

METROPOLITAN DISTRICT RAILWAY.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Sir Charles Dalrymple and Mr.
Aird.

METROPOLITAN WATER COMPANIES.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Boulnois and Colonel Lockwood.

MID-KENT WATER.

Petition and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Tomlinson, General Goldsworthy, and Mr. Aird.

MIDLAND RAILWAY.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Sir Frederick Mappin and Mr.
Allison.

MORECAMBE URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL (GAS).

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Colonel Foster and Mr. Tomlinson.

NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE ELECTRIC SUPPLY.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Burt, Mr. William Allan, and Mr. Joseph A. Pease.

NORTH METROPOLITAN ELECTRIC POWER SUPPLY.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Atherley-Jones and Mr. Samuel Evans.

NORTH METROPOLITAN RAILWAY AND CANAL COMPANY.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Sir Albert Rollit and Mr. Aird.

NORTH WARWICKSHIRE WATER.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Sir Joseph Leese and Sir Harry Bullard.

NOTTINGHAM CORPORATION.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Bond and Mr. Yoxall.

OLDHAM CORPORATION.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Emmott and Mr. Runciman.

OSSETT CORPORATION GAS.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Alfred Hutton and Mr. Oldroyd.

OSSETT GAS.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Jackson, Mr. Fison, and Mr. Aird.

PONTEFRACT PARK.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Nussey, Sir John Austin, and Colonel Gunter.

READING CORPORATION (TRAMWAYS).

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Palmer and Sir Albert Rollit.

REDHILL GAS.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Sir Alexander Acland-Hood and Mr. Bonsor.

RICKMANSWORTH AND UXBRIDGE VALLEY WATER.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Alban Gibbs and Mr. Aird.

RUGELEY GAS.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Heath and Mr. Henderson.

ST. ALBAN'S WATER.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Hudson and Mr. Vicary Gibbs.

ST. DAVID'S RAILWAY (ADDITIONAL POWERS).

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Philipps, General Laurie, and Mr. David Randell.

SCARBOROUGH CORPORATION.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Beckett and Mr. Rickett.

SOUTH LANCASHIRE TRAMWAYS.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Sir Archibald Willox and Mr. Brigg.

SOUTH METROPOLITAN GAS.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Banbury and Mr. Woodall.

SOUTHPORT CORPORATION.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Sir George Pilkington and Sir Joseph Leese.

SOUTHPORT EXTENSION AND TRAMWAYS.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Sir George Pilkington and Sir Joseph Leese.

SOUTHPORT WATER.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Kenyon and Colonel Mellor.

SOUTH WALES ELECTRICAL POWER DISTRIBUTION.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Samuel Evans and Mr. Alfred Thomas.

SPALDING URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL (WATER).

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Pollock, Sir Joseph Leese, and Mr. Randell.

STOCKPORT CORPORATION TRAM-WAYS.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. George Whiteley and Mr. Melville.

TAUNTON CORPORATION.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Colonel Welby and Sir Alexander Acland-Hood.

TOTTENHAM URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Howard and Sir Frederick Dixon-Hartland.

TYNESIDE ELECTRIC POWER.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Joseph A. Pease, Mr. Cruddas, Sir James Joicey, and Mr. William Allan.

VALE OF RHEIDOL LIGHT RAILWAY.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Vaughan-Davies and Colonel Pryce-Jones.

WAKEFIELD CORPORATION MARKET.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Pickard and Mr. Oldroyd.

WANDSWORTH AND PUTNEY GAS.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Kimber and Sir John Colomb.

WEST BROMWICH CORPORATION.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Ernest Spencer, Sir Alfred Hickman, Sir Henry Meysey-Thompson, Mr. Brooke Robinson, and Mr. Parkes.

WEST HAM CORPORATION.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Ernest Gray and Major Rasch.

WETHERBY DISTRICT WATER.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Colonel Gunter and Mr. Lyttelton.

WIDNES AND RUNCORN BRIDGE.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Colonel Cotton-Jodrell and Sir John Brunner.

WOLVERHAMPTON, ESSINGTON, AND CANNOCK CHASE JUNCTION RAILWAY.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Sir Alfred Hickman, Colonel Milward, and Mr. Warner.

WOLVERHAMPTON GAS.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Staveley Hill and Sir Alfred Hickman.

WOODBIDGE DISTRICT WATER.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Captain Pretyma and Mr. Moulton.

AIRDRIE AND COATBRIDGE TRAMWAYS.

Petition for Bill ; referred to the Select Committee on Standing Orders.

COUNTY AND CITY OF DUBLIN ELECTRIC LIGHTING.

Petition for Bill ; referred to the Select Committee on Standing Orders.

DEVONPORT CORPORATION.

Petition for Bill ; referred to the Select Committee on Standing Orders.

NEWRY, KEADY, AND TYNAN LIGHT RAILWAY.

Petition for Bill ; referred to the Select Committee on Standing Orders.

SHANNON WATER AND ELECTRIC POWER.

Petition for Bill ; referred to the Select Committee on Standing Orders.

MILITARY LANDS PROVISIONAL ORDER.

Bill to confirm a Provisional Order of the Secretary of State, under the Military Lands Act, 1892, ordered to be brought in by Mr. Wyndham and Mr. Powell-Williams.

MILITARY LANDS PROVISIONAL ORDER BILL.

"To confirm a Provisional Order of the Secretary of State, under the Military Lands Act, 1892," presented accordingly, and read the first time ; to be referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, and to be printed. [Bill 71.]

LIGHT RAILWAYS ACT, 1896.

Copy presented,—of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of a Light Railway in the county of Essex from Kelvedon to Coggeshall (Coggeshall Light Railway Order, 1899) [by Command] ; to lie upon the Table.

Copy presented,—of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of Light Railways in the county of Lincoln from Frodingham and Scunthorpe to Whitton Winterton and Winteringham (North Lindsey Light Railways Order, 1900) [by Command] ; to lie upon the Table.

Copy presented,—of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of a Light Railway in the county of Lincoln from Lincoln to Scawby (North Lincolnshire Light Railway Order, 1900) [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

Copy presented,—of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of a Light Railway in the West Riding of the county of York from Bradford to Leeds (Bradford and Leeds Light Railway Order, 1899) [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

Copy presented,—of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of Light Railways in the West Riding of the county of York, in and near the borough of Doncaster (Doncaster Corporation Light Railways Order, 1899) [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

Copy presented,—of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of Light Railways in the counties of Worcester and Warwick, from Redditch to Astwood Bank (Redditch and District Light Railways Order, 1900 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

Copy presented,—of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of a Light Railway in the county of Stafford, commencing in the parish of Essington and terminating in the parish of Darlaston, with branches (Essington and Ashmore Light Railway Order, 1900) [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

Copy presented,—of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of Light Railways in the county of Kent, between Cranbrook and Tenterden, in extension of the Rother Valley (Light) Railway, and the construction and working of that Railway as a Light Railway (Cranbrook and Tenterden Light Railway Order, 1899) [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

Copy presented,—of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of a Light Railway in the county of Caithness, between Wick and Lybster (Wick and Lybster Light Railway Order, 1899) [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

Copy presented,—of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the Glasgow and South-Western Railway Company to construct and work as a Light Railway the Cairn Valley Railway which the said company have power to construct and work under the Glasgow and South-Western Railway Act, 1897 (Glasgow and South-Western Railway (Cairn Valley Light Railway) Order, 1899) [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

Copy presented,—of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, amending the Basingstoke and Alton Light Railway Order, 1897 (Basingstoke and Alton Light Railway (Amendment) Order, 1900) [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

PETITIONS.

GROUND RENTS (TAXATION BY LOCAL AUTHORITIES).

Petition from Winnington, in favour; to lie upon the Table.

LOCAL AUTHORITIES' SERVANTS' SUPERANNUATION.

Petition from Edmonton, for alteration of Law; to lie upon the Table.

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS (IRELAND) BILL.

Petition from Belfast, in favour; to lie upon the Table.

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS ON SUNDAY BILL.

Petitions, in favour, from Stamford; and Lavenham; to lie upon the Table.

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS TO CHILDREN BILL.

Petition from Hull, in favour; to lie upon the Table.

TOWN COUNCILS (SCOTLAND) BILL.

Petition from Kilrenny, in favour; to lie upon the Table.

*RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.COMPANIES (WINDING-UP) ACT, 1890.

Copy presented,—of General Rules made pursuant to Section 26 of the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, dated 28th December, 1899 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

POLLING DISTRICTS (NORTHUMBERLAND).

Copy presented,—of Order made by the County Council of Northumberland, dividing into polling districts so much of the Tyneside Parliamentary Division of the county of Northumberland as is comprised in the parishes of Camperdown, Long Benton, and Weetslade [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

NAVY ESTIMATES, 1900-1901.

Estimates presented,—for the year 1900-1901, with Explanation of Differences [by Command]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 41.]

ROYAL UNIVERSITY OF IRELAND.

Copy presented,—of Eighteenth Report of the Royal University of Ireland, being for the year 1899 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

AGED DESERVING POOR (DEPARTMENTAL COMMITTEE).

Copy presented,—of Report of the Departmental Committee on the financial aspects of the proposals made by the Select Committee of the House of Commons of 1899 about the Aged Deserving Poor, with Appendices [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

*QUESTIONS.SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—CONTRABAND OF WAR—RIGHT OF SEARCH—THE "HERZOG."

MR. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs is he aware that the boarding and prize officers of Her Majesty's ship "Thetis," which detained the German ship "Herzog" on suspicion of carrying contraband of war, neither broke bulk nor made any search into or examination of the "Herzog's" cargo; what was the nature of the summary search which is alleged to have taken place, by whom was it made, and in virtue of what authority; was it made before the "Herzog" was released by order of Her Majesty's Government, or after the release, and when and where was it made; and did those who conducted it examine the boxes marked "Macaroni," which there is reason to believe contained rifles, and did they examine any other part of the cargo.

*THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS (MR. BRODRICK, Surrey, Guildford): Bulk was not broken, nor could it properly be broken except under orders from a prize court. The reports received show that an examination of the papers on board relating to the cargo was made by the officers of Her Majesty's ship "Thetis" at sea on the 3rd of January. It was made before the ship was released. The boxes mentioned were not examined, but there is no reason to suppose that they contained rifles, as none were found at Lorenzo Marques, where a careful examination of the ship's cargo took place.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES: By whom was it examined at Lorenzo Marques?

[No answer was given.]

MR. GIBSON BOWLES: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs did the Marshal of the Prize Court at Durban refuse to take charge of the German steamer "Herzog" when the prize officer of H.M.S. "Thetis," which had detained and brought her in, tendered her to the Prize Court; was this refusal a consequence of any communication or order from Her Majesty's Government; if so, on what ground was such communication or order given; if not, can he state on what ground the refusal of the Marshal to take charge of the prize was based; and, in case he is not able to state this, will he make inquiry.

*MR. BRODRICK: The Marshal's refusal to take charge of the "Herzog" was not based on any orders received from Her Majesty's Government, but on the fact that the vessel was not yet in harbour.

PROPERTY IN THE SOUTH AFRICAN REPUBLICS.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies can he explain the scope and effect of the notice issued by Sir Alfred Milner, High Commissioner for South Africa, on 26th January, 1900, to the effect that Her Majesty's Government will not recognise as valid any forfeiture, charge, fine, encumbrance, conveyance, transfer, or transmission in respect of property situate in the territories of the South African Republic or the Orange Free State which may be declared, charged, levied, created, made, or carried into effect by the governments of those countries subsequent to the outbreak of war; is the word governments intended to include the legislative body, and also the judicial authorities of the two States mentioned, or only their executive governments; does the notice affect transfers of property made by the subjects of the South African Republic or the Orange Free State as between themselves; does it affect transfers of property made by British subjects as between themselves; does it affect transfers of property made between themselves by subjects of Foreign States other than the South African Republic or the Orange Free State, or between such foreign subjects and British subjects; is he aware of any precedent for a notice during war by one belligerent State declaring invalid the executive, legislative, or judicial acts of the other belligerent State in respect of property situate within its own territories to be invalid; and is it the intention of Her Majesty's Government to prosecute the war until the invalidity of the acts contemplated by the notice is recognised by the two States.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES (Mr. J. CHAMBERLAIN, Birmingham, W.): Her Majesty's Government has had reason to believe that it was the intention of the Republican Governments to impose burdens which it would be impossible to meet upon property within their territories owned by British subjects and the subjects of other Powers with the object of confiscating such property. It would be impossible for Her Majesty's Government to countenance such confiscation at the termination of the war, whether carried out by an Act of the Executive or under colour of legislation empowering the courts to declare such forfeiture. The text of the notice shows that it has no reference to transactions between individuals. It is not desirable to enter into a discussion of the points raised in questions 6 and 7.

SIR ALFRED MILNER'S STAFF.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL (Donegal, S.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies to what position on the staff of Sir Alfred Milner has Mr. F. H. Wilson, legal assistant of the Colonial Office, been appointed; has Mr. Wilson been appointed in an advising capacity to Sir Alfred Milner as Governor of the Cape or as High Commissioner; has Mr. Wilson's appointment been recommended or approved by the Cabinet of Cape Colony; and whether, seeing that the legal advisers to the High Commissioners of South Africa have hitherto been selected from the Cape Bar on the recommendation of the Prime Minister of Cape Colony, will he explain on what grounds has there been a departure from this practice.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: In view of the pressure of work in the High Commissioner's office, Sir A. Milner requested the assistance of an additional staff-officer with legal experience. Mr. Wilson will give general assistance to the High Commissioner, and his presence will in no way affect the constitutional relations between the Governor and the Cape Ministry.

BRITISH COLONIAL ARMAMENTS AT THE OUTBREAK OF WAR.

MR. HEDDERWICK (Wick Burghs): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War how many fort guns were in Cape Colony and Natal prior to the outbreak of hostilities; what was their calibre and class; and whether any of them have been used in the present war.

*THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR (Mr. WYNDHAM, Dover): None of the guns in the fortresses of Cape Colony and Natal which were there before the war have been used during the campaign. It is not in the public interest to state the armaments of these forts.

PROPORTION OF ARTILLERY STRENGTH.

COLONEL WELBY (Taunton): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether he can state how many Royal Horse and Field Artillery guns are now in South Africa per thousand of the troops there; calculating the per thousand on the same basis as the guns of mobilised German Army Corps; their proportion to the three arms, trains, columns, and services employed in the field, and not at the base.

*MR. WYNDHAM: Even if it were possible, it would be inexpedient to give the distribution of troops in South Africa at the present time. My statement referred to the immediate future. I said that the number of field guns in or proceeding to South Africa will give a Continental percentage in the fighting line, and by that I mean a proportion of five guns to every thousand sabres and bayonets.

"MILITARY AUTHORITIES."

*SIR JOHN COLOMB (Great Yarmouth): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War if he will explain and define the exact meaning and limits of the official phrase, "the advice of the military authorities"; whether that phrase is to be taken to mean in general application the specific and particular advice or opinion of the Commander-in-Chief for the time being for which he is alone responsible, or whether it embraces advice and opinion given by other military officers not necessarily coinciding with that of the Commander-in-Chief; and whether that phrase excludes or includes the opinion or advice of political and civil officials of the War Office.

*MR. WYNDHAM: "Military authorities" is not an official term. It does not occur in any Order in Council or other official document. Its meaning and limits are, therefore, not defined. If they have ever seemed obscure the fault must have rested with the user of the phrase—probably myself—for it ought to have been obvious from the context that the step in question was taken on the advice of military and not of political and civil officials. If used in connection with important questions of policy it would point to the status of the Commander-in-Chief and Army Board as defined by Order in Council. If used in connection with minor executive subjects or with movements in the field it would point to the military officer or officers charged with their conduct.

*SIR J. COLOMB: My question was not directed to any official document. I wished to know what the hon. Gentleman himself means.

*MR. WYNDHAM: That is what I have endeavoured to explain. When speaking of great questions of policy I refer to the Commander-in-Chief and Army Board, in a matter relating to a district the general officer commanding in that district, and in relation to an action taken in the field the general commanding the troops there.

LORD IVEAGH'S AMBULANCE CORPS.

MR. T. M. HEALY (Louth, N.): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether every member of Lord Iveagh's ambulance corps had to sign an agreement that he would become a combatant if called on; and whether in any of the foreign ambulance corps with the Boers such a condition had been insisted on.

*MR. WYNDHAM: Nothing is known of this at the War Office.

MR. T. M. HEALY: It is a very good example for Russia.

VOLUNTEER RECRUITS.

MR. SAMUEL SMITH (Flintshire): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether the Government are placing obstacles in the way of obtaining recruits for Volunteer regiments by requiring that the expense of all members above the number allowed by Government shall be borne by the corps; and whether, in view of the present strong desire to enlist, and the exigencies of the war, the Government can see their way to relax this regulation.

*MR. WYNDHAM: It has already been announced that facilities will be afforded for men to join the Volunteer force in excess of the present establishments. Regulations on the subject will shortly be issued, and I shall refer to it in the statement which I shall make to the House, I hope on Monday.

CANADIAN MEDICAL CONTINGENT.

GENERAL LAURIE (Pembroke and Haverfordwest): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War, as it appears from the published telegram, No. 61, of Secretary of State for Colonies to Governor General of Canada, dated 23rd October, 1899, that the Secretary of State for War could only accept Canadian military medical officers and trained female nurses for service with the Canadian contingent, as British troops can be legally only attended by surgeons registered in the United Kingdom and nurses belonging to the Army Reserve, and as Canadian troops accompanied by Canadian military surgeons and nurses are now serving at the front side by side with their comrades of the British Regular Service, whether he will take steps to remove the legal prohibition which prevents these Canadian and other colonial military surgeons from rendering medical assistance to their British comrades.

*MR. WYNDHAM: The Medical Act of 1858 prohibits the appointment as Army surgeon of a practitioner not registered in the United Kingdom; but it does not prevent a non-registered surgeon from rendering assistance under the orders of the Medical Staff. The general question of reciprocity with the colonies as regards medical qualifications is too broad a question for the War Office to deal with.

TREATMENT OF INVALIDED SOLDIERS —THE "SUMATRA."

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether two officers and 128 men invalided home from South Africa disembarked from the deck of the "Sumatra," on 7th December last, on the quay of the Royal Albert Docks, and were left for upwards of an hour in the rain in their khaki; whether some of the invalids who were landed amid these surroundings were victims of ague, consumption, and dysentery, while several had become insane from the hardships of the war; and will he state what steps he proposes to take in the matter.

*MR. WYNDHAM: The "Sumatra" arrived on the 6th December, at 12.30; being one and a half hours before the time at which the steamship company had notified that she was to be expected. The ambulances arrived at 2 p.m., and the invalids who had remained on board were landed at 3 p.m., and placed immediately in a shed close by on the wharf. They all had great coats on and were never left in the rain. They were then removed without unnecessary delay in ambulances to Herbert Hospital, Woolwich. There were on board six cases of insanity, three cases of dysentery, one of tubercle, and one of phthisis, the remainder being of ordinary character.

SEPARATION ALLOWANCES.

MR. HAMMOND (Carlow): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether he is aware that the Carlow Militia, a battalion of the King's Royal Rifles recently embodied, is now stationed in Templemore; that prior to their departure from Carlow last month, the men of this corps were informed that in their absence their families would be entitled to a separation allowance on the scale of 10d. per week for a wife, and 2d. per week for each child; and as the families of many of these men have been placed in a position of distress and destitution owing to the absence of their breadwinners and to the non-payment of the promised allowance, if he would have the goodness to inquire into the matter, and endeavour to arrange that these people shall be relieved by the regular weekly payment to them of the allowance to which they would appear to be entitled.

*MR. WYNDHAM: The rates of the allowances referred to are daily rates and not weekly rates, as stated in the question. Separation allowances are payable monthly in advance. A telegram has been sent to Ireland on the subject of the hon. Member's question, and if any mistake has been made, it will be set right at once. I may add that the rate of separation allowance for the wife is not 10d. a week, but 13d. a day.

CONTRACTS FOR HORSES.

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN (Kilkenny): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether orders to buy horses suitable for the various branches of the Army have ceased in Ireland, while extensive orders have been issued for the purchase of horses for the British Army in continental countries; and whether he will inquire if all the requisite horses can be procured in Ireland at short notice, and order that they shall be purchased there.

*THE FINANCIAL SECRETARY TO THE WAR OFFICE (Mr. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS, Birmingham, S.): Trained horses of suitable ages are very difficult to obtain in Ireland, and it is impossible to purchase there all the horses that are required. It has therefore been found necessary to buy a few thoroughly broken horses abroad and others in the Colonies. A large number of cobs have been purchased in Argentina, as they are very hardy, are accustomed to live on grass, and are best suited to the mounted infantry serving in South Africa; they are also very cheap. Horses are still being purchased in Ireland, and the number purchased from home sources for South Africa is much larger than the number obtained elsewhere—not taking cobs into account.

BOOT CONTRACTS.

MR. CHANNING (Northamptonshire, E.): I beg to ask the Financial Secretary to the War Office, what has been the saving per pair of boots on the purchase of Indian boots for the South Africa forces as compared with the average price of English made Army boots; whether the leather of which Indian boots are made is thinner than the leather used for Army boots in England, and there is practically no heavy sole leather used in India at all; whether the Indian boots ordered have been, or will be, subjected to the examination and tests usually applied at Pimlico to English made boots; and whether the large orders for English made boots for the Army, amounting to about 300,000 pairs, have only been given out in the past few days, after the strong protests made a few weeks ago.

*MR. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS: I have already informed the hon. Member, in answer to his question of yesterday, that the price paid for the Indian boots referred to was about equal to the lowest price paid in England. Price, however, did not govern the transaction. Speedy supply formed the only element. Boots made in India to the pattern of the home Government closely resemble in thickness of sole and upper the English made article. The Indian boots, as I have already told the hon. Member, were subjected to strict and proper inspection in India before being shipped. I do not know what "strong protests" the hon. Member refers to in the last paragraph of his question, but he may rest assured that the necessities of the Service alone caused the issue of recent orders.

MR. CHANNING: Have not orders for 300,000 pairs of boots been recently issued?

*MR. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS: I cannot give the exact figures, but undoubtedly large orders for boots have recently been issued, but not in consequence of any protest such as my hon. friend refers to.

MR. CHANNING: I shall draw attention to this matter on the Estimates.

RIFLE RANGES.

MR. RADCLIFFE COOKE (Hereford): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether, of the nineteen new ranges that have been constructed or approved since the date of the return of the ranges closed since 1890, which was presented to the House in June last, those that have been constructed include any which in the said return were described as approved but not then constructed; and whether the nineteen new ranges should be added to the total of 186 new ranges mentioned in the return, making the total of new ranges to date in Great Britain 205, and the total of ranges closed 536.

*MR. WYNDHAM: The answer to the first paragraph is in the negative. The figures stand as stated in the second.

THE SIERRA LEONE CAMPAIGN —MEDALS.

MR. HEDDERWICK: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether a medal has been struck in commemoration of the operations in the Protectorate of Sierra Leone to put down the insurrection consequent upon the partial imposition of the Hut Tax; and, if so, whether the medal will be given to any of the natives in the Government employment who were reported by the late Sir David Chambers to have been guilty of cruel and unlawful acts towards native chiefs in the Protectorate.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: The Queen has been pleased to approve of the grant of the West African medal to the troops employed in the operations in the Sierra Leone Protectorate in 1898 and 1899. With regard to the second part of the question, no native convicted of serious offence will get the medal.

AUSTRALIAN COMMONWEALTH BILL.

SIR CHARLES DILKE (Gloucestershire, Forest of Dean): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies when the Australian Commonwealth Bill will be introduced, and if Her Majesty's Government propose to suggest to Parliament to make any change in the constitution as accepted by five colonies.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: Delegates from the Australian Colonies are coming to this country to give and receive explanations as to certain points, and as they are expected at an early date the introduction of the Bill will be deferred until they have arrived.

THE "KOWSHING."

MR. PROVAND (Glasgow, Blackfriars): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether he will state what is the present position of the negotiations for the settlement by arbitration of the claims made by Her Majesty's Government on the Chinese Government more than five years ago for compensation to the owners of the British steamer "Kowshing," and to the families of British subjects who lost their lives by the sinking of that vessel.

*MR. BRODRICK: It has now been arranged between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of China that the case of the "Kowshing" should be referred to the arbitration of a foreign jurist.

MR. PROVAND: Can the right hon. Gentleman say when the jurist is likely to arrive at a decision?

[No answer was given.]

RUSSIAN LOAN TO PERSIA.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government received from the Persian Government in July last a précis of the financial proposals of the Russian Government in regard to the Persian Loan conversion; and what reply was returned to the Government of the Shah by Sir M. Durand.

*MR. BRODRICK: No such communication was received.

FOOT AND MOUTH DISEASE REGULATIONS.

MR. STEVENSON (Suffolk, Eye): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Agriculture, in view of the fact that the Executive Committee for the County of Suffolk resolved on the 6th instant that it is strongly desirable that a modification of the Order of the Board of Agriculture of 31st January should be made, so as to enable fat cattle to be moved for slaughter, that the district comprised in the Order is unnecessarily large, and that the Board of Agriculture be requested to vary their Order to meet the foregoing, and that occupiers of land should be allowed to move their sheep and cattle across or along highways intersecting their own occupation, where it is more than three miles from the infected area; whether he is prepared to introduce at once into the Order modifications similar to what has been asked for in the case of Norfolk, in accordance with the first and third recommendations; and whether he will also reconsider the extent of the scheduled area, in accordance with the second recommendation, if it can be done without risk, especially having regard to the fact that districts in Suffolk, nearly forty miles from the scene of the outbreak have been included in that schedule.

*THE PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. LONG, Liverpool, West Derby): The new Order which comes into operation to-day is applicable to the Suffolk portion of the district as well as to the Norfolk portion. I cannot as yet sanction the reduction of the area of the district, but the situation is carefully considered from day to day, and I shall be very glad indeed to find myself able to modify the severe restrictions we have felt it necessary to impose in the interest of stockowners generally.

MR. F. W. WILSON (Norfolk, Mid): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Agriculture whether he can state how many fresh cases of foot and mouth disease have occurred in the present week; and whether any petty sessional division which has been scheduled, where no fresh outbreak has occurred for seven days, can be reopened for the movement of cattle for slaughter.

*MR. LONG: Two further outbreaks of foot and mouth disease have occurred in the scheduled district during the present week. I cannot at the moment sanction any further modification of the existing restrictions, the position being still a very serious one, but it is carefully considered from day to day, and the hon. Member may be sure that relief will be given at the earliest possible moment consistently with the safety of the country as a whole.

CENTRAL TELEGRAPH OFFICE HOLIDAY ARRANGEMENTS.

MR. STEADMAN (Tower Hamlets, Stepney): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether he is aware that the Departmental Committee appointed to inquire into the holiday arrangements at the Central Telegraph Office, in submitting a proposed scheme to the staff representatives, expressly stated that as a condition of its application the holidays should be distributed equally over the holiday months and chosen in order of seniority; whether these conditions are now being departed from; and whether he will direct that the holidays shall be distributed equally over the eight holiday months and chosen strictly in order of seniority.

THE FINANCIAL SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY (MR. HANBURY, Preston): No, Sir; I am informed that the Committee made no such statement. Considerable additions have been made to the staff to enable every telegraphist to take a holiday in one of the best eight months. The senior men have the choice of the best four months, and I understand that a senior officer who prefers taking a holiday in the other four has no difficulty in finding a junior to exchange with him.

POST OFFICE LONDON TELEPHONE EXCHANGE.

MR. PROVAND: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether he is now ready to issue the tariff and regulations of the Post Office London Telephone Exchange.

MR. HANBURY: The tariff and regulations for the Post Office London Telephone Exchange system are practically complete; but until the work of constructing the main system is also completed, it has been thought better not to publish the details of the scheme prematurely.

IRISH PIERS AND HARBOURS.

MR. WILLIAM MOORE (Antrim, N.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland if he will grant a return showing the application of the sum of £250,000, voted for piers and harbours in Ireland, under the Act 46 and 47 Vic., c. 26; and in what counties the said sum has been so far expended.

MR. HANBURY: No material change has occurred since the issue of House of Commons Paper No. 272 of 1898; and I think that this return will probably be sufficient for any purpose that the hon. Member may contemplate. But I shall be quite ready to inform him privately, if he desires it, as to any modifications recently made.

PARCELS POST TO IRELAND.

MR. WILLIAM MOORE: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, if any part of the parcel post traffic between London and Dublin is carried round by Carlisle and Stranraer and via Portadown; is the same carried, or any part of it, by the same trains in England which convey the mails to the north of Ireland via Larne and Stranraer; what is the extra distance of this route over and above the direct route to Dublin; and has this contributed to the delays in the mails recently so much complained of in the north of Ireland; and, if so, will the practice be discontinued.

MR. HANBURY: No part of the parcel post traffic between London and Dublin is forwarded by way of Stranraer and Portadown, nor is any part of it carried by the same train in England which conveys to Carlisle the mails for the north of Ireland.

SNEEM MAILS.

MR. FLAVIN (Kerry, N.): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether he is aware that great inconvenience is caused in and around the district of Sneem (County Kerry) owing to the late delivery of mails; whether, under the late arrangements made by the Post Office authorities, letters now arrive and are delivered nearly one hour later than heretofore; and whether it should not be the object of the Post Office to accelerate rather than delay the arrival of mails in the Sneem district.

MR. HANBURY: No change has been made in the time of arrival of the mails at Sneem since 1897. In that year the time of arrival at Sneem had to be postponed from 9.40 a.m. to 10.30 a.m. in consequence of the later dispatch by fifty minutes of the night mails from Dublin to the various ports of Ireland. This in turn was due to the later despatch from the provinces of the day mail trains to Dublin in connection with the later departure from Dublin of the night mail for England. Under these rearrangements a considerable improvement of postal service was afforded, and the Postmaster General regrets that in a few instances some disadvantage has been unavoidable.

MR. FLAVIN: Cannot you make some representations to the carrying companies to accelerate the service?

[No answer was given.]

STEAM TRAWLERS IN WEXFORD BAY.

MR. FFRENCH (Wexford, S.): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Admiralty whether he is aware that the Wexford bye-laws are being constantly violated by steam trawlers, and that great damage is being done to the fishery, and numbers of poor men thrown out of employment; and that although the names of four trawlers have been supplied to the inspectors of fisheries, they refuse to prosecute on the ground of insufficient evidence; and whether, since local vessels can do no more than find out the names of the trawlers, he will consent to give a gunboat to protect Wexford and other Irish fisheries, considering that gunboats have been given to protect English and Scotch fisheries.

*THE FIRST LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY (Mr. GOSCHEN, St. George's, Hanover Square): As I have often explained, the duty of the Admiralty is to protect fishermen against any illegal inroads on the part of foreign fishing boats, but they do not undertake the enforcement of bye-laws passed by local authorities, nor have they appropriated vessels for local fisheries except in the special case of the Scottish Fishery Board, who have the assistance of two small vessels. There are gunboats on the coast of Ireland which are fully employed there at present.

MR. WILLIAM REDMOND (Clare, E.): Under these circumstances cannot a gunboat be sent to protect Irish fisheries from steam trawlers? If not, of what use is the Navy to Ireland at all?

MR. POWER (Waterford, E.): Will the hon. Member for South Dublin take into consideration the advisability of—

MR. SPEAKER: Order, order: Notice should be given of these questions.

MR. FLYNN (Cork, N.): Is it not the fact that these bye-laws are made not by the local authorities, but by the Fishery Board? Will the right hon. Gentleman under these circumstances reconsider the matter?

*MR. GOSCHEN: We do not undertake to enforce the bye-laws of the Fishery Board.

WARDEN ESTATE, CO. KERRY.

MR. FLAVIN: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that the landlord of the Warden estate, near Sneem, county Kerry, refused to give a site for a national school teacher's residence on the teacher's own farm of land unless the teacher would give up his tenant right to him, and that the teacher, under the landlord's pressure, has consented to give up his tenant right in his holding in order to obtain a suitable site for the residence he requires on his own farm; whether the Local Government Board have refused to sanction the site which the landlord selected owing to its unsuitable condition; and what steps, if any, can the Government now take to compel the landlord to allow the teacher to build a residence on his own land which will be approved of by the Local Government Board.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL FOR IRELAND (Mr. ATKINSON, Londonderry, N.) (for Mr. G. W. BALFOUR): I have no information as to the matters referred to in the first paragraph. It is the fact, however, that an application for a loan to erect a teacher's residence, in connection with the Sneem National School, was approved by the Commissioners of National Education. The site proposed was found to be rocky and unsuitable, and another site was suggested by the teacher. The manager was informed by the Board of Works of the legal steps necessary to be taken by him, and he was informed that pending the perfection and registration of the lease, nothing further could be done to complete the case. The Board are not aware of any difficulty with the landlord in obtaining this site, but if such difficulties exist the trustees can avail themselves of the provisions of the Irish Education Acts, under which sites for teachers' residences can be acquired compulsorily subject to certain conditions being satisfied.

MR. T. M. HEALY: The right hon. Gentleman says he has no information. Will he cause the police to make inquiries?

MR. FLAVIN: Has the right hon. Gentleman applied to the teacher for information?

*MR. SPEAKER: Order, order!

KANTURK BARONIAL RAILWAY GUARANTEE.

MR. FLYNN: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, whether the attention of the Local Government Board has been called to the case of the Kanturk Rural District Council in respect to the Baronial Railway guarantee; and if he can state whether the Commissioner of Valuation reported to the board, under Section 58, Sub-Section 4, that the Kanturk district was entitled to relief, as the guarantee exceeds sixpence in the pound on the rateable value; and, if so, why has not the district received the relief for the current financial year.

MR. ATKINSON (for Mr. G. W. BALFOUR): The reply to the first paragraph is in the affirmative. The Commissioner of Valuation reported that, in his opinion, the provisions of Section 54, Sub-Section 4, of the Local Government Act, 1898, came into force on the 1st April, 1899, and that payments in respect of which a contribution may be made from the Local Taxation Account under these provisions will not become due until after the 31st March, 1900—the end of the current financial year.

MR. FLYNN: Surely, if the financial year commenced on the 1st April last year, the district is entitled to a full year's payment.

MR. ATKINSON: I have given all the information asked for in the question.

CLARE COUNTY POLICE CHARGES.

MR. WILLIAM REDMOND: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland if his attention has been called to a resolution of the Clare County Council, in which they call attention to the high taxation that prevails in Clare, and respectfully ask the Irish Government to reconsider the question of the instalments of extra police charge, seeing that the county has returned to its normal position of peace; and whether the prayer of this resolution can be granted.

MR. ATKINSON (for Mr. G. W. BALFOUR): The attention of the Chief Secretary has been directed to the resolution referred to. The Government are unable to accede to the application contained in the resolution.

CAVAN POLICE FORCE.

MR. J. P. FARRELL (Cavan, W.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland can he state whether any increase has taken place recently in the police force of Cavan County; and whether, seeing that he promised in 1896 to see that a gradual process of reduction would take place, it is intended to carry this promise into effect.

MR. ATKINSON (for Mr. G. W. BALFOUR): No increase has recently been made in the police force of County Cavan. For many years the county has been served by the free quota. The policy of reducing the strength of the entire police force throughout Ireland, promised in 1896, has been since then steadily pursued.

MARQUESS OF SLIGO'S ESTATE.

DR. AMBROSE (Mayo, W.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that negotiations have been proceeding for some time between the Marquess of Sligo and the Congested Districts Board, with a view to the sale to the Board of portions of his Lordship's estate: and could he state the price asked by the Marquess of Sligo, and would he give a copy of the correspondence with reference to such sale.

THE VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT FOR IRELAND (MR. PLUNKETT, Dublin County, S.): The reply to the first paragraph is in the affirmative. The correspondence that has passed between the Congested Districts Board and the Marquess of Sligo in the matter is regarded as confidential. The board can give no information as to the respective offers made, and it is not intended to lay on the Table the correspondence that has taken place.

MUZZLING ORDER IN CORK.

MR. MAURICE HEALY (Cork): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Agriculture whether he has received resolutions from the Corporation of Cork and the Cork Rural District Council recommending that the dogs muzzling order be rescinded; and whether he is now prepared to accede to the general desire that the order should be rescinded.

MR. PLUNKETT: Resolutions have been received from the Corporation of Cork and the Cork Rural District Council, recommending that the muzzling of dogs order be rescinded. Since the 29th April, 1899, twelve cases of rabies occurred within the County Cork, the last case so recently as the 3rd January. The question of rescinding the order has been carefully considered, but it is felt that the time has not yet arrived when any part of the County Cork could, with due regard to the general interest, be exempted from the operation of the order.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—NEWS FROM THE FRONT.

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN (Stirling Burghs): I think the House would like to know whether there is any news from South Africa.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY (MR. A. J. BALFOUR, Manchester, E.): No, Sir, I do not think there is.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: May I give notice that on Monday I shall move, in accordance with the statement I have already made to the House, that, until the end of the financial year, financial business have precedence on Tuesdays whenever set down by the Government. Of course that is subject to the pledge I have already given in regard to Tuesday the 20th, in connection with the motion now down on the Paper for that day.

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: With regard to the Tuesday referred to by the right hon. Gentleman, I think there would be a strong general feeling of disappointment and dissatisfaction if, as the right hon. Gentleman has rather implied, there were merely an evening sitting on that occasion. The matter which is to be discussed has excited a great deal of attention and interest, and I think it is a matter of such importance that it ought not to be relegated to an evening sitting.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I quite recognise the existence of the feeling to which the right hon. Gentleman alludes, and I can assure the House that nothing but absolute necessity would oblige me to reduce the time for discussing that motion to the three hours between nine and twelve o'clock.

SITTINGS OF THE HOUSE (EXEMPTION FROM THE STANDING ORDER).

Motion made, and Question put, "That the proceedings on the Address, if under discussion at Twelve o'clock this night, be not interrupted under the Standing Order, Sittings of the House."—(Mr. A. J. Balfour.)

The House divided:—Ayes, 226; Noes, 86. (Division List No. 6.)

AYES.

Aird, John
 Allsopp, Hon. George
 Archdale, Edward Mervyn
 Arrol, Sir William
 Asher, Alexander
 Atkinson, Rt. Hon. John
 Austin, Sir John (Yorkshire)
 Bainbridge, Emerson
 Baker, Sir John
 Baldwin, Alfred
 Balfour, Rt. Hon. A. J. (Manch'r)
 Banbury, Frederick George
 Barnes, Frederic Gorrell
 Barry, Rt. Hon. A. H. Smith. (Hunts)
 Barry, Sir Francis T. (Windsor)
 Bartley, George C. T.
 Beach, Rt. Hon. Sir M. H. (Brist'l)
 Beach, Rt. Hon. W. W. B. (Hants)
 Bethell, Commander
 Bhownaggee, Sir M. M.
 Biddulph, Michael
 Bill, Charles
 Blakiston-Houston, John
 Blundell, Colonel Henry
 Bonsor, Henry Cosmo Orme
 Boulnois, Edmund
 Bowles, Capt. H. F. (Middlesex)
 Bowles, T. G. (King's Lynn)
 Brodric, Rt. Hon. St. John
 Brookfield, A. Montagu
 Bryce, Rt. Hon. James
 Brymer, William Ernest
 Buxton, Sidney Charles
 Campbell, J. H. M. (Dublin)
 Campbell-Bannerman, Sir H.
 Causton, Richard Knight
 Cavendish, R. F. (N. Lances.)
 Cavendish, V. C. W. (Derbysh.)
 Cecil, Evelyn (Hertford, East)
 Cecil, Lord Hugh (Greenwich)
 Chaloner, Captain R. G. W.
 Chamberlain, Rt. Hon. J. (Birm.)
 Chamberlain, J. Austen (Worc'r)
 Chaplin, Rt. Hon. Henry
 Chelsea, Viscount
 Coghill, Douglas Harry
 Collings, Rt. Hon. Jesse
 Colomb, Sir J. Charles Ready
 Colston, Chas. E. H. Athole
 Cornwallis, Fiennes Stanley W.
 Courtney, Rt. Hon. Leonard H.
 Cross, H. Shepherd (Bolton)
 Curzon, Viscount
 Dalkeith, Earl of
 Dalrymple, Sir Charles
 Davies, M. Vaughan. (Cardig'n)
 Dickinson, Robert Edmond
 Disraeli, Coningsby Ralph
 Doughty, George
 Douglas, Rt. Hon. A. Akers-
 Douglas-Pennant, Hon. E. S.
 Duncombe, Hon. Hubert V.
 Egerton, Hon. A. de Tatton
 Elliot, Hon. A. Ralph Douglas
 Fardell, Sir T. George
 Fellowes, Hon. Ailwyn Edw.
 Fergusson, Rt. Hon. Sir J. (Manch.)
 Finch, George H.
 Finlay, Sir Robert Bannatyne
 Fisher, William Hayes
 Fitz Wygram, General Sir F.
 Flannery, Sir Fortescue

Flower, Ernest
 Forster, Henry William
 Fry, Lewis
 Galloway, William Johnson
 Garfit, William
 Gedye, Sydney
 Gibbs, Hn. A. G. H. (City of Lond.)
 Giles, Charles Tyrrell
 Gladstone, Rt. Hon. Herbert Jn.
 Goldsworthy, Major-General
 Gordon, Hon. John Edward
 Goschen, Rt. Hon. G. J. (St. Geo.'s)
 Gourley, Sir Edw. Temperley
 Graham, Henry Robert
 Greville, Hon. Ronald
 Gull, Sir Cameron
 Gunter, Colonel
 Gurdon, Sir William Brampton
 Halsey, Thomas Frederick
 Hanbury, Rt. Hon. Rbt. Wm.
 Hanson, Sir Reginald
 Hardy, Laurence
 Haslett, Sir James Horner
 Heath, James
 Helder, Augustus
 Hill, Rt. Hon. A. Staveley (Staffs.)
 Hoare, Edw. Brodie (Hampstead)
 Hoare, Sir Samuel (Norwich)
 Holland, William Henry
 Horniman, Frederick John
 Houston, R. P.
 Howard, Joseph
 Howell, William Tudor
 Howorth, Sir Henry Hoyle
 Hozier, Hon. J. H. Cecil
 Hudson, Geo. Bickersteth
 Hutchinson, Capt. G. W. Grice-
 Hutton, John (Yorks, N.R.)
 Jeffreys, Arthur Frederick
 Jessel, Capt. Herbert Merton
 Johnston, William (Belfast)
 Kenyon-Slaney, Col. William
 Kinloch, Sir John George S.
 Knowles, Lees
 Lafone, Alfred
 Laurie, Lieut.-General
 Lawrence, Sir E. D. (Cornwall)
 Lawson, John Grant (Yorks)
 Lea, Sir Thomas (Londonderry)
 Lecky, Rt. Hon. William Edw. H.
 Leese, Sir Joseph F. (Accrington)
 Llewelyn, Sir Dillwyn (S'sea)
 Lockwood, Lt.-Col. A. R.
 Loder, Gerald Walter Erskine
 Long, Col. Chas. W. (Evesham)
 Long, Rt. Hon. Walt. (Liverpool)
 Lorne, Marquess of
 Lowe, Francis William
 Loyd, Archie Kirkman
 Lyell, Sir Leonard
 Macartney, W. G. Ellison
 Macdona, John Cumming
 Maclure, Sir John William
 M'Arthur, Charles (Liverpool)
 M'Calmont, Col. J. (Antrim, E.)
 M'Crae, George
 M'Ever, Sir Lewis (Edinbro, W.)
 M'Killop, James
 Malcolm, Ian
 Manners, Lord Edward Wm. J.
 Marks, Henry Hananel
 Millbank, Sir Powlett Chas. Jhn

Mildmay, Francis Bingham
 Milner, Sir Frederick George
 Milward, Colonel Victor
 Monckton, Edward Philip
 Monk, Charles James
 Moon, Edward Robert Pacy
 Moore, William (Antrim, N.)
 More, Robert J. (Shropshire)
 Morgan, J. L. (Carmarthen)
 Morton, A. H. A. (Deptford)
 Mount, William George
 Murray, Rt. Hon. A. G. (Bute)
 Murray, Col. Wyndham (Bath)
 Nicholson, William Graham
 Nicol, Donald Ninian
 Norton, Captain Cecil W.
 Nussey, Thomas Willans
 O'Neill, Hon. Robt. Torrens
 Orr-Ewing, Charles Lindsay
 Palmer, George W. (Reading)
 Parkes, Ebenezer
 Pease, Joseph A. (Northumb.)
 Penn, John
 Phillpotts, Captain Arthur
 Pierpoint, Robert
 Platt-Higgins, Frederick
 Plunkett, Rt. Hon. Horace C.
 Pretymann, Ernest George
 Pryce-Jones, Lt.-Col. Edward
 Purvis, Robert
 Rankin, Sir James
 Rentoul, James Alexander
 Richardson, J. (Durham, S.E.)
 Richardson, Sir T. (Hartlepool)
 Ridley, Rt. Hon. Sir M. W.
 Ritchie, Rt. Hon. Charles T.
 Robertson, Herbert (Hackney)
 Rollit, Sir Albert Kaye
 Royds, Clement Molyneux
 Runciman, Walter
 Russell, Gen. F. S. (Cheltenham)
 Russell, T. W. (Tyrone)
 Samuel, Harry S. (Limehouse)
 Savory, Sir Joseph
 Scoble, Sir Andrew Richard
 Sharpe, William Edward T.
 Shaw-Stewart, M. H. (Renfrew)
 Sidebotham, J. W. (Cheshire)
 Simeon, Sir Barrington
 Sinclair, Louis (Romford)
 Smith, Abel H. (Christchurch)
 Smith, Jas. Parker (Lanarks.)
 Soames, Arthur Wellesley
 Spencer, Ernest
 Stanley, Edward J. (Somerset)
 Stevenson, Francis S.
 Stewart, Sir M. J. M. Taggart
 Stirling-Maxwell, Sir John M.
 Stock, James Henry
 Strutt, Hon. Chas. Hedley
 Sturt, Hon. Humphry Napier
 Tennant, Harold John
 Thornton, Percy M.
 Tollmach, Henry James
 Trevelyan, Charles Philips
 Tritton, Charles Ernest
 Verney, Hon. Richard Greville
 Vincent, Sir Edgar (Exeter)
 Warr, Augustus Frederick
 Webster, Sir Richard E.
 Welby, Lieut.-Col. A. C. E.
 Whitely, H. (Ashton-under-L.)

Whitmore, Charles Algernon
Williams, J. Powell- (Birm.)
Willoughby de Eresby, Lord
Wilson, John (Falkirk)

Wodehouse, Rt Hon E. R. (Bath)
Wylie, Alexander
Wyndham, George
Young, Samuel (Cavan, East)

Younger, William
TELLERS FOR THE AYES—
Sir William Walrond and
Mr. Anstruther.

NOES.

Abraham, Wm. (Cork, N.E.)
Allan, William (Gateshead)
Allison, Robert Andrew
Ambrose, Robert
Austin, M. (Limerick, W.)
Barlow, John Emmott
Blake, Edward
Buchanan, Thomas Ryburn
Caldwell, James
Cameron, Robt. (Durham)
Carvill, P. Geo. Hamilton
Channing, Francis Allston
Clancy, John Joseph
Commins, Andrew
Condon, Thomas Joseph
Crean, Eugene
Crilly, Daniel
Curran, Thomas B. (Donegal)
Daly, James
Dewar, Arthur
Dilke, Rt. Hon. Sir Charles
Donelan, Captain A.
Doogan, P. C.
Engledew, Charles John
Evans, Samuel T. (Glamorgan)
Farquharson, Dr. Robert
Farrell, James P. (Cavan, W.)
Fenwick, Charles
French, Peter
Flavin, Michael Joseph

Flynn, James Christopher
Gibney, James
Goddard, Daniel Ford
Hammond, John (Carlow)
Harrington, Timothy
Hayden, John Patrick
Hayne, Rt. Hon. Chas. Seale-
Hazell, Walter
Healy, Maurice (Cork)
Healy, Timothy M. (N. Louth)
Hedderwick, Thomas Charles H
Hemphill, Rt. Hon. Charles H.
Hogan, James Francis
Jones, W. (Carnarvonshire)
Jordan, Jeremiah
Kilbride, Denis
Labouchere, Henry
Lawson, Sir W. (Cumberland)
Leng, Sir John
Lewis, John Herbert
Lloyd-George, David
Lough, Thomas
Lowther, Rt. Hn. James (Kent)
Macaleese, Daniel
McDonnell, Dr M.A. (Queen's C
MacNeill, John Gordon Swift
McCartan, Michael
M'Ghee, Richard
Mandeville, J. Francis
Morton, E. J. C. (Devonport)

Murnaghan, George
O'Brien, James F. X. (Cork)
O'Brien, Patrick (Kilkenny)
O'Brien, P. J. (Tipperary)
O'Connor, Arthur (Donegal)
O'Connor, James (Wicklow, W.)
Pinkerton, John
Power, Patrick Joseph
Redmond, John E. (Waterford)
Redmond, William (Clare)
Reid, Sir Robert Threshie
Roberts, John H. (Denbigha.)
Roche, John (East Galway)
Shaw, Thomas (Hawick E.)
Souttar, Robinson
Steadman, William Charles
Strachey, Edward
Sullivan, Donal (Westmeath)
Sullivan, T. D. (Donegal, W.)
Thomas, David A. (Merthyr)
Tully, Jasper
Wason, Eugene
Wedderburn, Sir William
Weir, James Galloway
Wilson, John (Govan)
Young, Samuel (Cavan, East)

TELLERS FOR THE NOES—Sir
Thomas Esmonde and Mr.
Woods.

NEW BILLS.

HOUSING OF THE WORKING CLASSES.

Bill to amend the Law relating to the Housing of the Working Classes, ordered to be brought in by Mr. Steadman, Mr.
John Burns, Captain Norton, and Mr.
Woods.

HOUSING OF THE WORKING CLASSES (RURAL DISTRICTS).

Bill to amend the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890, so as to facilitate the provision of cottages by Rural Authorities, ordered to be brought in by Sir Walter Foster, Mr. Channing,
Mr. Stevenson, Mr. Price, Mr. Broadhurst,
Mr. Billson, Mr. Frederick Wilson, and Mr. Soames.

WINE AND BEERHOUSE ACTS AMENDMENT.

Bill to amend the Law relating to the licensing of Beerhouses and places for the sale of Cider and Wine by retail in England and Wales, ordered to be brought in by Mr. Herbert Lewis, Mr. Courtney, Sir Cameron Gull, and Mr. Cameron

Corbett.

WINE AND BEERHOUSE ACTS AMEND-MENT BILL.

"To amend the Law relating to the licensing of Beerhouses and places for the sale of Cider and Wine by retail in England and Wales," presented, and read the first time; to be read a second time upon Tuesday, 20th February, and to be printed. [Bill 73.]

LICENSED PREMISES (HOURS OF SALE) (SCOTLAND).

Bill to alter the Law relating to the Hours during which premises licensed for the sale of excisable liquors may be open in Scotland, ordered to be brought in by Mr. Provand, Captain Sinclair, Mr. Colville, Mr. Ure, and Mr. Caldwell.

LICENSED PREMISES (HOURS OF SALE) (SCOTLAND) BILL.

"To alter the Law relating to the Hours during which premises licensed for
the sale of excisable liquors may be open in Scotland," presented, and read the first time; to be read a second time upon Thursday next, and to be printed. [Bill 74.]

BAKEHOUSES (HOURS OF LABOUR).

Bill to restrict the Hours of Labour in Bakehouses to forty-eight per week, ordered to be brought in by Mr. Woods, Mr. John Burns, and Mr. Steadman.

BAKEHOUSES (HOURS OF LABOUR) BILL.

"To restrict the Hours of labour in Bakehouses to forty-eight per week," presented, and read the first time; to be read a second time upon Wednesday, 14th March, and to be printed. [Bill 76.]

STEAM ENGINES AND BOILERS (PERSONS IN CHARGE).

Bill to grant certificates to persons in charge of steam engines and boilers, ordered to be brought in by Mr. Jonathan Samuel, Mr. J. A. Pease, Mr. Haldane, Mr. Helder, Colonel Denny, Mr. Fenwick, Mr. John Wilson (Durham), Mr. Paulton, Mr. Joseph Walton, and Mr. Holland.

STEAM ENGINES AND BOILERS (PERSONS IN CHARGE) BILL.

"To grant certificates to Persons in Charge of Steam Engines and Boilers," Presented and read the first time; to be read a second time upon Wednesday next, and to be printed. [Bill 77.]

HOUSING OF THE WORKING CLASSES BILL.

"To amend the Law relating to the Housing of the Working Classes," presented, and read the first time; to be read a second time upon Wednesday, 25th April, and to be printed. [Bill 72.]

HOUSING OF THE WORKING CLASSES (RURAL DISTRICTS) BILL.

"To amend the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890, so as to facilitate the provision of cottages by Rural Authorities," presented, and read the first time; to be read a second time upon Friday, 23rd February, and to be printed. [Bill 75.]

ADDRESS IN ANSWER TO HER MAJESTY'S MOST GRACIOUS SPEECH.

[NINTH DAY'S DEBATE.]

Order read for resuming Adjourned Debate on Main Question [30th January], "That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, as followeth:—

Most Gracious Sovereign,

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Captain Pretyman.)

Question again proposed.

Debate resumed.

TAXATION OF IRELAND.

SIR T. G. ESMONDE (Kerry, W.): In seconding the Amendment which is on the Paper I feel myself in a position of considerable disadvantage because I have to follow the very admirable speech of my hon. friend the Member for North Dublin, which practically touched almost every aspect of the case. There is also this further disadvantage, that this subject has been so often debated that there is very little new to be said about it. Still, I am glad to second it in view of the special and peculiar circumstances of the present time. This country is engaged in a war which is likely to prove both long and expensive. It is a war from which it is not conceivable that Ireland can derive any advantage. On the other hand, it will undoubtedly lead to a very great increase of taxation, and of that taxation Ireland will be compelled, whether she likes it or not, to pay what we Irishmen consider to be an utterly disproportionate share. I do not propose to go extensively into the details of this question, nor do I believe there is any necessity for any justification on our part for the action we are taking at the present moment. We consider that in view of the feelings we hold on the question of the over-taxation of Ireland it is essential we should take the first opportunity of making our position clear with regard to any further increase of that taxation. We shall have many opportunities in the course of this session of considering possible further increases of taxation, and we trust and hope to be able to utilise those opportunities to the fullest possible extent when the occasion for doing so arises. There is no necessity for me now to speculate on the direction those possible increases of taxation may take. Neither, Sir, is there any necessity at this stage for me to go in detail into the historical aspects of the situation. The historical case of Ireland has been repeated over and over again in this House. It has been repeated so many times that we have, as a matter of fact, absolutely lost count of them, and although statements have been laid before the House many a time and oft, and although even in my own time there have been repeated discussions on the national grievances of Ireland, I do not think any Irish Member of this House has yet heard a satisfactory answer to the Irish case in respect to the over-taxation of Ireland. I will not, Sir, go back very far into this history, as it is not so very many years ago since the case of Ireland was set forth in most admirable and, I may say, unanswerable fashion by my hon. friend the Member for South Longford. The legitimate claims of Ireland for redress as put forward from this quarter of the House have met with no adequate settlement since that time, nor since our case was put later still by the hon. and learned Member for Waterford. No answer is yet forthcoming; I do not suppose there is any answer beyond that to which we are so well accustomed, namely, that Ireland has no substantial grievance at all. Sir, I may, perhaps, be allowed to give the House an outline of the Irish case. From our point of view, it is a record of continuous breaches of engagements entered into by England with Ireland. Ever since the Act of Union the question has been discussed and debated in this House in vain, and the injustice continues in face of our continued and unabated protest. That protest has been made now for nearly a hundred years, and invariably without success. Let us go back to the Act of Union. It was a solemn treaty entered into between England and Ireland, in which certain covenants as to financial relations between the two countries were set forth, and received the form of legislative enactment. We were regarded, in financial matters, as a separate entity. It was a solemn compact by which Ireland was to receive the benefit of certain exceptional treatment. She was promised exemption in one case and abatement in another; but the realisation of those promises is yet to come. From 1800 to 1816, the period at which the exchequers of Ireland and England were consolidated, we find by the records of this House, by the debates which are reported in Hansard, that Ireland has contributed to the war expenditure of England—war expenditure in which Ireland has had no concern whatever, and from which she can derive no possible advantage—money amounting to millions sterling. In that period Ireland has contributed between £60,000,000 and £70,000,000 compensation for England's benefit, and no less than £30,000,000 in excess of the proportion fixed by the Act of Union. These are statements which can be easily verified either by a reference to the pages of Hansard in the Parliamentary Library. In 1816 the Act came into force, and in 1817 the two exchequers were consolidated. A new treaty was made by which Ireland was promised that a revision of her taxation would be carried out at certain intervals of time. That was the main grievance; that agreement was not observed, there was no such revision of Ireland's taxation, and the main condition upon which the consolidation was ratified were never observed by this country. In 1854 there was a new departure in taxation, and Ireland contributed £30,000,000 at least more than was provided by the consolidation of the two exchequers. The Royal Commission which investigated the financial relations of the two countries resulted in a number of new taxes being imposed. The inducement which led the Irish people to consent to these new taxes was that they would be only of a temporary nature, and after seven years some of them would be taken off, and after a further period the whole of them would be removed. That was the engagement, but, like every other engagement, it was forgotten. The "temporary taxes," so-called, imposed in 1854, became permanent, although the Financial Relations Commission showed that Ireland was already overtaxed by 120 to 130 millions. That Financial Relations Commission was composed of eminent financiers, who went thoroughly into the question of the financial relations existing between the two countries. The record of its sitting is preserved in a Blue-book, which is, perhaps, the most valuable contribution to the question that we possess. According to the investigations of this Commission, the over-taxation of Ireland is put down, at the lowest figure, as £2,500,000 per annum. According to these eminent experts Ireland contributed at least £2,500,000 per annum more than the condition of her resources entitled her to pay. Well, that Report was promptly put into the waste-paper basket; and there has been no practical result of the Commission ever since. It has occurred to me and many of my hon. friends what a different view would have been taken of the Report of that Commission had it been found that Ireland was paying £2,500,000 less than her proper proportion of the taxation. However, since the sitting of the Commission, new taxation has been imposed on Ireland in the shape of an increase in the spirit duties and an imposition of the estate duty. By this additional taxation, increased revenue has been derived from Ireland amounting, at any rate, to £500,000 a year. Thus the Report of the Royal Commission, which showed that Ireland was already overtaxed to the tune of £2,500,000, only led to the imposition of another half million sterling. In these various stages of the financial relations between the two countries, it will be seen that these taxes were not imposed without strong protest on behalf of Ireland. Every opportunity that presented itself to the Irish party was seized by way of strongly protesting against England's unjust financial treatment. Ireland objected to the union of the two exchequers. She protested in 1854, and again in 1864, when another Commission of inquiry was appointed to sit in London. She protested then and since continually, and the day on which Ireland will get justice in this matter seems as distant as ever. And yet English members of this House, and especially hon. Members opposite, profess to be surprised that there is no more real sympathy existing between the people of England and the people of Ireland. I should like to know how this country would have behaved had the positions been reversed, and Ireland had treated England in the same way. What would have been the feelings of the English people under such circumstances? How can England expect Ireland to be kindly disposed towards her in view of the financial treatment meted out by England? Our country is labouring under a most frightful injustice, and we protest against it; we have protested before, and shall continue to protest. As long as the Irish people take an intelligent interest in the concerns of their country, so long will they protest against this system, which is surely and inevitably bleeding Ireland to death, ruining her industrial and financial possibilities, and driving year by year thousands of Irish people out of the country simply because they cannot get employment at home. One result of your financial treatment of Ireland is that of all the countries in the world the one in which Irish industries do not succeed, except in a very small measure, is the country to which they belong. We shall probably hear, as we have heard many times before, the old arguments advanced against the claim of Ireland. We shall be told that Ireland is treated extremely well; that England makes nothing out of Ireland; that England spends an enormously disproportionate amount of money year by year in Ireland on the administration of the country. It is one of the strong points which is constantly raised in the discussion of the financial claims of Ireland that the expense of the administration is something prodigious. Our answer to that is that we are not concerned in the administration of Ireland; we have nothing whatever to say to it. The administration of Ireland has been devised in this House; for the expenses of that administration this House is responsible, and, as far as we are concerned, Ireland derives absolutely nothing from the amount of money you spend on the various swarms of officials in that country. If this argument is supposed to be a really strong and tangible one, you have a very easy remedy. If this House would approve of the appointment of a Commission of practical Irishmen to go into the figures of the administration of the country, and would undertake that whatever money was saved as the result of that Commission should be devoted to Irish purposes, I am perfectly certain that any body of intelligent Irishmen would be able to effect very considerable retrenchments in the expenses of Irish administration. As to the argument that for Irish purposes England has contributed, and continues to contribute, enormous sums of money, many Parliamentary Papers and numerous speeches in Hansard make it perfectly plain that for every one of those generous contributions there was a very considerable quid pro quo given by Ireland. All those contributions from time to time were made in return for financial concessions on the part of Ireland, by which England was invariably the gainer. When we are told of the Imperial expenditure in Ireland, one is tempted to ask what is the Imperial expenditure in England? How much is spent in building men-of-war in England and in Ireland respectively? How much is spent on dockyards at Plymouth, Portsmouth, and other places in England, and how much is spent in Ireland in the same direction? Why, there is not a single dockyard in Ireland, although over one hundred years ago you promised that one should be established. The question of the great prosperity of Ireland under English rule has been threshed out so often that it is practically threadbare and not worth discussing. We should probably be told—it is a favourite argument of the Chancellor of the Exchequer—that the deposits in the Irish savings banks have increased, and that fact will be heralded forth as an evidence of the great advance in the prosperity of Ireland. I would very much like the Chancellor of the Exchequer, or anyone who puts forward that argument, to state the amount of the deposits in the English savings banks. It is understood that the amount of those deposits is such that the Post Office does not know what to do with the money. If a comparison was made between the deposits in the two countries, as an evidence of increasing prosperity, Ireland would show up very poorly as compared with England. I desire to direct the attention of the House to one or two small details in connection with the financial question. As was pointed out last night, there are so many ways in which England makes money out of Ireland without any acknowledgment being made that it is impossible to go into them all, but there are one or two points to which I will refer. First, there is the question of the redemption of the quit and crown rents in Ireland. It is very difficult to arrive at the figures, as the redemption has been going on ever since the Land Purchase Acts came into operation, and, of course, will continue for a number of years to come. As far as I understand it, whatever money is derived from the redemption of these quit rents is devoted not to Irish but to English purposes. We hold that instead of devoting this money to the purchase of properties of the Crown in England or to the discharge of liabilities on Crown properties in England, it would be much more in accordance with justice if this money, which is essentially Irish, were devoted to Irish purposes. This is a matter which, perhaps, has been forgotten or overlooked by the representative of Ireland, but it is one we are not disposed to allow to remain in abeyance much longer. Perhaps the Chancellor of the Exchequer will inform us how much money has been received from the redemption of Irish quit and Crown rents, and to what purposes that money has been devoted. We would insist that the money so derived hitherto and to be derived should be devoted to Irish purposes. Then there is the agricultural grant in connection with the Irish Local Government Act. When that Act was introduced I understand the Chancellor of the Exchequer to say that we were to receive about £750,000. As it has worked out, however, we have received only about £720,000. There may be nothing in it, but the feeling in Ireland is that there is a grievance in this matter, and I shall be obliged if the Chancellor of the Exchequer will give us some information on the point. Another point as to which considerable doubt exists, which we are extremely anxious should be cleared up, is the question of Irish lunatic asylum finance. According to our contention the Treasury have made a profit of about £120,000 out of the rearrangement of the finances of the Irish asylums in connection with the Irish Local Government Act. I should be extremely glad if it is wrong, but my information is somewhat to this effect: In the old days, before the Irish Local Government Act was passed, the financial year of the lunatic asylums ended on 31st December, and the arrangement was that the Imperial Treasury gave a subsidy of 4s. a week, or half the amount per head paid by the local taxpayers—whichever was the smaller amount—for every lunatic treated in the asylums. Under the recent Act this arrangement ceased, and certain fixed sums are to be paid. This charge is to be met out of the Local Taxation Account for Ireland. That account opened on 31st March, while the old

Ninth Day.

Sir T. G. Esmonde.

Sir T. G. Esmonde.

Asylums Account ended on 31st December, and apparently the matter has been so arranged that the Treasury have escaped paying their contribution for the period between 31st December, 1898, and 31st March, 1899. The exact amount is a matter for the calculation of experts, but the general opinion is that the Treasury have made about £120,000 by the transaction. The original Treasury liability was called a "refund," and was in respect of payments already made. Under the new arrangement the Treasury contribution goes under the name of a "grant," and is supposed to be in respect of future payments. On that understanding it would seem that about £120,000 remains due to Ireland for the period I have named. The matter has already been brought to the notice of the House by a question to the Irish Secretary—whose absence, especially on account of its cause, I regret very much, and all of us hope we shall see him in his place again before long. I hope the right hon. Gentleman will be able to give a satisfactory explanation. I have only raised this question as one of the many details of Irish finance. Many others could be raised, but I do not propose to raise them now. We have put forward this Amendment for the purpose of asserting our position in this country, and emphasising the opinion of Ireland that it labours under a distinct grievance which, throughout the whole of this session, as far as the forms of the House will allow us, we shall continue to press upon the House, and, whether we receive justice or not, we shall have the satisfaction of knowing that we have done our duty.

Amendment proposed—

"At the end of the Question, to add the words, But we humbly represent to Your Majesty that the over taxation of Ireland, which promises to become greatly aggravated by the expenditure on the war in South Africa, is a most serious and pressing grievance, and demands the early attention of Parliament with a view to its removal."—(Mr. Clancy.)

Question proposed, "That those words be there added."

MR. LOUGH (Islington, W.): There is only one observation made by the hon. Member this evening with which I have the slightest disposition to differ. He said it was very difficult to say anything new upon this question of Irish taxation. Unless Irishmen are able to say something new upon this matter they will never get their grievances redressed. This House does not care about archæology. It is useful, perhaps, to explain what mistakes were made in 1853, and the Royal Commission in 1894 made a splendid contribution to our history of Ireland. This House, however, pushes these things aside. It says they are past, and if you cannot show us that at the present moment you have a grievance of a pressing nature it is no use complaining. As I am strongly impressed with the belief that this grievance is one of the most acute that Parliament has got to deal with, and is growing more acute every day, I venture to make a few observations in this debate. I shall best make my point by alluding to a speech of the First Lord of the Treasury. The right hon. Gentleman has made three speeches on Irish taxation—the first was bad, the second was worse, and the third was the worst of all. No one appreciates more than I do the good feeling which the right hon. Gentleman has shown towards Ireland, and no one appreciates more than myself the useful character of some of the measures he has passed for Ireland. But it is very curious how his mind comes back to this financial question, and deals with it more inadequately upon every fresh occasion. The last speech he made was a very short but emphatic one. It was made during the recess, and he was drawing a parallel between the difficulties and grievances in South Africa and Ireland. I think Ireland might have been left alone in that connection. His argument went to show how just it was for the House of Commons to try and redress the grievances of the 'Uitlanders in the Transvaal, and he endeavoured to show that the 'Uitlanders' grievances were much more acute than the Irish grievances, and he mentioned them one after the other, and amongst others he alluded to the taxation grievance. He said that—" The Irish people allege that they are overtaxed when compared with the English. Personally I think just the reverse, and I have given my reasons for that opinion in a very elaborate form, open to anybody to discuss and to criticise, and, if they can, to answer. Even the Irishmen who most believe in Ireland's financial grievances will hardly maintain that they are taxed at £16 per head, which is what the Uitlanders are taxed at.”

The argument is that because the Uitlanders pay £16 per head, their grievance is greater than the Irish. The sum now paid by Irishmen amounts to 60s. per head. At the commencement of the present reign the total amount of local and Imperial taxation was 16s. per head, but since that time it has been doubled twice. That is, of course, even now very different to the Uitlanders' proportion, but mark the difference in the position of the two. There are no gold mines in Ireland. The great feature of Irish geography is a huge bog, and £16 per head can be more easily paid by the Uitlander than the smaller sum of 60s. by the Irishman. The Chancellor of the Exchequer will admit that nothing can be gained by comparing figures so different as the Uitlanders' and the Irish, and what should be compared is the principle of taxation. Let us do so for a moment. What was the principle upon which President Kruger imposed his taxes? It was this—that the richer the Uitlanders became and the more numerous they were, the more he would make them pay towards the taxation of the country. What is the principle this House follows in Ireland? It is that the poorer Ireland becomes and the fewer her population, the more this House will make her pay. If that is the truth, I bring against this House the gravest charge that can be put into human words. It is an evil which does not exist in any other civilised country, and I question if there is any other country where wealth and population are declining, and where taxation is increasing, as in Ireland. To find taxes constantly increasing under such circumstances is certainly one of the most extraordinary things that can be imagined. And it is for this reason that I say this Irish grievance is growing more acute. The people are getting fewer and the wealth is getting less, but this House is continually thrusting increased burdens of taxation upon them. My Irish friends have said that this Report of the Royal Commission has been neglected. When the Report of the Royal Commission was presented to this House there were three courses open to it. One course would have been for this House instantly to have said, “This is a serious matter; let us put this grievance right and reduce this burden of over-taxation.” Another course would have been to let the matter alone, and say, “We will not reduce taxation, neither will we increase it.” A third course—and I think everybody will agree the worst course—would have been for this House, after the Commission had reported, to go on increasing the taxes in a worse way than it had ever done before. It is this third and the worst course exactly that has been followed by this House. The figures are most extraordinary. Almost every Irish tax has been raised since that Commission reported, and the sum of £700,000 a year more was collected during the last financial year than in the year when the Commission reported. Perhaps the Chancellor of the Exchequer will say that this was caused simply by the normal operation of our system, but that is precisely what my hon. friends protest against and declare to be unjust. Perhaps some English Member will urge, “We have been treated in England in the same way;” but I contend that they have not been treated in the same way. They never were treated in the same way, for the English, Welsh, or Scotch Members would not stand it for an hour, and I am astonished at the patience with which my hon. friends the Irish Members have borne this burden. What is the case of the British? We must remember that great division which God has made between the two countries. There are two islands separated from each other; one is called Great Britain and the other Ireland. Our Chancellors of the Exchequer have tried to mix up the accounts of the two countries, but they have not succeeded. It is just as hard to mix them as to try and join the two islands together. What is the case of Great Britain as compared with Ireland? There has been a great increase of many millions in the wealth of Great Britain, and there has also been an increase of population. The increase in the wealth of Great Britain cannot be computed, and it has been mildly put at £50,000,000 per annum, in the revenue of the country. In England the increase of taxation has gone step by step with an increase of population and an increase of wealth. But how has it gone in Ireland? There the increase of taxation has gone on with a decrease of population and a decrease of wealth. That is really the only point I want to make, because I believe if we could awaken the conscience of this House to the magnitude of this evil—and I believe in the justice of this House when it understands a question—it would become more sympathetic. The reason the House does not take up this question is because it is a question of figures, and it does not understand it. Although I am dealing mainly with principles, let me offer one practical illustration of how the system works. I will give a striking figure to prove the decrease of the wealth and population of Ireland. My hon. friend who has just spoken has said something upon that point, and I will not repeat anything he has said. I only wish to give the House one figure, and it is such an astounding figure that I did not care to quote it without first writing to the Local Government Board in Dublin to correct it and bring it down to the year 1898. It is the return of pauperism in Ireland. I am going to ask the House to bear with me while I quote three very simple figures from this astounding document. I will state the proportion between the population and pauperism at three periods. The periods are 1864, 1894, and 1898. I may be asked why I take the year 1864. The reason is because the returns were commenced in that year, and it was a fair normal year. I take 1894 to show the facts when the Commission reported, and 1898 to show the present position. I hope that selection will be admitted to be fair. Omitting the odd figures, the population in 1864 was 5,640,000, and in 1894, 4,600,000. In 1864 the total number of paupers returned by the Local Government Board in Ireland was 295,000, and in 1894, 437,000, with a population a million less. Let me put the matter in another way. In 1864 the proportion of pauperism to population was 52 per 1,000, and in 1894 95 per 1,000. British Members in this House pay great attention to pauperism—they understand its importance—and may I appeal to them to observe that while pauperism has, thank God, fallen one-half in this country, pauperism in Ireland has almost doubled. I will give further figures. In 1894 the number of paupers was 437,000, and in 1898 526,000—an increase of 90,000 in four years, and the proportion per thousand had risen from 95 to 115. These are the most astounding figures presented to this House for many years. I believed from my own experience in Ireland that the figures were bad, but I had no idea that such a state of affairs existed, and before venturing to make a statement in the House of Commons I had the figures I have quoted confirmed by the Local Government Board. In Ireland taxation is constantly increasing while that phenomenon of decreasing wealth has to be dealt with. Let me deal with one other point. The English are very ingenious in meeting the arguments of the Irish, and they say, "Well, although you have very poor districts in the west of Ireland and a great many paupers, yet there are a great many well-to-do people, and their condition is improving, so that notwithstanding the appalling figures you have given the state of Ireland is better than you have led the House to suppose." I will give an answer to that argument. The Irish had a great genius for dealing with questions of finance, and it was agreed at the discussion which took place between the two Parliaments at the end of the last century that there would come a time when it would be possible to measure the conditions of Ireland and Great Britain respectively, and that that time would be when a common tax was levied on the same principle in both countries. There is such a common tax now. It is not equally just in both countries—it is just in Great Britain and unjust in Ireland—but it is levied on the same principle. I allude to the income tax. These great financial authorities at the end of the last century, among whom I include Pitt, agreed that when such a tax was levied for a large number of years it would be possible to judge the progress of the two countries by watching its operation. For the last five or six years income tax at the rate of 8d. in the £ has been levied in these two interesting islands, on the same principle, by the same authority, and passing into the same Treasury. In 1895 in Ireland income tax produced £18,000 more than it produced last year, while in Great Britain last year it produced nearly £2,000,000 more than it did in 1895. That proves that in Ireland the condition of the rich marches with the condition of the poor, and that they too are worse off than they were. I have given the House figures with reference to pauperism and the produce of the income tax, and, tested by either, this grievance is proved to be most acute and dangerous in Ireland. I will now deal with another British objection. The defenders of the British position may say, "How can this be?" I would ask them to drop the "how" and say, "Is this true?" But the British will not be satisfied unless the Irish answer every poser put to them. They will never deal with an Irish grievance unless they understand it. They ask, "How can such a great grievance arise under a common system of taxation?" There have been three systems of taxation in Ireland during the century, all equally oppressive. The first was a system of unequal taxation. Ireland was simply robbed under that, because whenever the English wanted to take off a tax they merely put a stop to a tax which only existed in England. That grievance became so flagrant that equal taxation was resolved upon, but under that system selected articles were taxed which pressed more hardly on Ireland than on England, and the result was as bad under equal as it was under unequal taxation. Then a third and a worse system than either has arisen lately. It is the collection of too much taxation and the giving back of a certain amount in grants. I believe the real object for which that system was established was to facilitate the plunder of Ireland; otherwise the system would have no meaning. What is the object of asking Great Britain to pay too much, and then giving the balance back. This House discovered only five taxes that would be at all productive in Ireland. Almost the only thing which would pay that was left out was the potato, and the House said, "Now, we must never part with any of the taxes on these articles." Then came the time when taxation realised too much, and the system arose of giving grants. Of course, the machinery was at hand for cheating Ireland, and this House used it. It gave grants to England and forgot Ireland. We have had an illustration of that in the present Parliament. The House has no historic memory and no continuity of policy—to which may be attributed some of our international and other dangers at the present moment—and the grants which were given by the present Parliament differed in their nature from previous grants. How has the present Parliament treated Ireland? In 1896 a large grant was given to land, and Ireland received only £180,000 instead of £800,000. In 1898 this House admitted it was wrong, and gave Ireland the larger sum. Now the House cannot have been right in both years, but its action is an example of how Ireland is treated under this system of grants. I will mention a smaller example. On what principle is the Science and Art Grant made? One would have thought that if there were to be a selection, the larger amount would be given to the poorer country, and to the country which had the greater artistic faculty to work on. On that principle the larger sum would go to Ireland, because the people are more artistic and have more time to devote to the work. It, however, gets not a twentieth or a twelfth—the proportion it pays of some taxes—but a fifty-ninth of the grant. In London alone about £35,000 a year is given, whereas the whole amount given to Ireland is only about £5,000. Without going into details, I have shown the principle on which Ireland has been invariably treated. Every system has been to the detriment of Ireland. The last point I have to mention is a very strong one, and refers to the war. I can see that my friends from Ireland mean to develop this point as the session goes on. In both the great wars of the century Ireland was treated in the most cruel way. In the Crimean War the tax was raised in Ireland and Great Britain. When that war was over it was taken off in Great Britain, but it has never been reduced a penny in Ireland. Then in the French War that culminated in the battle of Waterloo the tax was raised in Great Britain and Ireland; in the year after Waterloo £20,000,000 was struck off the British tax, but no corresponding reduction was made in Ireland. You will make this war a pretext for raising the taxes again, and when the war is over you will again forget to take them off. Now, I maintain that you cannot get money for this war from Ireland, because she has not got it to give you. The Chancellor of the Exchequer smiles, but if you do get anything it will be at a terrible expense of life. Even now the income tax does not produce so much as it did. Ireland has voted against you; all her people, or a large majority of them, are solid against you. The bulk of opinion in Ireland does not approve of the war, and in making the protest which they make by this Amendment the Irish people make a perfectly just protest which I commend to the sympathy of the House.

* Speech of Mr. A. J. Balfour, at Dewsbury, 28th November, 1899.

Mr. Lough.

*MR. GRANT LAWSON (Yorkshire, N.R., Thirsk): The answer to the charge that the hon. Member has made that we heap heavier taxes on Ireland and the people grow poorer is that the taxes have not been raised in Ireland up to the same level as in Great Britain, and that the people are able to consume more taxable commodities, and that seems to show that they are growing, not poorer, but richer.

*MR. LOUGH: A clear £700,000 was the result of the fresh taxes imposed in 1894 and 1896.

*MR. GRANT LAWSON: The hon. Member apparently refers to the whisky tax.

*MR. LOUGH: No, the income tax and the death duties.

*MR. GRANT LAWSON: Then I gather that the hon. Gentleman means that the disparity is increased by the income tax and the taxation of property passing at death. I am perfectly sure that Irishmen will not endorse that statement. In considering fixed taxation on certain commodities you must assume, if it is found that fewer people produce a greater amount, that those people are getting not worse but better off. It is a sign of increased prosperity that they can consume more taxable articles. Now, the hon. Baronet just now appeared unhappy because our answer to the party which he adorns has been that Ireland has no financial grievance at all. That is a satisfactory answer. In assuming that Ireland has a grievance we must see how the individual is situated. It is said that the grievance is the grievance of the nation and not an individual grievance of the people forming that nation. Of course, if the individual grievance is nothing, the nation has no grievance. Now, the individual living in Ireland has no grievance whatever. He pays the same taxation as people living here.

MR. JOHN REDMOND (Waterford): What about the Union?

VOL. LXXVIII. [FOURTH SERIES.]

*MR. GRANT LAWSON: The hon. Member asks about the Act of Union. Several hon. Gentlemen have referred to the Act of Union, but they have not read the words of the seventh section to the House. That section, after providing for a declaration of indiscriminate taxation, provides that the Parliament of the United Kingdom

"May from time to time, as circumstances may require, impose and apply such taxes" [equal on same articles] "subject only to such particular exemptions or abatements in Ireland, and in that part of Great Britain called Scotland, as circumstances may appear from time to time to demand."

That section appears quite unnecessary. It is an inherent power of any Government to do that at any time. Under that Ireland was exempted from land tax, house tax, passenger duty, and establishment charges. It is not only in the Treaty itself that Parliament has the right to make exemptions and abatements. We have had this point put to us as settled by authorities on taxation. The Commission which decided it consisted of very eminent financiers, and originally consisted of thirteen members, ten of whom were Irish or drawn from that section of the British who are more Irish than the Irish themselves. That mixture not being strong enough, two more Irish were added to the Commission. The report gave two pages of agreed report and 200 of different reasons, and the two pages which were agreed did not answer anything at all. The hon. Baronet said that in the matter of taxation for this war Irishmen will pay a disproportionate share —

SIR T. G. ESMONDE: On the basis of the finding of the Royal Commission.

*MR. GRANT LAWSON: If it falls on taxable commodities it presses the individual. The individual who drinks whisky will pay a disproportionate share as against that paid by a less convivial character, just as he will in England. The hon. Member for Islington suggested you ought to have given larger grants to Ireland in matters of technical instruction, but the Irish decline to recognise what they call a miserable apology for a set off by liberality in matters of expenditure. I hope hon. Members opposite will press this to a division, because I desire to see how many there are who suggest that England should pay more in order that Ireland may pay less.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL (Donegal, S.): We are now discussing a question in which the majority of Irish Members say that by a clever arrangement of this country Ireland is monstrously overtaxed: yet the benches opposite present the appearance they usually do on a full-dress Indian debate. They do not think it worth while to come down and hear our criticisms. I am glad the hon. Gentleman did not deliver his speech in the presence of the First Lord of the Admiralty, because they take very different views. His argument is that as taxation falls on the unit it does not matter where that unit lives. The First Lord of the Admiralty, when Chancellor of the Exchequer, was the father of the expression that Ireland was a separate fiscal unit. He acknowledged it in 1891. We all knew, and the right hon. Gentleman knew, because he was a well-informed man, the real condition of Ireland, but the bulk of the English people could not know that Ireland was overtaxed to the extent of two and a half millions per annum. But I need not go into those details now, and the House would not care to listen to me if I did. The Amendment complains of over-taxation now, and that it will be undoubtedly enhanced by the present war. I differ from the hon. Member for Islington in believing that what took place at the time of the Union is no longer interesting. The 7th Section of the Act of Union was wholly ignored, or rather, was ruthlessly violated. At the time of the Union both Irish and English statesmen saw that it would have the effect of robbing Ireland by unfairly taxing her in the event of a war. The last Speaker of the Irish House of Commons, Mr. Foster, was the greatest fiscal authority of his time. For sixteen years after the Union we had in the English House an Irish Chancellor of the Exchequer to guard our interests, and Mr. Foster was Chancellor of the Exchequer for some time. He strongly opposed the Union for fiscal reasons, and I will just quote a sentence from a speech made a century ago which is applicable at the present time. Mr. Foster said that Mr. Pitt wanted the Union not from any desire to reform the Irish Constitution, but in order to take the guardianship of the people's purse out of the hands of the Irish representatives, so that Ireland might be unfairly taxed in the event of a war. Mr. Pitt attempted to buy and stop

Mr. Foster's mouth by writing a letter, which I have seen, attempting to bribe him with the offer of an English peerage in order to get his vote. I will not say more about the Act of Union except this. The object of the seventh section of the Act of Union was that the National Debts of the two countries before the date of the Union should be kept separate, and that Ireland, in matters of taxation, should be treated with consideration and with an absolute regard to her ability to pay taxes, and that in the event of a surplus from Irish sources it should be expended upon Irish purposes. I would implore the Chancellor of the Exchequer not to rely on the authority of Mr. Gladstone (as did the First Lord of the Admiralty in 1870) for supporting the present financial system between England and Ireland. The First Lord of the Admiralty wrote an article upon the subject in the Contemporary Review, and Mr. Gladstone, speaking on the merits of the article, said that Ireland loudly and bitterly complained that England had failed to deal justly with her, and that after some inquiry into a very intricate subject he was compelled to agree. When the income tax was first imposed in 1853 the great majority of the people voted against it through thick and thin, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer knows that this tax will not be cheerfully paid. We know that Ireland has been mercilessly robbed under the Act of Union. The truth is that the Government enforce the Act of Union when it tells against Ireland, and ignore it when it is in her favour. The passing of the 7th Article of the Act of Union arranged that Ireland should have separate taxation, and should be separately considered, and above all, that the pre-Union debt of four hundred and fifty millions should never be charged to Ireland. It was only owing to the insertion of that article that the Act of Union was carried even in the bribed Parliament of that day. What followed? The amalgamation of the Exchequers took place when Ireland had a public debt of only 28 millions, and one million of a rent charge, while England at the same time had a debt of 450 millions, with 17 millions of a rent charge. An hon. Member tells us that Parliament had a perfect right to repeal the 7th Article of the Act of Union; but the Act of Union was more than an Act of Parliament. The Act of Union was a treaty between two great contracting powers, between two nations. I will not trouble the House with the details of it, which are well enough known already. But we must recollect how the Act of Union was carried as between one legislature and another. Mr. Pitt was fully alive to this. He was asked what guarantee would be given by the House of Commons, on the 21st April, 1800, that the provisions of the 7th Article of the Act would not be violated. We know what Mr. Pitt's strictures were. In his loftiest style he said: "If I were asked, 'What security would you give to Ireland for the performance of the 7th Article?' I would answer, None; the liberality, the honour, and the love of justice of the people of Great Britain have never yet been found deficient." I say, "Go and tell that to the Boers!" O'Connell in 1843 characterised the Union as "a gross financial swindle," and said that if his advice, as a lawyer, were asked in regard to a proposed partnership between a man owing 21 millions and a man owing 450 millions he would be inclined to say to the attorney, "Is our poor client on the way to a lunatic asylum?" This over taxation of Ireland will be protested against with the vigour of one voice and one party acting together in unison. It will be raised again and again, because this Act of Union, under which this wrong and injustice has been perpetrated, is an unconscionable wrong so great that the gentlemen who committed it would disgrace the dock of the Central Criminal Court. In season and out of season we shall protest against this malicious wrong till it be righted, for we believe that our efforts have the sympathy of the world.

MR. RENTOUL (Down, E.): I hope my hon. friend will not press this motion to a division, especially when I remind him of what took place last year. He is perfectly well aware that Members on this side of the House join with him and his colleagues in this matter. He will recollect that there is one thing both he and his opponents were careful to insist upon, namely, that there should be nothing done to put us in a definite position, and when it was proposed that the matter should be brought up again we were all anxious that it should not be brought up in such a way as to imply a vote of censure. Under these circumstances, and seeing what took place then, I would put it to my hon. friend not to go to a division on this matter this evening, for the simple reason that we feel it is absolutely necessary to go into the other lobby. He knows that since this session began there has been proposed a vote of censure on the Government in connection with this war. He knows that even this Amendment is mixed up with the war, and as soon as any mention of the war is made in an Amendment I for one would vote against it. If the matter is deferred till a time when a vote can be taken without implying censure on the Government, hon. Members opposite will find that I and my colleagues in Ulster have not changed our minds. I think the discussion that has taken place has served a good purpose. It is necessary to keep the ball rolling. As to what has been said by the hon. and learned Member for South Donegal, it was largely a repetition of what has gone before; at the same time that is no reason why the matter should not be brought up again and again. The desire in the heart of everyone in the Committee Room upstairs was that Irish Members should all act together. Moreover, after what has been said by the hon. Member, the leader of the Irish Unionist party, for whom our estimation is miles higher than before, I ask my hon. friends, for the sake of Auld Lang Syne, not to press the Amendment to a division, but reserve it for another and more convenient season, when Unionist Members from Ireland can support it without joining in a vote of censure on the Government.

MR. JOHN REDMOND: I had not intended taking part in this debate, but after the speech of the hon. Member for East Down I think I should offer some answer to the remarks he has made. Considering the past relations between us and the Members for whom he speaks, it would scarcely be courteous on my part unless I made some answer. I will endeavour to explain in a few sentences how the matter presents itself to my mind. I believe that a great many Members are deterred from taking part in these debates by the idea that this is a very difficult and complicated question, and that in order to understand it it is necessary to study deeply the history of the past, and to pore over the evidence contained in bulky Blue-books. I do not take that view at all. It seems to me in essence a question that is easily and simply understood. An hon. Member opposite has told us that he has read every word of the evidence given before the Royal Commission, but I must say, without meaning any disrespect to him, that if he has done so he has exhibited a lamentable ignorance of the question as it presents itself to us. Here is a treaty made between two nations on certain terms. One of those terms is that the Irish nation, one of the parties to the treaty, was never to be taxed beyond her relative capacity to bear taxation. Ireland under that treaty, or Act of Union, was to contribute to the Imperial expenditure only in proportion to her resources. The hon. Member for the Thirsk Division quoted two or three words from the seventh article of the treaty, and put a construction of his own upon it, but if anybody is uncertain as to the meaning and wants to interpret that article, surely the reasonable thing would be to go back to the declarations of English statesmen at the time when the treaty was made. Mr. Pitt, Lord Castlereagh, and other Englishmen at the time declared that the meaning of that seventh article was that Ireland should never be taxed beyond her relative taxable capacity, and Lord Castlereagh stated that the ratio of Ireland's contribution must ever correspond with her relative wealth and prosperity. Therefore the question is quite a simple one, and all these speeches going into elaborate details are beside the issue. The question is a simple one, and it is this—it has not been denied by the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the First Lord of the Treasury that under the Act of Union Ireland is only entitled to be taxed according to her relative taxable capacity. The plain issue therefore is, is she taxed more than she ought to be, and beyond her taxable capacity, and if she is, are you going to repudiate the treaty of Union? Now, on the question as to whether Ireland is taxed beyond her relative capacity there cannot be any doubt. The Royal Commission found she was, and that since 1753 the taxation of Ireland has been doubled, whilst the taxation of England has been largely diminished, and nobody who heard the speech of the hon. Member for West Islington could fail to be struck by the extraordinary figures he gave the House. During the period when the taxation of Ireland was doubled and that of England diminished the pauperism of Ireland increased from 294,000, or 54 per thousand of the population, to 536,000, or 105 per thousand of the population, and during the same period the prosperity of England increased and the pauperism of England diminished by one-half. These figures, to my mind, are extraordinary in their significance, and I say there is no answer to the judgment of the Royal Commission that Ireland is to-day taxed beyond her relative capacity to bear taxation. If that be so, I say that the only answer left to you is a repudiation of the Act of Union, and I say it is a serious question for the Unionist party to take up that position on this question. I do not intend to delay the House further than to say that this question has now been before the country and Parliament for several years. I admit in the frankest and fullest way that the Irish Unionist opinion is on our side in this matter. The right hon. and gallant Member who leads the Irish Unionist party in this House presided at a conference of Irish Members held upstairs, and with one or two exceptions the Irish Unionist Members were in thorough sympathy with our demands, and up to a certain point they gave us considerable assistance. But what has happened? We have argued this question and they have argued it. We have had full-dress debate after full-dress debate. But have we got any further? Sir, we have not advanced one single inch. I had almost said we had gone back, in spite of the help the Irish Unionist Members opposite have given us in making effective debates and arguments upon this question. Now, what are we to do under the circumstances? We are driven back to the old position which we always in the past adopted when we wanted to force a remedy for any grievances upon this House. We have tried argument, we have tried appeals coming from a practically united Ireland, and we have failed. What are we to do? The hon. Member for East Down says everything on this question has been heard on both sides, but I argue that from time to time the question ought to be brought up again, and we ought to have more full-dress debates. Does he not know as a practical man that by such proceedings we would not advance our case a single inch in our lifetime?

Mr. John Redmond.

MR. RENTOUL: Will pressing the matter to a division now advance it?

MR. JOHN REDMOND: As a practical man the hon. Member must know that the only chance we have of bringing this question to a successful issue is to make it a troublesome, and, if possible, a dangerous question for every English party which may be in power to ignore and despise. I therefore take the view that this question must be pressed upon the attention of the House of Commons and the Government, and not by a series of full-dress debates only. I think the proper action for us to take is to press it forward on every stage of the Budget. It ought to be pressed forward at every stage of the Budget, and of course if we take that course our friends opposite cannot follow us, because they naturally would not take part in an attempt to defeat the Government on the Budget, and it seems, therefore, if we are to listen to the appeal made to us and fall in with the view now expressed, that we ought to take no really serious action upon this question in attempting to force it on the Government. I and my colleagues of this side are not content to let these full-dress debates go on and to leave the Government in peace. I am in favour of dividing on this question, because it will impress upon the Government that we are determined to take an aggressive and militant attitude on this question, and to make it a troublesome one in the future. Let me put this to the House. If this question is to be brought to a successful issue by an expression of opinion from the Unionist Members for Ireland, we have got that and will always get it, because, whether or not we divide, hon. Members such as those who have just spoken will not go back on their opinions, but will always say we are right in asking for a redress of this grievance. We shall not lose anything by their not voting; we have got the value of their opinions. What we mean by going to a division is that we are prepared to take independent action, and to make this question a real trouble and danger to the Government on every possible occasion. I hope the hon. and learned Member will not think I have answered his appeal in either a discourteous or unreasonable way; I have endeavoured to answer it in a frank way, and I hope the House will understand our position.

*THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Sir M. HICKS BEACH, Bristol, W.): It is not for me to suggest to those who take a different view to mine how best they may promote their view, but I very much doubt if any good has really been done to their cause by those who desire to follow the policy suggested by the hon. and learned Member for Waterford in bringing forward the question now. I will not attempt to detain the House at this moment, when time is so important, by dwelling on arguments used in past debates. It has been said again and again on either side that the whole question has been thoroughly threshed out on more than one occasion during the present Parliament, and I do not think we need go back to-night to the great principles that divide us upon these matters, and the arguments by which those principles are supported. But I demur entirely, and in a few sentences will state my reasons, to the view the hon. and learned Member for Waterford has expressed, that the Act of Union requires that the taxation of Ireland is to be decided according to the taxable capacity of Ireland, and that any other method of dealing with the taxation of the country is a repudiation of the Act of Union. The Act of Union contemplated in the seventh article the union of the exchequers and the adoption of a common system of taxation throughout the United Kingdom. That was decided with the assent—which was a ready assent—of the representatives of Ireland in 1817, and ever since that time that has taken place which was laid down as the object to be attained in the seventh article of the Act of Union—namely, that the expenditure of the country should be defrayed indiscriminately by taxes upon the same articles in the two countries; then comes the proviso, on which alone the case of the hon. Members opposite rests, “subject only to such exemptions and abatements as circumstances appear from time to time to demand.”

MR. JOHN REDMOND: The right hon. Gentleman will forgive me for interrupting, but may I say that I interpret these words by the statements of Mr. Pitt and Lord Castlereagh.

*SIR M. HICKS BEACH: I interpret the words of the Act of Union by the Act of Union itself. Parliament, long ago, as I have said, with the assent of the Irish representatives of that date, adopted this equal system of taxation on the same articles throughout the United Kingdom; and I hope with all my heart that Parliament will not depart from that position. I will not deal at length with this question of exemptions and abatements. I will only say that, as far as I am concerned, I accept the view laid down last session by my right hon. friend the First Lord of the Treasury in a speech which has been very much discussed in the course of this debate—namely, that the proviso, whatever it meant, had no reference to any periodical calculation of the taxable capacity of different parts of the United Kingdom, whether of Scotland or Ireland; or to any attempt based on such a calculation to adapt the taxation in these countries on that basis. It simply referred to this, that care should be taken, as care had been taken for the previous 100 years in Scotland, that taxes should not unfairly oppress individuals or industries in one country as compared with the others. That really in my belief was the intention of the framers of the proviso. That was the way it was understood for more than a hundred years in Scotland, and it was adopted in the Act of Union for Ireland from the Act of Union between England and Scotland. All this notion of taxable capacity as connected with a common system of taxation is, in my belief, entirely an erroneous offspring from the report of the Royal Commission. Having said that much I will confine myself to an attempt to deal with what seems to be the object of this motion. It is, no doubt—and the hon. and learned Member for Waterford so indicated—a sort of preliminary skirmish on a question of which we may expect to hear a great deal in the course of the session, but it has also been raised, perhaps mainly raised, at the present time with reference to expenditure on the war. Hon. Members below the gangway opposite object to the war, and they will object, I do not doubt, to all expenditure on the war, and from that point of view they are perfectly justified in opposing any proposals for increase of taxation on account of war expenditure and in taking such a course as they may think right and proper for resisting them. But if I may dismiss for a moment, by way of argument, the question of the requirements of the Act of Union, let me say that the imposition of increased taxation on Ireland on account of the war cannot on any other ground create any injustice to Ireland. The hon. Baronet opposite, the Member for the Cokermouth Division of Cumberland, spoke and voted against the war the other night, and he will, no doubt, oppose taxation on account of the war as strongly as Members from Ireland; but, assuming that the majority of this House is of a different opinion, he will be in a minority, and he and his constituents will not have the faintest reason to complain of any injustice with regard to the result. The only way, therefore, in which this question, the expenditure on the war, is really relevant to the matter of Irish financial relations is that, in the opinion of the hon. Member for North Dublin, if there should be—upon which in February I certainly express no opinion—an increase of taxation on account of the war, that increase will aggravate what he considers the present injustice to Ireland. I would just observe in passing that it does not at all follow, assuming there be injustice to Ireland in the present system, that it would be aggravated by an increase of taxation. Hon. Members who have examined this question know that a greater percentage of certain taxes, according to the calculations which have been made of the true revenue raised in both countries, is raised in Ireland, as compared with the rest of the United Kingdom, than of other taxes. For example, suppose—hon. Members will remember I am not in any way suggesting anything with regard to future taxation; it is much too early in February to do that—but suppose for a moment that it was necessary to raise revenue by largely increased taxation on account of the war, and that the whole of the increase was raised by direct taxation, certainly that would not aggravate any injustice Members from Ireland complain of; that must be admitted by hon. Members opposite. The simple fact is this—Ireland pays a very much less proportion of direct taxation than she pays of indirect taxation, or of direct and indirect taxation taken together. I will give an instance from what happened last session. It was a small matter, but I had to increase taxation by something like £900,000 a year, and I increased the stamp duties, mainly, if not entirely, on documents connected with Stock Exchange transactions, and I placed an increased duty on wine. Now, was that an aggravation of the injustice to Ireland?

Sir M. Hicks Beach.

MR. CLANCY (Dublin, N.): Certainly.

*SIR M. HICKS BEACH: Then why did not hon. Members oppose it on that ground? Upon the ground that it aggravated the injustice to Ireland there was not a single protest against the Budget of last session.

MR. CLANCY: The more shame to Irish Members.

*SIR M. HICKS BEACH: I do not venture to suggest that Irish Members neglected their duty.

MR. CLANCY: It is an invitation to us this session, and I hope we shall not neglect it.

*SIR M. HICKS BEACH: I should not have given the invitation if I had not had the promise already. I believe that hon. Members on that occasion did not neglect their duty, and I am convinced that if those who have studied this question had seen an increase of injustice last year they would have opposed the proposal on that ground. Let me say something more. I listened to the speech of the hon. Member for Islington on this subject, to which he has given great attention. From his point of view the injustice which he holds Ireland has to complain of under the present system is a growing injustice. Very well. But, even if you deal solely with the question of revenue, it certainly is not a growing injustice so far as the proportion of our revenue raised in Ireland is concerned. The Royal Commission reported upon the figures of the year 1893-94. In that year it was calculated that the total true revenue raised was £89,286,000 and the true revenue raised in Ireland £7,558,000. They reported that the proportion of the total revenue raised in Ireland was, I think, 1 in 11. Since that time that proportion has been steadily diminishing.

MR. FLYNN (Cork, N.): I do not wish to interrupt the right hon. Gentleman, but were those figures accepted by the Royal Commission? There were several suggestions as to making them more accurate.

*SIR M. HICKS BEACH: I believe they are the figures on which the calculations of the Royal Commission of the proportionate revenue of England and Ireland were based. What were the last figures presented to Parliament for the year 1898-99? The true revenue of Great Britain had increased to £108,837,000, the true revenue of Ireland had increased to £8,202,000. The true revenue of Great Britain therefore had increased by £19,500,000, or something of that sort, and the true revenue of Ireland by about £650,000. Although it is premature to give figures with regard to the outcome of the present year, I am convinced from what I have already seen that the increase in the true revenue of Great Britain is likely to be at least £4,000,000 more than that of the year 1898-1899, while the increase in the revenue of Ireland may possibly be £250,000. The result is this—that whereas the Royal Commission reported that the proportion of the revenue of the United Kingdom raised in Ireland was one in eleven, it now comes to something like one in fifteen. What is the answer of the hon. Member for Islington? He says the wealth of Great Britain has enormously increased, and that the wealth of Ireland has diminished, that Ireland is a poorer country than she was. With regard to the years I have quoted I entirely admit that the wealth of Great Britain has largely increased; it is the fact that the main part of the great increase in revenue in Great Britain to which I have referred has arisen from increased direct taxation levied since 1893-94, from the increase of the death duties; but it arises also from an increase in the wealth of the country. Neither the income tax, nor the death duties, nor any form of direct taxation, can for a moment fairly be argued to press heavily on Ireland. The hon. Member says Ireland has become very much poorer since 1864; that is not my view. As the hon. Member for the Thirsk Division has already pointed out to the House, there has been a considerable increase since that time in the receipts from indirect taxation on dutiable articles in Ireland. There is no doubt about it, and why? Because there has been an increased consumption of those articles, some of which certainly are subject to less taxation than they were in that day.

*MR. LOUGH: On the whole the rate of taxation is more.

*SIR M. HICKS BEACH: It may be that the rate of taxation on spirits is higher; the rate of taxation on beer is higher; but does any hon. Member desire to reduce that?

*MR. LOUGH: That is not the point.

*SIR M. HICKS BEACH: Yes, it is, and it is a very important point. There is not an hon. Member in this House who has suggested in the course of these debates that the rate of taxation on beer or whisky should be reduced.

MR. T. M. HEALY (Louth, N.): I suggest it.

*SIR M. HICKS BEACH: I beg the hon. Member's pardon for not excepting him, but that at any rate has not been the view which has been pressed on Parliament. The rate of taxation on tea has been very largely reduced, and yet the receipts from tea both in Ireland and Great Britain are unquestionably larger than they were at the date which has been mentioned. That is a proof, and if the rates of duty on beer and spirits are higher, the increased consumption of beer and spirits is even more a proof, not of increased poverty, but of increased means on the part of the nation. When the hon. Member for West Islington puts before the House an increase in the number of paupers in Ireland during the last forty years as an irrefutable argument in favour of his contention that Ireland is poorer now than she was then, is he really ignorant of the enormous, and I think most unfortunate, change in the system of Poor Law administration in Ireland, which has spread out relief over the whole of the country, whereas at the time to which he referred it was, comparatively, hardly known at all?

*MR. LOUGH: I have compared the years 1894 and 1898.

*SIR M. HICKS BEACH: No, 1864.

*MR. LOUGH: I beg your pardon. The right hon. Gentleman does not do me justice. I first took the years 1864 and 1894, and then the years 1894 and 1898. The system was thoroughly established in 1894, and I showed that the proportionate increase was far greater between 1894 and 1898 than between 1864 and 1894.

*SIR M. HICKS BEACH: I do not agree with the hon. Member; I do not think the system was thoroughly established in 1894. I am afraid it has been increasing since and is increasing still; but what I have said is at any rate a complete answer to the statistics in regard to 1864. But the hon. Member went on to say that the income-tax in 1898 produces less in Ireland than it did in 1894. Does he not think there may be some reason for that besides the decrease in the wealth of Ireland? There are three reasons, to which I think some importance may be attached, as they certainly make the income tax apply more leniently to Ireland than to the rest of the United Kingdom. One reason is that there has been a considerable extension of the system of exemptions and abatements in favour of the smaller incomes, which necessarily must form a larger proportion in Ireland than in Great Britain of the whole amount on which income-tax is charged. Another is that there has been, I have no doubt, in those four years no inconsiderable increase in the number of small proprietors in Ireland, and every increase of that kind would relieve a man from income tax. When the estate of a large landowner is sold to his tenants, a property which formerly paid income tax tends to become free from it. That has been, I have no doubt, a factor of some importance of late years in Ireland. Another point in which Irish owners of property subject to income tax have an advantage over owners of such property in the rest of the United Kingdom is that in Great Britain the owner of such property is assessed at the rent which he receives from it, while in Ireland, whatever rent he receives from it, he cannot be assessed at more than Griffiths's valuation—[AN HON. MEMBER: That is frequently more than the rent.]—and if that valuation is more than the rent he can claim to be assessed at the rent which he receives. I am sorry to say it is a game of "heads I win and tails you lose," and the net result is that the income tax payer in Ireland is certainly assessed on the whole more favourably for himself than he is in Great Britain. As the hon. Member raised these points, I thought it well to put before the House something which I think deserves consideration on the other side. But I must now turn to a view of this case which I know is very distasteful to

hon. Members opposite; but I hope, as we have listened very patiently to accusations of cheating, robbery, fraud, and everything of that kind, with regard to this matter, they will hear me patiently. I have never been able to see the justice of dealing with taxation, as my hon. friend the Member for the Thirsk Division put it, on Separatist lines, and dealing with expenditure on Unionist lines. If you are to deal with taxation on separatist lines, you must also consider expenditure on the same lines. That brings me directly to the set-off which I know hon. Members opposite below the gangway never condescend to consider in respect to this matter. There have been for many years now returns annually presented to Parliament showing what is expended out of the Imperial revenue in the different parts of the United Kingdom for local purposes. [AN HON. MEMBER: They are not correct.] I know the hon. Member thinks they are not correct; I know it has been said in the course of this debate that some of the local expenditure in Ireland ought to be included among Imperial expenses. For instance, the hon. Member for North Dublin told us, although he dealt with Irish revenue on Separatist lines, that it was absurd to charge against Ireland the charge for collecting that revenue.

MR. CLANCY: Certainly, because the Act of Parliament says so.

*SIR M. HICKS BEACH: And he went on to say that so far from being content with the suggestion which the First Lord of the Treasury made last year, and I think made rather generously, that only half the cost of the Irish constabulary ought to be counted as an Irish local charge, he thought none of the cost of that constabulary ought to be so accounted. In other words, that Irishmen ought to keep the peace at no cost whatever to themselves.

MR. CLANCY: You undertook the cost of keeping the peace in Ireland as the price to be paid for the injury done to Ireland by the repeal of the Corn Laws.

*SIR M. HICKS BEACH: No, I do not follow the hon. Member in that argument at all. If you are to estimate these local charges fairly in the different portions of the United Kingdom, you must make in each part a fair charge for the ordinary cost of keeping the peace. I have never been able to believe that under any system of Home Rule the cost of keeping the peace in Ireland would be less than it is now. ["Oh, oh!"] I feel that that is an unpopular opinion, and I do not want to press that point; but at least it must be admitted by hon. Members below the gangway that it would be advisable to have some policemen, and if they have policemen they would have to pay for them, and therefore there would have to be a charge against Ireland. The hon. Member for North Dublin told us that a good deal of this expenditure, besides that to which I have alluded, was expenditure which was forced upon Ireland, and that, at any rate, it was not expenditure which Irishmen, if left to themselves, would care to incur. I can only say with regard to such matters as the educational charge and charges for other things to Ireland which are unquestionably local charges, I never remember, in all the years during which I have had the honour of a seat in this House, any occasion on which Irish Members of all shades of political opinions did not cheerfully welcome any expenditure, and do their best to maintain that expenditure. I do not make any complaint of that at all; I merely point out that this is expenditure which they desire, and that, therefore, they cannot exclude it on the ground of its being forced upon them in calculating what are the local charges borne on the Imperial revenue. I suggested two or three years ago that, as I knew they questioned the way in which these accounts are calculated, the matter should be further examined by a Commission, which should endeavour to arrive at a fair adjustment. That suggestion was scouted by hon. Members, and I was told that it was a fraudulent device—a kind of term which hon. Members use rather freely on this subject. They would have nothing whatever to do with it, and, therefore, I can only rest myself upon the figures as they now stand. I will briefly state to the House how these figures have altered in recent years. Whether they rest on a fair basis or not, they may at any rate be used for the purpose of comparison with different years; it was calculated upon the basis which has been adopted that in 1893-94

Ireland's contribution to the Imperial expenditure was not one-twentieth, as it ought to be if you accept that proportion for her revenue, but one thirty-first part only; in 1897-98 that had decreased to one thirty-sixth, in 1898-99 to one forty-second, and this present year I believe it will work out at about one fifty-fifth. In other words, out of a total expenditure of £75,500,000—excluding the war expenditure—Ireland, for Imperial purposes, will pay nothing more than £1,375,000, and yet we are told that it is a gross injustice, robbery, and fraud, if Ireland is asked to pay anything towards the expenditure of this great war. I do not wish to detain the House further. I have endeavoured to address myself to what I may call new matters which have arisen in the course of this debate. On other matters I have nothing to add to what I have already said in previous debates, and, as I fear that the arguments which I have often adduced have not obtained the assent of hon. Members opposite, I have no greater hopes of converting them to-night. But this much I will say, as I have said before, that I never will consent to anything which would do what was suggested by the hon. Member for North Dublin—place the rich man in Ireland in a better position with regard to the payment of income tax than the rich man in Great Britain, or place the poor man in Ireland in a better position with regard to his tea and tobacco, his beer and his spirits, than the poor man in great Britain.

MR. CLANCY: That is what the Act of Union says should be done.

*SIR M. HICKS BEACH: I absolutely deny that proposition. I absolutely deny that the Act of Union said or intended anything of the kind. It would be a gross injustice to the population of the United Kingdom as a whole; and I believe that our present fiscal system, if it were fairly looked at, even by hon. Members opposite, apart from the will-o'-the-wisp light of the Report of the Royal Commission, would be found to be as fair and as equitable as any which exists in any country in the world.

*MR. T. M. HEALY: The right hon. Gentleman who has just sat down, although I have always regarded him as a stern and severe taskmaster in English politics, and

Sir M. Hicks Beach.

though he has always taken a strong line in rebutting our arguments, I have never regarded as personally unfriendly to Ireland. On the contrary, I have always believed, from the time when he was Chief Secretary, he would like to do something for Ireland, for, unlike some past Irish Secretaries, some of his knowledge still sticks to him. He has divided his present argument into three branches. He first scouted our argument on the Act of Union, and then he treated us to an examination of the figures based on our being Lancashire or Yorkshire. And then the third branch of his argument was: "Even granted that you are not Lancashire or Yorkshire, there is an Imperial set off of money spent in the country which suffices to repair any injustice." I should first of all like to say two or three words on the historical argument. I ask you when there is any question between any two countries as to the interpretation of a treaty, would you think it tolerable that the people in one country should be the sole arbiters of the interpretation and the construction of that treaty? You tried that on with Venezuela, and you said: "We have got the ships and we have got the men, and we will quarter up your country as we please." That was your intention, but the United States would not hear of it, and said: "No, this is a dispute between two sovereign States, and it must be referred to arbitration." And when it was referred to arbitration, as in all cases where England has been reluctant to enter upon arbitration, she got the worst of it. (Cries of "No, no.") It reflected a curious light upon the original reluctance to referring the matter to arbitration if it is now satisfactory. Ireland claims—whether rightly or wrongly is immaterial for my argument—that the construction of this treaty is not a matter for one of the parties to it. That it was a treaty is unquestionable. It was made between two countries which were separated, and between two sovereign legislatures. I say nothing now as to how the Union was produced; how all the unbribed intellect of Ireland was against it, while, instead of there being thousands of voters as there are now in the country, the three hundred Irish Members were elected by a mere handful of votes. Well, now, is it a prudent thing for the English, who at this moment are so strong about the observance of the London Convention with the Boers—is it a prudent thing to suggest that we shall not have arbitration, we shall not have a court of law, and we shall only have the British Treasury to decide as to this treaty? I say that that in itself constitutes a casus belli between the two countries. Where is our remedy? You say in the Transvaal, because taxes are piled up on the Uitlanders, “We will go to war to redress that wrong.” You say you have a casus belli against the Transvaal. Kruger wanted to refer the matter to arbitration, and you refused. I say when there is a question of the construction of a treaty between two countries we have a right to ask that the matter should be referred to arbitration, and that we have a casus belli if you refuse. [AN HON. MEMBER: No, no!] I submit that, legally speaking, we have. Let us put it on lower ground than upon a dispute between two sovereign States. Let us suppose that we are all shareholders in a great international concern. Would you think it right that these shareholders should be denied access to the books, that they should be denied an audit, and that the books should be kept in the hands of a particular number of the directors? Supposing there was a railway and a steamship company from here to France. Suppose that the Northern Railway of France was fused with the London and Chatham Railway, would you think it right that the joint company should only have French directors, and that when the English directors demanded an audit the French directors should shrug their shoulders and refuse it? But that is the position taken up by the right hon. Gentleman. The whole system is English; the Treasury is English. We have not in the Government a single man to see fair play. The Irish Secretary is an Englishman or a Scotchman, which for our purpose is the same thing. The whole of the system is a British system, and we have no means of knowing how the books are kept; and even if they were kept by the most honourable set of people in the world I say it is a monstrous state of things that those who contribute some eight millions of money should be denied all access to the accounts. And then the right hon. Gentleman referred to the “true” revenue of Ireland. Why have you to speak of the “true” revenue of Ireland, and why should you have to use the word “true”? Is there a “false” revenue of Ireland? The reason is this: because you have so manipulated the accounts of the three countries that you have absolutely erased and eradicated any means of ascertaining the true revenue of Ireland. You have abolished for your own purpose our Custom House, though a Custom House, even if there was not a separate fiscal system, would be an enormous value to us in showing what we exported, and so on; and if you enabled us to see what butter we were making and what cattle we were exporting it would be like a pulsometer, and would act, at all events, for registration purposes. But because this pulsometer or register or penny in the slot system would act injuriously for your Treasury purposes the Treasury even deny us the few clerks necessary in order to know what merchandise we send away, and you decline to take any account of it. Even if the system between England and Ireland were perfect then, for the purpose of quieting your conscience and showing the world that we were getting fair play, would it not be well for you to do something. You may be the most admirable people in the world, but you are as God made you and we have our suspicions of you. And, therefore, I say if it is only for the purpose of quieting your conscience, you ought to consent to submit this matter to some impartial judge. And then the right hon. Gentleman said that we absolutely refused, and scouted any suggestion of a further Commission to inquire into the question of set-off. For my part, I am always very cautious in referring to that question, and for this reason: the Irish party at the time was divided. Mr. Sexton, who behaved with so much credit to himself and so much advantage to his country on that Commission, was no longer a Member of the House. The Member for Waterford, the other member of the Commission, was acting with a small and separate party, and accordingly we were not in a condition to approach the Government on this question with any kind of a strong hand, and we did not feel in our then condition that it was a proposition which we were in a position to entertain.

*SIR M. HICKS BEACH: A meeting of the Irish Members was held, and there was an actual resolution passed on the subject, with the hon. Member for East Mayo in the chair.

Ninth Day.

*MR. T. M. HEALY : I do not think I myself attended that meeting, though I fully admit that it bound me, and accordingly with that resolution before us in our then somewhat distracted condition, I don't think it was an unfair thing of those asked to consider the question of this Commission to take up an attitude of hesitation upon it, when they already had the verdict of another Commission in their favour and the new one was to be manned to reverse or discredit its findings. But, at the same time, I don't think that the matter of what should be treated as Imperial and what should be treated as Irish expenditure should be entirely closed. Then let us see the nature of the set-off, which the Member for North Dublin handled so well yesterday. Take the present condition of Italy. It was determined, owing to the Triple Alliance, to keep up a certain number of regiments, with the result that every Italian peasant is ground to powder with extraordinary taxation, his bread and meat and salt being taxed, and practically there is no money in the country but paper money. Is it any satisfaction to the Italian peasant to know that at Spezzia or some other great place armaments are being heaped up, and that vessels are being filled with gunpowder and cannon, when he is absolutely rendered penniless by this extraordinary system of taxation? All these war taxes are spent in Italy for guns, ships, and soldiers. But what is the set-off to a man who wants to put salt in his porridge if he knows that some 110-ton guns are being built? Therefore I say that though there is something in a set-off it can never be considered a complete answer to our argument. I might deal with it in this way: Let us suppose that Dublin Castle is filled with rats, and that in consequence you have to find an extraordinary quantity of cat's meat. Would you consider this Castle cat's meat a set-off? No doubt for your own purpose you keep up this system of barracks, prisons, and poor-houses, and then you turn round and say to us, "We spend so much upon our Militia, so much upon our Army, so much upon guns, police, county court judges," and so on throughout the whole of the British form of administration in the country. What satisfaction is that to us? What satisfaction is it to that person "the man in the street," walking along Merrion Square, to know that there are four or five judges living there receiving £4,000 or £5,000 a year? What satisfaction is it to a man in Phoenix Park to know that there is a Lord Lieutenant there holding a levee who is paid £25,000 per annum, or that there are barracks on all sides at which a limited class of the population, chiefly ladies, find consolation? I think the set-off argument may be fairly pigeon-holed under the title of "the Castle cat's meat." If I were dealing with the question of set-off, I would like to divide it into two heads, reproductive and non-reproductive works. I believe if you had reproductive works set going in Ireland like you have at Woolwich or Chatham, if you had in Ireland shipbuilding yards, I think then you might fairly say, "We will treat the wages as a set-off." But salaries paid to judges as part of the machinery of oppression like policemen and soldiers, or the gunpowder kept for the collection of rent, I decline to reckon as a set-off. The right hon. Gentleman must not assume that we cannot conceive that, in certain circumstances, the question of a set-off might not fairly arise. What we do say is that the items he refers to are not a set-off. May I say one or two other words upon this question? The right hon. Gentleman, in the third part of his argument, asked us not to assume that Ireland must necessarily be taxed for this war. I would not expect any extraction of opinion from him in advance upon that point, but could he lay his hands upon his heart and say that for the last hundred years the Irish fiscal system has been a fair one to our country? I challenge him to get up and declare upon his financial conscience that that is so. He can see that it is a system which has destroyed our mills, exported our millers, levelled our distilleries, stopped our tobacco industry, ruined our weaving and flax growing, and turned the whole country into one vast grazing tract, of which the profits go into the hands of a few grazers, and I challenge him to show that it is a fair system to our country. He says that Ireland is not hit by indirect taxation, but I deny it. I say that every farthing which you exact from the country,

Sir M. Hicks Beach.

whether from stamps or whisky, to which we have not given our national assent is robbery, and it is nothing else. The right hon. Gentleman says stamp duties are no injustice to Ireland. Is it no injustice to a man going into the Land court when he has to pay a shilling or ten shillings as an initial proceeding to get justice? Is it no injustice to have to pay a tax upon the formation of a tiny company? Suppose we want to get up a company for the starting of any industry in Ireland, have we not to pay the same rate of taxation as if it were a company for the starting of a gold mine in the Rand? It is the very same tax. Will any man tell me that it is the same thing to put a stamp on the formation of a colliery as to put the same stamp upon the formation of a company to start a little cloth mill in Ireland? Our industries require, to some extent at all events, to be fostered. You do not even let them alone, and I deny, when you come to consider the relative question of taxation, that Ireland should be treated in the same spirit or temper as a country with vast mineral resources. He says: "What is the harm of a tax on whisky?" The right hon. Gentleman asks: "Is anybody in favour of reducing the tax on whisky?" I am in favour of reducing the tax on everything. That is my answer. With regard to this argument I would like to see fewer public-houses in the country, temperance established, and every man a teetotaler. Nobody would more rejoice at that than myself. But I deny, in a miserable country like ours, the proposition that alcohol is necessarily a luxury. I believe tea may sometimes be a greater luxury. Take a man working as a day labourer at 1s. or 1s. 6d. per day. Perhaps he may work in a flannel jacket and get thoroughly soaked, and can spare twopence to have half a glass of whisky. I wish him joy with it, and I deny that that twopence is a portion of his luxury. In a country like that would it not be something if that man was able to buy that for a penny?—[Laughter]—Or might he not buy a red herring or a pound of bread with his spare penny? You may say he would have two glasses, and then the British taxgatherer suddenly becomes a temperance philanthropist. I deny altogether the proposition that British philanthropists and taxgatherers have a right to say, "We will keep the tax on whisky." Tax beer similarly to whisky, and then we will talk to you. How long does the right hon. Gentleman think he would occupy his honourable office if he taxed beer as he does whisky? The right hon. Gentleman also used this argument with regard to paupers—I never will be a statistician, I can badly add up figures, and I never will set up as an authority on finance—he says, with regard to the argument about paupers used by the hon. Member for West Islington, whose calculations and work on this subject entitle him to the lasting gratitude of our country, that the figures since 1864 were due to outdoor relief. That is a terrible condemnation of the system on which the workhouses were conducted in Ireland, a system under which a man was compelled to leave his wife and family instead of getting sixpence or a shilling on the English system. I do not credit that argument. It is true in recent years, no doubt, there has been some increase in the system of outdoor relief, but I cannot gather, nor will I admit that it is the fact that the increase of pauperism can be attributed to that. What is the answer? Does he consider that lunacy is pauperism? How is it that lunacy has increased in the country? Lunacy to an enormous extent has increased. I have seen calculations showing that if you take the statistics of lunacy in America, they show that lunacy has increased more largely among the farming and agricultural class than in any other class in the United States. "Farming must always be a bare business," was a saying of the late Mr. Biggar. When you have to meet your rent half-yearly or yearly, and the anxieties connected with the farm—whether the weather is good or bad, whether your flocks and herds will bear in a prolific manner, whether the blight will visit your potatoes or not—all tend necessarily to make the business of a farmer in a country with an uncertain climate a more anxious life than almost any other business or occupation. Now nine-tenths of the population of Ireland are farmers, and this extraordinary increase in lunacy, in my judgment, is due to the fact that it has an agricultural population of this kind. Is it fair to tax an agricultural population in the same way as you tax a mining or a textile population? Why not put all your taxes on coal? We have no coal, practically speaking, in Ireland. Would you think that fair?

Would you think it fair to put all your taxes on iron or on cheese? The English eat all the cheese. Would you think it fair if all the staple English industries were picked out and the other industries were left alone? I admit there are enormous difficulties in arriving at a just system of taxation for the English people. I think anybody in the position of the right hon. Gentleman must have anxious nights, even on the question of England alone. What is his burden, then, when he has to do justice between this enormously rich country, on the one hand, and this enormously poor country on the other, who are the two last partners that should ever have been brought together? I venture to think that if the statesmen of the Union had to solve the problem they had to consider one hundred years ago in the light of what has happened, the fiscal union of the two countries would be the last thing they would propose. Why is Ireland taxed when the Isle of Man and the Channel Islands are left out? Do you think you would promote loyalty in the Isle of Man by putting 10s. 6d. on their whisky? What becomes of the Chancellor of the Exchequer's statement when he said—

"I will never be a party to letting the rich man off in Ireland, or giving the poor man his beer and tobacco cheaper in Ireland than in England"?

What is the mystery about the Isle of Man? Why do not they pay? They have a separate Parliament, they have separate wealth, and they are wealthier than we are, and yet they do not pay a single shilling to this Imperial fund. Then, again, Jersey is at your doors. It sends you flowers and new potatoes, and yet it does not pay a single penny. Is not that a sad thing for us to contemplate in the unhappy position in which we are placed. Last of all, look at your great and glorious self-governing colonies. You boast about the splendid contingents they supply for this war, but in 1883 there were New South Wales and Canadian contingents fighting against the Mahdi in Egypt while the Colonial Secretary was still at the Local Government Board. Do your colonies give you a shilling? Not a penny, but you tell us they have given these splendid contingents of men. Do not we give you as good contingents? Why is it the Secretary of State for War will not tell us the proportion of militia regiments from England, Scotland, and Ireland?

Mr. T. M. Healy.

*MR. SPEAKER: The hon. Gentleman is not confining himself to the question of the over-taxation of Ireland.

*MR. T. M. HEALY: I feel the justice of that observation, Mr. Speaker. When we are invited to consider the question of "set-off" I think we are entitled to put the argument of "set-on," and when you think of the enormous assistance our country gives in the way of troops and physical contributions it is a matter that may fairly be set against the fiscal contributions to which the Chancellor of the Exchequer has referred. I entirely share the view of the hon. and learned Member for Waterford when he said that we cannot abstain from pressing this matter to a division. No doubt we have had useful assistance from hon. Gentlemen opposite from Ireland, but, unhappily, Sir, the authors of the Union forgot, when they were giving us one hundred Members for the purpose of advocating the claims of Ireland with regard to taxation and legislation, that they would be divided into two parties, and that one of them would be an Irish party and the other practically an English party. I say that without any intention whatever of reflecting on the patriotism of hon. Gentlemen opposite, but for some reason or other—either the expectation of office or because they are connected with land—they ally themselves with one or other of the great English parties, and therefore to that extent the arm of Ireland in fighting this question is paralysed; but we who have none of these expectations are bound to press the claims of Ireland irrespective of English party considerations; and when we find the British Ministry rejecting our arguments, refusing our demands, and refusing to submit this matter to the arbitration of a competent tribunal, we are bound to press it in a way perhaps more severely than hon. Gentlemen who sit on the other side of the House. These are the considerations we have to put before the House. They are founded on the Treaty of Union itself, and founded on the relative conditions of the two countries, and they may well be deemed worthy of consideration by any fair and impartial tribunal.

Question put.

The House divided:—Ayes, 77; Noes, 200. (Division List No. 7.)

AYES.

Abraham, Wm. (Cork, N.E.)
 Allan, Wm. (Gateshead)
 Ambrose, Robert
 Austin, M. (Limerick, W.)
 Blake, Edward
 Bolton, Thomas Dolling
 Caldwell, James
 Clancy, John Joseph
 Commins, Andrew
 Condon, Thomas Joseph
 Crean, Eugene
 Crilly, Daniel
 Curran, Thomas B. (Donegal)
 Daly, James
 Dewar, Arthur
 Doogan, P. C.
 Dunn, Sir William
 Engledew, Charles John
 Evans, S. T. (Glamorgan)
 Farrell, J. P. (Cavan, W.)
 Fenwick, Charles
 Freuch, Peter
 Flavin, Michael Joseph
 Flynn, James Christopher
 Glibney, James
 Griffith, Ellis J.
 Hammond, John (Carlow)

Harrington, Timothy
 Hayden, John Patrick
 Hayne, Rt. Hon. C. Seale-
 Healy, Maurice (Cork)
 Healy, Timothy M. (N. Louth)
 Hemphill, Rt. H. Charles H.
 Hogan, James Francis
 Holland, William Henry
 Jones, W. (Carnarvonshire)
 Jordan, Jeremiah
 Kearley, Hudson E.
 Kilbride, Denis
 Lewis, John Herbert
 Lough, Thomas
 Macaleese, Daniel
 MacDonnell, Dr MA (Queen's C)
 MacNeill, John Gordon Swift
 M'Dermott, Patrick
 M'Ghee, Richard
 M'Leod, John
 Mandeville, J. Francis
 Molloy, Bernard Charles
 Morton, E. J. C. (Devonport)
 Murnaghan, George
 O'Brien, Patrick (Kilkenny)
 O'Brien, P. J. (Tipperary)
 O'Connor, Arthur (Donegal)

O'Connor, J. (Wicklow, W.)
 O'Connor, T. P. (Liverpool)
 O'Malley, William
 Parnell, John Howard
 Pease, Joseph A. (Northumb.)
 Pinkerton, John
 Power, Patrick Joseph
 Price, Robert John
 Redmond, J. E. (Waterford)
 Redmond, William (Clare)
 Roberts, John Bryn (Eifion)
 Roche, John (East Galway)
 Samuel J. (Stockton-on-Tees)
 Soames, Arthur Wellesley
 Steadman, William Charles
 Sullivan, Donal (Westmeath)
 Sullivan, T. D. (Donegal, W.)
 Thomas, David A. (Merthyr)
 Tully, Jasper
 Williams, J. Carvell (Notta.)
 Wilson, J. H. (Middlesbrough)
 Woods, Samuel
 Young, Samuel (Cavan, East)

TELLERS FOR THE AYES—
 Sir Thomas Esmonde and
 Captain Donelan.

NOES.

Acland-Hood, Capt. Sir Alex. F.
 Allhusen, Augustus Henry E.
 Allsopp, Hon. George
 Anson, Sir William Reynell
 Archdale, Edward Mervyn
 Arrol, Sir William
 Atkinson, Right Hon. John
 Bailey, James (Walworth)
 Baker, Sir John
 Balcarres, Lord
 Baldwin, Alfred
 Balfour, Rt. Hon. A. J. (Manch.)
 Banbury, Frederick George
 Barlow, John Emmott
 Bartley, George C. T.
 Bathurst, Hn. Allen Benjamin
 Beach, Rt. Hn. Sir M. H. (Bristol)
 Beumrose, Sir Henry Howe
 Bethell, Commander
 Bhownaggee, Sir M. M.
 Bill, Charles
 Blakiston-Houston, John
 Blundell, Colonel Henry
 Bousfield, William Robert
 Bowles, T. Gibson (King's Lynn)
 Brodrick, Rt. Hon. St. John
 Brookfield, A. Montagu
 Butcher, John George
 Cavendish, R. F. (N. Lanes.)
 Cavendish, V. C. W. (Derbyshire)
 Cecil, E. (Hertford, E.)
 Cecil, Lord Hugh (Greenwich)
 Chaloner, Capt. R. G. W.
 Chamberlain, Rt. Hn. J. (Birm.)
 Chamberlain, J. A. (Worc'r)
 Channing, Francis Allston
 Charrington, Spencer
 Clare, Octavius Leigh
 Clough, Walter Owen
 Collings, Rt. Hon. Jesse
 Colomb, Sir John Chas. Ready

Colston, Chas. Edw. H. Athole
 Cook, Fred. Lucas (Lambeth)
 Corbett, A. Cameron (Glasgow)
 Cornwallis, Fienes Stanley W.
 Cross, Alexander (Glasgow)
 Cubitt, Hon. Henry
 Currie, Sir Donald
 Curzon, Viscount
 Dalkeith, Earl of
 Dickinson, Robert Edmond
 Disraeli, Coningsby Ralph
 Dixon-Hartland, Sir F. Dixon
 Doughty, George
 Douglas, Rt. Hon. A. Akers-
 Douglas-Pennant, Hon. E. S.
 Duncombe, Hon. Hubert V.
 Dyke, Rt. Hon. Sir William H.
 Egerton, Hon. A. de Tatton
 Elliot, Hon. A. Ralph Douglas
 Fardell, Sir T. George
 Fellowes, Hon. Ailwyn Edward
 Fergusson, Rt. Hn. Sir J. (Man'r)
 Finch, George H.
 Finlay, Sir Robert Bannatyne
 Firbank, Joseph Thomas
 Fisher, William Hayes
 Flannery, Sir Fortescue
 Forster, Henry William
 Fry, Lewis
 Galloway, William Johnson
 Garfit, William
 Giles, Charles Tyrrell
 Goldsworthy, Major-General
 Gordon, Hon. John Edward
 Gorst, Rt. Hn. Sir John Eldon
 Green, Walford D. (Wedn'sbury)
 Greene, Hy. D. (Shrewsbury)
 Greville, Hon. Ronald
 Gunter, Colonel
 Hamilton, Rt. Hon. Lord Geo.
 Hanbury, Rt. Hon. R. Wm.

Hanson, Sir Reginald
 Hardy, Laurence
 Hare, Thomas Leigh
 Haslett, Sir James Horner
 Heath, James
 Helder, Augustus
 Hoare, E. Brodie (Hampstead)
 Hornby, Sir William Henry
 Horniman, Frederick John
 Houston, R. P.
 Howell, William Tudor
 Howorth, Sir Henry Hoyle
 Hozier, Hon. Jas. Henry Cecil
 Hudson, George Bickersteth
 Hutton, John (York, N. R.)
 Jackson, Rt. Hon. Wm. Lawies
 Johnston, William (Belfast)
 Kenyon-Slaney, Col. William
 Keswick, William
 Kimber, Henry
 Knowles, Lees
 Lafone, Alfred
 Laurie, Lieut.-General
 Lawrence, Sir E. Durning (Corn)
 Lawson, John Grant (York)
 Lawson, Sir Wilfrid (Cumb'land)
 Llewellyn, Sir Dillwyn (Swan)
 Lockwood, Lieut.-Col. A. R.
 Loder, Gerald W. E.
 Long, Rt. Hon. W. (Liverpool)
 Lopes, Henry Yarde Buller
 Lorne, Marquess of
 Loyd, Archie Kirkman
 Macartney, W. G. Ellison
 Macdonald, John Cumming
 Maclure, Sir John William
 McArthur, Chas. (Liverpool)
 McCalmont, Col. J. (Antrim, E.)
 McKillop, James
 Martin, Richard Biddulph
 Massey-Mainwaring, Hn. W. F.

Ninth Day.

Milbank, Sir Powlett Chas. J.
 Milner, Sir Frederick George
 Milward, Colonel Victor
 Monckton, Edward Philip
 Monk, Charles James
 Moore, William (Antrim, N.)
 More, R. Jasper (Shropshire)
 Morgan, J. Lloyd (Carmarthen)
 Morrell, George Herbert
 Moss, Samuel
 Murray, Rt. Hon. A. G. (Bute)
 Murray, Col. Wyndham (Bath)
 Nicholson, William Graham
 Nicol, Donald Ninian
 Norton, Captain Cecil William
 Nussey, Thomas Willans
 O'Neill, Hon. Robert Torrens
 Paulton, James Mellor
 Penn, John
 Phillpotts, Captain Arthur
 Pierpoint, Robert
 Platt-Higgins, Frederick
 Plunkett, R. Hon. Horace C.
 Pretymann, Ernest George
 Provand, Andrew Dryburgh
 Pryce-Jones, Lt.-Col. Edward
 Purvis, Robert

Pym, C. Guy
 Quilter, Sir Cuthbert
 Rankin, Sir James
 Rentoul, James Alexander
 Richardson, J. (Durham, S.E.)
 Richardson, Sir T. (Hartlepool)
 Rickett, J. Compton
 Ridley, Rt. Hon. Sir Matthew W.
 Ritchie, Rt. Hon. C. Thomson
 Round, James
 Royds, Clemence Molyneux
 Russell, T. W. (Tyrone)
 Ryder, John Herbert Dudley
 Samuel, Harry S. (Limehouse)
 Saunderson, Rt. Hon. Col. E. J.
 Savory, Sir Joseph
 Scoble, Sir Andrew Richard
 Sharpe, William Edward T.
 Shaw-Stewart, M. H. (Renfrew)
 Sidebotham, J. W. (Cheshire)
 Simeon, Sir Barrington
 Sinclair, Louis (Roufford)
 Smith, A. H. (Christchurch)
 Smith, Hon. W. F. D. (Strand)
 Souttar, Robinson
 Stanley, E. J. (Somerset)
 Stewart, Sir M. J. McTaggart

Strachey, Edward
 Strauss, Arthur
 Strutt, Hon. Charles Hedley
 Sturt, Hon. Humphry Napier
 Sutherland, Sir Thomas
 Tennant, Harold John
 Thornton, Percy M.
 Tritton, Charles Ernest
 Vincent, Sir Edgar (Exeter)
 Warr, Augustus Frederick
 Webster, Sir Richard E.
 Whiteley, H. (Ashton-under-L)
 Whittaker, Thomas Palmer
 Williams, Colonel R. (Dorset)
 Williams, J. Powell (Birn.)
 Willoughby de Eresby, Lord
 Willox, Sir John Archibald
 Wilson, John (Falkirk)
 Wilson, John (Govan)
 Wodehouse, Rt. Hon. E. R. (Bath)
 Wylie, Alexander
 Wyndham, George
 Young, Commander (Berke, E.)

TELLERS FOR THE NOES—
 Sir William Walrond and
 Mr. Anstruther.

Main question again proposed.

IRISH LAND ACTS.

MR. DALY (Monaghan, S.): In rising to move the Amendment which stands in my name, I would wish that the duty had fallen on some other member of the Irish party more capable of dealing with it, but the necessity for the Amendment is my apology for occupying the time of the House in considering it. Had it not been for the Tory party, I would not be moving this Amendment now. It was their opposition that prevented the passage of the Home Rule Bill, and prevented the Irish land question, instead of being discussed here, being settled by an Irish Parliament, which would understand it. I regret to say that the land legislation passed in this House for Ireland has left out a great many tenant farmers, and has given them no claim to protection. Had the Home Rule Bill been passed we would not at this time be endeavouring to get our railway companies to acknowledge the demand of the Irish farmer to have his produce properly placed on the English market. We are cut out in every respect by other nations whose railways are subsidised and encouraged by State funds. The Land Bill of 1896 was brought in with a great flourish of trumpets, but from my experience the Act has not fulfilled the expectations formed of it. It was brought in by the right hon. Gentleman the Chief Secretary, who, I regret, is not in his place to-night, and he said we might take it or leave it. There was one section in it which it was expected would benefit some of the tenants in Ireland. It was expected that under Section 4 the estates in the Landed Estates Court would pass immediately on satisfactory terms to the tenants. I regret to say that the expectation has not been realised, for the following reason. The Land Commissioners, who are not friendly to the tenants, state the value of the property that the tenants wish to purchase. In several cases they gave the bare value which it would be safe to advance, and when the matter came before the Landed Estates Court the judge said the sum was not sufficient, and unless the tenants were prepared out of their own private means to advance a certain amount in addition to that stated by the Land Commissioners the sale fell through, and the property was allowed to fall into the hands of a grabber. That is a very unsatisfactory state of things. The Act of 1896 barely touched the fringe of the land question in Ireland, and left the vital points untouched. The question of town parks was not dealt with in that Act, although the right hon. Gentleman the First Lord of the Treasury stated the last time the Tory party were in power that there should be a population limit of 2,000 to enable tenants to enter the Land Courts. Again, the evicted tenants were not included in the Act of 1896, although during the last Liberal administration a Bill to reinstate these tenants was passed through this House, but the will of the representatives of the people was frustrated by another Chamber. Next, the future tenants were not dealt with in the Act, and altogether there are about 5,000 tenants every year in Ireland who cannot enter the Land Courts. There must be 125,000 souls in Ireland that had no benefit from the Land Act of 1896. It cannot be said that the people of Ireland are very well treated or encouraged when you take into account the fact that the average number of them who leave home for foreign countries every year is 35,000. I submit that if the land laws were as they should be that state of affairs would not have existed owing to the splendid rule of England over Ireland. It is a terrible thing that since 1851 no less than four millions of the best men and women of Ireland have had to seek foreign lands in order to make a living. No person knows better than the Attorney General for Ireland that the effect of a recent speech of the right hon. the Chief Secretary must have been to induce the Land Commissioners not to grant fair rents. There was a case in Armagh where a tenant planted fruit trees at his own expense, hoping that in the course of time they would bring in some revenue; and the chief Land Commissioner increased the rent of that holding. It amounts to this, that whether the land is deteriorated, or whether it is improved, the landlord comes out best in the transaction. I hold that there is only one means of settling this question, and that is by a Land Purchase Bill, and I would respectfully suggest that the Government should take this matter in hand and settle it once and for all. The chief Land Commissioner and the Sub-Commissioners cost the country from £80,000 to £90,000 a year, and the worst of it is that nobody seems to be pleased. In Belfast in December last, out of forty-nine appeal cases considered by the chief Land Commissioner, in twenty-two the rents were raised, twenty-four restored, and only two reduced--of course the farce would not be complete without one or two reductions. On the same day in six cases out of eight from Cory's estate, the rent was raised. In County Down in December last, out of sixteen cases heard, thirteen were thrown out, and only three confirmed. What is extraordinary is that the chief Land Commissioner never sees the land at all, but decides on the reports submitted to him. Considering the class from which the Land Commissioners are appointed, it is impossible that they should be impartial; and their decisions are not received with any confidence; and under these circumstances the people of Ireland have become despondent. Some appeals have been no less than four years before the Sub-Commissioners, and it was only after a number of questions had been put in the House as to when these appeals were going to be heard, that the Sub-Commissioners sat upon them. Between 1891 and 1897 no fewer than 61,658 appeals have been made, and it is not to be wondered at that every landlord appeals when he sees that the tenant comes worst out of the transaction. The Chief Secretary for Ireland said, in addressing a meeting at Leeds, after the passing of the Land Act in 1896, what a great blessing that Act had been, and that the tenant farmers were purchasing their holdings to the tune of two millions a year. Now, it would take from eighty to a hundred millions to buy out the landlords of Ireland, and at the rate mentioned by the Chief Secretary it could not be done under forty or fifty years, while in the meantime four millions would have been spent in salaries of land commissioners alone. It would be far better if a Land Purchase Bill were passed, and the question settled once for all.

MR. WILLIAM REDMOND (Clare, E.): In rising to second the Amendment which has been proposed by my hon. friend the Member for South Monaghan, I may perhaps be allowed to say that I think in this debate the Irish Members labour under some disadvantage in not having the presence of the Chief Secretary in his place; and in saying that I would like to say that we regret very much the absence of the right hon. Gentleman and the serious illness to which it is due, the news of which has caused serious pain in the House. We differ from the right hon. Gentleman on several topics, and sometimes come into sharp collision with him, but in a case of serious illness such as this no one, I think, is more ready to express sympathy with his opponent than are the gentlemen who sit on these benches. My object in rising to second this Amendment is not because I have any special knowledge which would justify me in intervening in this debate, but to give expression to sentiments which I know are entertained almost throughout the land of Ireland. I represent a large portion of Clare, where the bulk of the people make their living out of the land, and as Member for such a district it is not out of place that I should second this Amendment. The real and true solution of the Irish question is not to be found in any Land Acts in force at the present time, but in an occupying owner or peasant proprietor. Whatever other subjects have disappeared periodically the Irish land question has always been a source of contention and a subject of discussion in this House. I have been here myself for something like seventeen years, and I never remember a single session during the whole of that time when the Irish land question did not crop up in the debates of this House, and did not occupy a considerable time. The same question has occupied the attention of Parliament and successive Administrations ever since 1860, when the Irish Land Act was introduced. Down to the present the Irish land question has been a subject upon which Bill after Bill has been introduced in this House, and yet at the present time, in spite of all these enactments, there is unrest and agitation in Ireland, and dissatisfaction at the condition in which the land question remains. I have often heard in this House that the land question is settled. We were told it was settled in 1867, and again in 1881, and again in 1887, and we were told as shortly ago as 1896 that the Act of that year put the finishing touch on all the Acts that had gone before. In spite of all these additions, much remains to be done in regard to the Irish land question, and the people have many legitimate reasons for complaint. In dealing with this subject of land purchase it is significant to observe that, although the land agitation of the past has not always received support from hon. Gentlemen's constituents in Ireland, the system of compulsory land purchase receives no more enthusiastic support than it does in Ulster, and that in itself should commend this matter to the Government, and urge them to take it into serious consideration. The Irish, we are told, have been the spoiled darlings of Parliament. We have been told that no people have received such privileges as those given by the Irish Land Acts. The efficiency of the Land Acts depends upon one thing, and that is whether they are administered impartially and fairly as between landlord and tenant. I am not going to make any sweeping charge of partiality against the agents who administer the Land Acts in Ireland, but this much I do say—that the operation of the Land Acts in Ireland is such that it cannot and could not command the confidence of the tenant. Many of the Land Commissioners are gentlemen who no doubt intended to act as gentlemen, but it must be remembered that they have been drawn almost exclusively from the landlord class, or from that portion of the population which sympathises with the landlord class, and therefore they cannot be expected to mete out impartial justice between landlords and tenants; but whether they have attempted to do so or not, the fact remains that they do not retain the confidence of the large body of tenants who appeal to them, and that in itself is sufficient to cause unrest in the country, and to compel this question to be brought periodically before the House. Mr. Speaker, the system whereby rents are periodically fixed and refixed, cannot, in my opinion, be satisfactorily settled or taken as a permanent incentive to real industry. There is nothing in it to make the occupiers of the soil really interested. I have noticed myself at different times where rents have come up to be refixed, the rents, instead of being lowered or instead of being confirmed, have actually been raised.

Mr. William Redmond.

THE SECRETARY TO THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD (Mr. T. W. RUSSELL, Tyrone, S.): The rents that have been raised are the rents fixed by the Sub-Commissioners in the second period. These have sometimes been raised on appeal.

MR. WILLIAM REDMOND: At all events they have been raised. What we want in Ireland is a system which exists with very beneficial results in very many Continental countries, and that is that the occupiers of the land, the tillers of the soil, shall be in reality the owners of the land upon which they live. Thus placed they will be encouraged to renewed industry in the knowledge that the more work they put into the land the more benefit will they get for themselves and their families. Now, Sir, the question of compulsory sale is no doubt a very difficult question. It involves the expenditure of a large amount of capital; but that it is not an altogether impossible question, and not a question which has failed altogether to enlist the sympathy and interest even of English statesmen, is to be found in the fact that Mr. Gladstone himself, concurrently with his Home Rule proposal, formulated a scheme of peasant proprietary in Ireland. That scheme failed, and no doubt surprised people in this country; and a very strong protest was made against the embarkation of English capital to buy out the Irish landlord. The system which has grown up and been so disastrous in Ireland for so many generations is that which is the outcome of the government of Ireland by this country. It is the outcome of a system of confiscation practised century upon century by successive Governments in Ireland. We are told that the Irish occupiers of the soil are not to be trusted; and it may be urged that to embark an amount of British capital in reorganisation of the land system in Ireland would be to risk the loss of a large sum of money. But we can only reason by results. Under Lord Ashbourne's Act down to the present time, as far as I can gather from the figures, between 40,000 and 50,000 tenants in Ireland have, with the assistance of the State, bought under this purchase Act, and become practically the purchasers of their own land. The result has been most surprising to many doubting Englishmen. These 40,000 or 50,000 tenants have met their engagements in the most punctual way, and not the slightest complaint has been made of their defaulting or failing to keep their engagements in regard to the repayment of the instalments advanced, while the change in their condition from tenants to owners has been attended with the best results to themselves and to the districts in which they lived. That being the result, so far, of the attempts made to create a peasant proprietary in Ireland, is it unreasonable to ask that the system should be extended? We are told that there is great difficulty in fixing the amount of the purchase-money. That is not the real difficulty. I don't believe that where a landlord is willing to sell and the tenant is willing to buy, the question of the amount to be paid is allowed to break down the negotiations. There have been difficulties and delays, but in most cases there has been a settlement of the price and the conditions. What, then, is the difficulty in extending the system of peasant proprietary, which so far has been a success? The real difficulty is what I must call the obstinate determination of certain landlords in Ireland not to meet the wishes of their tenants in this respect; and therefore it is that in the recognition in Ireland and in the constituency of the hon. Member for South Tyrone—as well as in the Unionist portions of Ulster more than anywhere else—of the system of peasant proprietary, it is absolutely necessary, to give it a fair chance, to exercise a certain amount of compulsion towards these unreasonable landlords. I think if we all live long enough we shall see the time when this Act will be unnecessary. Slowly and surely the idea is gaining ground amongst landlords in Ireland that it would be more satisfactory for themselves, and more beneficial to their tenants, to accept a fair price for their land. I can understand the feeling of certain landlords who say "Well, this land has belonged to my father and my grandfather, and these acres have been in the family for generations." I confess to a certain amount of respect for sentiment of that kind; but sentiment of that sort in the nineteenth or twentieth century must give way to the interests of the general community, and in obedience to public opinion. Take the case of the landlord with a large number of tenants. He may be an obstinate landlord. The result is friction and agitation and disputes as to the amount of rent to be paid, and the consequent expense of going to the land courts. Would it not be very much better for the landlord to receive in hard cash the equivalent for his land? Would it not be very much better for the tenants in that district to become their own landlords, so that every additional turn they gave to the plough would mean more money, not for the landlord, but for themselves? How is this worked abroad? It is a pleasure to travel in France and Belgium, and to see the thrift and industry which the occupiers of the soil put into their work; it is a marked contrast to visit Ireland and see the signs of discontent and unrest in the tenants, who know not whether their rents may be raised or what may happen to them. The paramount feeling in the breasts of the Irish people is that the land question is a deep-rooted grievance. Let this be remedied and that discontent will pass away. I believe that in this lies the solution of the Irish problem. We have had Act after Act passed, and legal machinery of the most complicated kind devised to meet the case, while vast sums of money have been expended on litigation in Ireland, and yet the land question remains unsettled. This proves that dual ownership cannot settle it; and if you want to finally allay the spirit of agrarian agitation you will have to break up the dual ownership and give the people the absolute possession of their own farms. The late Mr. Parnell thought the solution of the Irish land question was to be found in the establishment of a peasant proprietary. That view has been consistently held by all prominent Irish politicians down to the present day. It is a view which has been gaining and gathering support day by day and year by year, until now it is not merely the representatives of the Nationalist party in Ireland, but those of the Unionist and Orange parties in the province of Ulster, who urge Parliament to take it up. I am really tired of week after week and month after month receiving complaints and letters and remonstrances on the subject from every part of my large agricultural constituency. First of all, their cases have been listed for so many months, and in some instances almost for years, and they have not come up for hearing. Then they bitterly complain that the Commissioners sent down to value the land have been men who, from their antecedents, surroundings, and associations, they could not believe would do them justice and fair play. These reasons for discontent, whether well founded or not, come to every Irish Nationalist Member, and the hon. and learned Gentleman opposite will be the last to deny that there has been a great deal of blocking and regrettable delay in connection with the matter. Whether the complaints of the personnel of the Commissioners and of delay are right or wrong, there can be no doubt that from one cause or another the people are unrestful and discontented, and there is a general feeling of uncertainty and irritation connected with the present Land Court and everything appertaining to it. For that reason we are entitled to come here and ask the Government to cut this knot once and for ever, to do away with these irritating legal complications, to give the landlords whatever in the sight of Heaven is their due, and at the same time to establish the people on the soil and make them owners of their land. That is the first reason which impels us to bring this matter forward. The second reason is that we are entitled to demand that the people of this country shall make some serious effort to give rest and peace to our people. We are sometimes described as being mere agitators, as men who thrive on discontent, and as being never happier than when voicing grievances in this House. I do not believe that hon. Gentlemen opposite sincerely believe that. It is a matter of the utmost displeasure to us personally to have to come here year after year and voice the eternal complaints of our agricultural constituents. It would be a source of infinite satisfaction and rest to us if a solution of this question was come to which would free us from the unpleasant position of always seeming to complain. It is an irksome duty, but we are entitled to ask that the Government and the people of this country shall do something to restore peace and harmony to Ireland, which were driven from our shores when the present land system was first established. I do not for a moment say that the relations between landlord and tenant must necessarily be unpleasant and strained because the landlords are mostly of one race and of one religion, while the tenants are of another. We do not, and I hope never shall, pay any attention to religion or race with regard to the landlords as long as they behave fairly. But this I do say, that it is proved in other countries, and in other times, that where the dense mass of the tillers of the soil are of one race and of one religion, and the owners of the soil, to whom they are obliged to pay tribute, are of another, the result is unsatisfactory and unpleasant for both parties. I say that, in common fairness and justice, you are bound to take some pains to remedy the result of your own misgovernment, and to give the people of Ireland a system of secure land tenure. The expenditure of British credit would not be accompanied by any risk whatever. If you do this thing for the tenant farmers of Ireland they will keep their share of the bond honestly and fairly, and not a single shilling would be lost to this country. On the other hand, you would give peace and contentment to the agricultural population, you would relieve the landlords from an awkward and unpleasant position, and before many years you would see the people of Ireland—naturally still devoted to the national cause, but increasing in thrift and industry, growing prosperous and well-to-do, simply because they would be the owners of their land, and upon themselves, not upon the caprice of a Land Commission or the generosity of a landlord, would depend whether they lived in comfort and happiness with their families on the soil, or whether they missed their opportunities and went back to the system under which they have lived, unfortunately, in the past.

Mr. William Redmond.

Amendment proposed—

"At the end of the Question to add the words, 'But we humbly represent to Your Majesty that the administration of the Irish Land Acts is not satisfactory to any class of Your Majesty's Irish subjects, and that the only and permanent solution of the Irish Land question must be found in a measure providing for the general and immediate creation of an occupying proprietary in that country.'"—(Mr. Daly.)

Question proposed, "That those words be there added."

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL FOR IRELAND (Mr. ATKINSON, Londonderry, N.): In the first place, I desire to join with the hon. Member for East Clare in expressing my deep and sincere regret that the Chief Secretary for Ireland is unable to be in his place to-night, and I am sure the House will be glad to hear there is every hope that his absence will be but temporary. I do not intend to travel over the vast field traversed by the hon. Member for East Clare. The Amendment, as I understand it, although it does not expressly say so, means that at once and immediately a system of peasant occupying proprietary should be created by compulsory powers. I am not concerned to defend the Land Act of 1881. The mover of the Amendment said that that Act was looked upon as unsatisfactory by all sides; but, lest that assertion might make any special reflection on that Act, he expressed his belief that any Act that had ever been, could ever be, or would ever be introduced dealing with the same subject would not give satisfaction. I am very much inclined to agree in that opinion. But those who have formed that opinion, and feel that it is almost impossible to construct a statute which will enable you to set up a satisfactory system for the purpose of compulsory valuation of rents, ought to hesitate a little before they see their way to set up a compulsory system of sale and purchase when the amount of purchase money must be settled by the very same agency which when applied to the settlement of rents is said to give no satisfaction whatever. If you cannot secure gentlemen sufficiently free from bias towards either landlord or tenant to be safely trusted to say what the rent of a particular farm should be, I do not know the process by which in the same country, dealing with the same classes, and having the same materials, you will be able to select gentlemen who will give satisfaction in settling the price of sale. It is not necessary for the purposes of this Amendment to enter into a defence of the Land Act of 1881, but it is only just and right that some misapprehensions and mistakes into which hon. Members have apparently fallen should be dealt with. The Land Act of 1881 at all events sought to gain four great objects—first, to prevent rack-renting; secondly, to prevent capricious evictions; thirdly, to secure to the tenant his interest and improvements; and, fourthly, to secure free sale. All that the Land Act of 1886 purported to do was—not to offer a panacea for all the errors and mistakes in the Irish land system, but merely to extend the provisions of the Act of 1881 to persons who were within its spirit, but without its letter, to take further steps for securing to tenants the benefit of their improvements, and to facilitate purchase. The mover of the Amendment expressed his dissatisfaction with the operation of Section 40 of the Act of 1896. He apparently expected that that section would have the effect of transferring vast tracts of land from landlord to tenant. I do not know whence the hon. Member got the notion that the section had failed, because it has been but a short time in operation, owing to a difference of view between those charged with its administration. Those differences have been settled by the Court of Appeal, and since the removal of all impediments, 802 tenant proprietaries have been created, and almost a quarter of a million of money advanced.

MR. WILLIAM REDMOND: What is the amount of the rental?

MR. ATKINSON: I do not know the exact rental. Objection was also taken to the statement of my right hon. friend in reference to the duties of the Commissioners when dealing with cases of wilful deterioration. The hon. Member seemed to anticipate that that statement would act as an instigation to the Commissioners to refuse to fix fair rents where there was deterioration. If the words of my right hon. friend arouse Sub-Commissioners to a sense of their duty to refuse to fix fair rents where they find there is wilful deterioration, can any friend of honest and fair dealing between landlord and tenant, and between man and man, but rejoice at that? There can be no greater piece of dishonesty practised by any man against his neighbour, or any person with whom he has relations, commercial or otherwise, than deliberately to deteriorate his land for the purpose of getting a lower rent fixed. It is a mean fraud, and while I am happy to think that it very seldom occurs, it is the imperative duty of every tribunal before which such cases come to endeavour to defeat the object of such a practice. The hon. Member in reference to the Appeal Court appeared to think that that court must necessarily be corrupt or inefficient unless its decisions were always on one side.

MR. PINKERTON (Galway): They always are.

MR. ATKINSON: If the Appeal Court either confirms the order of the Sub-Commissioner or decreases the rent it is satisfactory and proper, but the moment it increases the rent as fixed by the Sub-Commissioner it shows that it is either inefficient or corrupt. That is not my opinion. There never was an Appeal Court which always agreed with the Court from which the appeal came. I do not see what the use of such an Appeal Court would be. The variation of a great many decisions may be accounted for neither by the corruption nor by the inefficiency of the Appeal Court, but by a greater amount of evidence being given and a more satisfactory investigation being made. Landlords, from a very mistaken view of their own interests, I think, very often do not lay their case as fully before the inferior tribunal as before the Court of Appeal. That accounts for many instances in which appeals have been made. It was also objected that the members of the Appeal Court do not go to the lands to view. That is quite true, but the hon. Member is entirely mistaken in supposing that they necessarily and always decide upon the report of their own Court valuer. They have the reports of the valuers of the parties; they have the report of the Commissioners who did value the land. With those reports, as corrected by the evidence given before them, and supplemented by the report of the Court valuer, it would appear to me that unless there is something more difficult than usual in fixing the value of land they have the materials before them on which they should be able to arrive at a correct conclusion. In reference to the speech of the hon. Member for East Clare, he has entirely misapprehended the observations of my hon. friend. On the whole, the reductions which have been made amount to close upon 40 per cent. on an average. The first reductions were 20·9 per cent., and the second reductions amount to almost the same. The rents which have been reduced have in no case been increased. On the contrary, they have almost invariably been reduced, the average reduction being about 20 per cent. What has occurred is that where the Sub-Commissioners reduced the rent, on appeal the order made by the Sub-Commissioners as to the amount of rent has been raised. [AN HON. MEMBER: What about putting an increased rent on tenants' improvements?] I am sorry I did not know the hon. Member expected me to be so very fully informed on a given case as to give an answer to that question. All I can say is that both in the Act of 1881 and the Act of 1896 ample provision is made to protect tenants' improvements. Clause 8, Sub-clause 9, as the hon. Member knows, specially enacts that rent is not to be put on tenants' improvements, and if that course has been departed from the Act has not been attended to. I have not sufficient cognisance of the case mentioned to know whether that is the case or not. I can hardly believe that if the case came within the section to which I have referred the Commissioner would have disregarded the provision of these different Acts. I pass from these matters to the broad question introduced by the Amendment, namely, the propriety of setting up at once and immediately a system of compulsory purchase and sale. Attention has not been directed to the vast and almost insurmountable difficulties that present themselves in carrying out any such scheme. In the first place, no such scheme would be at all justifiable unless an overwhelming necessity required it. Even if it were desirable to adopt such a course it should be perfectly clear that it was practicable. First of all, is it necessary? ["Yes!"] Before you come to that conclusion it would be interesting for me to give to the House some few statistics in reference to the rate at which purchase is at present progressing. After all, the creation of a peasant proprietary is almost the favourite remedy of the Unionist party for the solution of the agrarian question in Ireland. Under the Ashbourne Acts, 1885 and 1888, £9,999,640 has been advanced to purchase 25,368 holdings. Under the Acts of 1891 and 1896, sales have been made to 25,100 tenants, and £7,947,580 has been advanced. In all, under those four Acts, 50,468 peasant proprietors have been created, and the sums advanced amount to £17,940,220, or practically £18,000,000. Even that is not the most satisfactory feature, because the rate of progress indicates clearly that still greater increases may be confidently looked for in the future. Contrasting the years 1897-98 with the two previous years, we find that £2,201,223 was advanced as against £1,200,000, while in the year concluded on 31st December, 1899, the enormous sum of £1,775,295, or practically £2,000,000, was advanced. Therefore the rate of progress has been such that the amount of money advanced in the one year 1899 was almost as large as in the two years 1897-98, and almost twice as large as in the two years 1895-96. There is no reason to apprehend that the amount of money available is not sufficient, by slow and steady progress, to create a large number of peasant proprietors.

Mr Atkinson.

MR. WILLIAM REDMOND: Might I ask the right hon. Gentleman if he can give us any information as to how the instalments have been paid?

MR. ATKINSON: I do not know the exact amount of money, but I think it is admitted that the purchasers under these Acts have discharged their obligations in a praiseworthy manner. I think we ought to remember that possibly the reason—and the principal reason—why they are punctual in their payments is because compulsory sale is not established. No person buys who does not wish to buy, and no person sells who does not wish to sell; and consequently we get willing purchasers who pay punctually and satisfactorily the sums they are bound to pay. I do not think hon. Members opposite have considered some of the enormous practical difficulties which stand in the way of carrying out the proposal contained in this Amendment, even if necessity called for it being put into operation. First of all this scheme of compulsory purchase—sale would be more accurate—must be reciprocal. If the tenant compels the landlord to sell, it should be possible for the landlord to compel him to buy. If it were otherwise, two or three tenants in the middle of a man's estate might come into court and compel the landlord to sell to them their holdings, leaving the balance of the estate absolutely and almost entirely worthless, and inflicting a very considerable injury upon him. We all know in the case of compulsory sales under the Lands Clauses Act and all Acts of that character, sums far in excess of the actual purchase money of the land taken have been awarded to owners for consequential injury done to the surrounding lands, although such lands still remain in the hands of the owner. So that it would be manifestly unjust if such a principle were put into operation, and it would be unjust not to make it apply to both landlord and tenant respectively. I do not know how the tenants of Ireland would regard any proposition to compel them to buy when they did not want to buy; and even if they did regard it as satisfactory I do not know where you would get the material from to construct a tribunal that would award the sum to be paid to the satisfaction of all parties. One of the hon. Members who have spoken to-night has urged that the Sub-Commissioners are unsatisfactory, and that they belong to one particular class of the community. All I can say is that the very utmost care is taken to select men who will discharge their duties satisfactorily. I must confess that there are a number of men in Ireland who are most careless and reckless about the statements they make. I think, however, we can look with confidence to the creation of an adequate system, by the free will, co-operation, and agreement of all parties. This has worked well up to the present and will work well in the future, because it is not forced upon them and they get only what they desire, and I believe this system will enable a vast number of tenants of Ireland to become the owners of their holdings. On the other hand, I submit that a principle so novel and so wide as that indicated in the Amendment cannot be adopted. It would inflict the most cruel injury and suffering on vast numbers of proprietors. I cannot on behalf of the Government hold out any encouragement in regard to the adoption of the principles which have been advocated by hon. Gentlemen opposite.

*MR. PINKERTON : After listening to the speech of the right hon. Gentleman I came to the conclusion that it was most regrettable, considering all the changes that have been made, that the right hon. Gentleman had not been elevated to the judicial Bench, as the speech we have just listened to gave evidence of most impartial judicial balancing. I must say that while I deeply regret the absence of the Chief Secretary for Ireland, I am not sorry that it has given an opportunity to the right hon. Gentleman, who has, in reply, made the most half-hearted apology I have ever heard. We know already that a sum of money sufficient to buy out all the landlords in Ireland has been sunk in the Modder River. We know that every shell fired in South Africa will delay a settlement of this question, and, therefore, it is all important that this subject should be settled as soon as possible. We are nearing the time when we must face our constituencies, and the right hon. Gentleman, if he was not returned as an advocate of compulsory sale, at least was elected as a very strong friend of it. I am glad to see the hon. and learned Member who represents East Down and other Unionist Members in their places. With one solitary exception, in all their election addresses they place the question of compulsory sale in the front. I can understand the delicate distinction between compulsory sale and compulsory purchase which has been drawn by the right hon. Gentleman, but why did he not draw that distinction before he was elected? We have brought Amendment after Amendment from this side of the House, and it has been pretty generally agreed that landlords should be compelled to sell when the tenants are willing to buy. The right hon. Gentleman said the Act of 1881 was intended to secure occupation and the right of free sale, but he cannot sit upon that bench ignorant of the fact that the right of free sale has been absolutely ruined. I can quote evidence to show that the right of free sale has been destroyed because the landlord claims the right of pre-emption unless the tenant is willing to add an additional sum to the annual rent, and in almost every case throughout the north of Ireland where the tenant cannot clearly prove to the satisfaction of the Land Commission that it is an Ulster Custom estate the landlord prevents the right of free sale. The hon. and learned Gentleman said if we object to the machinery for fixing fair rents how can we hope to have a satisfactory settlement of the question of compulsory sale? I am prepared to say, without fear of contradiction, that upon a close examination it will be found that Head Commissioners represent one class, and one class alone. The only gentleman belonging to the Head Commissioners who is suspected of sympathising with the tenants is Mr. O'Brien, and if he is allowed to adjudicate in any case his decision is always overpowered by the majority of his colleagues. The right hon. Gentleman has alluded to a number of cases which have been satisfactorily settled under the 40th section. I know the Act is working more smoothly now than it did some time ago, when there was a considerable amount of friction. The right hon. Gentleman very fairly said that the landlords refused to come before the court of Sub-Commissioner and give their evidence because they preferred to reserve their evidence for a higher court. I think without any Act of Parliament, or without any attempt to introduce a drastic remedy, the power rests with the Government to prevent such evidence being given before a superior court. In every case neither landlord nor tenant should be allowed to amend their case, and the evidence they have refused to tender in the first instance should not be allowed to be given in a superior court. Since the Local Government Act was passed, when the Agricultural Grant was dangled before our eyes, the landlords have all pocketed their share, but the tenants of Ireland have not benefited by one single farthing. No doubt if you try to carry a compulsory purchase measure it will be argued that you must give a certain bonus to the landlords. As I have pointed out already, in the shape of the Agricultural Grant, the landlords have received a bonus which I do not think, in many cases, they deserved. With regard to the appointment of Sub-Commissioners, I would ask hon. Members opposite, why should Home Rulers not have their feelings considered in this matter as well as Unionists? Can they not discharge those duties just as well as the followers of the hon. Member for South Belfast? I do not claim that they should be elected from the political party to which I belong, but as it is purely and simply a court of arbitration, I say those Commissioners should be appointed who will command the respect of all the classes interested in this question. We have been trying year after year and session after session to have the Head Commissioners strengthened in such a way as to inspire a certain amount of confidence on the part of the tenants. The right hon. Gentleman said no one ever expected that the Court of Appeal would agree absolutely and entirely with the lower court, but I noticed the other day that in the list of cases in the Appeal Court nine-tenths or at least four-fifths of them were increased, and only a very small number—about 5 per cent.—were reduced. That is undoubtedly using the machinery and the powers put into the hands of those Commissioners not to administer justice, but for the purpose of making the Land Acts palatable to the landlord class. It seems to me most remarkable that the Head Commissioners—who have no opportunity of visiting the land—should act upon the decision of the Court valuers, who have simply taken a superficial view of the land in question, and who have had no opportunity of hearing the evidence given before the Sub-Commissioners. The Sub-Commissioners have not only the advantage of visiting the land, but they have an opportunity of corroborating or refuting other statements made in the lower Court. The Sub-Commissioners, by examination, see clearly, and they have ocular demonstration of the truth of the evidence given in Court and of sifting the evidence, and their opinion is better than the Court valuer who is sent out to examine the holding, and who has never heard the evidence. I can say, for my part, that no stronger argument can be advanced in favour of the abolition of the superior Court than that which has been put forward by the right hon. Gentleman the Attorney General, and I think they may very well ask to be delivered from their friends. There is another point, and I sympathise immensely with the landlords who are in that position. All these Acts of Parliament were unjustly framed, because no notice was taken of the mortgagee. It is very hard, for instance, for a man whose rents amount, say, to £5,000, £4,000 of which goes in payments on mortgages and other charges, that the reduction should all fall on the remaining £1,000. That leaves a man in a very unfortunate position, and I think every Act of Parliament introduced into this House should be framed in such a manner that the mortgagee would have to bear a fair share of the reduction. I do not know why a mortgagee who has advanced money on land should be treated differently to a man who has invested in a railway. At the same time it is also very hard that a stumbling block should be put in the way of land purchase in Ireland by the fact that so much of the land is subject to mortgages. It is, unfortunately, a very difficult position for the Irish landlords, but all the same it is a fact that the tenants, who are not responsible for these debts, have to pay the penalty. I can assure English taxpayers that for every penny of British money invested in Irish land, you are certain to be paid your full price. It is a good investment, better than throwing away your money to steal goldfields in South Africa.

Mr. Atkinson.

MR. WILLIAM MOORE (Antrim, N.): I should like to state that the primary object with which I was sent to this House was that of supporting Her Majesty's Government in the policy which they are carrying out. Therefore, as the passing of this Amendment would not lead to legislation and would practically amount to a vote of censure on the Ninth Day.

Government, I shall vote against it, although I agree with a great deal that has been said on this subject by hon. Members opposite. The question of the ultimate settlement of the Irish land question is one which is a very burning question, and one which has come to the front very much during the last few years. It has been said that many Irish Members sitting on this side of the House pledged themselves at the last election in favour of a final settlement of the Irish Land question more or less upon the lines indicated in this Amendment—that is, a compulsory scheme of purchase on fair terms. The hon. Member for Galway has informed the House that I was similarly pledged. It is beyond all doubt, as the hon. Member for East Clare has stated, that in the North of Ireland this is a very burning question, and one on which we are anxious that the House should know our opinions. As far as the work of the Commission is concerned I should like to say that there are a good deal of complaints on all sides about the working of the Land Commission. It has been urged by hon. Members opposite that it is packed by the landlord class, but in practice I have never found that to be the case. At present I am not aware that there are any landlord nominees on the Land Commission. I only know two Commissioners, and one of them is a cousin of the hon. Member for Galway. Regarding the manner in which the work is carried on, speaking as a neutral, I think that both tenants and landlords equally mistrust the members of the Land Commission, but I am bound to add that, taking the Commissioners all round, the Government could not have made a better selection or found better men for the work. When you have a tribunal to decide vexed questions in which so many pecuniary interests are involved, the members of that tribunal, unless they are paid salaries which render them above suspicion, will always have these charges made against them. Then there is another objection—I can see how it could be remedied, but other people may not take the same view—and that is the trouble and bother of this perpetual litigation. If the landlords and tenants of Ireland would only consent to an automatic revision of rents, that would be a great help. But the present position is that at the end of every fifteen years it is open to either the landlord or tenant to have a new rent fixed by the courts. That leads to unrest and litigation, and is very undesirable, for reasons which will appear to every hon. Member. I cannot agree at all with the attacks made on the Appeal Court or the Land Commission. With reference to the Sub-Commissioners sitting in the country, it is an objection of which I have a certain amount of experience, that although the Sub-Commissioners are supposed to take evidence in court and on oath in the presence of the legal representatives of the parties, they are too often in the habit of going on the lands and picking up evidence themselves.

Mr. W. Moore.

MR. PINKERTON: Is the hon. and learned Member aware that the landlord or his agent always accompanies the Sub-Commissioners?

MR. WILLIAM MOORE: In any event the practice cannot fail to operate on the minds of the Sub-Commissioners. They then fix a rent which I venture to say is in nearly every case from 45 to 50 per cent. less than the rent in 1881. In some cases the landlord settles with the vast majority of his tenants. I know one case where a landlord settled with all his tenants except one on the basis of 22 per cent. below the first term rent. This tenant went into court and got a reduction of 46 per cent. If the landlord submitted to that reduction every other one of his tenants would think he had sold them, and accordingly he appealed, and the reduction was decreased to 22 per cent., and the other tenants were satisfied. You could not blame the landlord for having appealed in a case of that kind. I would wish, however, that some means could be devised whereby the vexation and cost of the present delays connected with appeals could be avoided. I should now like to say a few words with reference to compulsory sale. I am bound to say that I view with the greatest suspicion the suggestions of hon. Gentlemen opposite when it is proposed to expropriate the Irish landlords. The hon. Member for East Clare went into questions of religion and politics, which seem to me to have no application in land cases at all. When hon. Gentlemen declare that their whole aim is to drive the landlords, who are described as the English garrison, out of Ireland, and to give them only prairie value for their land— [Several HON. MEMBERS: Oh, oh!] This is the first time I have ever heard that repudiated. If hon. Gentlemen are prepared to treat the matter on business lines I am prepared to meet them. Before the Act of 1870 the Irish landlords were the absolute owners of their land, subject to the tenancies which existed under them. In 1870 the system was introduced which has landed us in all our present difficulties. It may have been right or wrong—I am not quarrelling with it, because it is not in my power nor in the power of any hon. Member to repeal that Act. It was supposed to compose all differences; it made the tenant part owner with the landlord, and created the principle of dual ownership, and although the landlord could still turn the tenant out he could only do it by paying him a fixed scale of compensation. The principle of dual ownership was still further recognised by the Act of 1881, which, instead of leaving the parties as it found them, restricted the rights of the landlords in different ways. The tenant could not be evicted if he paid the fair rent fixed by the courts, and he secured the right of selling his interest in his holding. Prior to the Act of 1881 the landlord and tenant might be described as half-owners, but after that Act the landlord had only something between a fourth and a third of the interest, and the tenant had the balance. Whenever two interests exist in that proportion they are always in conflict, and as long as that conflict continues there will be no peace in Ireland, and therefore it is the duty of every statesman to endeavour to end such a state of affairs. It seems to me the only end that can be effective is to buy out the landlords on fair and equitable terms. The landlord, being the weaker partner, will have to go. I say that with regret, but you cannot deny the trend of public opinion, and therefore the only choice of the unfortunate landlord is between confiscation and compensation, and in the interests of all parties and in the interests of the landlords themselves the sooner they get compensation the better. The Attorney General for Ireland referred to the Purchase Act of 1885. Long-headed men in Ireland when that Act was passed sold their properties and got twenty years purchase on first-term rents, but if they were about to sell now they would be very lucky if they got eighteen or nineteen years purchase on second-term rents. Land is a falling market, and it is to the interest of the landlords to sell as soon as they can. I know I shall be told by my hon. friends on this side of the House that in advocating compulsory sale I am doing something far from Conservative doctrine. In Ireland we have not had very much Conservative doctrine from our brother English Conservatives, and although it may be said it is against the principles of Conservatism to take a man's property against his will, the Irish landlords have been suffering for the last twenty years. The Liberal Government first of all in 1881 put it into the power of a tribunal to take 25 per cent. off the landlords' rents for fifteen years without one particle of compensation. In 1887 the Conservative Government said, "The Liberals have made a reduction of 25 per cent. on ordinary rents, but we will strike 25 per cent. off the leasehold rents without any compensation whatever." It therefore seems to me that no objection can be made by English Conservatives when it is proposed to buy out the landlords compulsorily on fair terms. In the middle of the last century the Scotch lairds had certain rights which were found to be inconsistent with English law, and the English Government compelled them to give them up, but compensated them. In the early part of the present century slavery was considered to be a national disgrace, and Parliament accordingly compelled the English slave-owners in the West Indies to free their slaves, but secured them compensation. It seems to me that in buying out the Irish landlords at a fair price Parliament would be only following the policy which has been pursued for a century. If the landlords are to go, let them go without being robbed or despoiled. A great many difficulties have been suggested by hon. Gentlemen, and also by the Attorney General for Ireland; in the way of carrying this out. The very success of your Acts of Parliament providing for voluntary sale is one of the best reasons for compulsory sale. I know a property which was owned by an English absentee landlord. He sold it to his tenants with the result that they, who will be the purchasing proprietors, are year by year paying a less sum by way of instalments of the purchase money to the Government, than the tenants around them whose landlords have not sold; and the more voluntary sales there are, the more general will be the discontent. At the same time I think it would be exceedingly hard to compel the landlords to sell without fully compensating them. Take a landlord getting £1,000 a year out of his estate. He gets £18,000 for his interest, and that amount at 3 per cent. or $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. is not an equivalent for £1,000 a year. He cannot get any more for his interest, and by one stroke of the pen his income is diminished. How can such a man be expected to submit to a reduction which would render it impossible for him to live as he had been living? You will find it exceedingly hard to persuade the Irish tenants to give more than eighteen or nineteen years purchase, and it will be equally hard to get the landlords to accept eighteen or nineteen years purchase on second term rents. You cannot charge the tenant more than a fair price, and the Government should step in, as it compensated the Scotch lairds and the West Indian slave owners, and make up the difference. These are the views held by my constituents—as loyal as any in the United Kingdom—and by the vast majority of the Unionists in the surrounding constituencies. It is a policy to which I and other Unionist Members are pledged, and whoever gets in for Mid-Armagh is pledged to the same thing. We are all agreed that the sooner the question is settled the better, and as far as I am concerned my desire is to have it settled on terms fair to both landlords and tenants.

Ninth Day.

*SERJEANT HEMPHILL (Tyrone, N.): One observation fell from the right hon. Gentleman the Attorney General for Ireland which all the House fully received with pleasure, namely, his statement that the absence of the right hon. Gentleman the Chief Secretary would be only temporary. That announcement gave great satisfaction to everyone in this House. I think the House is indebted to the hon. Member for North Monaghan for bringing forward this Amendment, because it has been the means of eliciting from a very representative member of the Unionist party from the North of Ireland a very clear, distinct, and eloquent avowal of his adoption of the principle of compulsory purchase. We have also been told that not only the hon. Member for North Antrim, but several other hon. Members from the North of Ireland, are pledged to compulsory purchase, and that the candidates in the pending election in Mid-Armagh have also promised to support it. That was not the only matter elicited by the Amendment, because we also had it stated by the Attorney General for Ireland that the Government which he so ably and eloquently represents on this and every other occasion in which he addresses this House have long regarded the abolition of dual ownership as a panacea for the evils of Ireland. Dual ownership can only be abolished by some system of compulsory sale and purchase, and we have a great Government—great in numbers—I could not pay them any other compliment; if I did I would be open to the charge which I should least like to be laid at my door, namely, the charge of insincerity—committed to some such system. But if this is the panacea how is it that the hon. and learned Member for North Antrim—who, like the candidates in Mid-Armagh, and, I suppose, the candidate who will seek to displace myself whenever the opportunity arises, is pledged to support compulsory sale and purchase—stated in his opening observations that although he agreed with every word of the Amendment he must vote with the Government?

Mr. W. Moore.

MR. WILLIAM MOORE: I did not use the words imputed to me by the right hon. Gentleman. What I said was that owing to my pledge to my constituents I was not at liberty to join in a vote of censure on the Government.

*SERJEANT HEMPHILL: I beg the hon. and learned Member's pardon. I did understand that he was going to vote with the Government, although he was voting against his convictions, because if the vote of censure were carried it would lead to the resignation of the Government and to a General Election, when he would have to go over to North Antrim and repeat the sincere pledges he has already given. I thoroughly agree with the spirit of the Amendment; and speaking, of course, wholly for myself, I am in the happy position of being able to vote for the Amendment in accordance with my pledges, and not, in a Parliamentary sense, having to break my word. I believe the Amendment embodies a principle which is essential to the well-being of Ireland. I have had experience of the working of the land laws, both under the old regime and the new, and I was surprised to hear from the right hon. Gentleman the Attorney General that he considers the Act of 1881 unsatisfactory. That Act was the creation of the greatest Liberal statesman that has ever existed in the country, and probably one whose like it will be a long time before we shall see again; but though it was Mr. Gladstone's Act, we must recollect that it was adopted and considerably extended by a Ministry professing the opinions put forward by the present Government. The cause of all our misfortunes in Ireland, and one of the great causes of the misery, degradation, and crime which disfigure our annals, was the unhappy state of the land laws, until Mr. Gladstone came to the rescue. If the law of landlords and tenants had been left to the operation of the English common law, the evils that sprang up in the last century, and two-thirds of the present century, would never have existed. From the time of the Union down to 1867-8, with very short intervals, almost all the land laws of Ireland were passed by Tory Governments, and these made the Irish tenants bondsmen, and left them to the tender mercies of the landlords. That state of things was rectified by Mr. Gladstone in 1881, the Act passed that year being the first to give security of tenure to a vast proportion of the tenants of Ireland. What remains to crown the edifice, to restore peace and harmony to Ireland, to abolish all those grievances which rankle so in the hearts of our countrymen, even when they are obliged to leave their homes, and the memory of which is handed down to their children from generation to generation, is to plant the tenants firmly on the soil, and make them proprietors, leaving to the landlords their mansions and their domains. The principle embodied in the Amendment would accomplish that great object. It would only do what has led to prosperity, happiness, and peace in many parts of the Continent, where the tillers of the soil are the owners. The principle of fixing fair rents and voluntary purchase has been recognised by the legislature, and I see no practical difficulty in going this further step. The Attorney General for Ireland had said that the progress made in land purchase under the Acts of 1885 and 1891 had been slow, steady, and satisfactory, that the payments had been made with the utmost punctuality, and that the whole arrears only amounted to between £3,000 and £4,000. This showed that the difficulty in getting in the rent in old times was not from deficiency of honest principle on the part of the tenants, but really because it was impossible for them to meet the exorbitant rents which ruled in many parts of the country. It may be said that that would be very hard on mortgagees; but it must be remembered that, under the Encumbered Estates Act, which really prevented a revolt in Ireland, the estates were sold for whatever they would fetch. The first mortgagees went into court and bought the property, leaving the owners without a penny. But that is no reason why justice should not be done, and an act of public policy should not be carried out, and dual ownership be abolished. I am not going to say much about the tribunals which have been raised up under the existing Land Acts. I take it for granted that every judge decides everything according to the best of his ability. We all know that in Ireland, of course, every lawyer is a politician. [Laughter.] Well, more or less. You all know that the general view in Ireland is that the Government for the time being selects the judges from their own supporters. But that is no reason why, when the judges ascend the bench, they should not leave their politics behind. It is not impossible to discharge from their minds their politics, and I have no doubt that these judges do discharge their duty to the best of their ability. But the fact remains that the circumstance of these judges having been politicians gives rise to the idea on the part of certain suitors that they deal partial justice, an idea which I am sure has no foundation in fact. But there is one thing in the system that I do deprecate. I am in a position to know, from representations I have had made to me from my own constituency, that very often a round peg is put into a square hole, and that Land Commissioners are appointed whose opinions differ as to what is fair rent. Another thing is that the Land Commissioners are more or less removable. Every man who sits upon the bench ought to have the feeling that he cannot be removed. They ought to be made permanent. One of the great grievances of the Uitlanders in the Transvaal was that the judges were removable. The Supreme Judges in Ireland were removable until 1782, and yet that is made a casus belli in the case of the Transvaal now. Then, I think, there should be appeals from the Assistant Land Commissioners on matters of law; but on a mere question of valuation a properly constituted tribunal of Land Commissioners would be much more likely to be right than the judges of any Appeal Court. It will not be denied that it is a common practice for landlords to appeal, no matter what decision is given. I would, therefore, abolish appeals altogether, except on questions of law. That is the principle of the ordinary courts, where the decision of the jury is as a general rule final, and only an appeal is allowed on a question of law. One other point I wish to make. It is repugnant to all my ideas of judicial proceeding to have a case decided on ex parte statements. My idea is that these land courts, like every other court, should decide only on a full hearing of the evidence offered on both sides, and with a full opportunity to the representatives of both sides to cross-examine. But as I understand the working of the system in ninety cases out of a hundred, no matter what evidence may be produced, the land court takes the valuation of the court valuer, of which only a copy has been supplied to the suitor, and on that valuation the court acts. I trust that the Government will deal with this subject either this session or the next. I am quite sure there is statesmanship enough among the occupants of the front bench to enable them to conceive some method which will abolish dual ownership and will satisfy all parties in Ireland, including the right hon. Member for North Armagh.

COLONEL SAUNDERSON (Armagh, N.): The right hon. Gentleman, in his very impassioned peroration, wanted practically to get rid of the Irish landlords, and that these should be compelled to sell their estates at prairie value.

SERJEANT HEMPHILL: I am a landlord myself in a small way.

COLONEL SAUNDERSON: I thought so much from the speech of the right Serjeant Hemphill.

hon. Gentleman. I am not going to vote for the Amendment, for two reasons—first, because the object of any Amendment to the Address is to make it a vote of want of confidence in the Government; and, second, because I disapprove of it. [Laughter from hon. Members on the Irish benches.] I have the advantage which hon. Members opposite do not possess, that I voted for the Land Bill of 1870 when many of them were in arms. I voted for that Bill because I remember Mr. Gladstone, in a very eloquent speech, said that it was a final measure, and to give a final settlement to this long-vexed Irish question. Not very many years after, Mr. Gladstone brought in another Bill, which was absolutely to settle the question for ever and ever. The object of that Bill was to give the Irish tenants the “three F’s,” which was then their ultimate aspiration.

MR. T. P. O’CONNOR (Liverpool, Scotland): The right hon. and gallant Gentleman is not correct in that. The Land League, which then represented the views of the Irish tenants, strongly advocated peasant proprietary, or compulsory purchase, as a final settlement of the land question.

COLONEL SAUNDERSON: I did not include the Land League. The Land League wanted to get rid of the landlords without compensation.

MR. T. P. O’CONNOR: That statement is absolutely incorrect. The Land League published their programme, and in that very document they proposed that the landlords should be bought out at a reasonable number of years purchase—twenty years purchase.

COLONEL SAUNDERSON: I can only say that I judge of the objects and position of the Land League by the speeches of the gentlemen who supported it. I remember the hon. Member for East Mayo saying that he would “make short work of Irish landlords.” The meaning of that phrase may be left to the imagination of the House. Mr. Gladstone himself said in this House that after all the minutest inspection made in view of the passing of this Act, the vast majority of Irish landlords had come honourably out of that severe inquest. That is very much to the honour of the Irish landlords. I never did deny that there are bad landlords; but I think if you find a man like Mr. Gladstone, who was not very fond of Irish landlords, stating that it was his conviction, after examining all the circumstances, that they had come well out of the examination, that is a very good certificate of character. I would remind the House that Mr. Gladstone said that the position of the Irish landlords after the passing of the Act of 1881 was infinitely more secure than ever before, and now we find that the Irish people are far from being satisfied. I have always opposed compulsory purchase. A great majority of the people of North Armagh have always given me their support, and I told them the reasons why I oppose compulsory purchase. First, because I look upon it as an act of tyranny and injustice, in what is called a free country, to say to me, whether I like it or not, "You must sell your land"; and to say to my tenant, whether he likes it or not, "You must buy the land." I say that is an evil principle. I told my tenants that if that principle were established, it would sweep away the right of property—which, after all, is the foundation of liberty—and the prosperity of the country. Then when are you going to stop? Do you think you can isolate an act of national injustice to Ireland? I do not think you can. Another reason why I oppose compulsory purchase is that I am an Irishman, and I am proud to be an Irishman, and have as much right to live in Ireland as hon. Gentlemen opposite. What right have you to buy my land at a depreciated value, and force me to invest the purchase money in Consols, which would render it impossible for me to live in Ireland? I say you have no right to do that. The hon. Member for Galway said that what he looked forward to was an Act which would give equal satisfaction to all parties concerned. [An HON. MEMBER: I think he said, "Do equal justice to all parties."] If you wait for that tribunal you will wait very long. I learned from my hon. and learned friend here that, although he supports the principle of compulsory purchase, he supports it with the addition that if you buy out the Irish landlords at what the courts in Ireland may consider a fair price you will add to the purchase money a sum which would really make up to him the loss he would sustain.

MR. CLANCY: That is not in his election address.

COLONEL SAUNDERSON: I have not read his election address; I never read election addresses. What I ask myself is this: Who is going to pay that additional money? The British taxpayer, I suppose. The British taxpayer and the Government representing the British taxpayer would naturally ask this question: Is it worth while to pay this money? I can conceive a Government reasoning in this way: Here is Ireland, not exactly what you would call a particularly loyal country or an extremely easy country to govern. Would it be worth our while to supplement the price to be paid to get rid of these Irish landlords in order to bring about that "peace which we all desire," as my hon. and learned friend terms it? Can anyone imagine for one moment that if all the Irish landlords were bought out it would have the slightest effect on the views taken by hon. Gentlemen opposite—for instance, with regard to the war in South Africa? Would it make them loyal subjects of the Crown? [An IRISH MEMBER: No.] Of course it would not. They are above bribes. They are not going to sacrifice their patriotic aspirations in order to buy out Irish landlords. If the British taxpayer would buy out the Irish landlords without taking any money at all from Ireland they would never consent to sacrifice the aspiration of that part of the race to which they belong, the aspiration which they have always stated as kicking the English out of Ireland and to reign themselves supreme. That is the object which they say is the highest aspiration of their lives. Therefore, I conclude that a British Government, to whichever side it might belong, would say that it was not worth while sacrificing the taxpayers' money to buy up these landlords and still leave Ireland in as bad a state as it was before. I cannot conceive the sense of justice, which to my mind is one of the prominent features of the British people, permitting a Government or the House of Commons, in order to satisfy a momentary exigency which may arise, to perpetrate what I would look upon as an act of absolute and unbounded injustice.

I quite admit that it might be far more to my interest to consent to sell my land at twenty years' purchase than to allow fifteen years to elapse, when I or my successors might be possessed of a diminished income, and be much poorer than would have been the case had I consented to sell. As representing a family who have lived in Ireland for hundreds of years, I say that no matter how much you whittle down my income I will never sell my land. I may be looked upon as very foolish, but I intend to live in Ireland, and I hope that those who come after me may live in Ireland. From the aspect of the House I believe that this Amendment will be rejected by a very large majority, though I cannot conceive the House of Commons being influenced by the arguments which have been urged from the opposite side of the House, and, indeed, from some Members on this side. The House must reason in this way: Which is the class who have always come forward to assist in the maintenance of law and order in Ireland? The class of all others is the landowning class. Hon. Gentlemen opposite, of course, will not accept that, but I should like them to prove the contrary. Who are the people who have come forward to help the Irish in distress? The men who have done more than any others in Ireland have been the landlords. Who now in Ireland are subscribing the most money for the relief of the suffering caused by this war? The landlords. There is one thing, at any rate, I am proud to say, in which all classes in Ireland join, and that is in furnishing Her Majesty the Queen with the bravest men who have ever fought in her Army. Now, I have done. I have tried to show that the landlords in Ireland probably refuse to sell because they wish to continue to live in their country. That is the reason which animates me, and that is the main reason why I shall vote against the Amendment.

MR. J. P. FARRELL (Cavan, W.): As far as I know the sentiments of any gentleman on this side of the House there is no desire whatever to drive the hon. and gallant Member for North Armagh out of the country in which he expresses a desire to live. He has a perfect right to live there, and it is stretching the argument against this Amendment very much too far to suggest that because we ask

Colonel Saunderson.

the Government to pass a compulsory Land Bill for Ireland he and his class must necessarily take their departure from the country. There would be a considerable proportion of private property still left in their hands; they would not be deprived of their demesne lands or of their residences, while as regards his patriotism in wishing to remain in the country there is no reason why, because he is compelled to sell his holdings, he should take his departure. Several speeches of a very contradictory character have been delivered from the other side of the House, and I will leave hon. Gentlemen to settle their differences between them. As regards the speech of the hon. and learned Member for North Antrim, it seemed to me that he followed the example of the Attorney General for Ireland in trying to circle his argument. He was in favour of compulsory purchase, but yet he was not in favour of voting for this Amendment. He was in favour of compulsory purchase to drive out the Irish landlords, but yet he was in favour of giving the landlords better treatment than the hon. and gallant Member for North Armagh expects they will ever get. The two positions are entirely contradictory, and it is impossible to give effect to them. The position taken up by the hon. and learned Gentleman is the same as that adopted by his political friends in Ireland, namely, to obstruct us who by our agitation in the country have brought this land question within measurable distance of settlement, but the moment we get legislation passed they will be the first to rush into the courts to take advantage of it. The Amendment before the House naturally divides itself into two parts. One part of the Amendment very justly and properly finds fault with the administration of the Land Acts in Ireland. I listened with considerable interest to the defence of the Attorney General of this maladministration—it can be called nothing else—but I cannot by any means compliment him upon his performance. He told us, in effect, that if we had patience the operation of the land purchase department of the Land Commission would effect the purposes of this Amendment. What are the facts? He told us that in a period of fifteen years, from 1885 to the present time, 55,000 tenants have become possessors of their holdings at a cost of about £18,000,000. There are 600,000 occupying tenants in Ireland, so that it is merely a question of arithmetical calculation to discover how long it will take to convert all the tenants into the owners of their own farms. It would take 180 years, on a moderate calculation, if the process proceeded at the same rate as during the past fifteen years. I venture to hope the process will be considerably expedited. No doubt, by the decision of the Court of Appeal as regards the 40th section a considerable improvement has taken place, but the right hon. Gentleman cannot deny that a tremendous amount of unnecessary delay takes place in the working of the Acts. I know of one small case in County Longford that took seven years to pass through the Commission Court in Dublin. It was sent about from chamber to chamber; it was put back on motions to explain delay; it was kept going about for seven long years before the tenants who signed their agreements in 1887 got their vesting orders in 1894. What was the result? Could it be said to be satisfactory to either party? The landlords were deprived of the money which they required, and for which they had sold their property, for those seven years. The tenants were compelled to pay seven years interest in lieu of rent, so that they paid that amount more than they would have done had the sale been expedited as cases will be in the future. There is a considerable amount of discontent existing in connection with the fixing of fair rents. I know perfectly well how things are done in County Longford. No doubt some of the gentlemen who are sent down as Sub-Commissioners come with the very best intentions, but they do not come down with the intention of hurrying on the cases in their lists. I have frequently seen them rise in the middle of the day, on some pretext or other, when there was plenty of time to hear a considerable number of other cases. There has been most unreasonable delay in the inspection of farms. It was stated to-night that these inspections were highly unsatisfactory. I know, as far as the Commissioners are concerned, whenever I have been present, notice was given to both sides and the day fixed, but it is as to the length of time that elapses with which I particularly find fault, the period invariably running from a fortnight to three, four, or six weeks as the date of visitation. There was no valid reason why the visit should not be made the next day or the day after, or at any rate before the Commissioners left that locality. In this connection the delay is the strongest part of our case against the Commissioners. It may be said there is a great deal to allow for, that a great number of these applications are coming in constantly, and that they are being dealt with as quickly as possible. I do not know how far that statement can be substantiated with proof. I have no doubt the right hon. Gentleman gets reports supplied to him which may to some extent refute any case I may set up as regards these tenants. But as to County Longford I have known tenants to be kept from six to sixteen or twenty months out of hearing of their case, and these tenants, so far from being treated with the consideration which litigants before any other court in the land would receive, were not even vouchsafed a reply to their requests for expedition when they wrote to the Land Court complaining of this delay.

MR. ATKINSON: Would the hon. Member give me the name of such a case?

MR. J. P. FARRELL: I will give the name of a particular estate and send the facts to the right hon. Gentleman by post. In approaching the consideration of the settlement of this question I venture to say it is not by any legal quibbling we will effect the object we have in view. The right hon. Gentleman cannot be ignorant of the fact that there is in Ireland a strong and growing agitation for the redress of the grievances of the people in this matter. He cannot be unaware of the fact that large public meetings are being held week after week—some of which the forces of the Crown are illegally, in my opinion, suppressing—for the purpose of calling the attention of the Government to the grievance of the tenants in the matter of land purchase, and to the necessity of passing legislation to compel unwilling landlords to sell. It must be, it follows from the nature of things, a matter of dissatisfaction to tenants living in a particular locality to see one estate sold to the tenants at a very considerable reduction, while the tenants on one or both sides of that estate have no prospect whatever of getting into the same position. The right hon. Gentleman may say that it is unjust and improper of us to force on this question or to expect the Government to commit the injustice of passing legislation of this character. That argument has been used from the beginning. Every effort to deal with this question, no matter in what way, has been denounced in the past, and will be denounced in the future, from the side which has an interest in maintaining the status quo. The Unionist Government, which professes to be a strong and resolute Government, able to carry out any policy to which it commits itself, could not do anything more to its credit or more to the satisfaction of the tenant farmers of Ireland than to deal in a wholesale and thorough manner with this question. The people are unanimously in favour of it; they will not be satisfied until some effort is made to remedy the grievances entailed on different estates by reason of the sale of other estates in the same locality. On higher and national grounds I would be disposed to speak more strongly on this question, but I do not want to irritate the feelings of hon. Gentlemen opposite, who have expressed opinions in favour of this resolution to-night, and whose co-operation will in due time, I trust, have the effect of making the Government deal in a more liberal spirit with this question. Of one thing I can assure the right hon. Gentleman, and that is, that if he or the Government think the land question has been settled by the Act of either 1887 or 1892 or 1896 they are woefully mistaken. The people of Ireland are by no means satisfied with the progress which has been made under the existing law, and I sincerely trust that the division to be taken on this Amendment will bring home to the Government and their advisers that there is a real and vivid land question in Ireland to be settled, and that they will have no rest until it is settled.

*MR. O'MALLEY (Galway, Connemara): I desire to join in the expression of our regret at the absence, and its cause, of the Chief Secretary from the House. I am sure we shall all be glad to see him back again in his place. The question before the House is undoubtedly one of vital importance to Ireland. I will go further, and say that it is a question of vital importance to England. The people of this country cannot wish Ireland to go on from year to year and from generation to generation in a state of discontent and a condition of penury, and with famine periodically scourging its people. If the Government desire to do away with Irish discontent and Irish distress, and, to a large extent, Irish disloyalty, they must grapple with this land question, and grapple with it soon. If there is one thing more certain than another it is that the Land Act of 1881 and the subsequent amendments of that Act have not settled the Irish land question. We still have the tenants and the landlords at loggerheads. We have the tenants appealing, very often in vain, to have their rents fixed; years elapse from the time they apply to the court before the rents are fixed; and then in almost every case the landlords appeal, their main object being to frustrate the operation and the administration of the Act, and to defeat the tenants—not because they want to have the rents fixed by the court raised, but to put the tenants to expense, and to cause them to be in a state of rebellion. That is a most unsatisfactory state of affairs. There are poor people living from hand to mouth in the west of Ireland, paying exorbitant rents for most miserable tracts of land, who, after years of weary waiting, get their rents fixed by the courts, only to have an appeal entered against the decision by the landlord. Do you mean to tell me that while that state of things continues we can have peace and comfort and prosperity in Ireland? We have been charged during the last few months with disloyalty. Is it not a matter of serious consequence to this country that the Irish people should be loyal? Have you not seen the effect of this feeling of disloyalty in America and in South Africa? and it is only too true that the Irish people for generations have been taught that England's difficulty is Ireland's opportunity? Do you mean to tell me you want this state of affairs to continue? If you want to make the Irish people loyal make them contented. Get rid, I will not say of the landlords, bag and baggage, but of Irish landlordism, and then you will find that a contented and peaceful Ireland will not be the disloyal Ireland of to-day. I would strongly appeal to

Mr. J. P. Farrell.

hon. Gentlemen opposite, who, no doubt, are anxious in their hearts to do the right thing to my country. I believe the English people, if they fully realised the facts, if they were not blinded by centuries of persecution and bigotry, would settle this question very soon. It is our duty as Nationalist representatives to bring this question before the House. You may defeat us to-night. But take care that you do not have again in Ireland, and very soon, an agitation that will stir up all the elements that we on this side are most anxious to keep down. We want to see Ireland and England as brothers together, loving instead of hating each other. But by ignoring this question, by defeating this Amendment, by giving it out to the Irish people that you will not grapple with this matter in the way it should be grappled with—that is, by compulsory purchase—you will have once more all the bad elements in Ireland up against you. And who will be to blame? This House will be to blame, because the English people would be only too glad to endorse whatever decision you arrive at. I shall not detain you longer; but I strongly urge Gentlemen opposite, even at the risk of offending those gentlemen on the Treasury Bench, to yield to their consciences in this matter and support the Amendment.

MR. FLAVIN (Kerry, N.) characterised the action of the Land Commissioners in Ireland as extraordinary, and gave several examples. From personal experience of the county of Kerry and surrounding counties, the hon. Member averred that the only solution of the question was compulsory purchase, with a fair price fixed for landlord and tenant alike. There were good and bad landlords in Kerry, where they had allowed a reduction of as much as 4s. in the pound; but, generally speaking, while landlords and tenants were going to war with each other, unless this House intervened by bringing in a Compulsory Purchase Bill, they would have a continuance of this bitter feud in Ireland.

Question put.

The House divided:—For the Amendment, 75; against, 209. (Division List No. 8.)

AYES.

Abraham, Wm. (Cork, N.E.)
Allison, Robert Andrew
Ambrose, Robert
Austin, M. (Limerick, W.)

Barlow, John Emmott
Blake, Edward
Bolton, Thomas Dolling

Caldwell, James
Carvill, Patrick G. Hamilton
Channing, Francis Allston
Clancy, John Joseph
Clark, Dr. G. B. (Caithness-sh.)
Commins, Andrew
Condon, Thomas Joseph
Crean, Eugene

Daly, James
Dewar, Arthur
Doogan, P. C.

Engledew, Charles John

Evans, S. T. (Glamorgan)
Farrell, James P. (Cavan, W.)
Flavin, Michael Joseph
Flynn, James Christopher
Fox, Dr. Joseph Francis

Hammond, John (Carlow)

Hayden, John Patrick
Hayne, Rt Hon Charles Seale-
Healy, Maurice (Cork)
Holland, William Henry
Horniman, Frederick John

Jones, William (Carnarvonsh.)
Jordan, Jeremiah

Kearley, Hudson E.
Kilbride, Denis

Lawson, Sir W. (Cumberland)
Lea, Sir T. (Londonderry)
Lewis, John Herbert
Lough, Thomas

Macaleese, Daniel
MacDonnell, Dr MA (Queen's C
MacNeill, John Gordon Swift
M'Cartan, Michael
M'Ghee, Richard
M'Leod, John
Mandeville, J. Francis
Molloy, Bernard Charles
Morton, Edw J C (Devonport)
Moss, Samuel
Moulton, John Fletcher
Murnaghan, George

Nussey, Thomas Willans

O'Brien, Patrick (Kilkenny)
O'Connor, T. P. (Liverpool)
O'Malley, William

Parnell, John Howard
Pearson, Sir Westman D.
Pease, Joseph A. (Northumb.)
Pickersgill, Edward Hare
Pinkerton, John
Power, Patrick Joseph

Redmond, John E. (Waterford)
Redmond, William (Clare)
Richardson, J. (Durham, S.E.)
Roberts, John Bryn (Eifion)
Roberts, John H. (Denbigha.)
Robson, William Snowden

Sullivan, D. (Westmeath)
Sullivan, T. D. (Donegal, W.)
Tennant, Harold John
Thomas, D. A. (Merthyr)
Trevelyan, Charles Phillips
Tully, Jasper

Ure, Alexander
Warner, T. Courtenay T.
Young, S. (Cavan, E.)

TELLERS FOR THE AYES—Sir
Thomas Esmonde and Captain Donelan.

NOES.

Acland-Hood, Capt. Sir Alex. F.
 Allsopp, Hon. George
 Anson, Sir William Reynell
 Archdale, Edward Mervyn
 Atkinson, Rt. Hon. John
 Bailey, James (Walworth)
 Balcarres, Lord
 Balfour, Rt. Hon. A. J. (Manch'r
 Banbury, Frederick George
 Barry, Rt. Hon. A. H. Smith-
 Bartley, George C. T.
 Bathurst, Hon. A. Benjamin
 Beach, Rt. Hon. Sir M. H. (Bristol
 Beach, Rt. Hon. W. W. B. (Hants)
 Beckett, Ernest William
 Bemrose, Sir Henry Howe
 Bethell, Commander
 Bhowaggee, Sir M. M.
 Bill, Charles
 Blakiston-Houston, John
 Blundell, Colonel Henry
 Bonser, Henry Cosmo Orme
 Brodrick, Rt. Hon. St. John
 Brookfield, A. Montagu
 Brymer, William Ernest
 Campbell, J. H. M. (Dublin)
 Cavendish, R. F. (N. Lancs.)
 Cavendish, V. C. W. (D'rbysh're
 Cecil, Evelyn (Hertford, East)
 Cecil, Lord Hugh (Greenwich)
 Chaloner, Captain R. G. W.
 Chamberlain, Rt. Hon. J. (Birm.)
 Chamberlain, J. Austen (Worc'r
 Chaplin, Rt. Hon. Henry
 Charrington, Spencer
 Chelsea, Viscount
 Clare, Octavius Leigh
 Clarke, Sir Edw. (Plymouth)
 Coghill, Douglas Harry
 Collings, Rt. Hon. Jesse
 Colomb, Sir John Chas. Ready
 Colston, Chas. E. H. Athole
 Cook, Fred. Lucas (Lambeth)
 Corbett, A. Cameron (Glasg'w
 Cornwallis, Fiennes S. W.
 Cox, Irwin Edward Bainbridge
 Cross, Alexander (Glasgow)
 Cross, H. Shepherd (Bolton)
 Cubitt, Hon. Henry
 Curzon, Viscount
 Dalkeith, Earl of
 Dickinson, Robert Edmond
 Disraeli, Coningsby Ralph
 Donkin, Richard Sim
 Doughty, George
 Douglas, Rt. Hon. A. Akers-
 Douglas-Pennant, Hon. E. S.
 Doxford, Sir Wm. Theodore
 Duncombe, Hon. Hubert V.
 Dyke, Rt. Hon. Sir W. Hart
 Egerton, Hon. A. de Tatton
 Elliot, Hon. A. Ralph Douglas
 Fellowes, Hon. A. Edward Fergusson, Rt. Hon. Sir J. (Manc'r
 Finch, George H.
 Finlay, Sir Robert Bannatyne
 Fisher, William Hayes
 Flannery, Sir Fortescue
 Fletcher, Sir Henry
 Flower, Ernest
 Forster, Henry William

Fry, Lewis
 Galloway, William Johnson
 Garfit, William
 Gedge, Sydney
 Gibbs, Hn. A. G. H. (C. of Lond.
 Giles, Charles Tyrrell
 Godson, Sir Augustus Fredk.
 Goldsworthy, Major-General
 Gordon, Hon. John Edward
 Gorst, Rt. Hon. Sir J. Eldon
 Goschen, Rt. Hon. G. J. (St. Geo.'s
 Graham, Henry Robert
 Green, W. D. (Wednesbury)
 Greene, H. D. (Shrewsbury)
 Greville, Hon. Ronald
 Hamilton, Rt. Hon. Lord George
 Hanbury, Rt. Hon. Robert Wm.
 Hanson, Sir Reginald
 Hardy, Laurence
 Hare, Thomas Leigh
 Haslett, Sir James Horner
 Heath, James
 Helder, Augustus
 Henderson, Alexander
 Hickman, Sir Alfred
 Hozier, Hon. James Henry Cecil
 Hudson, George Bickersteth
 Hutchinson, Capt. G. W. Grice-
 Hutton, John (Yorks, N.R.)
 Jackson, Rt. Hon. Wm. Lawies
 Jeffreys, Arthur Frederick
 Jessel, Capt. Herbert Merton
 Johnston, William (Belfast)
 Kenyon-Slaney, Col. William
 Keswick, William
 Kimber, Henry
 Knowles, Lees
 Lawrence, Sir E. Durning-
 Lawson, John Grant (Yorks.)
 Lecky, Rt. Hon. William E. H.
 Leigh-Bennett, Henry Currie
 Leigaw, Stanley
 Llewelyn, Sir Dillwyn-
 Lockwood, Lieut.-Col. A. R.
 Loder, Gerald Walter Erskine
 Long, Rt. Hon. W. (Liverpool)
 Lopes, Henry Yarde Buller
 Lorne, Marquess of
 Lowe, Francis William
 Lowles, John
 Macartney, W. G. Ellison
 Macdonald, John Cumming
 Maclure, Sir John William
 McCalmont, Col. J. (Antrim, E.)
 M'Alver, Sir L. (Edinburgh, W.)
 Malcolm, Ian
 Manners, Lord Edward Wm. J.
 Martin, Richard Biddulph
 Massey-Mainwaring, Hn. W. F.
 Maxwell, Rt. Hon. Sir Herbert E.
 Mendl, Sigismund Ferdinand
 Milbank, Sir Powlett Chas. J.
 Mildmay, Francis Bingham
 Milner, Sir Frederick George
 Milward, Colonel Victor
 Monkton, Edward Philip
 Monk, Charles James
 Moon, Edward Robert Pacy
 Moore, William (Antrim, N.)
 More, Robt. Jasper (Shropshire)
 Morrell, George Herbert

Morton, A. H. A. (Deptford)
 Murray, Rt. Hon. A. G. (Bute)
 Murray, Chas. J. (Coventry)
 Murray, Col. Wyndham (Bath)
 Nicholson, William Graham
 Nicol, Donald Ninian
 O'Neill, Hon. Robt. Torrens
 Orr-Ewing, Charles Lindsay
 Penn, John
 Phillpotts, Captain Arthur
 Pilkington, R. (Lancs, Newton)
 Platt-Higgins, Frederick
 Plunkett, Rt. Hon. H. Curzon
 Pollock, Harry Frederick
 Pretymann, Ernest George
 Pryce-Jones, Lt.-Col. Edward
 Purvis, Robert
 Quilter, Sir Cuthbert
 Rankin, Sir James
 Rentoul, James Alexander
 Richardson, Sir Thos. (Hartlepl
 Ridley, Rt. Hon. Sir Matthew W.
 Ritchie, Rt. Hon. Chas. Thomson
 Robertson, Herbert (Hackney)
 Robinson, Brooke
 Round, James
 Roys, Clement Molyneux
 Russell, Gen. F. S. (Cheltenham)
 Russell, T. W. (Tyrone)
 Ryder, John Herbert Dudley
 Samuel, Harry S. (Limehouse)
 Sandys, Lieut.-Col. Thos. Myles
 Sanderson, Rt. Hon. Col. Ed. J.
 Scoble, Sir Andrew Richard
 Sharpe, William Edward T.
 Shaw-Stewart, M. H. (Renfrew)
 Sidebotham, J. W. (Cheshire)
 Sinclair, Louis (Romford)
 Smith, Abel H. (Christchurch)
 Smith, James Parker (Lanarks)
 Smith, Hon. W. F. D. (Strand)
 Stanley, Edward Jas. (Somerset
 Stewart, Sir M. J. M. Taggart
 Stirling-Maxwell, Sir John M.
 Strauss, Arthur
 Strutt, Hon. Charles Hedley
 Sturt, Hon. Humphry Napier
 Talbot, Rt. Hon. J. G. (Ox. Un.)
 Thornton, Percy M.
 Tollemache, Henry James
 Verney, Hon. Richard G.
 Vincent, Sir Edgar (Exeter)
 Ward, Hon. Robt. A. (Crewe)
 Webster, Sir Richard E.
 Welby, Lieut.-Colonel A. C. E.
 Whiteley, H. (Ashton-undr-L.)
 Whitmore, Charles Algernon
 Williams, Colonel R. (Dorset)
 Williams, Joseph P. (Birm.)
 Willoughby de Eresby, Lord
 Willox, Sir John Archibald
 Wilson, John (Falkirk)
 Wodehouse, Rt. Hon. E. R. (Bath
 Wylie, Alexander
 Wyvill, Marmaduke D'Arcy
 Young, Commander (Berks, E.)
 Younger, William

TELLERS FOR THE NOES—
 Sir William Walrond and
 Mr. Anstruther.

Main Question again proposed.

DEPORTATION OF PAUPERS INTO IRELAND.

MR. FLAVIN: I beg to move the Amendment standing on the Paper in my name.

MR. MURNAGHAN (Tyrone, Mid) seconded the Amendment.

Amendment proposed—

"At the end of the Question to add the words, 'But we humbly represent to Your Majesty the great regret of this House that no reference has been made in Your Majesty's Speech regarding a Bill to discontinue the deportation of paupers from England and Wales into Ireland.'—(Mr. Flavin.)

Question proposed, "That those words be there added."

*THE SECRETARY TO THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD (Mr. T. W. RUSSELL, Tyrone, S.) said that the question would be considered by the Local Government Board and the Irish Government with a view to the introduction of a measure that would satisfy hon. Members.

MR. FLAVIN, on this assurance of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Local Government Board, begged leave to withdraw his Amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Main question again proposed.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR rose in his place, and claimed to move, "That the Question be now put."

Question put, "That the Question be now put."

The House divided:—Ayes, 215; Noes, 64. (Division List No. 9.)

AYES.

Acland-Hood, Capt. Sir A. F.
Allsopp, Hon. George
Anson, Sir William Reynell
Archdale, Edward Mervyn
Atkinson, Rt. Hon. John
Bailey, James (Walworth)
Balcarras, Lord
Balfour, Rt. Hon. A. J. (Manc'r.
Banbury, Frederick George
Barry, Rt. Hon. A. H. Smith (Hts.
Bartley, George C. T.
Bathurst, Hn. Allen Benjamin
Beach, Rt. Hon. Sir M. E. (Brist'l Beach, Rt. Hon. W. W. B. (Hants
Beckett, Ernest William
Bemrose, Sir Henry Howe
Bethell, Commander
Bhowaggee, Sir M. M.
Bill, Charles
Blakiston-Houston, John
Blundell, Colonel Henry
Bonsor, Henry Cosmo Orme
Brodrick, Rt. Hon. St. John
Brookfield, A. Montagu
Brymer, William Ernest
Campbell, J. H. M. (Dublin)
Cavendish, R. F. (N. Lancs.)
Cavendish, V. C. W. (Derbysh.)
Cecil, Evelyn (Hertford, East)
Cecil, Lord Hugh (Greenwich)
Chaloner, Captain R. G. W.
Chamberlain, Rt. Hon. J. (Birm.)
Chamberlain, J. Austen (Worc'r
Chaplin, Rt. Hon. Henry
Charrington, Spencer
Chelsea, Viscount

Clare, Octavius Leigh
Clarke, Sir Edward (Plymouth)
Coghill, Douglas Harry
Collings, Rt. Hon. Jesse
Colomb, Sir John Charles Ready
Colston, Chas. Edw. H. Athole
Cook, Fred. Lucas (Lambeth)
Corbett, A. Cameron (Glasgow)
Cornwallis, Fiennes Stanley W.
Cox, Irwin Edward Bainbridge
Cross, Alexander (Glasgow)
Cross, Herb. Shepherd (Bolton)
Cubitt, Hon. Henry
Curzon, Viscount
Dalkeith, Earl of
Dickinson, Robert Edmond
Disraeli, Coningsby Ralph
Donkin, Richard Sim
Doughty, George
Douglas, Rt. Hon. A. Akers
Douglas-Pennant, Hon. E. S.
Doxford, Sir Wm. Theodore
Duncombe, Hon. Hubert V.
Dyke, Rt. Hon. Sir W. Hart
Egerton, Hon. A. de Tatton
Elliot, Hon. A. R. Douglas
Fellows, Hon. Ailwyn E.
Fergusson, Sir J. (Manches'r.
Finch, George H.
Finlay, Sir R. Bannatyne
Fisher, William Hayes
Flannery, Sir Fortescue
Fletcher, Sir Henry
Flower, Ernest
Forster, Henry William
Fry, Lewis

Galloway, William Johnson
Garfit, William
Gibbs, Hn. A. G. H. (City of L.)
Giles, Charles Tyrrell
Godson, Sir A. Frederick
Goldsworthy, Major-General
Gordon, Hon. John Edward
Gorst, Rt. Hon. Sir John Eldon
Goschen, Rt. Hon. G. J. (Sussex)
Graham, Henry Robert
Green, W. D. (Wednesbury)
Greene, H. D. (Shrewsbury)
Greville, Hon. Ronald
Hamilton, Rt. Hon. Ld. George
Hanbury, Rt. Hon. Robert Wm.
Hanson, Sir Reginald
Hardy, Laurence
Hare, Thomas Leigh
Haslett, Sir James Horner
Heath, James
Helder, Augustus
Henderson, Alexander
Hickman, Sir Alfred
Horniman, Frederick John
Hozier, Hn. James Henry Cecil
Hudson, George Bickersteth
Hutchinson, Capt. G. W. Grice-
Hutton, John (Yorks. N.R.)
Jackson, Rt. Hon. Wm. Lawies
Jeffreys, Arthur Frederick
Jessell, Captain H. Merton
Johnston, William (Belfast)
Kearley, Hudson E.
Kenyon-Slaney, Col. William
Kewick, William

Kimber, Henry
Knowles, Lees
Lawrence, Sir E. Durning (Corn
Lawson, John Grant (Yorks.)
Lea, Sir Thos. (Londonderry)
Lecky, Rt. Hon. W. E. H.
Leese, Sir J. F. (Accrington)
Leigh-Bennett, Henry Currie
Leighton, Stanley
Llewelyn, Sir Dillwyn (Swansea)
Lockwood, Lt.-Col. A. R.
Loder, Gerald Walter E.
Long, Rt. Hon. W. (Liverpool)
Lopes, Henry Yarde Buller
Lorne, Marquess of
Lowe, Francis William
Lowles, John
Macartney, W. G. Ellison
Macdona, John Cumming
Maclure, Sir John William
M'Calmont, Col. J. (Antrim, E.)
M'Ever, Sir Lewis (Edin'. W.)
Malcolm, Ian
Manners, Lord Edward Wm. J.
Martin, Richard Biddulph
Massey-Mainwaring, Hn W. F.
Mend, Sigismund Ferdinand
Milbank, Sir Powlett Chas John
Mildmay, Francis Bingham
Milner, Sir Frederick George
Milward, Colonel Victor
Monckton, Edward Philip
Monk, Charles James
Moon, Edward Robert Pacy
Moore, William (Antrim, N.)
More, Robt. Jasper (Shropshire)
Morrell, George Herbert
Morton, Arthur H. A. (Deptford)

Moulton, John Fletcher
Murray, Rt. Hon. A. Graham (Bute)
Murray, Charles J. (Coventry)
Murray, Col. Wyndham (Bath)
Nicholson, William Graham
Nicol, Donald Ninian
Nussey, Thomas Willans
O'Neill, Hon. Robert Torrens
Orr-Ewing, Charles Lindsay
Pearson, Sir Weetman D.
Penn, John
Phillipotts, Captain Arthur
Pilkington, R. (Lancs. Newton)
Platt-Higgins, Frederick
Plunkett, Rt. Hn. H. Curzon
Pollock, Harry Frederick
Pretymann, Ernest George
Pryce-Jones, Lt.-Col. Edward
Purvis, Robert
Quilter, Sir Cuthbert
Rankin, Sir James
Rentoul, James Alexander
Richardson, Sir T. (Hartlep'l)
Ridley, Rt. Hn. Sir Matthew W.
Ritchie, Rt. Hn. Chas. Thomson
Robertson, Herbert (Hackney)
Robinson, Brooke
Round, James
Royds, Clement Molyneux
Russell, Gen. F. S. (Cheltenham)
Russell, T. W. (Tyne)
Ryder, John Herbert Dudley
Samuel, H. S. (Linehouse)
Sandys, Lieut.-Col. Thos. Myles
Saunderson, Rt. Hon. Col. E. J.
Scoble, Sir Andrew Richard
Sharpe, William Edward T.
Shaw-Stewart, M. H. (Renfrew)

Sidebotham, J. W. (Cheshire)
Sinclair, Louis (Romford)
Smith, Abel H. (Christchurch)
Smith, J. Parker (Lanarks)
Smith, Hon. W. F. D. (Strand)
Stanley, Edw. Jas. (Somerset)
Stewart, Sir M. J. M'Taggart
Stirling-Maxwell, Sir John M.
Strauss, Arthur
Strutt, Hon. Charles Hedley
Sturt, Hon. Humphry Napier
Talbot, Rt. Hn. J. G. (Oxf'd Univ)
Thornton, Percy M.
Tollemache, Henry James
Verney, Hn. Richard Greville
Vincent, Sir Edgar (Exeter)
Ward, Hon. Robt. A. (Crewe)
Warner, Thos. Courtenay T.
Webster, Sir Richard E.
Welby, Lieut.-Col. A. C. E.
Whiteley, H. (Ashton-under-L.)
Whitmore, Charles Algernon
Williams, Colonel R. (Dorset)
Williams, Jos. Powell (Birm.)
Willoughby de Eresby, Lord
Willox, Sir John Archibald
Wilson, John (Falkirk)
Wodehouse, Rt. Hn. E. R. (Bath)
Wylie, Alexander
Wyvill, Marmaduke D'Arcy
Young, Commander (Berke, E.)
Younger, William

TELLERS FOR THE AYES—Sir
William Walrond and Mr.
Anstruther.

NOES.

Allison, Robert Andrew
Austin, M. (Limerick, W.)
Barlow, John Emmott
Bolton, Thomas Dolling
Caldwell, James
Carvill, Patrick G. Hamilton
Channing, Francis Allston
Clancy, John Joseph
Clark, Dr. G. B. (Caithness-sh.)
Commins, Andrew
Condon, Thomas Joseph
Crean, Eugene
Crilly, Daniel
Daly, James
Dewar, Arthur
Donelan, Captain A.
Doogan, P. C.
Engledew, Charles John
Esmonde, Sir Thomas
Farrell, James P. (Cavan, W.)
Flavin, Michael Joseph
Flynn, James Christopher
Fox, Dr. Joseph Francis

Gedge, Sydney
Hammond, John (Carlow)
Hayden, John Patrick
Hayne, Rt. Hon. C. Seale
Healy, Maurice (Cork)
Holland, William Henry
Jones, W. (Carnarvonshire)
Jordan, Jeremiah
Kilbride, Denis
Lawson, Sir W. (Cumberland)
Lewis, John Herbert
Lough, Thomas
MacAleese, Daniel
MacDonnell, Dr. M. A. (Qn's Co)
MacNeill, John Gordon Swift
M'Cartan, Michael
M'Ghee, Richard
M'Leod, John
Mandeville, J. Francis
Molloy, Bernard Charles
Morton, E. J. C. (Devonport)
Moss, Samuel
Murnaghan, George

O'Brien, Patrick (Kilkenny)
O'Connor, T. P. (Liverpool)
O'Malley, William
Parnell, John Howard
Pease, Jos. A. (Northumb.)
Pinkerton, John
Power, Patrick Joseph
Redmond, J. E. (Waterford)
Redmond, William (Clare)
Roberts, J. Bryn (Eifion)
Roberts, John H. (Denbighs.)
Robson, William Snowdon
Sullivan, Donal (Westmeath)
Sullivan, T. D. (Donegal, W.)
Tennant, Harold John
Tully, Jasper
Ure, Alexander
Young, Samuel (Cavan, East)

TELLERS FOR THE NOES—
Mr. Samuel Evans and Mr.
D. A. Thomas.

Main Question put accordingly.

The House divided :—Ayes, 229 ; Noes, 39. (Division List No. 10.)

AYES.

Acland-Hood, Capt. Sir A. F.
 Allison, Robert Andrew
 Allsopp, Hon. George
 Anson, Sir William Reynell
 Archdale, Edward Mervyn
 Atkinson, Rt. Hon. John
 Bailey, James (Walworth)
 Balcarres, Lord
 Balfour, Rt. Hn. A. J. (Manch'r)
 Banbury, Frederick George
 Barlow, John Emmott
 Barry, Rt. Hn. A. H. Smith- (Hunte)
 Bartley, George C. T.
 Bathurst, Hn. Allen Benjamin
 Beach, Rt. Hn. Sir M. H. (Bristol)
 Beach, Rt. Hn. W. W. B. (Hants.)
 Beckett, Ernest William
 Bemrose, Sir Henry Howe
 Bethell, Commander
 Bhowaggee, Sir M. M.
 Bill, Charles
 Blakiston-Houston, John
 Blundell, Colonel Henry
 Bonsor, Henry Cosmo Orme
 Brodrick, Rt. Hon. St. John
 Brookfield, A. Montagu
 Brymer, William Ernest
 Caldwell, James
 Campbell, J. H. M. (Dublin)
 Cavendish, R. F. (N. Lancs.)
 Cavendish, V. C. W. (Derbysh.)
 Cecil, Evelyn (Hertford, East)
 Cecil, Lord Hugh (Greenwich)
 Chaloner, Captain R. G. W.
 Chamberlain, Rt. Hon. J. (Bir.)
 Chamberlain, J. A. (Worc'r)
 Channing, Francis Allston
 Chaplin, Rt. Hon. Henry
 Charrington, Spencer
 Chelsea, Viscount
 Clare, Octavius Leigh
 Coghill, Douglas Harry
 Collings, Rt. Hon. Jesse
 Colomb, Sir John C. Ready
 Colston, Chas. E. H. Athole
 Cook, Fred. Lucas (Lambeth)
 Corbett, A. C. (Glasgow)
 Cornwallis, Fienes Stanley W.
 Cox, Irwin E. Bainbridge
 Cross, Alexander (Glasgow)
 Cross, H. Shepherd (Bolton)
 Cubitt, Hon. Henry
 Curzon, Viscount
 Dalkeith, Earl of
 Dewar, Arthur
 Dickinson, Robert Edmond
 Disraeli, Coningsby Ralph
 Dodkin, Richard Sim
 Doughty, George
 Douglas, Rt. Hon. A. Akers
 Douglas-Pennant, Hon. E. S.
 Doxford, Sir William Theodore
 Duncombe, Hon. Hubert V.
 Dyke, Rt. Hn. Sir William Hart
 Egerton, Hon. A. de Tatton
 Elliot, Hon. A. Ralph Douglas
 Evans, Samuel T. (Glamorgan)
 Fellowes, Hon. Ailwyn Edward
 Fergusson, Rt. Hn. Sir J. (Man'r)
 Finc'h, George H.

Finlay, Sir Robert Bannatyne
 Fisher, William Hayes
 Flannery, Sir Fortescue
 Fletcher, Sir Henry
 Flower, Ernest
 Forster, Henry William
 Fry, Lewis
 Galloway, William Johnson
 Garfit, William
 Gedge, Sydney
 Gibbs, Hn. A. G. H. (City of Lon.)
 Giles, Charles Tyrrell
 Godson, Sir Augustus F.
 Goldsworthy, Major-General
 Gordon, Hon. John Edward
 Gorst, Rt. Hn. Sir John Eldon
 Goschen, Rt. Hn. G. J. (St. Geo's)
 Graham, Henry Robert
 Green, W. D. (Wednesbury)
 Greene, H. D. (Shrewsbury)
 Greville, Hon. Ronald
 Hamilton, Rt. Hon. Lord G.
 Hanbury, Rt. Hn. Robt. Wm.
 Hanson, Sir Reginald
 Hardy, Laurence
 Hare, Thomas Leigh
 Haslett, Sir James Horner
 Hayne, Rt. Hn. C. Seale-
 Heath, James
 Helder, Augustus
 Henderson, Alexander
 Hickman, Sir Alfred
 Horniman, Frederick John
 Hozier, Hn. James Henry C.
 Hudson, George Bickersteth
 Hutchinson, Capt. G. W. Grice-
 Hutton, John (Yorks. N.R.)
 Jackson, Rt. Hon. Wm. Lawies
 Jeffreys, Arthur Frederick
 Jessel, Capt. Herbert Merton
 Johnston, William (Belfast)
 Kearley, Hudson E.
 Kenyon-Slaney, Col. William
 Keswick, William
 Kimber, Henry
 Knowles, Lees
 Lawrence, Sir E. Durning- (Corn)
 Lawson, John Grant (Yorks.)
 Lawson, Sir W. (Cumberland)
 Lea, Sir T. (Londonderry)
 Lecky, Rt. Hon. Wm. Edw. H.
 Leigh-Bennett, Henry Currie
 Leighton, Stanley
 Llewelyn, Sir Dillwyn (Swans'a)
 Lockwood, Lt.-Col. A. R.
 Loder, Gerald Walter Erskine
 Long, Rt. Hon. W. (Liverpool)
 Lopes, Henry Yarde Buller
 Lorne, Marquess of
 Lowe, Francis William
 Lowles, John
 Macartney, W. G. Ellison
 Macdonna, John Cumming
 Maclure, Sir John William
 M'Calmont, Col. J. (Antrim, E.)
 M'iver, Sir L. (Edinburgh, W.)
 Malcolm, Ian
 Manners, Lord Ed. Wm. J.
 Martin, Richard Biddulph
 Maasey-Mainwaring, Hon. W. F.

Mendl, Sigismund Ferdinand
 Milbank, Sir Powlett C. John
 Mildmay, Francis Bingham
 Milner, Sir Frederick George
 Milward, Colonel Victor
 Monckton, Edward Philip
 Monk, Charles James
 Moon, Edward Robert Pacy
 Moore, William (Antrim, N.)
 More, Robt. Jasper (Shropshire)
 Morrell, George Herbert
 Morton, A. H. A. (Deptford)
 Moss, Samuel
 Moulton, John Fletcher
 Murray, Rt. Hn. A. H. G. (Bute)
 Murray, Charles J. (Coventry)
 Murray, Col. Wyndham (Bath)
 Nicholson, William Graham
 Nicol, Donald Ninian
 Nussey, Thomas Willans
 O'Neill, Hon. Robert Torrena.
 Orr-Ewing, Charles Lindsay
 Pearson, Sir Weetman D.
 Pease, Joseph A. (Northumb.)
 Penn, John
 Phillpotts, Captain Arthur
 Pilkington, R. (Lancs. Newt'n)
 Plact-Higgins, Frederick
 Plunkett, Rt. Hn. Horace Curzon
 Pollock, Harry Frederick
 Pretymann, Ernest George
 Pryce-Jones, Lt.-Col. Edward
 Purvis, Robert
 Quilter, Sir Cuthbert
 Rankin, Sir James
 Rentoul, James Alexander
 Richardson, Sir Thos. (Hartlep't)
 Ridley, Rt. Hon. Sir Matthew W.
 Ritchie, Rt. Hon. Chas. Thomson
 Roberts, John Bryn (Eifion)
 Roberts, John H. (Denbighs)
 Robertson, Herbert (Hackney)
 Robinson, Brooke
 Robson, William Snowdon
 Round, James
 Roys, Clement Molyneux
 Russell, Gen. F. S. (Cheltenham)
 Russell, T. W. (Tyrone)
 Ryder, John Herbert Dudley
 Samuel, Harry S. (Limehouse)
 Sandys, Lieut.-Col. Thos. Myles
 Sanderson, Rt. Hon. Col. Ed. J.
 Scoble, Sir Andrew Richard
 Sharpe, William Edward T.
 Shaw-Stewart, M. H. (Renfrew)
 Sidebotham, J. W. (Cheshire)
 Sinclair, Louis (Romford)
 Smith, Abel H. (Christchurch)
 Smith, James Parker (Lanarks.)
 Smith, Hon. W. F. D. (Strand)
 Stanley, Edward Jas. (Somerset)
 Stewart, Sir Mark J. M. Taggart
 Stirling-Maxwell, Sir John M.
 Strauss, Arthur
 Strutt, Hon. Charles Hedley
 Sturt, Hon. H. Napier
 Talbot, Rt. Hn. J. G. (Ox. Univ.)
 Tennant, Harold John
 Thomas, D. A. (Merthyr)
 Thornton, Percy M.

Tollemache, Henry James
Ure, Alexander
Verney, Hon. Richard G.
Vincent, Sir Edgar (Exeter)
Ward, Hon. R. A. (Crews)
Warner, Thomas C. T.
Webster, Sir Richard E.
Welby, Lieut.-Col. A. C. E.

Whiteley, H. (Ashton-under-L)
Williams, Colonel R. (Dorset)
Williams, J. Powell (Birm.)
Willoughby de Eresby, Lord
Willox, Sir John A.
Wilson, John (Falkirk)
Wodehouse, Rt.Hn. E.R. (Bath)
Wylie, Alexander

Wyvill, Marmaduke D'Arcy
Young, Commander (Berks, E.)
Younger, William

TELLERS FOR THE AYES—
Sir William Walrond and
Mr. Anstruther.

NOES.

Austin, M. (Limerick, W.)
Bolton, Thomas Dolling
Clark, Dr. G. B. (Caithness-sh.)
Commings, Andrew
Condon, Thomas Joseph
Crilly, Daniel
Daly, James
Donelan, Captain A.
Doogan, P. C.
Engledew, Charles John
Esmonde, Sir Thomas
Flavin, Michael Joseph
Flynn, James Christopher
Fox, Dr. Joseph Francis

Hammond, John (Carlow)
Hayden, John Patrick
Healy, Maurice (Cork)
Holland, William Henry
Jordan, Jeremiah
Kilbride, Denis
Macaleese, Daniel
MacDonnell, Dr. M. A. (Qn's C)
MacNeill, J. Gordon Swift
McCartan, Michael
McGhee, Richard
McLeod, John
Mandeville, J. Francis
Murnaghan, George

O'Connor, T. P. (Liverpool)
O'Malley, William
Parnell, John Howard
Pinkerton, John
Power, Patrick Joseph
Redmond, J. E. (Waterford)
Redmond, William (Clare)
Sullivan, Donal (Westmeath)
Sullivan, T. D. (Donegal, W.)
Tully, Jasper
Young, Samuel (Davan, East)
TELLERS FOR THE NOES—
Mr. J. P. Farrell and Mr.
Crean.

Resolved, "That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty as followeth:—

Most Gracious Sovereign,

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."

To be presented by Privy Councillors and such Members as are of Her Majesty's Household.

SUPPLY.

Resolved, That this House will, upon Monday next, resolve itself into a Committee to consider of the Supply to be granted to Her Majesty.

Ordered, That the several Estimates presented to this House during the present session be referred to the Committee of Supply.—(Mr. Hanbury.)

WAYS AND MEANS.

Resolved, That this House will, upon Monday next, resolve itself into a Committee to consider of the Ways and Means for raising the Supply to be granted to Her Majesty.—(Mr. Hanbury.)

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—NEWS FROM THE FRONT.

On the Motion for Adjournment,

MR. CALDWELL (Lanarkshire, Mid) asked whether there was any information from the seat of war.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: Our information points to the fact that General Buller is not pressing his advance from the position occupied on Wednesday. We have not thought it right to press him for detailed information about the operations which are in progress; nor, if he gives us such information, do we think it right to make it public until the operations are completed.

*MR. TENNANT (Berwickshire): May I ask whether it is true that General Macdonald has been ordered back?

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: We have no information upon the point.

Adjourned at ten minutes before One of the clock till Monday next.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Monday, 12th February, 1900.

VISCOUNT CLIFDEN.

Report made from the Lord Chancellor that the right of Thomas Charles Agar Robartes, Viscount Clifden, to vote at the elections of Representative Peers for Ireland has been established to the satisfaction of the Lord Chancellor; read, and ordered to lie on the Table.

SAT FIRST.

The Lord Wynford sat first in Parliament after the death of his brother.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

The LORD CHANCELLOR acquainted the House that the Clerk of the Parliaments had laid upon the Table the Certificates from the Examiners that the Standing Orders applicable to the following Bills have been complied with—

Imschenetzky's Uralite Patent.
Maryport Harbour.
National Markets, Stores, and Workshops.
Rochdale Corporation.
Southport and Lytham Tramroad.
Walsall Corporation.

And the Certificates that the Standing Orders applicable to the following Bills have not been complied with—

Blackpool, St. Annes, and Lytham Tramways.
South-Eastern Metropolitan Tramways.
Aberdeen Corporation Tramways.

The same were ordered to lie on the Table.

ASTON MANOR TRAMWAYS BILL [H.L.]
BIRMINGHAM CORPORATION (STOCK) BILL [H.L.]
BIRMINGHAM (KING EDWARD THE SIXTH) SCHOOLS BILL [H.L.]
BIRMINGHAM UNIVERSITY BILL [H.L.]
BOURNEMOUTH CORPORATION BILL [H.L.]

Presented, and read 1^a.

VOL. LXXVIII. [FOURTH SERIES.]

BURNLEY CORPORATION BILL [H.L.]

BURY AND DISTRICT WATER (TRANSFER) BILL [H.L.]

CARDIFF CORPORATION BILL [H.L.]

CHURCH'S PATENT BILL [H.L.]

CLYDE NAVIGATION BILL [H.L.]

COWES PIER BILL [H.L.]

DUNDEE HARBOUR BILL [H.L.]

EAST SHROPSHIRE WATER BILL [H.L.]

EAST STIRLINGSHIRE WATER BILL [H.L.]

EDINBURGH CORPORATION BILL [H.L.]

EDINBURGH DISTRICT LUNACY BOARD BILL [H.L.]

EXMOUTH URBAN DISTRICT WATER BILL [H.L.]

FALKIRK AND DISTRICT WATER BILL [H.L.]

FALKIRK CORPORATION BILL [H.L.]

GLASGOW BUILDING REGULATIONS BILL [H.L.]

HEMEL HEMPSTEAD CORPORATION (WATER) BILL [H.L.]

HIGHAM FERRERS WATER BILL [H.L.]

IPSWICH CORPORATION TRAMWAYS BILL [H.L.]

KINGSTON-UPON-THAMES CORPORATION BILL [H.L.]

LANCASHIRE INEBRIATES ACTS BOARD BILL [H.L.]

LINCOLN CORPORATION (TRAMWAYS) BILL [H.L.]

MANCHESTER CORPORATION TRAMWAYS BILL [H.L.]

MARGATE CORPORATION BILL [H.L.]

MENSTONE WATER (TRANSFER) BILL [H.L.]

MERSEY DOCKS AND HARBOUR BOARD BILL [H.L.]

MORLEY CORPORATION BILL [H.L.]

Presented, and read 1^a.

2 X

MOTHERWELL AND BELLSHILL RAIL-
WAY BILL [H.L.].

MOTHERWELL WATER BILL [H.L.].

MOUNTAIN ASH WATER BILL [H.L.].

NEATH HARBOUR BILL [H.L.].

NEWPORT CORPORATION BILL [H.L.].

NEWTOWN AND LLANLLWCHAIARN
URBAN DISTRICT GAS BILL [H.L.].

OTLEY URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL
WATER BILL [H.L.].

PAIGNTON URBAN DISTRICT WATER
BILL [H.L.].

PRESTON CORPORATION BILL [H.L.].

RAMSGATE CORPORATION IMPROVE-MENTS BILL [H.L.].

RAWMARSH URBAN DISTRICT COUN-CIL (TRAMWAYS) BILL [H.L.].

ROTHERHAM CORPORATION BILL
[H.L.].

ROTHERHITHE AND RATCLIFF
TUNNEL BILL [H.L.].

SALFORD CORPORATION BILL [H.L.].

SHEFFIELD CORPORATION BILL [H.L.].

SOUTHAMPTON HARBOUR BILL [H.L.].

SOUTH ESSEX WATER BOARD BILL
[H.L.].

SOUTH SHIELDS CORPORATION BILL
[H.L.].

SUNDERLAND CORPORATION BILL
[H.L.].

WITHINGTON URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL BILL [H.L.].

Presented, and read 1^a.

ARMY AND NAVY INVESTMENT
TRUST BILL [H.L.].

BARRY RAILWAY (STEAM VESSELS)
BILL [H.L.].

BEXHILL AND ROTHERFIELD RAIL-
WAY BILL [H.L.].

BREWERY AND COMMERCIAL IN-VESTMENT TRUST, LIMITED, BILL
[H.L.].

CLEETHORPES GAS BILL [H.L.].

COMMERCIAL UNION ASSURANCE COMPANY BILL [H.L.].

Presented; read 1^a; and referred to the Examiners.

CORK, BANDON, AND SOUTH COAST
RAILWAY BILL [H.L.].

CRYSTAL PALACE COMPANY BILL
[H.L.].

DONEGAL RAILWAY BILL [H.L.].

DORKING WATER BILL [H.L.].

DUBLIN, WICKLOW, AND WEXFORD
RAILWAY BILL [H.L.].

EXMOUTH AND DISTRICT WATER
BILL [H.L.].

FISHGUARD AND ROSSLARE RAIL-WAYS AND HARBOURS BILL [H.L.].

FISHGUARD WATER AND GAS BILL
[H.L.].

GLASGOW AND SOUTH WESTERN
RAILWAY BILL [H.L.].

GOVERNMENT STOCK AND OTHER SECURITIES INVESTMENT COMPANY
BILL [H.L.].

GREAT BERKHAMPSTEAD WATER
BILL [H.L.].

GREAT CENTRAL RAILWAY BILL [H.L.]

GREAT SOUTHERN AND WESTERN AND WATERFORD AND CENTRAL IRELAND RAILWAY COMPANIES
AMALGAMATION BILL [H.L.].

GREAT SOUTHERN AND WESTERN
AND WATERFORD, LIMERICK, AND WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANIES
AMALGAMATION BILL [H.L.].

GREAT SOUTHERN AND WESTERN
RAILWAY BILL [H.L.].

GUN BARREL PROOF ACT, 1868, AMEND-MENT BILL [H.L.].

KINGSTON-UPON-THAMES GAS BILL
[H.L.].

LIVERPOOL OVERHEAD RAILWAY
BILL [H.L.].

LONDON, BRIGHTON, AND SOUTH COAST RAILWAY BILL [H.L.].

LONDON HYDRAULIC POWER COM-PANY BILL [H.L.].

LONDON SEA WATER SUPPLY BILL
[H.L.].

MANCHESTER SHIP CANAL BILL
[H.L.].

MARGATE PIER AND HARBOUR BILL
[H.L.].

Presented; read 1^a; and referred to the Examiners.

MERSEY RAILWAY BILL [H.L.].

MIDLAND GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY OF IRELAND BILL [H.L.].

MUIRKIRK, MAUCHLINE, AND DALLMELLINGTON RAILWAYS (ABANDONMENT) BILL [H.L.].

NEWPORT (MONMOUTHSHIRE) GAS BILL [H.L.].

NEW RUSSIA COMPANY BILL [H.L.].

NORTH-BRITISH RAILWAY BILL [H.L.].

NORTH-EASTERN RAILWAY BILL [H.L.].

NORTH-EASTERN RAILWAY (STEAM VESSELS) BILL [H.L.].

RHYMNEY IRON COMPANY BILL [H.L.].

RHYMNEY RAILWAY BILL [H.L.].

SCOTTISH AMERICAN INVESTMENT COMPANY, LIMITED, BILL [H.L.].

SCOTTISH WIDOWS' FUND AND LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY BILL [H.L.].

SHEFFIELD DISTRICT RAILWAY BILL [H.L.].

SOUTH-EASTERN AND LONDON, CHATHAM, AND DOVER RAILWAYS BILL [H.L.].

SOUTH-EASTERN RAILWAY BILL [H.L.].

SOUTH STAFFORDSHIRE TRAMWAYS BILL [H.L.].

TAFF VALE RAILWAY BILL [H.L.].

UNIVERSAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY BILL [H.L.].

WESTGATE AND BIRCHINGTON WATER BILL [H.L.].

WIRRAL RAILWAY BILL [H.L.].

Presented; read 1^a; and referred to the Examiners.

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

AGED DESERVING POOR.

Report of the Departmental Committee on the financial aspects of the proposals made by the Select Committee of the House of Commons of 1899; with appendices.

ROYAL UNIVERSITY OF IRELAND.

Annual Report for the year 1899.

Presented (by command), and ordered to lie on the Table.

CHELSEA HOSPITAL.

Account of the receipts and expenditure of the Commissioners of Chelsea Hospital in respect of Army Prize and Legacy Funds, etc., for the year ended 31st March, 1899; together with the report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon; laid before the House (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table.

PETITION.

VACCINATION ACTS.

Petition for amendment of; of the Guardians of the Poor of the Northwich Union; read, and ordered to lie on the Table.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—COMMANDS AT THE FRONT.

LORD BATEMAN: My Lords, before the noble Marquess the Secretary of State for War makes his statement this evening as to the military measures Her Majesty's Government propose to take, I am anxious to put a question to him of which I have given him private notice. The question is as follows: Whether General Sir Frederick Carrington is destined for a command in South Africa, and whether Lord Methuen is still in command of Her Majesty's forces on the Modder River. I do not propose to offer any comment with regard to my question, but if the noble Marquess can see his way to make any statement or to give us any information on the subject I am sure it will be received and appreciated very much by this House and in the country, and will tend to relieve a considerable amount of doubt and anxiety.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR (The Marquess of LANSDOWNE): My Lords, in answer to the first question of the noble Lord I have to say that Sir F. Carrington has been designated for a command in South Africa. In answer to the second question I have to say that Lord Roberts is now at Modder River, and is in command of the whole of Her Majesty's forces at that place.

LAND CHARGES BILL [H.L.]

[SECOND READING.]

Order of the Day for the Second Reading read.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR (The Earl of HALSBURY): This Bill has already passed your Lordships' House. It was to have become law last session, but was unable to get through owing to want of time.

Bill read 2^a, and committed to a Committee of the whole House.

LUNACY BILL [H.L.]

[SECOND READING.]

Order of the Day for the Second Reading read.

THE EARL OF HALSBURY: My Lords, this Bill has passed your Lordships' House on two previous occasions; but although on the last occasion I formally moved the Second Reading, the Bill having been already confirmed by your Lordships, I cannot now move it without saying that some of the questions involved in it are of serious public importance. This is one of those Bills which for want of time did not pass last session, but which are, nevertheless, urgently needed. One of its most important provisions relates to what are called Urgency Orders, which were instituted by the Act of 1890. To the provision that no person should be deprived of his liberty without some judicial investigation, an exception was made in cases where circumstances rendered a judicial investigation practically impossible, as in the case, for instance, of a raving lunatic, who could not be brought before a magistrate. It was enacted that under such circumstances an Urgency Order might be issued to meet the case. I am extremely sorry to say that the facilities given by this form of procedure have been abused, and medical men have been found who have certified that such an order ought to be given when, in my opinion, there has been no ground whatever for it. In the interest of the liberty of the subject, amendment of the law is desirable. Among other provisions, the Bill now before your Lordships provides that any medical man who certifies the necessity of an Urgency Order shall give the circumstances under which, and fully and specifically state the reasons why, an Urgency Order is said to be necessary. I regard that as a very important reform in the administration of the lunacy law, and I trust that in the present session of Parliament time will be found to pass this Bill. I have thought fit, although this Bill has passed your Lordships' House on two previous occasions, to make this statement, because, in my opinion, the Bill is not a mere amending measure but one of great public importance.

Read 2^a, and committed to a Committee of the whole House.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—CONTEMPLATED MILITARY MEASURES.

THE EARL OF DUNRAVEN: My Lords, I beg to ask my noble friend the Secretary of State for War whether he is now in a position to make a statement as to the military measures Her Majesty's Government propose to take.

*THE MARQUESS OF LANSDOWNE: My Lords, I have to thank your Lordships for the consideration you have shown me in allowing me to postpone until this evening what I have to say upon this most important subject. I gather from the observations which have been made in this House upon previous occasions that the points with regard to which your Lordships desire to be informed are these—first, to what extent have we, in sending out of this country large military forces for service in South Africa, denuded the United Kingdom of its proper garrison; next, what steps are we taking, or have we taken, to secure the safety of these islands during the absence of these large forces; and, thirdly, I think your Lordships would like to know what forces are, or will be, at our disposal for the prosecution of those military operations which we all, I am sure, desire to see carried to a decisive and to a satisfactory conclusion. I think I may, perhaps, first state to the House what troops are actually in or under orders for South Africa. In the two colonies before the war broke out we had a force of about 23,000 men. To those we intended to add, for the purpose of offensive operations against the South African Republics, a field army of, in round figures, 50,000 men—that is, an army corps, a cavalry division, and troops for the lines of communication. We had assumed that that force would have to be concentrated in the Cape Colony and prepared for an advance by a date which I may state as the 23rd of the month of December. We were led to take that date for this reason—that it was the earliest date by which we could look forward to concentrate in the Cape Colony the whole of the supplies and the whole of the land transport necessary for the advance of a considerable army. The 50,000 men did, in point of fact, arrive in South Africa before the appointed date, and as to the transport animals I may say that the whole of the 15,000 mules which were required for the conveyance of the troops were collected in the Cape Colony or in Natal by the middle of the month of December. But, my Lords, before the time came at which we had looked forward to the commencement of the advance important events happened in South Africa. At the beginning of the month of November we became aware that for the original plan of a central operation by way of the Orange Free State there had been substituted other operations for the relief of Ladysmith upon the eastern and of Kimberley upon the western side of the theatre of operations, and there were also subsidiary operations in the Cape Colony. General Clery and Lord Methuen commenced their respective advances on the 18th of the month of November, and before the end of the month Lord Methuen had fought three pitched battles on the line of the railway leading towards Kimberley, followed by a fourth battle in the early days of the month of December. I mention this change in the plan of campaign not with any idea of suggesting that any other dispositions were preferable, but because I wish to impress upon the House how greatly the magnitude and the difficulty of the task was increased by this fundamental alteration. I think it is obvious that, even if all had gone well with the two relieving forces, those operations could not possibly have been carried on by a force of the dimensions which was considered sufficient for the one great central operation, and, in fact, we all know that things did not go well, and that both the relieving forces encountered checks and obstacles which led to the prolongation of the two relief operations, and retarded for a very long time the commencement of the central advance which had always been regarded as the pivot of the whole campaign. These events led us to recognise at an early stage the necessity of adding largely to the forces in South Africa. All through the autumn and winter a steady stream of troops was poured into the two colonies. During October 28,000 men embarked from this country, during November 26,000, December 24,000, and January 25,000. And, in addition to the troops now in South Africa, there are under orders or on their way at this moment 50,000 further troops. Three divisions had left this country by the middle of November, the fourth division was in South Africa, the fifth division left in the last week of November, the sixth division in the latter part of December, and the seventh division in the beginning of January. These troops were accompanied by those colonial contingents of whose admirable behaviour we have, I am sure, all heard with the liveliest satisfaction. They were followed by a certain number of Militia battalions. There were local forces raised upon the spot in both colonies. At a later stage we sent out that force of Imperial Yeomanry which had been raised with the assistance of the officers of the old Yeomanry—a force the whole 8,000 of which has, I am glad to say, now been raised. We are now sending out more Militia battalions up to a total of thirty battalions altogether, and I rejoice to hear that the colonial contingents are still following in considerable numbers. Taking all these troops together, we shall have before long in South Africa, approximately speaking, no less than 200,000 men, of whom three-fourths, roughly speaking, have been sent out from this country. I am, of course, not suggesting that the whole of this great force is one of which Lord Roberts can dispose or which he could at any moment place in the fighting line. We all know what large deductions have to be made from the grand total of a military force in order to arrive at the actual number of sabres and bayonets whom the general in command can make use of in the field, but I mention these large withdrawals of troops from this country because I think it is right the House should know the extent of the drain to which our resources at home have been subjected by these operations. In these circumstances I do not think I shall be contradicted when I say that our first duty seemed to us to be to make arrangements for supplying what I might describe as the wear and tear of the South African army, and up to the present time I think we have done that not unsuccessfully; 5,600 men were sent out as drafts in the month of December, and 2,700 in January. It may, perhaps, reassure your Lordships to hear that we anticipate no great difficulty in supplying the necessary drafts of what is probably as important as men—I mean of horses. We have found many new sources of supply, and from these sources we are confident of being able to draw a number of horses sufficient to supply the wants of the Army, even making allowance for the terrible inroads of horse sickness which we know is rife in that part of the world. We must, of course, anticipate very large further demands, and we have therefore to take stock of the resources from which those demands can be met. If I may run briefly through what I may describe as our military assets, I may state that of regular troops serving with the colours—the remaining battalions of infantry, the men at the dépôts, the soldiers who are left behind by the Line battalions as being of not sufficient age or service to go out, the remaining regiments of cavalry, the remaining horse and field artillery—of these we have 98,000 men at home altogether. In addition we have about 12,000 men of the Reserves, of whom we have not yet made use. That gives us in all 110,000 regular soldiers at home at this moment. It may perhaps interest the House to know that that number is almost exactly the same as the number which was serving with the colours this time last year. Then we have the Yeomanry, which, deducting the men whom it has contributed to the Imperial Yeomanry, numbers 7,000. We have of Militia of all arms, deducting those Militia battalions which have gone or are going to South Africa, 77,000 men. And we have Volunteers, deducting the companies which the Volunteers have contributed to the Line battalions serving at the front, 215,000. That gives a grand total of 409,000 armed men serving in this country at the present time. I think some of the statements which we sometimes see made with regard to the alleged absolute denudation of this country scarcely, perhaps, take sufficiently into account the large number of men which, in spite of all these demands, are still left to us in the British Islands. My Lords, it is, of course, in a case of this kind not sufficient merely to count heads or to assume that every soldier in the country is available for military purposes at the moment. Our business is to organise and equip what we have got, and to distribute those forces in the most advantageous manner. Now, what are the requirements from these resources which it is our business to meet? I think those requirements are threefold. We have, in the first place, to provide an army for home defence, by which I mean not merely troops stationed at garrisons and defensive positions, but a mobile army, which we would be able to transfer rapidly to any point which may at any moment be threatened. In the next place, we require the necessary garrisons for our forts and for the positions which under our mobilisation schemes have to be defended in case of attack. And, in the third place, we have to be prepared with sufficient reinforcements and with the means of replacing any troops which may be taken for the purpose of these reinforcements from within the limits of the mobile army. Now, my Lords, the first question which arises is—What should be the size of that mobile army? The matter was gone into twelve years ago, and it was then laid down very clearly in the Minute written by the then Secretary of State for War, Mr. Edward Stanhope, that after provision had been made for the defence of India and the colonies it was desirable that we should have a force of three army corps for home defence, two of these army corps being composed of Regulars, and the third partly of Regulars and partly of auxiliary troops, and that, subject to these considerations, two army corps should be available for service abroad. I have no doubt that what was then contemplated was that we should, after establishing our superiority at sea, be able to send in the later stages of a war a moderate-sized army for offensive purposes beyond the limits of these islands. But, my Lords, circumstances have changed a good deal since Mr. Stanhope's Minute was written. I cannot help thinking that there is something ironical in the present situation, in which we, the greatest maritime Power in the world, find ourselves at war with two little States which do not own a boat's crew between them, and which are consequently invulnerable by our powerful Navy. We are in the position of a strong man fighting with his right arm tied behind his back; but I hope, again, when we talk of the denudation of these islands, that we shall not forget that that right arm is intact, and unimpaired, and stronger than it has ever been in the history of the Empire. This exceptional combination of circumstances has thrown upon the Army exertions of the most arduous kind. We find ourselves in this position. We have to send out, not two army corps at the end of a war in order to drive home a blow struck in the first instance by the fleet, but we have to send out at the very beginning of the war nearly three army corps, with no assistance from the Navy except that assistance—and I gladly acknowledge its value—which the Naval Brigades and Naval Artillery have been enabled to give to us on shore. Our first duty, I think, is to see that we are provided with a field army of the dimensions laid down in 1888—that is, a field army numbering about 130,000 men. That is the more necessary because a field army must be, as it were, the reservoir upon which we draw should it be necessary to send further reinforcements out of this country. In our opinion that army corps should have at least what I may describe as a backbone of Regular troops; and as I am mentioning Regular troops, I may state to the House that it is our intention to add to the permanent strength of the Army twelve new Line battalions of infantry in addition to the three Line battalions which we are now raising under an augmentation of the Army decided on two years ago. That permanent increase of the Army is necessitated by the growing demands of our Imperial and colonial garrisons. We propose to add these new battalions as third and fourth battalions of existing line regiments. I have before stated in this House the reasons for which it seemed to me that the four-battalion organisation had very great conveniences, and I will not repeat them now. In order to form these battalions we shall draw upon the surplus men of the first and second battalions—the men whom the first and second battalions have left behind—upon the reservists of the regiment, upon ex-soldiers desiring to re-enter the Army and serve on for pension, and, lastly, upon ordinary recruits. I may say, perhaps, with regard to ordinary recruits, that we have every reason to be satisfied with the manner in which recruiting has progressed during the last few months. It is perfectly clear that a war does not tend to make the Army unpopular. I may, perhaps, tell your Lordships that in October we took 4,395 recruits, in November 5,226, in December 3,798, and in January about 6,500 recruits, or a total of about 20,000 recruits in four months—that is, 4,000 more men than in the corresponding four months of last year, which was supposed to be an extremely good recruiting year. I pass from infantry to artillery, and more particularly field artillery. Her Majesty's Government have, ever since they came into power, recognised the very great importance of that branch of the Army. We have already added no less than sixteen batteries to the Field Artillery, but we are convinced that a much larger increase is necessary. The part played by the artillery in the present war shows, I think, how necessary it is that we should be amply provided in this respect. There is also this consideration—that, having to depend for our home Army to a considerable extent, at all events, upon auxiliary forces whose training is necessarily not as perfect as that of the Regular Army, we feel it is absolutely necessary that those auxiliary forces should be, if I may use a colloquial and customary expression, stiffened by the presence of a large force of Regular field artillery. After sending out the artillery of two army corps to South Africa we have the field artillery of one army corps left. Our proposal is to raise horse and field artillery for two more army corps—that is altogether thirty-six batteries of field artillery and seven batteries of horse artillery, or forty-three batteries altogether. When this increase has been effected we shall at any time be able to send our two army corps out of the country with a full complement of artillery, and at the same time to have at home the full horse and field artillery for three army corps. These new batteries will be formed partly by a small nucleus taken from existing batteries, partly from artillerymen left behind by out-going batteries, partly from artillery reservists, partly from ex-artillerymen desiring to rejoin the Service. We also propose that a certain number of Volunteer artillerymen should be allowed to join the batteries upon a short one year's term of engagement. I may say that the guns for these new batteries have been ordered, and that it is our intention to add to the usual armament of 15-pounder guns a certain number of batteries of howitzers. It is intended that in time of peace these batteries should be retained as cadres only, by which I mean that the materiel will be always there, but the number of men would in time of emergency have to be specially expanded. I have only one word to say with regard to the cavalry. We require for the force I have indicated fifteen regiments of cavalry. There are in the country eight regiments, and we propose to form four out of the reserve squadrons left by regiments that have gone abroad, and that the remainder of the cavalry force should be furnished by a brigade of Yeomanry specially trained for this purpose. We also propose an increase in the Royal Engineers, and a considerable increase in that most valuable branch of the service, the Army Service Corps, the numbers of which are certainly insufficient at present. I pass from the Regular forces to the Auxiliary forces. I think that one of the lessons of this war has been to show us what a great and valuable reserve power we possess in our Auxiliary forces. We have already drawn largely on the Militia, and I hear from my military advisers nothing but the warmest commendation both as to the manner in which that call has been responded to and as to the excellence of the Militia battalions themselves. We must, I think, insist upon a nucleus of Regular troops for our home Army, but for the bulk of it we must depend on the Auxiliary forces. I am sometimes told that these forces have been too little taken into account in the past. All I can say is that there is not at this moment a battalion of Militia or Volunteers which has not got a place assigned to it in the defensive system of the country. Some of them are told off for garrisons, some to the defence of the capital, some to columns intended for use at particularly vulnerable points; and nothing is further from the thoughts of the military authorities than to assign to them an unimportant or inglorious part in the duty of defending this country. If we are to depend largely on the Auxiliary forces it seems to me that we cannot take too great pains, on the one hand to increase their numbers, and on the other hand to add to their efficiency. I will take the Militia first. A noble Earl below the gangway in the debate on the Address expressed his conviction that the time had come for embodying the whole of the Militia. We do not differ from him in principle. We have already embodied seventy-three battalions, and we shall embody the remainder as soon as climatic conditions render it possible to put them under canvas. At this moment our barracks are full, and there are objections, which, I must say, seem to me to have some force, to a large use of billeting for this purpose. In the spring we propose to form large camps at which the whole of the Militia will undergo a course of training. We shall pay particular attention to musketry, and we intend that the battalions shall be provided, at the public expense, of course, with the necessary transport. I have of late had my attention a good deal directed to the great variety in the payments which are made to different classes of militiamen and to the corresponding variety in the liabilities under which they serve. We have the ordinary militiaman receiving a bounty of £1, for which he is liable to serve at home; the Militia reservist, who receives another bounty, and is liable to serve out of the United Kingdom with the Line battalion of his own territorial regiment; and you have the special service militiaman created under the Act of 1898, who also receives a bounty of £1 and is liable to be called out for service with any battalion or regiment. It strikes me, in the first place, that these bounties are not conceived on a very generous scale; and, in the next place, the conditions of service are needlessly complicated and puzzling. This matter is not one which can be dealt with in a hurry; and I only mention it because I should like to convey to the House that we have this matter under our consideration, and that we shall endeavour to deal with it successfully. I hope in particular that we may find it possible to do something to alter the present position of the Militia Reserve, which, though, perhaps, not unpopular with the men serving in it, is, I know, extremely unpopular with Militia officers. As immediate steps, we intend to give to the Militia, when out for training, that messing allowance which is now given to the Line, but which the Militia have not yet been allowed to receive. We also propose to alter the rule under which a militiaman receives a bounty of forty-two days pay, whatever be the length of the period for which he is embodied. It seems to us clear that the bounty should vary according to the tax on the men's time. Then I hope to obtain an increase in the bounty paid to a militiaman when he re-engages, and, in addition to that, I think we must offer inducements to encourage ex-militiamen to rejoin the force, provided, of course, that they have the proper physical qualification. The Militia is now 30,000 below its establishment. We have every hope that, by making the conditions of service more attractive, we shall be able to fill up that void. With regard to the Yeomanry, we shall encourage them to enrol up to their full establishment, or beyond it, if the men are forthcoming. We propose that they shall have this year a month's training under canvas; that they shall be provided with transport; and that the contingent allowance should be increased. As to the future of the force, I think it will occur to many people that the role played by mounted infantry, and the manner in which the Imperial Yeomanry, which, as your Lordships know, is a force of mounted infantry, has been developed as an offshoot from the old Yeomanry, suggests that there may be room for improvement in the organisation of the Yeomanry force. But that is a matter which requires delicate handling; and I very gladly assure those noble lords in this House who are connected with the Yeomanry that we shall deal with it in a cautious and tactful spirit, and with every desire to carry the force with us and to respect its time-honoured traditions. I come now to the Volunteers. They have an establishment of 265,000 men, and their present strength is 221,000 or 43,000 below the establishment. I stated to the House the other evening that we intended to encourage all Volunteer battalions to recruit up to a strength of 1,000, and that, where still more men were forthcoming, we should encourage the formation of second battalions, perhaps of a more moderate size. Then we find that there is, in some Volunteer forces, a great desire that a part of the battalion should be equipped and organised as mounted infantry. To that very laudable wish we shall certainly offer no obstacle. We shall encourage the movement, and shall be prepared to pay special rates of capitulation wherever a Volunteer battalion is able to provide a mounted company. During the present summer there will be camps at which the Volunteers will undergo special training, and we have every hope that the whole force may be trained at such camps between the months of May and August. Musketry, of course, in the case of the Volunteers, deserves special attention, and connected with this question is that question of ranges about which I have been more than once questioned in this House. Your Lordships are aware of the immense difficulties with which that question is surrounded; but I am not without hopes that we may be able to surmount them. I think it possible that, with adequate precautions, some of the numerous ranges which have lately been condemned as unsafe for use with the present rifle might be made sufficiently safe, at any rate, at the shorter ranges; and I hope that we shall be able to carry further an arrangement already in force under which the Government pays a subvention to corps whose means are insufficient to enable them to provide themselves at their own expense with suitable range accommodation. Then there is the Volunteer artillery. There are altogether ninety-eight batteries of Volunteer artillery. Of these some are armed with guns of position and others with field-guns—16-pounders. The whole of these guns are not of a modern type—I am afraid most of them deserve the description obsolete. It is our intention to re-arm the Volunteer artillery with modern guns. To those now using guns of position, we propose to give those semi-mobile 4·7 in. guns, which have done such excellent service in South Africa, and which are apparently regarded as the most efficient guns of that description which we can find. In the hands of the rest we shall put modern field-guns. The Volunteer artillery will, like the rest of the Volunteers, be given an opportunity of undergoing a special training during the present summer. Before I leave this subject, I may tell the noble Lord on the cross benches (the Earl of Wemyss) that we are quite prepared to encourage a proposal in which I know he takes a keen personal interest—the proposal that Volunteers who have served for a certain number of years in a Volunteer corps should be allowed to enrol themselves as Volunteer reservists, and be given a grant of ammunition and facilities for using ranges. There is only one reservation which I must make as to that. We must be careful, in giving effect to a scheme of this kind, to do nothing which would interfere with the existing Volunteer battalions. We have done what I think is a reasonable thing under the circumstances. We have issued a circular to Volunteer officers asking them to give us the benefit of their advice as to the conditions under which this proposal might be carried out. One word with regard to the Militia and Volunteer officers. We think that they should be given further facilities for attending courses of instruction, and that this should be done under financial conditions which will absolutely safeguard them against any inroad on their own private means. I may also say that I am in hopes of being able to make an arrangement under which there will be appointed to the Headquarters Staff of the Army an officer or officers having special and practical familiarity with the administration of the auxiliary forces, who will be able to guide and inform us as to their peculiar wants and requirements. I trust that by measures of this kind we shall be able to add considerably to the popularity of the Yeomanry, Militia, and Volunteers; but there is another source from which I think we may fairly look for a temporary accession to the military strength of this country. There are amongst us in civil life a very large number of men who have completed the full time of service with the colours and the Reserve. A great many of these men are still in the prime of life. A soldier who enlists at eighteen and completes his twelve years service with the colours and the Reserve, is only thirty when he becomes a civilian. We are under the impression that there must be somewhere in the neighbourhood of 170,000 men between the ages of twenty-five and forty-five upon whom we might draw for a special force for service in this country at the present moment. We propose to open the door to these men. We propose to ask them to come to us for an engagement of one year, and for home service only. We shall, of course, give them a certain bounty for doing so, and if, as we hope, they come forward in considerable numbers, we shall form special reserve battalions of these men. Of course it is impossible for us to predict the number in which these men may be forthcoming, and the success of the experiment will depend a great deal on the extent to which they are influenced by the great wave of patriotic feeling which is now sweeping over this country. We shall do our best to make their short term of service as attractive and as little onerous to them as possible. They are men who have all learnt their business as soldiers; and in their case, therefore, it will be possible to dispense with those initial stages of the soldier's training which are, I imagine, most irksome to them. We shall commence in the most promising centres; and if, as I hope, we succeed in obtaining a considerable number of men, we shall have in this new reserve force a most valuable body from which to fill up in the home battalions any gaps which may be created by the withdrawal of troops for service in South Africa. It will, of course, occur to your Lordships that for these battalions, and also for the new Line battalions and new batteries of artillery which we intend to raise, we shall want a large number of officers, and I frankly confess to the House that the difficulty of obtaining officers in the proper number and of the proper quality seems to me to be one of the most serious, if not the most serious, with which we have to contend. We expect to draw them partly from the Reserve of Officers, of whom there are, I think, now 1,700, and for the rest we must depend upon promotions in the higher ranks, accompanied, of course, by the admission of a very large number of officers of subaltern rank in the lower. With this object we intend to offer commissions to the Militia and Volunteers, to the Universities, and a small number to the public schools. We also intend to offer commissions to the colonies, from whom we have already received many excellent officers, and I am sure any one who knows, as I know, anything about the Military College at Kingston, Canada, will not doubt that officers taken from that source are worthy to take their place by the side of the very best officers of our Army. My Lords, amongst our other proposals now being carried out is one dealing with the question of the stores and munitions of war of all kinds. As to that, I do not think I need say any more than that we have adopted it for our policy, not only to replace the large inroads which have been made upon our stores of all sorts, but also to build up the Reserves upon a much ampler scale than has hitherto been authorised. We have been struck by the inadequacy of our reserves of many kinds of stores, and we are determined that we shall no longer be open to that reproach. I have omitted to mention one other point, which is that we hope to add to the number of men serving in our Line battalions upon the three years engagement. The number at present of three years men is limited, I think, to 100 men in each battalion. We attach great importance to this variation in the period of service, and for two reasons. In the first place, we believe that in taking men on the three years term we tap a different stratum of recruits, men who will not accept liability for a longer period of service. But that is not all. The three years men contribute much more rapidly to the Reserve than the men who stay longer with the colours, and we all know what an invaluable stand-by the Reserve has been to us during these operations. I think I am right in saying that, whereas 100 three years men contribute about 90 men to the Reserve, 100 men who serve seven years only contribute 25. It is, therefore, quite obvious that as a machine for manufacturing Reservists the three years men are much more valuable than men who serve for a longer term. I have given to your Lordships, as I had promised the noble Earl I would, an outline, and only an outline, of our proposals. I may, perhaps, now be allowed to summarise in half-a-dozen words the more important features of those proposals. They involve a very large increase indeed to our artillery—to the Regular artillery, and an addition to the efficiency of the Volunteer artillery. They also involve a considerable addition to the force of mounted men available in the Army. There is, thirdly, the proposal which I sketched just now for the employment of ex-soldiers in short service battalions to be employed at home for one year only. That seems to me what might be described as an emergency measure—a change of the very greatest value. Fourthly, we have a number of minor steps, all to be taken in the hope that they will increase the popularity and efficiency of the Reserve forces. The details of these latter proposals, I have no doubt, may strike some of your Lordships as trivial, but I do not think they will so strike those who have been at all familiar with the administration of the Militia and Volunteers. We know that it is these small matters that make a great difference to the contentment of the force. My Lords, I may be asked to state before I sit down what addition to the numbers we expect to get as a result of the changes which I have indicated. The question is not an easy one to answer, because it is quite clear that, relying as we do upon offering certain inducements, we can only conjecture the extent to which these inducements will be successful in achieving the desired purpose. But I may say this, that whereas the deficiency in the Auxiliary forces—where they fall below their establishment—is 76,000, we are hopeful that if we cannot make up the whole of that deficiency we shall at least reduce the deficiency by 50,000 men. From the new line battalions, from the new batteries of artillery, from the forces of Engineers and Army Service Corps, from the additional three-years men, and from the additional cavalry, we hope to draw about 30,000 men, and if it should be the case that we succeed in inducing the ex-soldiers of whom I spoke just now to accept our terms in considerable numbers I do not think it is inconceivable that 20,000 might be persuaded to accept service. If these anticipations—and they are mere conjectures—are realised, we may look forward to 100,000 men as being the gross outcome of the proposed changes. Before I sit down may I say one word on two omissions in my statement which I dare say your Lordships have noticed. I said very little about organic changes. Where I have referred to them I have merely indicated the direction in which our thoughts were moving. I do not think that it can be expected of us that in the midst of a war such as that in which we are engaged we should attempt to carry out great organic changes. Your Lordships may also have noticed that throughout these remarks I have not once referred to the words ballot, or conscription, or compulsion.

The Marquess of Lansdowne.

The Marquess of Lansdowne.

I have once or twice had occasion to speak to your Lordships on that subject, and I have always said that it seemed to me that the time might come when we should have to resort to compulsion in some form. I have also said that in my belief it would be profoundly distasteful to the great mass of the people of this country, and that we can only resort to it after all other attempts to obtain the necessary number of men had failed. At this moment, when men are coming forward spontaneously in great numbers, when there is an amount of enthusiasm, a general and widespread desire throughout the Empire to bear a part in its defence, I do not think that this is a time for talking about compulsion in any form. What I venture to think is wanted at the present time is not compulsion but encouragement. That encouragement we propose to give in the most ungrudging spirit, and we believe that we shall be met half-way by the patriotism and resolution of the people of this country.

LORD SALTOUN: My Lords, I do not rise to make a speech, but simply to ask for a word of explanation as to the Artillery. I did not understand whether they were to be armed with the present 15-pounders or with more modern quick-firing guns.

*THE MARQUESS OF LANSDOWNE: They will be armed with 15-pounders of the latest and most modern type.

LORD WANTAGE: My Lords, I merely rise to express regret that the noble Marquess, in the course of his excellent and lucid explanation, did not give the House more information on the subject of the mobility of our Army, which, in my opinion, can only be increased by increasing the number of mounted infantry. I feel satisfied, whatever may be done, that the Yeomanry will never be persuaded to become mounted infantry. I think if the experts who are now serving in South Africa could tell us what is the lesson most learned in our campaign against these two Republics it would be the advantage the Boers had obtained from being able to move their troops rapidly from one place to another. The noble Marquess alluded to this subject very shortly, but I should have been glad if he had been able to tell us something more definite and resolute with regard to it.

The Marquess of Lansdowne.

The statement which has just been made by the Secretary of State for War is to me, and I believe to every Member in the House, most gratifying. The noble Marquess has described the most extraordinary feat which has been achieved in conveying this large force from England to South Africa without, I believe, the loss of a single life, with hardly any loss of stores, and very few losses of transport, cavalry, and other animals. I think the next most interesting thing he told us was that we had still a large force under command at home which might still be used in South Africa. These are facts which give us the greatest confidence. The next point on which I should be glad to hear the noble Marquess's opinion is whether some system—it has been often advocated in this House and in the other House—might be adopted by which all children in schools which are deriving State aid in teaching should be called upon to learn some form of military teaching from men with a perfect knowledge of the matter. That, I believe, would be one of the most useful steps that could be taken. Difficulties have, I understand, arisen between the War Office and the Education Department which have hitherto prevented such a system being adopted. Only yesterday I saw in the newspapers a statement made by the Rev. Dr. Wood, head master of Harrow, in which he says—

“During the past year the school had done well in most branches of school life. He did not know whether the people of this country were within measurable distance of conscription, but at Harrow they were going to impose on Harrovians a form of conscription by compelling all boys over fifteen henceforth to join the rifle corps.”

I do not call that conscription, but I should be very glad to see it extended throughout our educational establishments. The statement of the noble Marquess was very lucid, but it extended over so much ground that it is not possible to discuss it at present in all its bearings. We can consider it at our leisure and see what may be done to amend and improve it.

VISCOUNT GALWAY: My Lords, I think the time to enter into the whole question of the Yeomanry will be when we have the full report of the officers now commanding in South Africa as to the service of this arm in the field. But for the time being we have to make ourselves as efficient as possible. I understood—I am not quite sure whether rightly or wrongly—from the statement of the noble Marquess that he proposed that the Yeomanry should go out this year for a month. He also said that a special grant was going to be given for mounted infantry in connection with the Volunteers. It costs the Yeomanry a large amount of money to go out even for fourteen days training, and under canvas it will cost more. If the Yeomanry are to go out for a month, and at the same time recruit to increase their numbers, I would urge upon my noble friend the absolute necessity that the question of Yeomanry horses should be taken into consideration, and some allowance given for this purpose. If we are to increase our numbers we shall have men who can ride and shoot, but who are not in a position to keep horses for themselves, which is necessary at the present time. I am sure we are all anxious to do our best to promote the efficiency of the Auxiliary forces. We know thoroughly the feeling of those with whom we have worked for many years, and it might, I think, tend to the smoother and better working of the scheme sketched out by the noble Marquess if we were enabled to make suggestions when it comes to details. If we do recruit up to our maximum strength I hope it will not be a case of recruiting in a hurry, and throwing the men over in six months or a year. If that is done it will do more to discourage than to encourage them.

LORD BLYTHSWOOD: My Lords, I rise to say a few words with regard to the Volunteer force, and to make a suggestion. It is evident that if you were to call out any large number of Volunteers you would be interfering with a number of trades and businesses, and it has struck me that what we require are service battalions, officered by Regulars, one of which should be provided by each five battalions of Volunteers. Each company might be quartered at some centre, and should have a month's training each year, for which they should be paid. You would then have a service battalion fed by five battalions which would be able to move to any part of the country, and which would be very valuable indeed if the Volunteers were to be called out. As to the Artillery, I hope that the armaments for the Volunteers, as well as for the Militia, will be of the latest and best pattern, and that the force will be kept efficient in horses and men throughout the year.

THE EARL OF DUNRAVEN: My Lords, it is impossible to adequately discuss the interesting statement which has been made to-night by the noble Marquess without having some little time to consider and digest it, and as I have no doubt the House would like to discuss it later on I shall certainly postpone any remarks I might like to make. I will only ask the noble Marquess whether he will consider the advisability of laying the facts and figures he has mentioned on the Table as a Parliamentary Paper, and having them printed and circulated. I was delighted to hear that the Volunteer artillery are to be armed with modern instead of obsolete guns, but the noble Marquess made no mention whatever of the Militia artillery. I do not know exactly the nature of the weapon with which they are armed at present, but if there is any intention of supplying them with more modern guns I shall be glad to hear it.

LORD MONKSWELL: My Lords, I have no intention, even if I were able, of entering into a detailed criticism of the proposals of the noble Marquess. I will confine myself to their practicability. I think the weak point in the Marquess's observations was contained in a very pregnant sentence towards the close of his speech. After giving certain results that he hoped to obtain in the way of recruiting, he said all this was mere conjecture. Then it seems to me that the whole scheme of the noble Marquess, as regards practical results, rests on mere conjecture. The noble Marquess said that recruiting for the last few months had been eminently satisfactory. Naturally, it would be eminently satisfactory, for the country is now in a very hot fit, and I hope it may remain in a hot fit, at any rate until the war is ended. But it is common experience that a hot fit is succeeded by a cold fit, and then recruiting may not be so satisfactory. So recently as July last the noble Marquess stated in this House that the recruiting returns for the last few months had been comparatively disappointing. The noble Marquess said in July—

“We are endeavouring to increase the Army by 25,000 men, and of these we had, by the beginning of the year, succeeded in obtaining 12,000; 5,000 of these, it is true, we obtained from the Army Reserve. At this moment we are making little or no progress in bringing about that augmentation of the strength of the Army which we had hoped to effect within three years from the time when it was sanctioned by Parliament.”

It does not seem to me that the noble Marquess has a great deal to go upon when he suggests that we shall have anything like an addition of 100,000 men of all arms as a result of the scheme now laid before the House. It appears to me that the noble Marquess has grappled very insufficiently with this great question of recruiting. I dare say some of his proposals will result in an increase in the number of recruits. But I notice, for instance, he does not say one single word with regard to increasing the inducements to enlist in the direction I have often suggested to him in this House and out of it—namely, in the direction of giving a man, while he is with the colours, such an education and training as will make him more efficient, and not less efficient, to earn a livelihood in the open market when he has completed his term of service. This is no doubt a very big question, but I hope it will receive the serious consideration of the noble Marquess. There is another matter. If we have the large increase of the Army which is anticipated, how is it proposed to accommodate the men? The noble Marquess has stated that the barracks are now full, but he has not suggested any large scheme, although I suppose there is one in the air, for building new ones. Again, the noble Marquess said it would be very difficult to get officers for the Volunteers and the Militia. I doubt myself whether he will not find it still more difficult to fill up the ranks in those forces when the war is brought, as I hope it will be at no distant time, to a successful conclusion, and when the laudably hot fit is succeeded, as no doubt it will be, by a colder fit. I have not made these remarks in any spirit of hostility to the suggestions of the noble Marquess, which were, perhaps, as good as was possible under the circumstances. I merely say that it does seem to me that there are many practical difficulties in the way of carrying out a scheme which does not appear to be larger than is necessary for the defence of the country.

Lord Monkswell.

EARL BROWLOW: My Lords, I desire to say a word or two with regard to the Volunteers. A great deal has been said about the artillery and increasing the number of Volunteers, but not one word has been uttered as to the transport. I am perfectly aware that it is proposed to try an experiment in this direction, but at the same time that experiment is rather a small one, and, if I may say so, rather a half-hearted one. I trust that in carrying out the proposals he has brought before the House, the noble Marquess will not omit to give his best consideration to the exceedingly important question of transport. I agree with my noble friend Lord Wantage that it is most important that drill and the theory of shooting should be taught in our schools, and the boys might even be allowed to practise shooting with great advantage to themselves and without danger to their neighbours. I do not think, however, that this is a matter in which the War Office can take the initiative, but I hope that when any scheme is laid before them the noble Marquess will see his way to give it his most kindly consideration.

THE EARL OF KIMBERLEY: My Lords, I have not the slightest intention of going into the details of the scheme which the noble Marquess has so clearly explained, but I wish to say a word upon one or two points. Although I entirely recognise the necessity of having recourse to immediate expedients in order to supply the forces that are necessary for the defence of the country at the present time, and to supply any additional reinforcements that may be required during the progress of the war in South Africa, I hope that this will be kept in mind—that, as far as possible, subject of course to these two essential considerations, the arrangements made will be such as will facilitate further changes which hereafter we shall come to consider in regard to the general organisation of our forces. Otherwise, some of the temporary arrangements made, instead of facilitating the further changes that may be necessary, might stand in their way. One other observation is this. Although I have never taken any part in the subject of the military organisation of this country, I have always felt a strong desire that the Militia force should be made thoroughly efficient, and I do not see why at the present moment, even though we have to make various temporary arrangements, we cannot consider it an opportune time for placing the Militia on a thoroughly permanent and efficient footing. It is a force that stands between the Regular forces and the Volunteers, and it is, to my mind, the force upon which you must eventually depend for the defence of this country in those cases—I am afraid that with the extension of our responsibilities they will happen more often—where you may be obliged to send away a very large part of your Regular forces. You ought to have a thoroughly efficient Militia, both as regards numbers and organisation. I have no desire to enter upon the question of what future changes in our organisation may be found desirable; but at this moment, when the country has a great inclination to support you in any measure for the increase of our military strength, I cannot see any reason why this occasion should not be taken for placing the Militia on that permanent footing of efficiency which I have long desired to see it attain.

EARL NELSON: My Lords, as the noble Lord has drawn our attention to the Militia I am particularly reminded of the fact that I was present in this House, many years ago, when the great Duke of Wellington made a speech in reference to a proposal of the Government of the day to organise and call out the Militia. It was the last speech the Duke of Wellington made in this House, and it was a very short one. He said—

“My Lords, the Militia is a constitutional force. The battle of Waterloo, that battle of giants, was fought by Militiamen.”

Your Lordships will find that speech in Hansard. As the noble Duke sat down he said, in my hearing—

“It would have been a very different thing if I had had my old army.”

— is testimony not only to the value of the Militia as a supplement to the Regular forces, but to the advantage of having

ANBY: My Lords, the words of the noble

Marquess the Secretary of State for War in regard to the Militia will be heard with extreme pleasure by that force. For some years the Militia have, if I may use the term, been under a cloud, but they have come through the present crisis with success and with satisfaction to the public. The noble Marquess in his statement said that Volunteer artillerymen were to be allowed, under certain circumstances, to undergo a year's training with the batteries of the Regular artillery about to be raised. I do not think he said anything with regard to the possibility of Militia artillerymen being allowed any privileges in that respect. I would venture to hope that the opportunity which is to be given to the Volunteer artillery in this direction should also be given to the Militia artillery. The Volunteer artillery are, quite rightly, going to be supplied with new guns of the best pattern. I venture to think that the Militia are in even greater want of new guns than the Volunteers, and I trust that the Militia artillery will be included in any scheme of rearmament. The noble Marquess's remarks with regard to the simplification and amplification of the Militia bounty and pay will be received with gratification by that force. The subject is a somewhat complicated one at present. The question of ranges is, perhaps, one of the most important of all the subjects raised to-night, and I hope that care will be taken that there shall be no undue extension of overground ranges; otherwise it will be quite as dangerous to move about country districts as it is at the present moment on the veldt in South Africa. I believe that in many cases a very efficient system of shooting might be introduced by the adoption of underground ranges for Morris tube practice.

LORD TWEEDMOUTH: My Lords, I should like to say a word with regard to the subject of ranges, which has just been raised by the noble Marquess (the Marquess of Granby). One thing that has been made apparent during the proceedings of the last four months is the strength in defence of a mobile force of men who know the country and who are good shots. I do not believe our opponents, the Boers, are anything more than fairly good shots. The difficulty of providing ranges owing to the new rifle has, in my opinion, been greatly exaggerated. In the first place a man can learn the best part of rifle shooting by shooting at short ranges. In old days, when you had a rifle with a considerable recoil, there was a great deal to be said in favour of making a man shoot with the full charge he would have on service, so as to accustom him to the recoil; but in these days, when the recoil of the rifle has disappeared, any man who is gifted by providence with good sight can very quickly be taught to aim correctly at the target. What is difficult is to teach men how to let off the rifle. It is not a question of aim, but a question of holding the rifle absolutely still while the trigger is pressed. All the necessary knowledge of letting off a rifle can be taught at 100 yards range just as well as at 1,000 yards. If you will insist that no man shall be allowed to shoot at a long range until he can shoot straight at a short range you will have gone a long way towards the solution of safe rifle ranges; because, if a man really can shoot straight, I do not think he is very likely to miss the butt which protects the targets, even at the most dangerous ranges. If you will insist that your tyro in shooting should fire at small targets at short ranges he will quickly become a very efficient shot. So far as I have been able to judge, from what I have read in the newspapers, all the effective rifle fire in the present war has been rifle fire at short range. If our soldiers are made good shots at short ranges I do not think there will be any difficulty in supplying the whole country with ranges.

THE EARL OF WEMYSS: My Lords, I do not propose to enter into a discussion of the proposals of my noble friend. All I wish to say is that this is the greatest opportunity that has occurred in my lifetime for putting our military resources upon a sound foundation. I venture to think that my noble friend has failed to do this. The noble Marquess has given us really the play of "Hamlet" with Hamlet blotted out. He is building garrets and upper storeys, and putting on the chimneys, but he is neglecting to look after the foundation of our military system. What is its foundation? I heard with the greatest satisfaction the remarks which fell from the noble Earl the Leader of the Opposition (the Earl of Kimberley). He told us what the foundation of our military system is—namely, a permanent and full Militia. There is only one way of making that Militia full—I appeal to my noble friend and the illustrious Duke near me (the Duke of Cambridge) to bear me out—and that is by enforcing the existing Militia Law which you annually suspend. I feel so strongly that this is the time when the people are prepared to accept anything which will make the nation permanently secure that I propose, on some convenient day next week, to move the following resolution, and I hope to get the noble Earl the Leader of the Opposition to second it—namely:

Lord Tweedmouth.

"That this House, having heard the proposals of the Government for strengthening our military forces and armaments, is of opinion that, inasmuch as our military system rests on the Militia ballot, it is essential, looking to military efficiency and the permanent safety of our country, that the ancient constitutional law of compulsory service for home defence, and home defence only, be at once put in force in such modified form as will effect its purpose without weighing unduly upon the people."

LORD RAGLAN: My Lords, I rise to express the hope that the noble Marquess the Secretary of State for War, in raising reserve battalions from ex-soldiers now to be found among the civil population, will endeavour not to do anything which might impair the efficiency of the Militia by tempting men out of its ranks.

A NOBLE LORD: A great deal has been said about mounted infantry. Mounted infantry, so called, would be of hardly any use if the men were not thoroughly well trained and practised in riding. A cavalryman who knows how to ride and groom a horse would be far more useful if he were thoroughly well taught to shoot with the rifle than an infantryman who, as soon as he had fired his rifle, was liable to tumble off his horse. I think this is a matter which should be considered.

*THE MARQUESS OF LANSDOWNE: My Lords, I will not anticipate the debate which the noble Earl on the cross benches proposes to raise on the question of the Militia ballot, but I may, perhaps, say half a dozen words in regard to some of the criticisms, and I have certainly no reason to complain of them, which have been made on my statement. Lord Wantage commented on the absence of a sufficient reference to mounted infantry. I thought I had certainly on two occasions in my speech mentioned our desire to increase that arm of the service; but I repeat that we have under consideration the expediency of treating the Yeomanry I will not say as mounted infantry, but more as mounted infantry than at present. We desire to encourage Volunteer corps to form mounted companies, and at this moment a considerable portion of the infantry of the Line are trained as mounted infantry; and we shall continue to do that to the same extent and, I hope, even to a greater extent than before. The noble Lord also spoke of the desirability of giving some form of military education in our public schools. I must say that suggestion commends itself very much to me, and I am able to say that the Education Department and the War Office are already in correspondence on the subject. Lord Blythwood made a suggestion which I did not quite catch with regard to service battalions, but I have no doubt he will be kind enough to explain that to me privately. He expressed the hope that the guns with which we propose to arm the Volunteer artillery will be of the best type. I gladly give him that assurance. They will consist partly of semi-mobile guns of the 4·7 calibre and partly of modern field guns. My noble friend Lord Dunraven made a suggestion that the facts and figures which I had mentioned might be printed and circulated. I do not quite know which figures he referred to, but it is possible he may be able to find the information he requires in the reports which the public press may be good enough to give of what I have said this evening. Lord Dunraven also made a suggestion that the Militia artillery ought not to be overlooked in any scheme of rearmament. My impression is that the great bulk of the Militia artillery are employed as fortress artillery with the existing armaments at the fortresses, and that there are not many batteries of Militia artillery guns strictly so speaking. A noble Lord on the front bench opposite took me to task on the ground that my figures were conjectural; but if he can indicate any method by which it is possible to present anything but conjectural figures, I should be very much obliged to him. In point of fact, where you rely on voluntary service the figures must be conjectural, and no one can tell whether the inducements held out will be sufficient or insufficient.

LORD MONKSWEILL: What I suggested was that the inducements were not sufficient.

*THE MARQUESS OF LANSDOWNE: All I can say is that recruiting is going on extremely well. The noble Lord suggested that soldiers while serving with the colours should be put through some course of education to fit them for civil life. That would be very good for the soldier when he left the Army, but I question whether the prospect of spending several hours a week in school is one which would attract a great many recruits to the Army. The Leader of the Opposition expressed a hope that we would not take any emergency steps which would stand in the way of any well-considered reforms which may seem necessary hereafter. We shall endeavour to do nothing which will stand in the way of any schemes for the improvement of the Army which the experience of this war may lead us to take into consideration later in the year. I quite agree with what fell from the noble Earl as to the position which ought to be assigned to the Militia forces in the military system of this country. We fully recognise that, and we shall do everything in our power to fit the Militia to fill their place as adequately as possible. Some mention was made by the noble Marquess (the Marquess of Granby) and by my noble friend Lord Tweedmouth as to the question of ranges. I think there was a great deal of force in what fell from Lord Tweedmouth. I am under the impression that we may have been rather too pedantic in our inspection of ranges; but it must be considered that if some unfortunate person gets hit by a stray bullet the War Office are likely to be taken very severely to task, and it is therefore not unnatural that the inspection should err on the side of strictness. I believe there is a great deal to be said for the view, and particularly with the new rifle, that it may be sufficient to lay more stress on musketry instruction at short ranges, leaving the long-range shooting for the central ranges we are endeavouring to secure and which we shall make accessible to the Auxiliary forces as well as to the Regulars. Lord Raglan expressed the hope that in raising Reserve battalions from ex-soldiers now to be found among the civil population we should endeavour not to do anything which might impair the efficiency of the Militia. That is a most reasonable suggestion, and I will see that it is borne in mind. Lord Galway asked what our intentions are with regard to the payment of the Yeomanry should they be invited to undergo a longer period of training than usual this year. In that case the contingent allowance will certainly be reconsidered.

VISCOUNT GALWAY: And an extra grant be given to men who bring their own horses?

*THE MARQUESS OF LANSDOWNE: I will take care that that suggestion is fully considered.

House adjourned at twenty-five minutes past Six of the clock, till To-morrow, half-past Ten of the clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday, 12th February, 1900.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

PRIVATE BILLS [Lords].

MR. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in respect of the Bills comprised in the List reported by the Chairman of Ways and Means as intended to originate in the House of Lords, they have certified that the Standing Orders have been complied with in the following cases, viz. :—

Imshenetzky's (Uralite) Patent.
Maryport Harbour.
National Markets and Stores and Workshops.
Walsall Corporation.

ABERDEEN CORPORATION TRAMWAYS.

Petition for Bill; referred to the Select Committee on Standing Orders.

BLACKPOOL, ST. ANNE'S, AND LYTHAM TRAMWAYS.

Petition for Bill; referred to the Select Committee on Standing Orders.

SOUTH EASTERN METROPOLITAN TRAMWAYS.

Petition for Bill; referred to the Select Committee on Standing Orders.

ABERDEEN POLICE AND IMPROVE- MENT BILL.

"To authorise the Lord Provost, Magistrates, and Town Council of the City and Royal Burgh of Aberdeen to make certain bridge and street improvements, to confer upon them new powers with respect to police matters, streets, and buildings; and for other purposes," read the first time; to be read a second time.

AIRDRIE, COATBRIDGE AND DISTRICT WATER TRUST BILL.

"To constitute and incorporate a water trust for the burghs of Coatbridge and Airdrie and the districts adjacent thereto in the county of Lanark to transfer to and vest in such trust the undertaking of the Airdrie and Coatbridge Water Company; and for other purposes," read the first time; to be read a second time.

BAKER STREET AND WATERLOO RAILWAY BILL.

"To confer further powers upon the Baker Street and Waterloo Railway Company," read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

BEDFORD GAS BILL.

"To confer further powers on the Bedford Gas Light Company," read the first time, and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

BELFAST AND COUNTY DOWN RAILWAY BILL.

"To authorise the Belfast and County Down Railway Company to construct a railway from Newcastle to join the railway of the Great Northern Railway Company (Ireland) at Ballyronney; to run over and use a portion of the railway of that company; to enter into working and other agreements with that company; to confer further powers upon the company with reference to steam vessels, and further powers in connection with their undertaking; and for other purposes," read the first time, and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

BRADFORD CORPORATION BILL.

"To authorise the Mayor, Aldermen, and Citizens of the city of Bradford, in the county of York, to construct additional tramways in and near the city; to acquire lands for the protection of their water supply; to purchase the undertakings of the Clayton, Allerton, and Thornton Gas Company, the North Bierly Gas Company, the Eccleshill and Bolton Gas Company, and the Airedale Gas Company; to purchase gas from the Drighlington and Gildersome Gas Light Company; to make further provision for the health and good government of the city; and for other purposes," read the first time; to be read a second time.

BRAY AND ENNISKERRY RAILWAY BILL.

"To empower the Bray and Enniskerry Railway Company to make certain extensions of their authorised railway, and to work same by electrical power; and for other purposes," read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

BRIGHTON CORPORATION BILL.

"To empower the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the county borough of Brighton to construct and work tramways; to erect generating stations; and for other purposes," read the first time; to be read a second time.

BRITISH GAS LIGHT COMPANY (STAFFORDSHIRE POTTERIES) BILL.

"For empowering the British Gas Light Company, Limited, to erect new works and to expend further capital at their Staffordshire Potteries Station," read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

BROMPTON AND PICCADILLY CIRCUS RAILWAY BILL.

"To extend the time for the compulsory purchase of lands and for the construction and completion of the Brompton and Piccadilly Circus Railway; and for other purposes," read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

BUCKINGHAM, TOWCESTER, AND METROPOLITAN JUNCTION RAILWAY BILL.

"For incorporating the Buckingham, Towcester, and Metropolitan Junction Railway Company; and for empowering them to construct a railway from Verney Junction, in the county of Buckingham, to Towcester, in the county of Northampton; and for other purposes," read the first time; to be read a second time.

CHARING CROSS AND STRAND ELECTRICITY SUPPLY BILL.

"To empower the Charing Cross and Strand Electricity Supply Corporation, Limited, to construct a generating station in the parish of West Ham, and to lay mains connecting their generating stations, and to acquire lands, and to construct a short line of railway; and for other purposes," read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

CHARING CROSS, EUSTON, AND HAMPSTEAD RAILWAY BILL.

"To extend the powers of the Charing Cross, Euston, and Hampstead Railway Company; and for other purposes," read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

CHELSEA WATER BILL.

"To confer further powers upon the Governor and Company of Chelsea Waterworks; to declare valid the creation and issue by them of certain shares and stock and the payment of dividends thereon; and for other purposes," read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

CHESHIRE LINES COMMITTEE BILL.

"To enable the Cheshire Lines Committee to make a new railway; to acquire additional lands; to stop up certain streets; and for other purposes," read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

CITY AND SOUTH LONDON RAILWAY BILL.

"To amend the City and South London Railway Act, 1893," read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

CITY OF LONDON ELECTRIC LIGHTING BILL.

"To empower the City of London Electric Lighting Company (Limited) to acquire lands and work generating stations; and for other purposes," read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

CITY OF LONDON (VARIOUS POWERS) BILL.

"To empower the Corporation of the City of London to acquire and maintain Finsbury Circus Gardens as an open space, and to acquire Spitalfields Market, with power to maintain or sell or lease the same ; to] purchase lands for various purposes, and to adopt and apply the Baths and Washhouses Acts ; to establish a Crematorium at Ilford Cemetery ; to make further and better accommodation for the laying of pipes, wires, and other apparatus in, over, or under streets ; to confer further powers upon the Corporation with respect to the control of streets and structures across streets and the fixing of apparatus for public lighting in streetss ; to make further provisions for the health and good government of the City and of the open spaces therein ; to enable persons elected to Corporate Offices in the City to retire therefrom ; to empower the Corporation to borrow money ; and for other purposes," read the first time ; to be read a second time.

CLONTARF URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL BILL.

"To authorise the Clontarf Urban District Council to construct works for sewage and drainage purposes, to erect a sea wall, to acquire lands, to borrow moneys ; and for other purposes," read the first time ; to be read a second time.

COLONIAL BANK BILL.

"To increase the limit of the note issue of the Colonial Bank ; and for other purposes," read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

COUNTY OF LONDON AND BRUSH PROVINCIAL ELECTRIC LIGHTING BILL.

"To authorise the County of London and Brush Provincial Electric Lighting Company, Limited, to purchase lands and construct generating stations ; and for other purposes," read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

COVENTRY CORPORATION BILL.

"To empower the Corporation of Coventry to make certain street works, and to confer further powers on them in regard to streets, buildings, and sewers, and the health, local government, and improvement of the city ; and for other purposes," read the first time ; to be read a second time.

CROYDON TRAMWAYS AND IMPROVEMENTS BILL.

"To authorise the Corporation of Croydon to construct additional tramways and to work the tramways in the borough ; to execute certain street improvements ; to make further provision for the government and for the preservation of the health of the inhabitants of the county borough of Croydon ; and for other purposes," read the first time ; to be read a second time.

DUBLIN CORPORATION BILL.

"To extend the City of Dublin ; and for other purposes," read the first time ; to be read a second time.

DURHAM (COUNTY OF) ELECTRIC POWER SUPPLY BILL.

"For incorporating and conferring powers upon the County of Durham Electric Power Supply Company ; and for other purposes," read the first time ; to be read a second time.

EAST LONDON WATER BILL.

"To authorise the East London Waterworks Company to construct additional storage reservoirs and other works ; to take further water from the river Thames in cases of exceptional drought and other emergency ; to raise further money ; and for other purposes," read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

EXETER CORPORATION BILL.

"To extend the city and county of the city of Exeter ; to unite the parishes within the extended city into one parish ; to authorise the reconstruction of the Exe Bridge and the construction of certain street works ; and for other purposes," read the first time ; to be read a second time.

FARNWORTH URRAN DISTRICT COUNCIL BILL.

"To empower the Urban District Council of Farnworth to construct additional tramways and to work tramways, and to make further provision for the good government of the said district ; and for other purposes," read the first time ; to be read a second time.

GAS LIGHT AND COKE, COMMERCIAL GAS, AND SOUTH METROPOLITAN GAS COMPANIES BILL.

"For making further provision as to testing the illuminating power of gas supplied by the Gas Light and Coke, the South Metropolitan Gas, and the Commercial Gas Companies in the Administrative County of London, and for regulating the supply by those companies of prepayment meters and fittings in connection therewith ; and for other purposes," read the first time ; to be read a second time.

GAS LIGHT AND COKE COMPANY BILL.

"To enable the Gas Light and Coke Company to raise additional moneys and to purchase, take and hold lands ; and for other purposes," read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

GLASTONBURY AND STREET GAS BILL.

"For incorporating and conferring powers on the Glastonbury Street and District Gas Company ; and for other purposes," read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

GLASTONBURY CORPORATION GAS BILL.

"To empower the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the Borough of Glastonbury to supply gas, and to provide for the transfer of the undertaking of the Glastonbury Gas and Coke Company, Limited, to the Corporation ; and for other purposes," read the first time ; to be read a second time.

GRANTHAM GAS BILL.

"To confer further powers on the Grantham Gas Company ; and for other purposes," read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

GREAT EASTERN RAILWAY BILL.

"To authorise the Great Eastern Railway Company to make further railways, widenings, and works ; to confirm an agreement between the company and the Hertford County Council, and the Epping Rural District Council and other parties ; and to authorise the company and the said County Council and District Council to construct roads in accordance therewith ; to extend the time for the purchase of lands for and for the completion of part of an authorised railway ; to confer further powers upon the company ; to provide for the transfer to the company of the undertaking of the Northern and Eastern Railway Company ; and for other purposes," read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY BILL.

"To confer further powers upon the Great Northern Railway Company," read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY (IRELAND) BILL.

"To confer further powers upon the Great Northern Railway Company (Ireland)," read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY BILL.

"For conferring further powers upon the Great Western Railway Company in respect of their own undertaking, and upon that company and the London and North Western Railway Company in respect of undertakings in which they are jointly interested, and upon the Great Western and Great Central Railways Joint Committee in respect of their undertaking ; for vesting the undertakings of the Staines and West Drayton and the Birmingham and Henley-in-Arden Railway Companies in the Great Western Railway Company ; for transferring to that company the powers of the Birmingham, North Warwickshire, and Stratford-upon-Avon Railway Company, and extending the time for the construction of certain authorised railways of that company ; and for other purposes," read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

GREAT YARMOUTH PORT AND HAVEN BILL.

"For enlarging the powers of the Commissioners of the Port and Haven of Great Yarmouth ; and for other purposes," read the first time ; to be read a second time.

HALIFAX CORPORATION BILL.

"To extend the boundaries of the county borough of Halifax and to empower the Corporation to construct additional tramways, street widenings, and improvements; to confer further powers with respect to their waterworks undertaking, and in regard to streets, buildings, and drains, and for the health, local government, and improvement of the borough; and for other purposes," read the first time; to be read a second time.

HAMILTON BURGH BILL.

"To amend the Hamilton Burgh Act, 1878, with regard to assessments and to the common good of the burgh; and for other purposes," read the first time; to be read a second time.

HARTLEPOOL GAS AND WATER BILL.

"To consolidate and convert the capital of the Hartlepool Gas and Water Company, and to enable that company to raise additional moneys; and for other purposes," read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

HASTINGS CORPORATION BILL.

"To confer further powers on the Corporation of the county borough of Hastings with respect to the improvement and good government of the borough, to amend and extend provisions of the local Acts; and for other purposes," read the first time; to be read a second time.

HASTINGS HARBOUR BILL.

"To extend the periods limited for the purchase of lands for and for the completion of the harbour works, to enable the Commissioners to borrow further money; and for other purposes," read the first time; to be read a second time.

HASTINGS TRAMWAYS BILL.

"To incorporate the Hastings Tramways Company, and to empower that Company to make and maintain tramways and other works in the county borough of Hastings; and for other purposes," read the first time; to be read a second time.

HOYLAKE AND WEST KIRBY IMPROVEMENT BILL.

"To confer powers upon the urban district council of Hoylake and West Kirby for the construction of a parade, new streets, pier, and other works, to authorise the inclosure of the Great Meols Commons; and for other purposes," read the first time; to be read a second time.

HUDDERSFIELD CORPORATION TRAMWAYS BILL.

"To enable the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the Borough of Huddersfield to construct additional tramways in and adjacent to the borough; and for other purposes," read the first time; to be read a second time.

HUNTINGDON CORPORATION BILL.

"To vest in the Corporation of the Borough of Huntingdon certain common lands and baulks and Freemen's rights of pasturage in certain Lammas Lands, to transfer certain rents and monies to the Corporation, to empower the Corporation to form public parks and recreation grounds; and for other purposes," read the first time; to be read a second time.

ILFRACOMBE IMPROVEMENT BILL.

"To authorise the Urban District Council of Ilfracombe, in the county of Devon, to construct additional waterworks for the supply of their district and the parishes of Berrynarbor, Combe Martin, and Morthoe, and to make further and better provision for the improvement, health, local government, and finance of the district; and for other purposes," read the first time; to be read a second time.

JARROW AND HEBBURN ELECTRICITY SUPPLY BILL.

"To enable the Walker and Wallsend Union Gas Company to supply electricity within the borough of Jarrow and Urban District of Hebburn, in the county of Durham; to raise additional capital; and for other purposes," read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

KINGSCOURT, KEADY, AND ARMAGH RAILWAY BILL.

"To incorporate the Kingscourt, Keady, and Armagh Railway Company, and to empower them to construct rail ways in the counties of Cavan, Monaghan, and Armagh; and for other purposes," read the first time; to be read a second time.

KNOTT END RAILWAY BILL.

"To empower the Knott End Railway Company to construct an extension of their railway from Pilling to Galgate, and to provide for the acquisition by that company of the undertaking of the Garstang and Knott End Railway Company; and for other purposes," read the first time; to be read a second time.

LAMBETH WATER BILL.

"To authorise the Company of Proprietors of Lambeth Waterworks to execute further works, to purchase additional lands, to take further water from the River Thames, and to raise further money; and for other purposes," read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

LANCASHIRE AND YORKSHIRE RAILWAY BILL.

"For conferring further powers on the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company with relation to their own undertaking, and upon that company and the London and North Western Railway Company with relation to the Preston and Wyre Railway; and for other purposes," read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

LANCASHIRE, DERBYSHIRE, AND EAST COAST RAILWAY BILL.

"To confer further powers on the Lancashire, Derbyshire, and East Coast Railway Company," read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

LANCASHIRE ELECTRIC POWER BILL.

"For incorporating and conferring powers on the Lancashire Electric Power Company," read the first time; to be read a second time.

LANCASTER CORPORATION BILL.

"To empower the Corporation of Lancaster to acquire the undertaking of the Lancaster and District Tramways Company, Limited; to construct additional tramways; to widen streets, and make a footbridge over the River Lune; to deal with Lancaster Marsh; to commute portions of the Vicar of Lancaster's Tithe and Dues; to make further provisions for the good government of the borough; and for other purposes," read the first time; to be read a second time.

LATIMER ROAD AND ACTON RAILWAY BILL.

"For the abandonment of the Latimer Road and Acton Railway," read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

LEE CONSERVANCY BILL.

"To alter the constitution and amend and extend the statutory powers of the Lee Conservancy Board," read the first time; to be read a second time.

LIVERPOOL CORPORATION BILL.

"For authorising the Corporation of the City of Liverpool to execute certain street improvements; for making further provisions for the protection of the public health; for amending various local Acts in force within the city; for authorising the Corporation to raise money by the issue of bills; and for other purposes," read the first time; to be read a second time.

LONDON AND INDIA DOCKS JOINT COMMITTEE BILL.

"To repeal exemptions from rates or charges of certain craft using the docks under the management of the London and India Docks Joint Committee and of goods discharged or received by such craft; and to empower the Joint Committee to levy rates or charges thereon," read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

LONDON AND NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY BILL.

"For empowering the London and North Western Railway Company to construct additional dock works at Garston; and for conferring further powers upon that company in relation to their own undertaking, and upon that company and the Great Western Railway Company and the Great Central Railway Company in relation to their Joint Undertakings; and for other purposes," read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

LONDON AND NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY (WALES) BILL.

"For conferring further powers upon the London and North Western Railway Company for the construction of works and acquisition of lands in Wales; and for other purposes," read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

LONDON AND SAINT KATHARINE DOCKS AND EAST AND WEST INDIA DOCK COMPANIES BILL.

"For the amalgamation of the undertakings of the London and St. Katharine Docks Company and the East and West India Dock Company; and for other purposes," read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

LONDON AND SOUTH WESTERN RAILWAY BILL.

"To confer further powers upon the London and South Western Railway Company, and to authorise them to execute further works, to acquire additional lands, and to raise further money; and to vary in certain respects the provisions of The South Western Railway Act, 1899; and for other purposes," read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL (COMPULSORY PURCHASE OF LAND).

"To confer on the London County Council certain general powers for taking houses, buildings, and lands for purposes of street improvements," read the first time; to be read a second time.

LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL (GENERAL POWERS).

"To enable the London County Council to purchase lands for various purposes; to provide for contributions by the Council and certain Vestries and District Boards of Works towards the acquisition of land for open spaces; to extend the time limited for the purchase of certain lands by the Council; to confer powers on the Vestry of Saint Mary, Battersea, as to the 'Latchmere Allotments' and lands for an electric station; and for other purposes," read the first time; to be read a second time.

LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL (IMPROVEMENTS) BILL.

"To empower the London County Council to make an extension of the Thames Embankment and a new street and improvements at Westminster; to widen Mare Street, Hackney; and to make other street improvements and works in the administrative County of London; and for other purposes," read the first time; to be read a second time.

LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL (SPITALFIELDS MARKET) BILL.

"To empower the London County Council to acquire Spitalfields Market, in the parish of Christchurch, Spitalfields; and to make various provisions with reference thereto," read the first time; to be read a second time.

LONDON, WALTHAMSTOW, AND EPPING FOREST RAILWAY BILL.

"To authorise the London, Walthamstow, and Epping Forest Railway Company to construct a portion of their authorised railway in tunnel instead of in cutting; to extend the time for the compulsory purchase of lands and for the construction and completion of their authorised railway; and for other purposes," read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

LONDON WATER (PURCHASE) BILL.

"To empower the London County Council to acquire the undertakings of the London Water Companies; and for other purposes," read the first time; to be read a second time.

LONDON WATER (WELSH SUPPLY) BILL.

"To authorise the construction of reservoirs and works in Wales, and the construction of aqueducts and works for the supply of water to London and neighbourhood; and for other purposes," read the first time; to be read a second time.

LOWESTOFT RAILWAY BILL.

"For incorporating the Lowestoft Railway Company, and authorising them to construct railways in the counties of Norfolk and Suffolk; and for other purposes," read the first time; to be read a second time.

MAIDENHEAD GAS BILL.

"To amend the Maidenhead Gas Act, 1876, and to confer further powers upon the Maidenhead Gas Company," read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

MANCHESTER AND LIVERPOOL ELECTRIC EXPRESS RAILWAY BILL.

"For incorporating and conferring powers upon the Manchester and Liverpool Electric Express Railway Company," read the first time; to be read a second time.

MARKET WEIGHTON DRAINAGE AND NAVIGATION BILL.

"For incorporating and making better provisions for the meetings and proceedings of the Trustees of the Market Weighton Drainage and Canal in the east riding of the county of York; for better defining the lands subject to taxation by the said trustees, and making other provisions relative thereto; for relieving the said trustees from their obligations to maintain the said canal; for conferring further powers on the said trustees; and for other purposes," read the first time; to be read a second time.

METROPOLITAN DISTRICT RAILWAY BILL.

"For empowering the Metropolitan District Railway Company to erect a station for generating electrical energy and thereby work certain railways to acquire lands to extend the time for the completion of certain railways and compulsory purchase of lands to make certain provisions with respect to the Ealing and South Harrow and Brompton and Piccadilly Railways; to raise further capital; and for other purposes," read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

METROPOLITAN WATER COMPANIES BILL.

"To confer further powers upon the Local Government Board, and to impose further obligations upon the Metropolitan Water Companies with a view to providing for the future needs of the Metropolis in regard to the supply of water," read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

MID-KENT WATER BILL.

"For extending the limits of supply of supply of the Mid-Kent Water Company; and for conferring further powers on the company for the construction of works, the raising of capital, and otherwise in relation to their undertaking," read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

MIDLAND RAILWAY BILL.

"To confer additional powers upon the Midland Railway Company and upon the Midland and North Eastern Railway Companies Committee and upon the Midland and Great Northern Railways Joint Committee for the construction of works and the acquisition of lands; to empower the Midland Railway Company to subscribe towards the undertaking of the Yorkshire Dales Railway Company; and for other purposes," read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

MORECAMBE URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL (GAS) BILL.

"To provide for the transfer of the undertaking of the Morecambe Gas and Light Company to the Morecambe Urban District Council, and to confer further powers on the said Council with respect to the supply of gas; and for other purposes," read the first time; to be read a second time.

NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE ELECTRIC SUPPLY BILL.

"To confer further powers upon the Newcastle-upon-Tyne Electric Supply Company, Limited, for the construction of works, and the supply of electrical energy; and for other purposes," read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

NORTH METROPOLITAN ELECTRIC POWER SUPPLY BILL.

"For incorporating and conferring powers upon the North Metropolitan Electric Power Supply Company; and for other purposes," read the first time; to be read a second time.

NORTH METROPOLITAN RAILWAY AND CANAL COMPANY BILL.

"To consolidate the debenture stocks of the North Metropolitan Railway and Canal Company; to amend in certain respects the Acts relating to the company; to change the name of the company; and for other purposes," read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

NORTH WARWICKSHIRE WATER BILL.

"To enable the North Warwickshire Water Company to extend their limits of supply ; to construct additional water-works ; and for other purposes," read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

NOTTINGHAM CORPORATION BILL.

"To empower the Corporation of Nottingham to make certain street improvements ; and for other purposes," read the first time ; to be read a second time.

OLDHAM CORPORATION BILL.

"To empower the Corporation of Oldham to extend and improve their existing Market Hall ; to confer further powers upon the Corporation with regard to sanitary and other matters, and to make better provision for the health, local government, and improvement of the borough ; and for other purposes," read the first time ; to be read a second time.

OSSETT CORPORATION GAS BILL.

"To authorise the sale of the undertaking of the Ossett Gas Company to the Corporation of Ossett ; and to empower the Corporation to supply gas within the borough of Ossett and places adjacent thereto," read the first time ; to be read a second time.

OSSETT GAS BILL.

"To extend the powers of and amend the Act relating to the Ossett Gas Company ; and for other purposes," read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

PONTEFRAC T PARK BILL.

"For regulating the rating of Pontefract Park, in the west riding of the county of York, in respect of poor rates ; and for other purposes," read the first time ; to be read a second time.

READING CORPORATION (TRAMWAYS) BILL.

"To confer powers upon the Corporation of the borough of Reading with respect to the construction and working of tramways in the borough ; and for other purposes," read the first time ; to be read a second time.

REDHILL GAS BILL.

"To confer further powers upon the Redhill Gas Company ; and for other purposes," read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

RICKMANSWORTH AND UXBRIDGE VALLEY WATER BILL.

"For extending the limits of supply of and conferring further powers upon the Rickmansworth and Uxbridge Valley Water Company ; and for other purposes," read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

RUGELEY GAS BILL.

"For incorporating and conferring powers upon the Rugeley Gas Company ; and for other purposes," read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

ST. ALBANS WATER BILL.

"To authorise the St. Albans Waterworks Company to acquire further lands, and to raise further moneys, and to extend their limits of supply ; and for other purposes," read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

ST. DAVID'S RAILWAY (ADDITIONAL POWERS) BILL.

"To authorise the construction of railways in the county of Pembroke ; and for other purposes," read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

SCARBOROUGH CORPORATION BILL.

"To empower the Corporation of Scarborough to make an approach road to the New Marine Drive, to alter the line of the sea wall of the said drive, to widen and improve the Ramsden Valley Bridge, and to construct a street Tramway, to make further and better provision for the improvement, health, and good government of the borough of Scarborough, to alter the constitution of the Scarborough Harbour Commissioners ; and for other purposes," read the first time ; to be read a second time.

SOUTH LANCASHIRE TRAMWAYS BILL.

"To incorporate the South Lancashire Tramways Company ; and to empower that Company to make tramways and street improvements; and for other purposes," read the first time; to be read a second time.

SOUTH METROPOLITAN GAS BILL.

"To empower the South Metropolitan Gas Company to alter the provisions as to the standard price and illuminating power of the gas supplied by the company; to construct a railway in the parish of Greenwich; and to purchase by agreement so much of the southern portion of the undertaking of the Gas Light and Coke Company as is situate in the county of London south of the Thames; and for other purposes," read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

SOUTHPORT CORPORATION BILL.

"To enable the Mayor, Alderman, and Burgesses of the Borough of Southport to carry out street improvements and other works; and to make further provisions for the improvement and good government of the said borough; and for other purposes," read the first time; to be read a second time.

SOUTHPORT EXTENSION AND TRAMWAYS BILL.

"To extend the boundaries of the borough of Southport, to authorise the construction of tramways, and to confer further powers on the Corporation with respect to the supply of gas and electricity; and for other purposes," read the first time; to be read a second time.

SOUTHPORT WATER BILL.

"For the granting of further powers to the Southport Waterworks Company," read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

SOUTH WALES ELECTRICAL POWER DISTRIBUTION BILL.

"For incorporating and conferring powers on the South Wales Electrical Power Distribution Company," read the first time; to be read a second time.

SPALDING URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL (WATER) BILL.

"To authorise the Urban District Council of Spalding to purchase the undertaking of the Spalding Waterworks Company; and for other purposes," read the first time; to be read a second time.

STOCKPORT CORPORATION TRAMWAYS BILL.

"To empower the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the county borough of Stockport to construct tramways in the borough; and for other purposes," read the first time; to be read a second time.

TAUNTON CORPORATION BILL.

"To make provision in regard to the water undertaking of the Corporation of the borough of Taunton, and to the health, local government, improvement, and finance of the said borough, to empower the said Corporation and the Trustees of the Markets of the borough to erect a town hall, and to make further provision in regard to the said markets, and for other purposes," read the first time; to be read a second time.

TOTTENHAM URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL BILL.

"To provide for vesting in the Urban District Council of Tottenham, in the county of Middlesex, the Lammas Lands in the district; to confer various powers with respect to Commons, open spaces, and recreation grounds, the supply of electricity, streets, buildings, and other matters of local government; and for other purposes," read the first time; to be read a second time.

TYNESIDE ELECTRIC POWER BILL.

"For incorporation and conferring powers on the Tyneside Electric Power Company," read the first time; to be read a second time.

VALE OF RHEIDOL LIGHT RAILWAY BILL.

"To extend the period for the purchase of land and for the construction of the authorised Railway, and to work the traffic thereon by electrical or other motive power; and for other purposes," read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

WAKEFIELD CORPORATION MARKET BILL.

"To empower the Mayor, Alderman, and Citizens of the city of Wakefield to purchase the undertaking of the Wakefield Borough Market Company, and to make further provision in regard to the markets and slaughter houses of the said city; and for other purposes," read the first time; to be read a second time.

WANDSWORTH AND PUTNEY GAS BILL.

"To convert the capital of the Wandsworth and Putney Gaslight and Coke Company; to raise additional capital; to construct works; and for other purposes," read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

WEST BROMWICH CORPORATION BILL.

"To confer powers upon the Corporation of the county borough of West Bromwich with respect to trainways and to their electric lighting and other undertakings; to make further provision for the improvement and good government of the borough; to amend and extend the provisions of the local Acts relating to the borough; and for other purposes," read the first time; to be read a second time.

WEST HAM CORPORATION BILL.

"To confer further powers upon the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the county borough of West Ham; and to make further provision for the good government of that borough; and for other purposes," read the first time; to be read a second time.

WETHERBY DISTRICT WATER BILL.

"To enable the Wetherby District Water Company to extend their limits of supply; construct additional waterworks; and for other purposes," read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

WIDNES AND RUNCORN BRIDGE BILL.

"To authorise the construction of a bridge across the River Mersey and Manchester Ship Canal between Widnes and Runcorn, and for other purposes," read the first time; to be read a second time.

WOLVERHAMPTON, ESSINGTON, AND CANNOCK CHASE JUNCTION RAILWAY BILL.

"For making a railway in the county of Staffordshire from Wolverhampton to Essington and Cannock Chase; and for other purposes," read the first time; to be read a second time.

WOLVERHAMPTON GAS BILL.

"For conferring further powers on the Wolverhampton Gas Company," read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

WOODBIDGE DISTRICT WATER BILL.

"For incorporating the Woodbridge District Water Company and empowering them to construct works and supply water; and for other purposes," read the first time; to be read a second time.

ROCHDALE CORPORATION.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Royds, Mr. Kenyon, and Mr. Platt-Higgins.

MANCHESTER CITY RAILWAY BILL.

Order [9th February] that the Manchester City Railway Bill be brought in, read, and discharged.

Ordered, that the Petition for the Bill be withdrawn.—(Dr. Farquharson.)

PRIVATE BILL PETITIONS (STANDING ORDERS NOT COMPLIED WITH).

Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Reports from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That in the case of the Petitions for the following Bills, the Standing Orders have not been complied with, viz. :—

Aberdeen Corporation Tramways Bill.
Blackpool, St. Anne's, and Lytham Tramways Bill.

South Eastern Metropolitan Tramways Bill.

Ordered, That the Reports be referred to the Select Committee on Standing Orders.

PETITIONS.INEBRIATES ACTS, 1879 AND 1899.

Petition from Manchester and Salford, for alteration of Law; to lie upon the Table.

LOCAL AUTHORITIES' SERVANTS' SUPERANNUATION.

Petitions for alteration of Law, from Crick; St. Saviour's, London; and Merthyr Tydfil; to lie upon the Table.

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS ON SUNDAY BILL.

Petitions in favour, from Dulwich; and Peckham; to lie upon the Table.

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS TO CHILDREN BILL.

Petitions in favour, from Manchester ; and Eccles ; to lie upon the Table.

TOWN COUNCILS (SCOTLAND) BILL.

Petitions in favour, from Hawick ; Forfar ; and Newton Stewart ; to lie upon the Table.

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

CHELSEA HOSPITAL.

Account presented, — for the year ended 31st March, 1899, with the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor General thereon [by Act] ; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 42.]

CIVIL SERVICES (SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, 1899-1900).

Estimate presented,—of the Further Sums required to be voted for the Service of the year ending 31st March, 1900 [by Command] ; Referred to the Committee of Supply, and to be printed. [No. 43.]

NATIONAL GALLERY (REPORT).

Copy ordered, “ of Report of the Director of the National Gallery for the year 1899, with Appendices.” — (Mr. Hanbury.)

Copy presented accordingly ; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 44.]

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE (IRELAND).

Copy ordered, “ of Accounts of Receipts and Payments of the Accountant General of the Supreme Court of Judicature in Ireland in respect of the funds of Suitors in the said Court, including therein funds to the credit of Lunacy Accounts, in the year to the 30th day of September, 1899 ; together with a Statement of the Liabilities and Assets, and Particulars of Securities in Court on the 30th day of September, 1899.” — (Mr. Hanbury.)

Copy presented accordingly ; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 45.]

NATIONAL TELEPHONE COMPANY.

Copy ordered, “ of Deeds Poll, dated 7th day of February, 1898, and 15th day of February, 1899, executed by Her Majesty's Postmaster General, specifying exchange areas of the National Telephone Company (in continuation of Parliamentary Paper, No. 128, of Session 1898).” — (Mr. Hanbury.)

Copy presented accordingly ; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 46.]

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE AND ART DEPARTMENTS.

Return ordered, “ of the Minutes of the Lord President of the Council relating to the re-organisation of the Education and Science and Art Departments.” — (Colonel Wyndham Murray.)

NEW WRIT.

For Plymouth, in the room of Sir Edward Clarke, knight (Manor of Northstead). — (Sir William Walrond.)

QUESTIONS.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—GENERAL BUTLER—CONDUCT OF THE WAR.

MR. BRYN ROBERTS (Carnarvonshire, Eifion) : I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury, whether General Butler warned the Government in the course of last summer that if matters were pushed to an extremity with the Transvaal it would be necessary to abandon northern Natal, and to place a strong force on the Tugela, which would be the most northerly line of practicable defence ; and if they also knew that General Butler had advocated the mobilisation of two Army Corps to cope with the Boers ; and, whether General Buller reported after the battle of Colenso that it was impossible to relieve Ladysmith ; and, whether the Committee of Defence ordered him to make a second attempt, and also sent out Lords Roberts and Kitchener without consulting the Commander in Chief. I beg also to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether General Buller after arriving at the Cape altered his plan of campaign, owing to Sir Alfred Milner having, with his approval, pledged the Government to defend Natal with the whole force of the Empire.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY (MR. A. J. BALFOUR, Manchester, E.) : I will reply to both questions together. The answer to the first paragraph is in the negative. I do not propose to continue by question and answer the controversy about General Butler, nor do I propose to reply to the second and third paragraphs of the question, which belong to a class of questions which, in the public interest, can only be dealt with at the close of the war. I may repeat the general assurance already given that the Commander-in-Chief of the Forces in South Africa has been throughout free to carry out such operations as he thought proper.

PRISONERS OF WAR.

MR. DILLON (Mayo, E.): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury why the Boer prisoners in Capetown are imprisoned on board a ship; whether they can be removed to some station on shore where they would have more opportunity of exercise; and what facilities are given them for seeing friends, obtaining books and writing materials, and supplies of food.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: On January 23 Lord Roberts telegraphed that the Boer prisoners of war were to be removed to Simonstown. This arrangement has no doubt been carried out, but we have no official information on the point. While on board ship regulations were drawn up and approved by the naval authorities, allowing the prisoners to receive friends and presents. It may be assumed that corresponding regulations are in force now that the prisoners are on land.

ARTILLERY STRENGTH.

*SIR CHARLES DILKE (Gloucestershire, Forest of Dean): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury what was the total number of guns of horse and field artillery in British hands in South Africa on 8th January last.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I understand that on the day referred to by the right hon. Gentleman there were 24 guns belonging to the batteries of horse artillery and 162 guns belonging to batteries of field artillery in South Africa—total, 186.

MAGERSFONTEIN ENGAGEMENT—CONDUCT OF HIGHLAND BRIGADE.

MR. HEDDERWICK (Wick Burghs): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether, upon the close of the war in South Africa, a military inquiry into the circumstances of the loss of the Highland Brigade at Magersfontein will be held as a matter of course; and, if not, whether he will promise that a full inquiry will be instituted by the Government.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I think it would be very premature to lay upon the Table either the scope or the limitation of such inquiry or inquiries as it may be found necessary to institute after the close of the war into the military transactions in South Africa.

OLD-AGE PENSIONS—RELIEF OF SUFFERERS BY THE WAR.

SIR JOHN COLOMB (Gt. Yarmouth): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether he can give any assurance that Her Majesty's Government recognise the paramount claims of seamen, soldiers, and marines to consideration in any legislation in connection with old-age pensions or compensation for injuries, and are fully alive to the evils of the existing system, which leaves the provision of adequate relief of helpless sufferers by war to public subscriptions, the amount of which so largely depends upon the popularity of a war.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I am unwilling to give any final or definitive reply to my hon. and gallant friend, but he will perhaps bear in mind that the funds which have been subscribed from time to time by the public have up to the present time been amply sufficient, and much more than sufficient, to deal with the widows and children of soldiers engaged in South Africa, and there is in addition under our existing system compensation to invalids.

TRANSPORT OF MULES.

SIR EDWARD GOURLEY (Sunderland): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Admiralty if he will state to the House the names of the transports engaged for the conveyance of mules to South Africa, also the names of the contracting companies, and rates per head per mule, the number of animals shipped on board each vessel, and the number landed alive from each at the ports of destination; whether any of the vessels were allowed to convey the mules without regulation side ports; is it intended to claim damages from the contractors for the non-delivery of all the animals shipped; and whether the major portion of the contracts were given to a shipping firm in Liverpool, the chairman of which, being a Member of Parliament, was given precedence as such in interviewing the officials at the Admiralty, whilst the representatives of other firms had to wait their turn for admission.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY (Mr. GOSCHEN, St. George's, Hanover Square): In answer to the first question I have to say that substantially the information in the first question of the hon. Member will be given in the return of transports which is now being prepared, except as regards the rates per head, which will not be published while ships continue to be chartered. There is no objection to mules being carried between decks without side lights if proper artificial ventilation is provided. The hon. Member must know that it is not the custom to hold the shipowner responsible for the non-delivery of animals shipped in the ordinary course of trade. They might die quite irrespective of the character of the ship. In some cases a proportion of the payment due has been dependent upon the number actually delivered. As regards the last question, if it is intended to suggest that any favour was shown, I must emphatically state that it is incorrect. No favour was shown to the gentleman in question, nor was the major portion of the contracts assigned to him.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL (Donegal, S.): Is it the fact that a member of the Government is one of the directors of this contracting company?

MR. SPEAKER: The hon. Member must give notice of his question.

SOLDIERS' ESTATES AND THE DEATH DUTIES.

GENERAL RUSSELL (Cheltenham): I beg to ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the Government are prepared favourably to consider the proposal to remit the death duties in the case of officers or men who have been killed in action or died of wounds received in action in the service of their country.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Sir M. HICKS BEACH, Bristol, W.): I think we must all sympathise with the feeling that has prompted the question of my hon. and gallant friend, and I should be glad if I could contrive some means of meeting his wishes in the case of widows who are left with comparatively limited means. But there are a good many difficulties in the way, and I doubt if his suggestion would be the most equitable mode of dealing with the matter. I will consider it.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis): Will the right hon. Gentleman consider whether the same method could not be adopted with regard to these persons as was adopted with regard to the late Emperor of Russia?

MR. BARTLEY (Islington, N.): Is it not the fact that the right hon. Gentleman supported this question when it was before the House in 1894?

SIR M. HICKS BEACH: No, Sir; it is not precisely the same question.

MR. BARTLEY: Very nearly.

IRELAND AND THE WAR EXPENDITURE.

MR. WILLIAM REDMOND (Clare, E.): I beg to ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer whether, in any arrangement for fresh taxation to meet the expenses of the war, the Irish people will be exempted from such taxation, in view of the strong feeling prevailing in Ireland against the military operations in South Africa.

SIR M. HICKS BEACH: The suggestion of the hon. Member practically amounts to this—that those persons who may object to a policy which has been sanctioned by Parliament should be exempted from the taxation necessary to carry that policy into effect. I think such a proposition need only be stated in order to show that it could not be assented to.

MR. FLYNN (Cork, C.): Is it not a fact that the persons objecting—to whom my hon. friend refers—are the people of Ireland?

SIR M. HICKS BEACH: There may be some people in Ireland who object, as I know there are also in England.

CONTRABAND OF WAR—RIGHT OF SEARCH—THE "BUNDESRATH" AND THE "HERZOG."

MR. HEDDERWICK: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether he will communicate to the House the terms in which the Government expressed regret to Germany for the exercise of the maritime right of search exercised in the case of the "Bundesrath" and "Herzog," or will lay upon the Table of the House a copy of any communications that may have passed between the two Governments on the subject.

*THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS (Mr. BRODRICK, Surrey, Guildford): Papers on the subject will shortly be laid.

BOER AND BRITISH ARMAMENTS.

GENERAL RUSSELL: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether his attention has been called to the statement telegraphed from Durban that a document was issued at Pretoria for the private information of the members of the Volksraad, to the effect that the Boer Government placed large orders for guns with Messrs. Krupp and an Austrian firm so early as 1894; whether any guns have yet been constructed at the British Government factories of such rapidity of fire and extended range as those stated to have been supplied by Messrs. Creusot to the Boers, and now used by them; whether there are now with the Army in South Africa any Vickers-Maxim guns firing a shell; and whether there is any reason to believe the statement that the Boers now possess between 220 and 230 heavy guns and field pieces in place of the 110 with which they have been credited.

*THE FINANCIAL SECRETARY TO THE WAR OFFICE (Mr. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS, Birmingham, S., for Mr. WYNDHAM): The document referred to in Paragraph 1 has not reached the War Office, but it is known to be the case that orders for armament were placed by the Boers in Europe as early as 1894. In regard to Paragraph 2 there is every reason to believe that our guns are equal to any guns of similar nature possessed by the enemy. It does not seem expedient to answer the further portion of the hon. Member's question.

GENERAL RUSSELL: Are our guns provided with disappearing mounts?

[No answer was given.]

PUBLICATION OF CASUALTY LISTS.

MR. WILLIAM REDMOND (Clare, E.): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War if the War Office will publish at least once a week a full and revised list up to date of the casualties in South Africa.

*MR. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS (for Mr. WYNDHAM): The Secretary of State is prepared to give a weekly abstract showing the number of casualties to date (either as a total or by actions) and the deaths from wounds and disease.

MR. WILLIAM REDMOND: Will that be done?

*MR. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS: Yes.

FENIANS AT MAFEKING.

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN (Kilkenny): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether he has seen extracts from letters alleged to have been written by Colonel Baden-Powell, in one of which a passage occurs in which he is alleged to have stated that he had forty Fenian prisoners, including the late stationmaster at Mafeking; was this information communicated to the War Office; what was the offence for which they were made prisoners; whether he can say on what evidence Colonel Baden-Powell stated that his prisoners were Fenians; and whether he still has those prisoners, and is the late stationmaster of Mafeking amongst them.

*MR. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS (for Mr. WYNDHAM): No, Sir. There is no information whatever in the War Office on this subject.

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN: Will inquiries be made as to the truth of these statements? It seems an extraordinary thing that the newspapers should get them.

*MR. SPEAKER: Order, order!

THE IRISH BRIGADE WITH THE BOERS—ALLEGED MURDER OF A WOUNDED PRISONER.

MR. MANDEVILLE (Tipperary, S.): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether a private soldier of Colonel Blake's Irish Brigade (in the service of the Transvaal Republic), having been taken prisoner of war, was killed at Ladysmith by one of the British garrison there, who, finding him wounded, disarmed, and under arrest, stabbed him to death with a bayonet; and in view of the fact that several thousands of British soldiers are now in safe custody as prisoners of war in Transvaal territory, what steps, if any, will the War Office take towards investigating this alleged offence, and punishing its author.

*MR. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS (for Mr. WYNDHAM): No information has been received of any such occurrence. If the hon. Member will give me the name of the person or newspaper responsible for the statement, with the date, I will make inquiry, if those particulars do not of themselves enable me to give him an answer.

PAY OF CONSULTING SURGEONS WITH THE TROOPS.

MR. WILLIAM REDMOND: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War if he can state the scale of remuneration agreed to be given to the consulting surgeons sent to the seat of war.

*MR. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS (for Mr. WYNDHAM): The payment in each case is at the rate of £5,000 a year, with free passage to South Africa and back.

VOLUNTEER OFFICERS WITH THE REGULARS.

GENERAL RUSSELL: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether, in view of the large number of casualties among regimental officers now serving at the front, there is any prospect of a relaxation, in favour of specially recommended and highly qualified officers, of the rule which forbids the employment of Volunteer officers to be attached to Regulars, unless the battalion to which they belong has supplied its full quota of Volunteers for the front.

*MR. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS (for Mr. WYNDHAM): In special cases the Secretary of State would be prepared to consider the attaching of highly qualified Volunteer officers to units in South Africa in want of officers. It would as a rule, however, only be possible to employ them as subalterns.

CHARGE TO SOLDIERS FOR LOST EQUIPMENT.

MR. SINCLAIR (Forfarshire): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for VOL. LXXVIII. [FOURTH SERIES.]

War whether private soldiers have to pay for the loss of any part of their equipment in the field, and the loss of a water bottle entails a charge of 3s. 5d. on the loser, even if it may have been lost through no fault of his own; and whether, having regard to the extreme difficulties of the campaign in South Africa, this rule can either be cancelled or relaxed.

*MR. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS: No charge is made for such articles lost or destroyed on active service.

CLOTHING FOR THE TROOPS.

GENERAL RUSSELL: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether the attention of the Government has been called to the extreme cold which prevails, more especially at night, on the high plateaus of South Africa during the winter months commencing about April; and whether steps will be taken to insure large reserves of warm clothing being accumulated for issue to the troops when they are likely to require it.

*MR. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS: Yes, Sir. Considerable reserves of warm clothing have already been sent out, and more will be sent out as supplies come in from the trade.

PRECAUTIONS AGAINST ENTERIC FEVER.

GENERAL RUSSELL: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether, in view of the prevalence of enteric fever among our troops now serving in South Africa, flannel belts are issued to the men as a part of their necessary equipment, as is the case in India.

*MR. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS: Two flannel or worsted belts are issued to every man going to South Africa, and a reserve supply has also been sent out.

COMPENSATION TO RESERVISTS PREMATURELY CALLED UP.

COLONEL DALBIAC (Camberwell, N.): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War will he explain how it happened that large numbers of Reservists were called up whose services were not required and for whom there was no barrack accommodation; and whether, considering that these men were compelled to proceed on furlough and idle their time at home, when they need not have been called up till required; and consequently might have continued their ordinary occupations, they will be granted some compensation, or at least their railway fares on returning to their homes and rejoining.

*MR. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS: Certain artificers in Section D of the Reserve were urgently required; but as the law now stands Section D cannot be called up until after the whole of Sections A, B, and C have been called up. As not very many men remained in those sections they were called up; but as they were not wanted immediately they were granted furlough if they desired it, and allowed to return to their occupations, the rules as to wearing uniform being at the same time relaxed. As such men are granted travelling expenses and the pay of their rank with 9d. a day for rations and messing instead of Reserve pay, they gain considerably by the transaction.

SUPERANNUATION AND COMPENSATION ALLOWANCES.

MR. GALLOWAY (Manchester, S.W.): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether allotment pay to the wife of a soldier on active service is paid monthly in advance; whether, in the event of the man being killed in action or dying from disease, the War Office reclaim the proportion of the amount overpaid from the date of his death; and whether in some cases demands have been made by the War Office authorities for payment in cash of the amount claimed instead of the amount being debited to the man's non-effective account.

*MR. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS: Allotment pay to a soldier's wife is paid monthly in advance, and if the soldier dies during the month the pay for the days after his death is not reclaimed otherwise than as a charge against his non-effective account; if an individual paymaster has acted as stated in the question he has made a mistake; if the hon. Member will give me the particulars of any case that has come under his notice, I shall be happy to make inquiries.

SEPARATION ALLOWANCES.

COLONEL DALBIAC: I beg to ask the Financial Secretary to the War Office

whether arrangements can be made for the more punctual and regular payments of separation allowance to the wives of Reservists, as many of these women, whose documents were present and in order, have been reduced to great straits through being kept out of their money for six or seven weeks.

*MR. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS: The pressure on the Army Pay Department has been very great; and it is possible that in dealing with the large number of separation allowances, which necessarily depend on information given by the soldier through his commanding officer, delay may occasionally have occurred. The information given by the soldier is often incomplete, and information is sometimes refused altogether. The women are also constantly changing their addresses. I have no reason to believe that there has been any general unpunctuality. If a special case is given to me, I shall be happy to inquire into it.

VICTORIA HOSPITAL, NETLEY.

CAPTAIN NORTON (Newington, W.): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether it has been brought to his notice that owing to the insufficient number of non-commissioned officers and men engaged in hospital duties at the Royal Victoria Hospital, Netley, these non-commissioned officers and men are frequently on duty for thirty-six hours at a time, and also that no regular night duty men, kept for night duty only, are employed there; and whether he will take the necessary steps to remedy this state of affairs.

*MR. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS (for Mr. WYNDHAM): The establishment of the Royal Army Medical Corps at Netley has been so depleted by the demands from South Africa that the men have not of late had the usual number of nights in bed; but additional men have been ordered from Aldershot, and a reinforcement is shortly expected from the Volunteer Medical Staff Corps, which will allow the men their proper rest. It is not customary to have a separate night duty. The staff office is ample, and further assistance has been declined from the lady superintendent.

BROTHERHOOD DEPRESSION RANGE FINDER.

MR. WEIR (Ross and Cromarty): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War if he will state the result of the experiments at Gibraltar during the manœuvres in 1899 of the Brotherhood depression range finder.

*MR. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS (for Mr. WYNDHAM): Nothing is known at the War Office of any trial of the Brotherhood depression range finder at Gibraltar. No allusion was made to any such matter in the report of the general officer commanding on the manœuvres there in 1899.

RIFLE RANGES.

COLONEL WYNDHAM MURRAY (Bath): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War, in view of the fact that since the issue of the Lee-Metford rifle 572 rifle ranges have been closed between 1890 and 1899 in Great Britain and Ireland, as against only 208 new ranges opened, will he state what number of ranges have been opened, and at what places since the date of the last return in 1899; and, as it is more than ever necessary at the present time and in future that constant practice throughout the country should take place, whether some of those ranges which were closed could be reopened for short range practice in places where there is no range accommodation.

*MR. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS (for Mr. WYNDHAM): In reply to the first part of the question the number is nineteen. If my hon. and gallant friend wishes, I will give him a list of these ranges. Efforts will be made in the direction indicated by the hon. Member in the second paragraph of his question, but the majority of the old ranges which have been closed were really unsafe under any circumstances, and the growth of buildings in the vicinity renders it doubtful whether much can be done in the case of the rest.

WAR OFFICE INQUIRY COMMITTEE, 1898.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: I beg to ask the Financial Secretary to the War Office when he expects to be able to communicate to the House the recommendations of the War Office

Inquiry Committee of which he was appointed Chairman in 1898; and what are the reasons for delaying the reforms in the War Department.

*MR. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS: The question of the hon. Member assumes that the recommendations of the Committee will be communicated to the House, but the Secretary of State has given no decision on the matter. In consequence of great pressure of work in the War Office, of which the members of the Committee have their full share, it has been impossible to hold meetings for the consideration of the chairman's draft report. No important change in the distribution of work that might be decided upon could in any case be carried out at the present time without disadvantage to the public service.

ROYAL ENGINEER DEPARTMENT.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: I beg to ask the Financial Secretary to the War Office whether his attention has been called to the high charges for masonry and carpentering work undertaken by the Royal Engineer Department as compared with buildings erected by contract in the open market; and whether the Secretary of State would be prepared to appoint a departmental committee to inquire into the system of control and administration in the department of the Inspector General of Fortifications.

*MR. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS: If the hon. Member will furnish any fact or figures tending to support the statement contained in the first paragraph of his question the Secretary of State will willingly cause inquiry to be made upon the subject, but a general assertion such as the hon. Member put forward serves no useful purpose and cannot be accepted. I may inform the hon. Member, however, that the system under which building work is now executed for the War Office is already undergoing review.

CASE OF GEORGE SMITH, OF DEVONPORT.

MR. KEARLEY (Devonport): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War what is the reason of the delay in paying compensation to George Smith, lately a plumber under the War Department, Devonport, who sustained severe injuries on the 28th April, 1899, whilst following his employment, by falling from the Raglan Barracks Clock Tower; and whether he is aware that the hurt pay he received for several months following the accident has now been discontinued.

*MR. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS: George Smith received full hurt pay until the 25th October. He has now been awarded a gratuity by the Treasury of £84 15s. 5d.

TRANSPORTS—3RD BATTALION ROYAL WEST KENT REGIMENT.

CAPTAIN NORTON: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether it has been brought to his notice that the 3rd Battalion Royal West Kent Regiment was recently conveyed to Malta in a vessel which was in many respects unsatisfactory; and whether he will make inquiries as to the statement that the captain, a German, was only prevented from wrecking the vessel by the timely action of the first mate, and that the captain afterwards attempted to commit suicide; also as to the statement that the provisions were scanty, and the prices of provisions at the canteen belonging to the ship exorbitant.

MR. GOSCHEN: A report has been received that the captain of the "Golconda," the vessel in question, was incapacitated from continuing in command of the ship owing to an accident and the after effects of an attack of influenza, and that thereupon the command devolved upon the first officer. The captain subsequently committed suicide on the arrival of the ship at Malta. The captain had been twenty-two years in the service of the British India Company. No complaint has been made by the officer commanding the troops as to the quantity or prices of the provisions.

VOLUNTEER COMMISSIONS.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War what steps have been taken by the Commander-in-Chief to put a stop to the sale, by an agency in the City of London, of honorary colonelcies in Volunteer regiments; and whether it is the intention of the Secretary of State to advise the cancellation of the commissions of gentlemen who have obtained such honorary rank by improper payments which could not be regarded as coming under the category of regimental subscriptions.

*MR. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS (for Mr. WYNDHAM): Every case of an officer recommended for an honorary colonelcy in the Auxiliary Forces is carefully investigated, and recently the Secretary of State refused to appoint a gentleman whose name had been put forward for the honorary colonelcy of a Volunteer battalion. Other measures are not at present considered necessary.

RUSSELL "SHOOTING DIRECTOR."

SIR J. FERGUSSON (Manchester, N.E.): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether an invention by Mr. T. G. Russell of a shooting director, applicable to either rifles or ordnance, was ordered by the Commander-in-Chief in 1889 to be examined and tried at Aldershot; whether such examination and trial took place, and whether the inventor was allowed to be present; and will he lay upon the Table the report of the examining committee.

*MR. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS (for Mr. WYNDHAM): The invention referred to was tried by a committee at Aldershot in 1890. The committee did not recommend its adoption into the service, and the General Officer Commanding at Aldershot concurred. The inventor was not allowed to be present at the trials; but was permitted to go to Aldershot for the purpose of explaining his apparatus to the officers who would conduct them. Such reports are confidential, and cannot be produced.

SIR J. FERGUSSON: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Admiralty whether an invention by Mr. T. G. Russell of a shooting director, applicable to either rifles or ordnance, was ordered by the Admiralty to be tested, and was tested at Whale Island and at sea in 1898; whether, in consequence of the success of the first trials, 300 rifle appliances were ordered by the Admiralty; whether further and complete trials were subsequently made with both skilled shot and young sailors; whether heavy gun trials of the invention were carried out at Spithead with success in the presence of the inventor, and also on board the flag ship of the Channel Squadron in his absence; were further trials ever carried out at Spithead in the absence of the inventor; and whether he will lay upon the Table reports upon these several trials.

MR. GOSCHEN: I will take my right hon. friend's questions seriatim. The invention in question was tested as stated. Three hundred rifle appliances were ordered because it was considered that a more extended trial was desirable. Further trials were subsequently made with skilled shots and young seamen. Trials of this invention were carried out at Spithead in the presence of the inventor, but were not sufficiently successful to justify the adoption of this invention for heavy guns. The inventor has informed the Admiralty that some trials of this invention were carried out in the Channel Squadron, presumably in his absence, but no report of these trials was made by the vice-admiral in command. Some further trials were carried out at Spithead in the absence of the inventor. The officer conducting the trials found it necessary to stop the attendance of the inventor at these trials on account of his constant interference with the men firing. It is not customary nor in accordance with the interests of the public service to lay upon the Table confidential reports of this nature.

THE BRITISH AMBASSADOR AT PARIS.

MR. WILLIAM REDMOND: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether the Government have ordered the temporary withdrawal of the British Ambassador from Paris in consequence of the alleged offensive tone of the French press regarding the war in Africa.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: The answer is in the negative.

MR. WILLIAM REDMOND: May I ask the right hon. Gentleman who is in charge of the British Embassy in Paris?

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I know nothing about that, but I suppose the next in command.

THE TREASURY—SUGGESTED SELECT COMMITTEE.

*MR. GIBSON BOWLES: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether Her Majesty's Government will consent to the appointment of a Select Committee of this House to consider the constitution and functions of the Treasury Department, and to inquire how far the exercise of its power in governing every Department of the Government is for the public benefit, and to what extent its claim to a voice in all decisions of administrative authority and policy leads to delay.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I hardly think that so fundamental an inquiry as that suggested by my hon. friend could with advantage be undertaken at the present time.

RUSSIAN CONCESSIONS IN NORTHERN PERSIA.

MR. DRAGE (Derby): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs if he can conveniently state to the House whether any exclusive concessions have been granted to Russian subjects in Northern Persia for the construction of railways, or for any other commercial object; and whether any attempt has been made by Her Majesty's Government to obtain the demarcation of an English sphere of interest in Southern Persia.

*MR. GIBSON BOWLES: May I also ask my right hon. friend whether these railways are not only not confined to Northern Persia, but extend to Bunder Abbas, at the mouth of the Persian Gulf, and close to Baluchistan.

*MR. BRODRICK: I think my answer to the question on the Paper will cover the supplementary question. The only concessions granted to Russian subjects in Northern Persia of which Her Majesty's Government are aware are:—A concession for the construction of a road from Enzell to Kasvin. A concession for working copper and other mineral deposits in the mountainous districts of Azerhjan, known as the Karadagh Range. Her Majesty's Government are fully alive to the desirability of maintaining British interests in Persia, but the Persian Government has not hitherto deemed it advisable to recognise spheres of interest of any foreign Powers in that country.

OSMAN DIGNA.

MR. WILLIAM REDMOND: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs if he will state the nature of the treatment accorded to Osman Digna at present, and how it is intended to treat him in future.

*MR. BRODRICK: We have no information as to the nature of the treatment accorded to Osman Digna beyond the statement which was communicated to the Egyptian press and reproduced in the papers here. This was to the effect that Osman Digna would be taken to Rosetta, and there interned with the other Dervish prisoners.

INSUBORDINATION AMONG EGYPTIAN TROOPS.

MR. WILLIAM REDMOND: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether the reports of insubordination on the part of certain regiments of Egyptian troops are well founded; and whether he has any statement to make on the subject.

*MR. BRODRICK: It is understood that two black battalions at Omdurman showed some signs of insubordination. The matter is being dealt with by the Sirdar, and the latest reports of the situation are satisfactory.

THE HYDROGRAPHICAL CON- FERENCE.

MR. WEIR: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether he is now in a position to give the House some information in regard to the deliberations of the Hydrographical Conference, which assembled last summer for the purpose of considering, amongst other matters, questions affecting the fishing industry.

*MR. BRODRICK: Communications have recently passed on this subject, but Her Majesty's Government are not yet in a position to make any announcement.

INCOME TAX RETURNS.

MR. DALZIEL (Kirkcaldy Burghs): I beg to ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will kindly explain how it is that a servant of a limited company is not allowed for income tax purposes to return his income on the basis of an average of the preceding three years, but must pay on the current year, although the company itself may return a three years average and also servants of private firms.

SIR M. HICKS BEACH: It is the practice to allow clerks, travellers, ware-housemen and other subordinate employes of public companies the benefit of the three years average for income tax purposes. On the other hand, directors, secretaries, managers, and other persons holding a distinctive office are charged—as required by law—on their actual salaries, fees, or other emoluments for the year then current. The system of average was devised to meet the case of businesses in which profits are precarious. Incomes derived from fixed and regular salaries, such as are paid to the chief officers of limited companies, do not fall within that category. But it has been thought that it may be extended to the case of subordinates whose employment is more precarious and probably largely dependent on the volume of business.

LAND SALES BY MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

SIR WALTER FOSTER (Derby, Ilkeston): I beg to ask the President of the Local Government Board, if he can state the area and value of land sold by municipal corporations under instruments confirmed by the Board during last year, and also the total area of the lands sold and the total amount realised by such sales in the last five years.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD (MR. CHAPLIN, Lincolnshire, Sleaford): During 1899 the Local Government Board approved of the sale by municipal corporations of about 59 acres of land. A small portion of the land was to be sold at a perpetual ground rent of £165, and the reserve price for the remainder amounted to £21,132. The total area of land authorised by the Board to be sold during the last five years is 486 acres. Of this part was to be sold at a perpetual ground rent of £471, and the reserve price of the remainder amounted to £258,000. The Board are not in possession of information showing the extent to which these lands have been actually sold.

OLD AGE PENSIONS.

SIR JAMES RANKIN (Herefordshire, Leominster): I beg to ask the President of the Local Government Board whether any information has been collected by the Local Government Board as to the probable number of persons who are living in the United Kingdom, and who fulfil the conditions for receiving an old-age pension laid down by the Select Committee upon the question of provision for the aged poor, presided over by the President of the Local Government Board, and which presented its report last summer; and if so, whether he could give such information to the House; and whether the Government have any intention of proposing any legislation on the subject of the aged poor this session.

MR. CHAPLIN: Yes, Sir. Information of the character referred to has been collected by a committee which was appointed for that purpose before the close of last session. Their report has been presented and it was laid on the Table last week. It is not the intention of the Government to propose legislation upon the subject of their inquiry during this session.

PRECAUTIONS AGAINST FIRE ON WAR SHIPS.

MR. BOND (Nottingham, E.): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Admiralty whether the attention of the Admiralty has been drawn to the danger arising in time of war from the use of wood fittings and fixtures in iron warships, as demonstrated by occurrences in the recent war between Spain and America; and whether any, and what steps have been taken to obviate such danger in the case of vessels already built or in process of construction.

MR. GOSCHEN: I need scarcely say that my most earnest attention has been given to this matter, and the attention of successive Boards of Admiralty has been constantly directed to reducing the danger of fire on board men-of-war in action, not only as a result of recent experience but for many years previously. It has been the endeavour to reduce the wooden fittings in ships to the narrowest limits compatible with comfort and habitability. Risks of fire are not only dealt with by minimising the use of wood, but much attention has been given to the greater efficiency of the fire service. Metal substitutes for wooden fittings have been tried where found suitable, and in ships now under construction non-inflammable wood is being largely used. As regards the older ships it will be our endeavour to minimise the danger of fire in these ships as far as possible when they are undergoing repair.

ROYAL NAVAL RESERVE PENSIONERS.

SIR CHARLES DILKE: I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade how many boys have now been enrolled as probationers in the Royal Naval Reserve, under Section 6 of the Mercantile Marine Fund Act.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF TRADE (Mr. RITCHIE, Croydon): Two hundred and fifty-three.

MERCHANT SHIPPING—CREW ACCOMMODATION.

MR. HAVELOCK WILSON (Middlesbrough): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he can state the number of places occupied or exclusively used by firemen and trimmers on board the Royal Mail Steamship "Campania," owned by the Cunard Company, the "Teutonic," owned by the White Star Line, the steamship "Australian," owned by the Allan Line, the "Dunvegan Castle," owned by Messrs. Currie and Company, the "Australian," owned by the Peninsular and Oriental Company, and the "Norman," owned by the Union Steam Shipping Company, respectively; and whether he can state, with respect to each of these ships, the cubical measurement and the superficial measurement of such places measured on the deck or ceiling; the height of such places measured from deck to floor; how many tiers of bunks are in each place; and how many firemen and trimmers are accommodated in such apartments.

MR. RITCHIE: The Board of Trade are not yet in possession of the intricate and complicated particulars necessary to enable me to reply in detail to the hon. Member's questions. If it were, it would be quite impossible to inflict on the House so long an answer as would be necessary. Inquiries are being made, and the result shall be communicated to him.

REORGANISATION OF THE EDUCATION DEPARTMENT.

MR. GORDON (Elgin and Nairn): I beg to ask the Vice-President of the Committee of Council on Education whether the Departmental Committee, which was originally appointed for the re-organisation of the Education Department and the Science and Art Department, and whose reference has since been enlarged to cover the organisation of the Board of Education, has yet presented any report on any, or on all, of the matters now included in its reference; and whether he will now communicate such report or reports to the House.

THE VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF COUNCIL ON EDUCATION (Sir J. GORST, Cambridge University): The Committee have made already two interim reports. The final report is shortly expected. When that report is received, if the hon. Member will ask the question again, I will let him know if it can be laid on the Table.

CONSULTATIVE COMMITTEE OF THE EDUCATION DEPARTMENT.

COLONEL LOCKWOOD (Essex, Epping): I beg to ask the Vice-President of the Committee of Council on Education whether any, and, if any, what steps have been taken to frame a constitution for the Consultative Committee under Section 4 of the Board of Education Act; and whether he can say when the draft of the Order proposing to appoint this Committee will be laid upon the Table of the House, in accordance with Section 5 of the Act.

SIR J. GORST: The preparation of the Order in Council appointing a Consultative Committee under Section 4 of the Board of Education Act is now under the consideration of Her Majesty's Government. I cannot at present answer the question in the second paragraph.

SIR W. HART DYKE (Kent, Dartford): May I ask how far the Department is independent of Parliament in a matter concerning an Act passed last session to come into force on the 1st April next?

*MR. SPEAKER: Notice must be given of that question.

EDUCATION GRANTS.

SIR ALBERT ROLLIT (Islington, S.): I beg to ask the Vice-President of the Committee of Council on Education, does the Education Department see its way to extend to commercial subjects the educational grants which are at present made to science and art subjects.

SIR J. GORST: The grant at present made by Parliament is restricted to Science and Art by the terms of the Vote. The Government would not move the House of Commons to alter this appropriation until the whole of their plans for higher Education has been submitted to and approved by Parliament.

THE WALLACE COLLECTION.

MR. BARTLEY: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury when it is proposed to open the Wallace Collection to the public.

THE FINANCIAL SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY (Mr. HANBURY, Preston): The Trustees have informed the Treasury that they hope to be in a position to open the Gallery by the beginning of May.

WILL INDEXES AT SOMERSET HOUSE.

COLONEL WELBY (Taunton): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury whether he is aware that the index to early wills in Somerset House is in years or small groups of years and in antiquated handwritings very difficult for ordinary consulters to read; and whether he can see his way to causing a more general index, by reigns or centuries, to be made in modern handwriting or print, showing the place of residence and county of each testator.

MR. HANBURY: The indexes between 1383 and 1852 are by years: the indexes between 1852 and 1857 form a single group, and the indexes from 1858 to the present time are again by years. Between 1383 and (say) 1630 the indexes are frequently very difficult to decipher. From 1630 to 1852 they are in the engrossing hand and somewhat difficult for the ordinary reader to decipher. From 1853 to the present time they are satisfactory. Of course such an index as my hon. and gallant friend suggests could be made; but it could not be done by the present staff of the Registry and it would involve a very considerable expenditure.

IRELAND—JUDICIAL APPOINTMENTS.

MR. DALY (Monaghan, S.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, whether seeing that recently gentlemen differing politically from the Government have been promoted to be judges in England and Scotland, he can state when the same rule will be adopted by the Government in Ireland as that adopted by the Government in England and Scotland in this matter.

THE ATTORNEY - GENERAL FOR IRELAND (MR. ATKINSON, Londonderry, N.): The Irish Judges are not appointed by the Irish Government, but by Her Majesty on the recommendation of the Prime Minister. The question should, therefore, be addressed to the First Lord of the Treasury.

BELFAST POLICE CELLS.

MR. DALY: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that in October last a man named James Thompson died in the police cells at Belfast; and that it transpired at the inquest that the cells were crawling with vermin and alive with rats, and were equally dangerous to the police as to prisoners; and whether he can state if any efforts have been made by the Corporation to remedy this state of things.

MR. ATKINSON (for Mr. G. W. BALFOUR): I am informed there is no foundation whatever for the statements contained in the first paragraph. The man James Thompson, to whom the question presumably refers, died more than three years ago, namely, in October, 1896. He was brought to the police office charged with drunkenness, and was at once removed to the Union Hospital, where he died the next day from hemorrhage of the brain. The police cells are undergoing reconstruction, and are now almost completed. When finished they will be second to none in the United Kingdom.

MONAGHAN AND THE PEACE PRESERVATION ACT.

MR. DALY: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that the Monaghan County Council passed a resolution requesting the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland to revoke the proclamation under the Peace Preservation Act from the baronies of Farnie and Cremorne, as well as the parish of Ematris in that county; and whether he will grant the prayer of the County Council in this matter when it is remembered that the county court judge at Monaghan has been presented with white gloves five times, and at Castleblaney eight times, during the past five years, owing to the crimeless state of the county, and that during the time mentioned the county Monaghan was the only county in Ulster without any cases to be tried at the winter assizes.

MR. ATKINSON (for Mr. G. W. BALFOUR): The resolution referred to in the first paragraph has been received. It is the fact that no criminal cases have been tried by the county court judge at Monaghan and Castleblaney Quarter Sessions during the past five years. There have been, however, five cases tried at winter assizes from the county during the same period. The resolution appears to assume that the general condition of the county is evidenced by the number of cases for trial before a Court of Criminal Jurisdiction. Unfortunately this is not so, as many outrages of a serious character have been committed in the county for which no persons have been made amenable. The County Council have been informed that the Government do not consider it desirable to revoke the proclamation in question.

PROCLAIMED MEETING IN ROSCOMMON.

MR. J. P. FARRELL (Cavan, W.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he can state the grounds upon which a public meeting called to establish a branch of the United Irish League at Rooskey, county Roscommon, was suppressed; who it was that swore the informations upon which Mr. Browne, R.M., acted; who was the person whom it was alleged the meeting was called to boycott; what were the expenses of the special police force drafted in to suppress the meeting; and whether the district will be called upon to pay these expenses.

MR. ATKINSON (for Mr. G. W. BALFOUR): The proclamation which was issued prohibiting the holding of the meeting at Rooskey on the 21st January was based upon an information sworn by the district inspector of constabulary. This information was to the effect that he had reasonable grounds for believing, and did believe, that the meeting would lead to boycotting and intimidation and to a breach of the peace, and would be an unlawful assembly. I cannot for obvious reasons give the name of the person against whom the meeting was believed to have been directed. The expenses of the police force employed in enforcing the proclamation amounted to £31 3s., of which amount a sum of £4 18s. 2d. will be recoverable from the County Roscommon.

MR. J. P. FARRELL: Did the sub-inspector give any names in his information?

MR. ATKINSON: I cannot answer that question.

MR. FLAVIN (Kerry, N.): Why are not other meetings of the United Irish League suppressed as well as this one?

[No answer was given.]

SANITARY WORKS IN IRELAND.

MR. J. P. FARRELL: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he can state what steps have been taken to arrange the areas of charge for special sanitary works under the Local Government Act; whether he is aware that in consequence of the passage of that Act local districts have already had urban charges levied on the general county rate as a union at large charge, thereby creating dissatisfaction amongst the rural population; and that waterworks and other sanitary works intended solely for the benefit of urban districts have been made leviable on union districts; and whether it is proposed by Order in Council or by legislation to remedy this grievance.

MR. ATKINSON (for Mr. G. W. BALFOUR): The law in regard to areas of charge for special sanitary expenses has not been changed by the Local Government (Ireland) Act, and the Local Government Board have taken no steps in the matter since the issue of their Orders of 15th May and 17th July last, which, having been validated by the Public Works Loans Act of last year, were supposed to have redressed the more important of the grievances then complained of. It is not a fact that waterworks and other charges for urban districts have been levied over unions, but small public health charges for portions of rural districts have been charged over the entire rural districts of which these portions form part. Any further alteration in the areas of charge thus fixed would probably be ultra vires, but the cases of one or two localities which were not included in the Amending Order of July last have since been the subject of representations to the Local Government Board, and it is under consideration whether it may not be advisable in the course of the present session to give the Board, by legislation, power to deal with such cases.

LISTOWEL MAILS.

MR. FLAVIN: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether he is aware that great public inconvenience has been caused for several years by the late arrival of Her Majesty's mails at Limerick, Rathkeale, Newcastle, and Listowel, and all the intervening stations and surrounding district, between Limerick Junction and Tralee, and that when the train connection at Limerick Junction fails (which is frequently three times a week) the arrival of the mails at Listowel and other important towns is eight hours late, and the answer in reply is also delayed seventeen hours; and whether, seeing that numerous complaints have been made from time to time by public bodies and commercial houses, owing to the inconvenience caused and loss sustained by the late arrival of the mails, some remedy can be applied to prevent a continuation of this grievance.

MR. HANBURY: The train connection referred to has failed fifteen times during the last five months, but during that period there has been only one week, that immediately preceding Christmas Day, in which three failures have occurred. There has only been one failure of junction within the last six weeks, and now that the outgoing American mails are no longer forwarded on Wednesdays by the ordinary night mail service to Ireland, one of the causes of delay has been removed. A return of the amount of correspondence delayed by these failures was taken some time ago, and as it appeared that the number of letters was very small, the Postmaster General did not feel justified in incurring the expense which would have been necessary to provide a remedy, but a fresh return is now being taken with the view of ascertaining whether the circumstances have altered. An answer shall be sent to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

MR. FLAVIN: Will the Postmaster General subsidise the local cycle company in order to ensure the more rapid delivery of Her Majesty's mails?

MR. SPEAKER: Order, order!

GALWAY MAILS.

MR. PINKERTON (Galway): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, if he is aware that in the County of Galway, in a thickly populated district comprising the townlands of Carrabrown, Ballindooley, Kiloughter, Coursefield, Ballyguerane, and Angliham, there is no post office, daily or weekly delivery of letters, and that the people of those townlands are obliged to go to Galway, a distance of four miles, to post or receive letters; and if he will take steps to have this state of matters rectified.

MR. HANBURY: Inquiry is being made with the view of affording a delivery of letters in the district referred to, and the question of establishing a post office in the locality will be considered at the same time. A reply will be communicated to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

TOBACCO GROWING IN IRELAND.

MR. WILLIAM REDMOND: I beg to ask the Vice-President of the Agricultural Department for Ireland, if he can state the results of experiments recently made in Ireland as to growing tobacco; and whether his Department intends to take steps to encourage this industry in Ireland for the future.

*THE VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT FOR IRELAND (Mr. PLUNKETT, Dublin Co., S.): The experiments in tobacco growing referred to in the question have been conducted during the past two seasons by the Donaghpatrick Co-operative Agricultural Society, County Meath, one of the societies established by the Irish Agricultural Organisation Society. They go to show that tobacco will grow luxuriantly in Ireland. The variety grown was English Virginian. The tobacco was manufactured by Messrs. Goodbody, of Tullamore, 35lb. of leaf producing 33lb. of plug and flake tobacco. No flavour was added during the manufacturing process, and the result was a fairly good sample of strong, coarse tobacco, containing an abnormal percentage of moisture and also of nicotine. This Irish sample is nearly twice as strong as the strongest tobacco sold, and therefore presumably for some purposes twice as good. The cost of manufacture was 4d. per pound, and the Excise duty 2s. 8d. At the lowest estimate the tobacco sells wholesale at 4s. per pound, yielding a gross profit of £132 per acre, from which must be deducted rent, labour, and other expenses of production. The Donaghpatrick Society proposes to continue its tobacco growing experiments this year, only with a finer quality, and it is also intended to carry out similar experiments on the experimental farms of other societies in different parts of Ireland. It will be the duty of the Department of Agriculture to watch these proceedings closely, and give whatever expert advice and assistance that may be necessary.

MR. WILLIAM REDMOND: May I ask the right hon. Gentleman whether, if these experiments are satisfactory, he will take steps to remove the prohibition which now exists to the growing of tobacco in Ireland; whether he will direct the attention of his Department to comment on this matter in the present issue of the Irish Tobacco Trade Journal, and whether he will place some of this tobacco in the smoking room of the House.

[No answer was given.]

CONGESTED DISTRICTS IN IRELAND.

MR. WILLIAM REDMOND: I beg to ask the Vice-President of the Agricultural Department for Ireland whether he is aware that the public bodies in county Clare have passed resolutions in favour of having the entire county included in the scheduled districts under the Congested Districts Board; and whether there is any intention of complying with this desire.

*MR. PLUNKETT: It is the fact that resolutions have been adopted by local bodies, of the nature mentioned in the first paragraph of the question. Legislation would be necessary, however, to give effect to these resolutions, and I cannot give any undertaking that the Government will introduce such legislation.

RE-AFFORESTATION IN IRELAND.

MR. FFRENCH (Wexford, S.): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether he has been informed that a resolution was passed by the Wexford County Council condemning the wholesale destruction of woods in Ireland; and whether he would consider the question of introducing a Bill for the re-afforesting of that country.

*MR. PLUNKETT: With the permission of my right hon. friend I will reply to this question. The resolution referred to has been received, and, as regards the suggested introduction of a Bill for the purpose of re-afforestation, I may remind the hon. Member that by the Agriculture and Technical Instruction Act of last year the duty is imposed upon the new department of considering the question of forestry with a view to its improvement and development.

IRISH UNIVERSITY EDUCATION.

The following question appeared on the paper:—

MR. JOHN REDMOND: To ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether, in view of the admitted importance and urgency of the question of university education in Ireland, he will afford facilities at an early date for its discussion.

On Mr. REDMOND being called on to put it, he said: Inasmuch as one of my hon. friends has to-day obtained the first place in the ballot for the discussion of this subject, I will not put the question.

SCOTLAND—SCHOOL BOARD FRANCHISE.

MR. WEIR: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether he is aware that many thousands of ratepayers in Scotland who are entitled to vote for the parliamentary representative and the county and parish council have no vote for school board elections by reason of their rentals being less than £4; and will he consider the advisability of introducing legislation this session which will place the school board electorate on a satisfactory footing.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: The facts stated in the first paragraph are correct, but I cannot hold out any hope of legislation on the subject being introduced this session.

MR. WEIR: Will the right hon. Gentleman support the Bill I have brought in, as for several years past?

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I must wait until I have had time to study it.

MARINE INSURANCE BILL.

MR. WARR (Liverpool, East Toxteth): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether it is the intention of the Government to introduce the Marine Insurance Bill during the present session.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: The answer to this question is in the affirmative.

NEW MEMBER SWORN.

George Denison Faber, esquire, for the Borough of York.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE (FINANCIAL BUSINESS).

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I do not think the House will, under the somewhat exceptional conditions of the session, object to the motion which I now have the honour to move, as this session is differentiated from previous sessions in one or two very important factors which I will briefly recall to the House. It is absolutely necessary that without delay the War Office should obtain further powers to spend money, and that will be done under the Estimate which will be proposed by the Under Secretary for War. It is further necessary that the Exchequer shall have power to make payments, and that will be done under the Appropriation Bill which will immediately follow my hon. friend's statement. It will also be necessary before the 31st March that the Treasury should have further powers to obtain money by borrowing or otherwise. The power to take Tuesday for the discussion of financial business, the House will see, is, therefore, proposed in the interest rather of the House than of the Government. The financial business, which will enable us to carry on the necessary operations in South Africa and comply with the law, must be got through by a certain definite date, and if the discussion is to be as complete and adequate as the House would probably desire, it is necessary the Government should obtain such an amount of time as will give that latitude to discussion which they would wish to possess. We take no power, it will be seen, to deal with any legislative proposal, and there will consequently be no temptation to abuse the powers for which we are now asking. I need not reiterate that we are prepared to make an exception to the motion in the case of Tuesday, the 20th instant, which we trust will be entirely allocated to the discussion of the question of the inquiry respecting the Jameson raid. May I, in conclusion, express a hope that the House will grant us these powers and privileges without lengthened debate, so that, with the shortest possible delay, my hon. friend may be able to lay his statement before the House.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That, until the end of the financial year, Financial Business do have precedence on Tuesday whenever set down by the Government, and that the provisions of Standing Order 56 be extended to that day."—(Mr. A. J. Balfour.)

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN (Stirling Burghs): I am of opinion that the House is hardly in a humour at present to offer much impediment to Government business, especially of the important kind to which the right hon. Gentleman has referred. At the same time I must say I look in vain for a precedent such as we might have expected the right hon. Gentleman to lay down for the proposals he now makes. There are seven weeks between the present time and the end of March. There are seven of these Tuesdays over which he hangs this sword, and I may further point out that this year is particularly favourable to the Government in this respect, that Easter comes in April, so that there is no deduction to be made from the time on account of holidays. On that ground I should have thought it was quite superfluous to make a motion of this sort which threatens, in an unpleasant way, the rights and privileges of private Members.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: It is in their own interest.

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: Each Member does not think that it is in his own interest to have his privileges curtailed. As to what the right hon. Gentleman has said of the necessity or probability of extensive discussion of the Army and other Estimates, I have no doubt there may be a desire fully to discuss them, but, so far as the great schemes of Army extension and organisation go, I should imagine it would be much more suitable that they should be postponed for further consideration at a time when the atmosphere—I mean the moral atmosphere—is somewhat cooler, and when we are away from the influence of existing circumstances. However, as I said when I first rose, I do not think there is any disposition to put any obstacle in the way of the Government managing their business as they choose in this respect, and, therefore, I make no demur to the proposal of the right hon. Gentleman.

*MR. D. A. THOMAS (Merthyr Tydvil): I had intended to move, before I received the assurance of the right hon. Gentleman, an Amendment to except Tuesday, the 20th inst., from the operation of this resolution. I think even now it would be more in accordance with precedent if an Amendment of that kind were embodied. [AN HON. MEMBER: No, no!] Well, I say "Yes," and I know what I am talking about. I may remind the House that when the right hon. Gentleman's Government took the time of private Members in 1898, he specially excepted two Wednesdays. Still, after the assurance of the right hon. Gentleman that he is not only going to except Tuesday, the 20th inst., but also to allocate the entire day to the discussion set down for that occasion, I do not propose to move any Amendment.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL (Donegal, S.): I can well understand my right hon. friend the Leader of the Opposition getting up in a spirit of enormous generosity and acceding practically to the Government proposal. But we on these benches are private Members. This is a private Members' affair, and should not be a matter of arrangement between the two front benches. When the First Lord of the Treasury comes down with motions of this kind, he usually produces a half-sheet of paper, on which are set forth precedents by which he wishes to justify his proposal. We are told that such and such a thing occurred in such and such a year. Now, I have had an extended Parliamentary experience, and I never recollect a motion of this kind having been made so early in the session. It is a systematic attack on the rights of private Members. We on these benches may claim to be unselfish in our opposition to this proposal, for we have no motions down for the Tuesdays which are affected by it. I do ask the right hon. Gentleman or one of his colleagues to give us a precedent for a motion of this kind. It is a shameless raid on the rights and interests of private Members, and if such things are to be allowed, we shall soon have left to us no rights and no interests.

MR. JAMES LOWTHER (Kent, Thanet) said that whilst under the special circumstances he did not desire to throw any difficulties in the way of the Government, it was only right that he should explain that the suggestion he made a few days previously to the right hon. Gentleman the First Lord of the Treasury had been misunderstood. He had made the suggestion that when the Government found it necessary to take time which otherwise would be at the disposal of private Members of the House, the Government should accede an equivalent to the private Members at some later period in the session, when the exigencies of public business permitted it. It was a precedent which had been followed by Mr. Gladstone, who, when he asked private Members to give him one night, undertook to place private Members' business on the Paper on a Government night in the order in which it came. That was the suggestion which he made.

MR. FLYNN (Cork, N.) opposed the motion that financial business should have precedence on Tuesdays. The motion, in his opinion, simply meant that seven Tuesdays would be taken away from private Members. The tendency of Parliamentary procedure of this kind was to render the private Members more and more a negligible quantity. The danger he foresaw was that under the pressure of urgency the House would be asked to pledge itself not only to the amount of money and men required by the Government to prosecute the war, but to additions to the Navy and war material also. It appeared to him that private Members of the House had no business in the House but to be whipped up to go into one lobby or another and vote aye or no as the case might be. As for any legislation of a social character, they appeared to have no place whatever, yet it was well known the most useful legislation of that character had been initiated by private Members in the past. So far as he was concerned, so long as he had had a seat in the House he always had protested, and always should protest, against the giving of private Members' time to the Government of the day.

Mr. Swift MacNeill.

MR. JOHN REDMOND (Waterford) disclaimed being one of those who took an exalted view of the question of private Members' time. He had repeatedly in the past voted in favour of the Government absorbing the time of private Members, because, in his opinion, the only chance of any practical legislation was through the Government. If the programme was generally approved the House ought to give its time to carrying it out. When he had voted for the Government on similar occasions in the past, it had always been when there was legislation proposed of which he approved. The official Leader of the Opposition had said that he did not oppose the present motion, and in saying that he had spoken for the chief portion, no doubt, of the Opposition. The right hon. Gentleman had said that no one was in the humour to put difficulties in the way of the Government; but speaking for a considerable number of the hon. Gentlemen who sat and thought with him, he (Mr. Redmond) might say they were in no humour to give any facilities to the Government to obtain a further fifteen millions of money, to bring to a successful conclusion a war which they regarded as an unjust and an abominable war.

MR. BRYN ROBERTS (Carmarvonshire, Eifion): I think there ought to be an assurance such as has been asked for by the hon. Member for Thanet, and also the assurance that the right hon. Gentleman will apply all the Government time to Government business as well; otherwise it will be open to the Government to apply the whole of their own time to other purposes, while the time of private Members is used for the financial business of the Government. This motion is not reasonable in my opinion, because it will enable the Government, if they choose, much pressed—I think we ought to to seize certain nights when matters receive some assurance that if this House which they do not like to be discussed grants this facility it will be used for the are going to be debated, and having purpose of carrying on financial business regard to the way in which the Govern- which could not otherwise be carried on ment has studiously avoided all questions in time.

as to whether General Buller warned The House divided:—Ayes, 294 ; Noes, them—a question which will be very 40. (Division List No. 11.)

AYES.

| | | |
|--|---|--|
| Acland-Hood, Capt. Sir Alex. F. Aird, John Allan, William (Gateshead) Allhusen, Augustus Henry E. Archdale, Edward Mervyn Arnold, Alfred Arnold-Forster, Hugh O. Asquith, Rt. Hon. Herbert H. Atkinson, Rt. Hon. John Austin, Sir John (Yorkshire) Bailey, James (Waltham) Baillie, J. E. B. (Inverness) Bainbridge, Emerson Baird, John George Alexander Baker, Sir John Balcarres, Lord Baldwin, Alfred Balfour, Rt. Hon. A. J. (Manch'r) Banbury, Frederick George Barnes, Frederic Gorell Barry, Rt. Hon. A. H. Smith- (Hunts) Bartley, George C. T. Beach, Rt. Hon. Sir M. H. (Bristol) Beach, Rt. Hon. W. W. B. (Hants.) Beckett, Ernest William Bethell, Commander Bhownaggee, Sir M. M. Biddulph, Michael Blakiston-Houston, John Blundell, Colonel Henry Bond, Edward Bonser, Henry Cosmo Orme Bowles, Capt. H. F. (Middlesex) Bowles, T. Gibson (King's Lynn) Brodrick, Rt. Hon. St. John Brookfield, A. Montagu Brown, Alexander H. Bryce, Rt. Hon. James Builard, Sir Harry Butcher, John George Buxton, Sydney Charles Caldwell, James Cameron, Sir Chas. (Glasgow) Campbell-Bannerman, Sir H. Causton, Richard Knight Cavendish, R. F. (N. Lancs.) Cavendish, V. C. W. (Derbysh.) Ceel, Lord Hugh (Greenwich) Chamberlain, Rt. Hon. J. (Birm.) Chamberlain, J. A. (Worc'r) Channing, Francis Alston Chaplin, Rt. Hon. Henry Charrington, Spencer Chelsea, Viscount Coghill, Douglas Harry Collings, Rt. Hon. Jesse Columb, Sir John Charles R. Cook, Fred Lucas (Lambeth) Corbett, A. Cameron (Glasgow) Cornwallis, Pienness Stanley W. Courtney, Rt. Hon. Leonard H. | Cox, Irwin Edward Bainbridge Cripps, Charles Alfred Cross, Alexander (Glasgow) Cross, H. Shepherd (Bolton) Cubitt, Hon. Henry Currie, Sir Donald Curzon, Viscount Dalkeith, Earl of Dalrymple, Sir Charles Davies, Sir H. D. (Chatham) Davies, M. Vaughan- (Cardigan) Dewar, Arthur Dickson-Poynder, Sir John P. Dilke, Rt. Hon. Sir Charles Dixon-Hartland, Sir F. Dixon Dorington, Sir John Edward Doughty, George Douglas, Rt. Hon. A. Akers- Douglas-Pennant, Hon. E. S. Drage, Geoffrey Duncombe, Hon. Hubert V. Dyke, Rt. Hon. Sir William Hart Egerton, Hon. A. de Tatton Elliot, Hn. A. Ralph Douglas Evans, Sir F. H. (South'ton) Faber, George Denison Farquharson, Dr. Robert Fenwick, Charles Fergusson, Rt. Hon. Sir J. (Manch'r) Field, Admiral (Eastbourne) Finlay, Sir Robert Bannatyne Fisher, William Haves Fison, Frederick William Fitzmaurice, Lord Edmond Flannery, Sir Fortescue Fletcher, Sir Henry Flower, Ernest Foster, Sir Walter (Derby Co.) Fry, Lewis Galloway, William Johnson Garfit, William Gedge, Sydney Gibbs, Hn. A. G. H. (C. of Lon.) Gilliat, John Saunders Gladstone, Rt. Hon. Herbert J. Goddard, Daniel Ford Gold, Charles Goldsworthy, Major-General Gordon, Hon. John Edward Gorst, Rt. Hon. Sir J. Eldon Goschen, Rt. Hon. G. J. (St. George's) Goulding, Edward Alfred Gourley, Sir Edward Temperley Graham, Henry Robert Gray, Ernest (West Ham) Green, W. D. (Wednesbury) Greville, Hon. Ronald Grey, Sir Edward (Berwick) Griffith, Ellis J. Haldane, Richard Burdon Halsey, Thomas Frederick | Hamilton, Rt. Hon. Lord George Hanbury, Rt. Hon. Robert Wm. Hanson, Sir Reginald Hardy, Laurence Hare, Thomas Leigh Haslett, Sir James Horner Hayne, Rt. Hon. Chas. Seale- Hazel, Walter Helder, Augustus Hemphill, Rt. Hon. Chas. H. Hermion-Hodge, R. Trotter Hickman, Sir Alfred Hill, Rt. Hon. A. S. (Staffs.) Hill, Sir Edw. Stock (Bristol) Hoare, Sir Samuel (Norwich) Hobhouse, Henry Horniman, Frederick John Houston, R. P. Howard, Joseph Howell, William Tudor Hutton, John (Yorks, N. R.) Jeffreys, Arthur Frederick Jessel, Captain Herbert M. Johnston, William (Belfast) Jones, D. Brynmor (Swansea) Jones, Wm. (Carnarvonshire) Kay-Shuttleworth, Rt. Hon. Sir U. Kearley, Hudson E. Kenyon-Slaney, Col. William Kimber, Henry Kinloch, Sir John Geo. Smyth Knowles, Lees Lafone, Alfred Laurie, Lieut.-General Lawrence, Sir E. Durning- (Corn) Lawrence, W. F. (Liverpool) Lawson, John Grant (Yorks.) Lecky, Rt. Hon. William E. H. Leese, Sir Jos. F. (Accrington) Leigh-Bennett, Henry Currie Leighton, Stanley Leng, Sir John Lewis, John Herbert Lockwood, Lt.-Col. A. R. Lopes, Henry Yarde Buller Lorne, Marquess of Lowe, Francis William Lowther, Rt. Hon. James (Kent) Loyd, Archie Kirkman Lucas-Shadwell, William Lyell, Sir Leonard Macartney, W. G. Ellison Macdonald, John Cumming Maclean, James Mackenzie McCrack, George McEwan, William Maddison, Fred. Malcolm, Ian Maple, Sir John Blundell Marks, Henry Hananel Martin, Richard Biddulph |
|--|---|--|

Massey-Mainwaring, Hn. W. F.
Mendl, Sigismund Ferdinand
Middlemore, J. Throgmorton
Milner, Sir Fred. George
Milward, Colonel Victor
Monckton, Edward Philip
Monk, Charles James
Montagu, Sir S. (Whitechapel)
Moon, Edward Robert Percy
More, R. Jasper (Shropshire)
Morgan, J. Lloyd (Carmarthen)
Morley, Rt. Hon. J. (Montrose)
Morton, Arthur H. A. (Deptford)
Moulton, John Fletcher
Muntz, Philip A.
Murray, Rt. Hn. A. G. (Bute)
Murray, Charles J. (Coventry)
Murray, Col. Wyndham (Bath)
Myers, William Henry
Newdigate, Francis Alexander
Nicholson, William Graham
Nicol, Donald Ninian
Norton, Capt. Cecil William
O'Neill, Hon. Robert Torrens
Orr-Ewing, Charles Lindsay
Palmer, George Wm. (Reading)
Pallaton, James Mellor
Pease, Herbert P. (Darlington)
Perks, Robert William
Pierpoint, Robert
Pilkington, Sir G. A. (Lanes, SW)
Platt-Higgins, Frederick
Plunkett, Rt. Hon. H. C.
Powell, Sir Francis Sharp
Pretzman, Ernest George
Price, Robert John
Pryce-Jones, Lt.-Col. Edward
Purvis, Robert

Quilter, Sir Cuthbert
Rasch, Major Frederic Carne
Reid, Sir R. Threshie
Rentoul, James Alexander
Richardson, J. (Durham, S. E.)
Richardson, Sir Thos. (Hartlep'l)
Rickett, J. Compton
Ridley, Rt. Hn. Sir Matthew W.
Ritchie, Rt. Hn. Chas. Thomson
Roberts, John H. (Denbighs.)
Robertson, Edmund (Dundee)
Robertson, Herbert (Hackney)
Robinson, Brooke
Rollit, Sir Albert Kaye
Round, James
Russell, Gen. F. S. (Cheltenham)
Ryder, John Herbert Dudley
Samuel, Harry S. (Limehouse)
Sandys, Lieut. Col. Thos. Myles
Sassoon, Sir Edward Albert
Saunderson, Rt. Hn. Col. Ed. J.
Soble, Sir Andrew Richard
Seeley, Charles Hilton
Sharpe, William Edward T.
Shaw, Thomas (Hawick B.)
Shaw-Stewart, M. H. (Renfrew)
Sinclair, Capt. John (Forfarsh'e)
Sinclair, Louis (Romford)
Smith, Abel H. (Christchurch)
Smith, James Parker (Lanarks.)
Smith, Samuel (Flint)
Smith, Hon. W. F. D. (Strand)
Spencer, Ernest
Stanley, Edward Jas. (Somerset)
Stephens, Henry Charles
Stevenson, Francis S.
Stirling-Maxwell, Sir John M.
Strachey, Edward

Strait, Hon. Charles Hedley
Talbot, Rt. Hn. J. G. (Oxford Uni.)
Tennant, Harold John
Thomas, Abel (Carmarthen, E.)
Thomas, Alfred (Glamorgan, E.)
Thomas, David Alfred (Merth'r)
Thorburn, Sir Walter
Thornton, Percy M.
Trevelyan, Charles Philips
Tritton, Charles Ernest
Ure, Alexander
Verney, Hon. Richard Greville
Vincent, Sir Edgar (Exeter)
Wallace, Robert
Ward, Hon. R. A. (Crewe)
Warner, Thomas Courtenay T.
Warr, Augustus Frederick
Wason, Eugene
Webster, Sir Richard E.
Weir, James Galloway
Welby, Lieut.-Col. A. C. E.
Whitmore, Chas. Algernon
Williams, John Carvell (Notts.)
Williams, Joseph P. (Birm.)
Willoughby de Eresby, Lord
Wilson, Charles Henry (Hull)
Wilson, Frederick W. (Norfolk)
Wilson, John (Govan)
Wodehouse, Ht. Hn. E. R. (Bath)
Woods, Samuel
Wortley, Rt. Hn. C. B. Stuart-
Wylie, Alexander
Wyndham, George
Wyvill, Marmaduke D'Arcy
Yoxall, James Henry
TELLERS FOR THE AYES—
Sir William Walrand and
Mr. Anstruther.

NOES.

Abraham, Wm. (Cork, N. E.)
Austin, M. (Limerick, W.)
Blake, Edward
Carvill, Patrick G. Hamilton
Clark, Dr. G. B.
Condon, Thomas Joseph
Crean, Eugene
Crilly, Daniel
Daly, James
Doogan, P. C.
Engledew, Charles John
Farrell, James P. (Cavan, W.)
Flavin, Michael Joseph
Flynn, James Christopher
Fox, Dr. Joseph Francis

Hammond, John (Carlow)
Hayden, John Patrick
Healy, Maurice (Cork)
Jordan, Jeremiah
Lawson, Sir Wilfrid (Cum'land)
Lough, Thomas
MacDonnell, Dr. M. A. (Q'n's C.)
MacNeill, John Gordon Swift
McCartan, Michael
McGhee, Richard
Mandeville, J. Francis
Murnaghan, George
O'Brien, Patrick (Kilkenny)
O'Connor, Arthur (Donegal)
O'Connor, Jas. (Wicklow, W.)

O'Connor, T. P. (Liverpool)
Pinkerton, John
Power, Patrick Joseph
Redmond, John E. (Waterford)
Redmond, William (Clare)
Roberts, John Bryn (Eifion)
Sullivan, Donal (Westmeath)
Sullivan, T. D. (Donegal, W.)
Tanner, Charles Kearns
Tully, Jasper

TELLERS FOR THE NOES—
Sir Thomas Esmonde and
Captain Donelan.

Ordered, That, until the end of the financial year, financial business do have precedence on Tuesday whenever set down by the Government, and that the provisions of Standing Order 56 be extended to that day.

NEW BILLS.

RAILWAYS (PREVENTION OF ACCIDENTS).

THE PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF TRADE (Mr. RITCHIE, Croydon): I desire to introduce the Railway Employment (Prevention of Accidents) Bill, which is a measure for the better prevention of accidents to persons employed on railways. I do not intend to take up the time of the House, who, I am sure, are desirous of hearing my hon. friend the Under Secretary of State for War, and I hardly think any explanation of this measure is necessary. This Bill has been framed to carry out the recommendations of the Royal Commission that certain operations of railway service should be declared "dangerous trades," and in presenting this Bill to Parliament at the earliest possible moment I believe we are performing an imperative duty.

Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Ritchie and Mr. Solicitor General.

RAILWAYS (PREVENTION OF ACCIDENTS) BILL.

"For the better prevention of accidents on railways," presented, and read the first time; to be read a second time upon Thursday, and to be printed. [Bill 78.]

COMPANIES ACTS AMENDMENT.

MR. RITCHIE: I desire also to introduce a Bill to amend the Companies Acts. The House will remember that this measure was considered by the House of Lords, and the result of that consideration was that a Bill was framed by a Committee of the House of Lords dealing with a very large number of the points to which public attention has been drawn.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: Upon a point of order, I wish to know if a Bill of this kind can be introduced under the ten minutes rule?

*MR. SPEAKER: It is entirely at the discretion of the Government what Bills they should introduce. The Standing Order imposes the responsibility upon them and not upon me.

MR. RITCHIE: The Government thought it desirable to introduce this Bill as it came from the Lords with only a small verbal amendment.

Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Ritchie, Mr. Attorney General, and Mr. Solicitor General.

COMPANIES BILL.

"To amend the Companies Acts," presented, and read the first time; to be read a second time upon Thursday, and to be printed. [Bill 79.]

SUPPLY.

Considered in Committee.

(In the Committee.)

[Mr. J. W. LOWTHER (Cumberland, Penrith) in the Chair.]

ARMY (SUPPLEMENTARY) ESTIMATES, (1899-1900).

NUMBER OF LAND FORCES.

THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR (Mr. WYNDHAM, Dover): For

VOL. LXXVIII. [FOURTH SERIES.]

the second time in the course of this financial year it is my duty to submit a Supplementary Estimate to this Committee for Army services. Hon. Members will recollect that in October last we voted 35,000 men and £10,000,000 in addition to something less than 185,000 men and something more than £20,600,000, which were voted on the normal annual Estimates of the year. That Supplementary Estimate in October last was based upon our expectation of the sum which would fall due for payment in connection with the war in South Africa before March 31. I feel, Sir, that I ought to apologise to this Committee for mentioning so elementary a matter, but my excuse is this, that although we are all more or less experts here and familiar with the methods by which authority is given for raising supplies, there are others outside this House who cannot be expected to know all the details of our financial system, but who take a very intelligible interest not only in the conduct but also in the cost of this war. I was travelling the other day in the train, and I happened to be the unwilling eavesdropper during a very animated debate, in which vigorous charges were preferred against the Government, especially in respect of what right hon. Gentlemen opposite call the Government's want of judgment and foresight, and the most prodigious indictment of all was that my right hon. friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer laboured last October under the delusion that this war could be successfully concluded for the sum of £10,000,000. I wish to protect my right hon. friend against any similar misapprehension with regard to this Supplementary Estimate. I may perhaps say that, if the force originally estimated at 75,000 men and some colonial troops had proved sufficient, that estimate would have been a close one. But all that is ancient history. We have had to double and more than double this force, and therefore it is I have to come down for the third time in one financial year to the Committee and ask for more men and more money. This Estimate covers two broad purposes. The men and the money needed for the prosecution of this war account for by far the greater part of the Estimate which I am now submitting, but they do not, as I shall show, account for the whole of it. I do not propose, in my opening statement in introducing this Estimate, to dwell upon the subject of the prosecution of the war, although I hope I shall be ready in reply to give upon that subject any further information which any hon. Member may desire. But I dealt with that subject at some length not many days ago, and I believe I shall fulfil the somewhat general expectation if I proceed at once to other services of a different character—namely, those which are necessary, in the opinion of the Government, for placing home defence upon a satisfactory basis. The amount asked for in this Estimate in respect of those services I may say affords no clue, in our opinion, to their importance, and certainly no clue to their magnitude. We are engaged in an over-sea expedition of unparalleled magnitude, and that has had two consequences. In the first place, in spite of its magnitude, it has failed to achieve its object, and we have to ask for further sums for the prosecution of the war. But in the second place, because of its magnitude it has reduced the resources available for home defence to a level altogether inadequate. On that ground we have to come to this Committee and ask hon. Members to remedy that defect. Now we are making this appeal, but let me assure hon. Members that we make it in no spirit of panic. This risk, against which military defence provides one half of the insurance, and only one half, is not, I believe, nearer, not much nearer, to-day than it was a year ago. But it is perceptibly greater. In exact proportion to the reduction of our military home defences, that risk is greater, and that is quite enough for the Government. It is sufficient to justify their demand, and it is sufficient, I believe, to justify our confidence that this Committee and the country will respond, will even seek to outstrip the Government in their alacrity to respond to such an appeal. Sir, I ought to say that our confidence in the power and splendid efficiency of the Fleet was never greater, or more legitimate than it is now. But, whatever that confidence may be, and however reasonably entertained, neither this nor any other Government could be content to see the military resources for home defence fall much below the level to which we have been accustomed, or to brook a moment's delay in taking the steps which are necessary to reduce the risk of which I have spoken to the limits which we can contemplate with serenity. I have mentioned the Fleet, and at the outset I propose only to mention, to touch upon, and then leave the regular Army. I do that for one reason, because, even during the short time that I have represented the War Office, we have heard the Regular Army discussed again and again. As I pointed out last October, controversy has raged round every detail of it—about its numbers, the composition of its units, the Reserve, the short-service system, the machinery by which it provides drafts to relieve the Army abroad, and at the same time mobilises for home defence. All that has been discussed, and the discussions have been most interesting. But they have had this result: that, so far as I know, the Votes on our Estimates for the Militia, Yeomanry, and Volunteers have not been discussed for two or three years. These most important forces, these great sources, as we think, of actual strength, and, perhaps, greater sources of potential strength, have been altogether obscured and withdrawn from the consideration of the House of Commons. Now, the first question which I think should be submitted to this Committee at this time is how we can turn the Auxiliary forces of this country to the best account. This subject has exercised a great deal of public attention recently. Writers of repute, and in some cases of authority, have urged on the Government recourse to some measure of modified compulsion. The Government do not propose to take that step. It is the view of the Government that these writers have overlooked or altogether under-estimated the vast volume of voluntary effort which has been offered in face of emergency by the Yeomanry, by Volunteer corps, and even by civilians, not only in this country, but in every part of Her Majesty's dominions. We therefore think it inexpedient even to consider any recourse to compulsion until some further attempt has been made to develop and organise these Auxiliary forces in time of peace. Our task—and I put this as plainly as I can to the Committee—is not to throw the whole British Army and Auxiliary forces into the melting pot, with the War Office into the bargain. Nothing could be more foolish at such a moment. Our task is to meet a great emergency by expedients. It does not follow that all these expedients must be temporary. Our opinion is that, wherever possible, these expedients should form integral parts of a permanent scheme, and that, wherever that is not possible—and in many cases it must necessarily be impossible—they should, at any rate, provide for us instructive experiments from which we may advance towards permanency such a scheme as would provide for the normal requirements of the Empire in times of peace, and yet be capable of expansion in time of war to the limits demanded by a period of Imperial danger. We hold that there is some consolation for our present difficulties in the great response of patriotism which they have evoked. We hold that this is a unique opportunity, and we believe that unless we turn it to the best account it will not remain unique, and we think that unless we profit by the present occasion similar difficulties, perhaps in an aggravated form, may trouble us in the future. It is said we can only learn by experience. That is our intention. A wise man makes a little experience go a long way. We have had enough experience, and we think we have had enough in the last few months to justify us in making proposals of some magnitude to the Committee and the nation. What is the position? We have sent to South Africa a very large proportion of all the men who have been trained in the Regular Army. I am not going into the point as to the units which have been sent or as to the breaches that have been made in the organisation. I refer to the number and no more; but not all the trained men have been sent. In all on February 1 we had still in this country 109,000 Regular troops. Still we are left largely dependent on the Auxiliary forces. Now, first, I should like to consider the Auxiliary forces in respect of numbers, in respect of their units, regiments, battalions, batteries, and the duties at present allocated to those units under the existing scheme of defence. Lastly, I should like to submit to the Committee the opportunities we intend to give the Auxiliary forces in order that their numbers may expand, and that they may be in a position not only to fulfil their present duties more efficiently, but to take up other duties of a more onerous and exacting character. First, as to the mere numbers. On February 1 there were in this country Militiamen 97,500, Yeomanry 9,000, Volunteers 222,000, or in all 328,000 men. These figures are based on this calculation. I have only taken into account men who in the Militia and Yeomanry were present at training last year, and in the Volunteers men who were efficient, and then made the necessary additions and deductions. But I must point out that recruiting for the Auxiliary forces during the last month or so has reached a level which it never reached before. It has reached such a level as altogether to make good and exceed the drain to which these forces have been subjected, owing to those numbers who have with so much patriotism and gallantry crossed the sea to fight for their country. The Militia has gained by recruits last month 3,000 men. I ought just to point out that that is an underestimate; 4,729 recruits have joined the Militia, but, as hon. members who take an interest in these matters are well aware, a great number of men joining the Militia engage almost immediately afterwards in the Army. Everyone will, I think, allow that I have made a very liberal and ample reduction when I put the net gain at 3,000. The Yeomanry have received in the last month 2,000 recruits. Of course it is true that the Yeomanry are sending 8,000 men to South Africa. But all these men were not Yeomen on the establishment. We calculate that about 2,500 of them were yeomen and the rest were civilians who have been brought into that force and trained with great expedition—thanks to the fact that in the Yeomanry we have an admirable machine which, thanks to the energy of the Yeomanry officers, has been admirably worked in order to provide the country at this moment with a considerable force of mounted infantry. The Volunteers have gained by recruiting last month 5,000 men, so that the total gain in numbers of the Auxiliary forces in a month has been 10,000. That is under existing conditions, and with existing facilities I should like the Committee to consider the establishment of these Auxiliary forces, because the number which I gave of 328,000 is very far below the number of their establishment. I will not weary the Committee, if you are satisfied with the details which I am giving, by troubling you with too many figures. But I would take the full establishment of the Militia, the Yeomanry, and the Volunteers which stood last year at 405,107. Well, if you deduct the efficient strength of these forces on 1st February you will find that there is a margin between those who are available at this moment and the establishment of 76,707. Do not the Committee hold, as we hold, that if under existing conditions the inflow of recruits is as voluminous as I have said, if we alter, if we improve the conditions, if we give further facilities to volunteer, we may count confidently on pulling up at least 50,000 of the 76,000 men? Perhaps I ought not to trouble the Committee with my personal view, but that is that we can easily reach the limits of the establishment. I will say no more on the question of mere numbers. We have got 328,000, but we aim at getting a full establishment of 405,000. Now I ask the Committee to consider one of the things which has never been discussed in this House, owing to the fact that we have not had time to consider the resources existing in the Auxiliary troops, and that is the units of these forces and their allocation under the existing scheme of defence for certain very necessary services. I do not wish to give these in any great detail, but in the Militia there are 32 companies of garrison artillery. Well, if we apprehend invasion, there is a place allocated in a given garrison to every one of these companies. In the Militia there are 124 battalions of infantry. If we apprehended invasion under the existing scheme of defence 96 of these battalions would be required for garrisons, leaving a margin unallotted of 28 battalions. Well, but we have already drawn very considerably upon the Militia; they have volunteered with such patriotism that we have been able to send out, or are about to send, from this country 36 battalions, 30 of which are serving or are about to enter on active service in South Africa. So that leaves us eight battalions of Militia to the bad for the purpose of garrisoning our sea-ports, arsenals, and commercial harbours. The Yeomanry I need not touch in this respect. The Yeomanry under the present scheme of defence was to act largely as a body of irregular horse worrying the flanks of an enemy. Now as to the Volunteers. The Volunteer artillery are organised in corps, but those under our scheme would be expanded into a greater number of units for the purpose of garrisoning important points of the country. I need not give the details of that. A great number of these artillery units are needed for garrisons, and a good number—namely, 88—are allocated to positions around the great range of chalk hills surrounding this city, the heart of the Empire. So that under the existing scheme there are only ten artillery units of Volunteers which are unallotted and which we can deal with. In the same way of infantry—there are 214 battalions, of which 75 are allocated to garrisons and 135 battalions are allocated to holding this great base around London and some of the advanced posts on the approaches to this great city. So that under the scheme as it did stand there were only four battalions of Volunteer infantry for which no specific purpose has been indicated or laid down. Now, that being so, we are left to the bad, so to speak, on both Militia and Volunteers together—that is to say, we have made good the Volunteers which have gone to South Africa, but we have not made good the battalions of Militia. Taking the two together, we have less battalion units in the country of the Auxiliary forces by some five than have been given definite posts for the defence of the country. Yes, but if we add 50,000 to the Auxiliary forces in the present year, if, as I anticipate myself, we bring them up to their establishment and add something like 75,000 men, it is clear that you will have a very large margin over and above those units which have been contemplated of from 50,000 to 70,000 Auxiliary troops, which you can divert to other purposes, perhaps of a more onerous and important character. There is another consideration I submit to the Committee. In estimating the garrisons necessary we have considered that about 30 per cent. more of the Auxiliary force would be needed than we should need if we were able to fill these garrisons and to take up these positions with Regulars for passive defence only. If the Committee bear in mind the number of battalions of Militia and Volunteers to whom were allotted the duties of passive defence at 30 per cent., and if they will believe, as we think they may believe, that if we give greater opportunities, greater encouragement, and greater help, the Auxiliary Forces of the country can very well undertake the duties of passive defence without having any percentage allowed in their favour as against Regular troops—if the Committee believe that, why, then, of the Militia you will get in hand thirty battalions and of Volunteers seventy battalions, for if you take that

Mr. Wyndham.

Mr. Hindham.

30 per cent. there were something like ninety battalions of Militia allocated for these purposes, and something like 210 Volunteer battalions, and you will find if we make the Militia and Volunteer forces of the country efficient for holding garrisons and defensive positions, their existing numbers would give us a margin of 100 battalions. We shall leave that margin or the greater part of it for other purposes, to which I will refer later on, but first I will ask the Committee, for it is a very important point, not to minimise the importance of these duties to which I have referred, these duties of passive defence. Recollect that for all our garrisons we depend solely upon the Auxiliary Forces of this country, that in the event of apprehended invasion we should not have one Regular soldier to put into an arsenal, dockyard, or commercial port, however great the interests involved, for the protection of such places from momentary raids. You cannot exaggerate the importance of those duties, and with the Fleet away we must contemplate the possibility of such raids. The Fleet possibly would be away; its first duty would be to be away. [AN HON. MEMBER: Why?] The Fleet would be off the enemy's coasts or facing an enemy's fleet at sea. Although I know there is a school of politicians in this House—I will not venture to call them the “blue water” school—who believe that under such circumstances we should be all perfectly happy, I beg leave to tell hon. Members that we should be very much happier if we had 120,000 men or more as an additional guarantee against small raids, movable columns to prevent raids of the smallest character and to prevent small expeditions from landing and interfering with our naval signal stations. Such duties are of the utmost importance; they serve the purpose of protecting the vital parts in our corporate being, just as the muscles of the chest and the ribs protect the heart and lungs; and you cannot do without them, whatever be your means of defence. Well, we intend, if we can, to increase the efficiency of the Auxiliary forces in order that they may undertake these duties, and with the utmost confidence that they will discharge them with perfect efficiency. We hope also to expand the numbers of the Auxiliary forces so that they may be qualified to undertake even other duties. If that be so, it is clear that we must encourage enlistment and give greater facilities for training. Now, I do not know that I need go into the details of the proposals very minutely; but I will take the Militia. As at present advised, we do not contemplate taking any step which would profoundly alter the character of that force. I read only to-day a very interesting article by the right hon. Baronet the Member for Wigtonshire, which may possibly contain the germs of some future reorganisation of the Militia. That is quite possible, but we do not propose now, in a time of emergency, to take any steps which might destroy the characteristics of the force which endear it to those who belong to it, and which might break its traditions and injure it as a recruiting machine; but we do propose to put the pay of a militiaman on a par with the pay of a soldier in the regular forces, and we propose to embody the whole of the Militia during the spring and summer, and to put them all under canvas, except those who may be allocated to some barracks about which there are special facilities for training. That being so, it naturally follows that we should pay the Militiaman for his work more than we have paid hitherto. We should not ask a man to soldier for four, five, or six months for the same remuneration we gave him when he soldiered for only one month. Then, we will do our very best to give facilities for practising at targets; we shall provide the Militia of this country with completely organised military transport, and Militia officers will have special opportunities for training. The Militia force is a very large force, and if we do that we believe we shall awake a great response. It is a constitutional force, and, above all, the county force, and if the county gentlemen of England will only help us and work with us in putting the Militia where it can be and where it ought to be put, we are sanguine enough to suppose that the Militia will be pulled up to its establishment in the course of a year. Then I come to the Volunteers. I noticed some derisive laughter a few moments ago when I said that a number of the artillery batteries of the Volunteers were located for defensive positions on the chalk hills about London, and of course hon. Members know very well that the Volunteer artillery is armed with the old muzzle-loading gun. There are, however, a great many men in this House, and in this they are at one with a great proportion of public opinion in this country, who have long desired that the Volunteers should be armed with the most modern weapon. That is what the Government propose to do. Then, in ordinary times it is a rule, and a very sound and reasonable rule, that no new Volunteer force should be raised, or any considerable addition made to the Volunteer force, unless notice of it is given in November, in order that the proposal may be considered, with a fair amount of time, for the next year's Estimate. We abrogate that condition, and we say that any Volunteer corps, any Volunteer battalion, may from this day forward enlist up to 1,000, and that where they are already in excess of that number, or reach it soon and feel that they can easily go beyond it, then they may divide into two battalions and proceed to fill those two battalions.

[An HON. MEMBER: Is it the same for the artillery?] The hon. Member asks whether artillery corps will be allowed to fill up their establishment—yes, certainly. We shall naturally give a higher capitation grant to the Volunteers, but we shall, and I think with reason, exact a higher standard of efficiency from them. We cannot compel the Volunteers—we do not wish to compel them—all that we say is that we are ready to give them all that they need in order to make themselves into an efficient force. We are prepared to invite them to train under canvas for one month in the course of the spring and the summer—the whole force—in such a way as to suit the convenience of different regiments. Some regiments are recruited from men who are busy at one kind of work, others are recruited from men who are busy at another kind of work, and I do not think it lies with us to say more than that the Volunteers will have in the course of the spring and the summer the opportunity of training for one month under canvas. Then, we shall do all that we can to give them facilities for musketry; we shall make more ranges for them, and afford them every opportunity for practising at those ranges. We shall give them transport. [An HON. MEMBER: Hired?] Hired transport—not in all cases permanent transport, but hired. It was good enough at any rate for the requirements of the Regulars during the manœuvres two years ago. [An HON. MEMBER: Bad enough.] As hon. Members are well aware, with the Volunteers you must proceed more or less on the lines with which we are all familiar—namely, you give the capitation sum for an article which meets certain requirements, and if you give £1 a day for a waggon which, in your opinion, is suitable to the object in view, I do not think that involves an illiberal policy. Then we shall also encourage Volunteer regiments to form in each battalion a company of mounted infantry, where that can be done without clashing, so to speak, with the recruiting area of the Yeomanry regiment. Since these forces are voluntary, and we are glad that they are voluntary, we cannot say, "You shall train for so many months, and if you do not we shall not continue our assistance." All we can do is to hold up a standard which we think a suitable one, and we think that Volunteer artillery should train for some three months if they are to be prepared for a period of emergency, and we think that Volunteer infantry should train for one month under canvas, if they wish to put themselves upon a level with Regular troops for the defence of this country, or to approach it. I do not know whether I have made that part of our policy clear, if I have I will pass on. I think it is enough to have stated broadly that we do not want to wreck a national movement for the sake of water bottles and transport. I think it most improbable that the artillery Volunteers can give anything like that time for training; all that I do say is that if any particular corps wish to train for three months we will not place any obstacles in their way. ["Oh."] Hon. Members say "Oh," but surely the most impolitic thing in the world for us to do would be to dictate to the Volunteers, who are citizens engaged in private business, holding in many cases positions of trust, and who are kind enough to offer a great deal of their time. What would be more discouraging than to tell them "That is not enough, and you will be useless unless you give more time"?

MR. LOUGH (Islington, W.) : How much?

MR. WYNDHAM : I think on this occasion, when I am bringing in, after all, only a Supplementary Estimate, which, if accepted, will no doubt commit us to the broad features of some such scheme, but will not commit us to the details—and upon the details we invite suggestion and criticism—it would be inexpedient to discuss questions of detail, and pounds, shillings, and pence, when introducing for the first time a broad scheme of public policy. The response the Volunteers may make will not be in itself the measure of the encouragement which we are prepared to give them. Assume that the Militia and the Volunteers come forward in their hundreds of thousands, we shall be prepared to let them camp; we have at this moment in this country sufficient tents for 600,000 men. Then there is one other similar point upon which I think I ought, perhaps, to touch for one moment. My noble friend Lord Wemyss has urged upon us that we should encourage those who have served in Volunteer forces, and who have left them, to keep up their rifle practice, or, at any rate, to have their names registered so that we should know where to go if we wanted to put every man upon the field of battle. Well, that is a scheme which we are quite prepared to consider in a favourable spirit, but we think that we ought to consider it in consultation with the commanding officers of existing corps. I come now to the Yeomanry. We propose to follow the same broad policy in regard to the Yeomanry. We invite, we encourage the Yeomanry to fill up their numbers to the establishment. We invite every Yeomanry regiment to come out for a month under canvas, and, of course, as in the case of the Militia, we shall increase their rate of pay, their present rate of pay resulting already in a pecuniary burden, and being altogether inadequate to any such term of service as that which we now propose. Further than that I doubt that we shall go. We would wish to consider, again in consultation with officers in any Yeomanry regiments, whether the time has not come for modifying somewhat the tactics in which that force is at present exercised. It is the opinion of those who have the greatest qualification for advising us that this country does not lend itself in any large measure to what are called tactics by cavalry, and certainly it is very hard to drill Yeomanry. However patriotic they may be, and however much of their time they may be ready to give, it is not only hard but impossible to train Yeomanry to take part in charges as a cavalry brigade, and therefore, although it may not be necessary to call them mounted infantry, undoubtedly, I think, in the future, in regard to the Yeomanry of this country, all will agree with us that the time has come for devoting more attention to the occupation and the shifting of positions. But we do not want to rush them, we do not want to take any steps which might modify the characteristics and the traditions of the force. We see that what it has been, and is to-day, is probably because its traditions have been respected; we know that from the Yeomanry we have raised 8,000 mounted infantry for South Africa; we know that we can raise more, and we hope great things from a force which has exhibited so much versatility and so much zeal. Coming to the general question of the further duties of a more onerous character which are necessary to any effective defence, however great the national patriotism may be, passive defence, of course, is not enough. I have likened passive defence to the muscles and bones of the chest which protect the vital organs, but, however good that protection may be, it is not enough to endure blows; you must be ready to parry and plant them, and for that you need a fist to hit back with. Now that fist with soldiers is a mobile army, and such a force must be capable, if I may quote the words of a military critic who wrote an article the other day in The Times hostile to the War Office—must be ready to take what is called the swift defensive; it must be highly organised, and capable of rapid and precise direction over long distances, and for that it needs, by the universal experiences of all armies, and the consensus of military authorities in all countries, a certain proportion between the several arms of the Service. It needs, also, a staff for commanding the three arms in those proportions, and for the carrying on of a corporate life from day to day in a general movement, and it needs certain other services on which I need not, perhaps, dwell, such as Royal Engineers and Army Service Corps, and so on. Now, I believe that I excite a certain amount—I will not say of disappointment in this House, but of dissatisfaction—when in these debates I talk about army corps. It is very difficult for anyone who represents the War Office to speak about army corps without setting almost the whole of the Committee against him, and I will explain the reason. The reason is this—that one-half of the Members of this House do not know what an army corps is, and do not want to know; they are content if the sum is done in numbers of men, of guns, and forces, and so on. But the other half knows so extremely well what an army corps is, that they altogether repudiate the War Office definition of it. Let me once for all say what I mean when I speak of an army corps. I mean such a distribution of infantry battalions, cavalry regiments, and artillery batteries, Royal Engineers, and Army Service Corps as will give us that proportion upon which all military critics are agreed. I do not claim that they will be commanded, as in Germany, by the same generals and the same staff in times of peace as in times of war. I know that it is difficult to reach that ideal, but I think we may approach more closely to it than we have done. But so far as we have got, I mean what I say, and claim no more. For this mobile force, which is necessary as a complement for defence, we propose to aim at three army corps and three cavalry brigades. That has been our aim for the defence of this country ever since 1888, and I think we have shown that practically, under the definition which I have given, we have recently reached that standard, because we have sent out more than two army corps, and have in this country the other half of the third. By far the most serious aspect of what has taken place in South Africa is not that we have sent into that country 128,000 Regular soldiers, but that we have sent what I may call the permanent plant of two army corps—the guns, the trained artillery, the engineers, and the Army Service Corps. That being so, we are deficient to that extent. Our proposal is—and this is a permanent proposal—to raise at once the artillery, the Army Service Corps, and the engineers for two more army corps. That is to say, we propose to raise at once thirty-six batteries of field artillery, and seven batteries of horse artillery. In fact, we have for some time past been taking every step in our power to accomplish that object. Now I hope the Committee understand this. I do not want to mislead them. Our scheme is this—that there shall always be in this country at full war strength those permanent parts of an army corps which are difficult to improvise. Therefore, when the army corps are sent abroad there will be three here. When you get the two army corps back from the war, then we propose to hold up the fourth and fifth—not to maintain them at war strength, but to maintain them as training establishments. Now I come to the men. How can we get them? I hardly feel justified in troubling you with the details. We can take a nucleus of trained men from each of the batteries now in this country: we can take details left from the batteries which have gone to South Africa; we can take the artillery Reservists, of whom there are 3,337 in this country. We do not mean to poach heavily upon garrison artillery. There are in this country a number of men who have served twelve years with the colours and in the Reserve. We propose to invite them back into the batteries, and in order to raise these forty-three batteries—a large programme—we propose to invite all those who have any training or aptitude for such work. Any volunteer, artilleryman, or engineer who feels disposed to assist his country, we invite him to enlist for one year into these field batteries. I now come to the cavalry. There would be three brigades—nine cavalry regiments; and six others will be needed for corps and divisional work. That is, fifteen in all. There are left in this country five cavalry regiments, and we are bringing them up to war strength. Then we have three regiments of Household Cavalry, each one of which has sent a squadron to South Africa to form a composite regiment. We propose to extend each one of these three regiments up to war strength. That gives us eight. Each one of the twelve cavalry regiments in South Africa has left behind it a reserve squadron, and we mean to turn each of these into a service squadron. That will give us the equivalent of four regiments. We hope—at any rate, we shall invite the Yeomanry, in addition to their training as units, to give us, as they have done for South Africa, a troop apiece. If that is done, we can form a whole brigade of mounted infantry from the Yeomanry of this country. That gives us the equivalent of fifteen regiments—the proportion of mounted and unmounted men which, according to military opinion, should be aimed at. We should need for these three army corps seventy-five battalions of infantry—twenty-five in each. We have—or shall have in a few days, when certain battalions return from colonial stations—seventeen battalions of Regulars in this country. We have voted now for three years three more battalions on the annual Estimates, and we are raising them very rapidly. We propose—and this again is a permanent, and not an emergency proposal—to raise twelve more battalions of infantry, and add them to the establishment of the British Army. That figure has been arrived at very carefully in order that the Army may supply the reliefs and drafts for colonial stations, for India, and South Africa without being subject to a strain which would shatter it altogether. Those fifteen battalions, together with the seventeen, will give us thirty-two battalions of regular infantry. We think that we see our way to raising them. We shall take a larger proportion of men on a three years engagement; we shall allow men who have served in those regiments to come back, as in the case of artillery, although they have done their twelve years with the colours and in the Reserves. In that case we shall allow them to serve on for a pension. I cannot leave out of account the fact that recruiting is now at the flood tide. I remember telling the House when I introduced the Estimates last March that the first four weeks of recruiting last year was a record. In that period we got for the regular Army 4,227 recruits, but in the first four weeks of this year we have got 6,103, an increase of 1,876 on what had hitherto been the record year ever since the Franco-German War. We have another emergency proposal upon which I ought to say a word. There are in this country a great number of men who have received a military training—men who have done their three or seven years with the colours and their nine or five years in the Reserve. For those men there is an existing provision. They are allowed to remain in the Reserve for a period of four years, but that section of the Reserve, E, has been for the most part closed against all except men with some special qualification—artificers and so forth. The door has been opened only a little way when some particular corps has found its reserves sinking to a low level. We propose now to throw the door wide open, and to let men who would have gone into the Reserve come back and serve in the Regular Army for a period of one year. We believe—giving them some inducement for their surrender of positions in civil life—that it will be possible to raise a certain number of reserve emergency battalions for this year only. The number of such men is very large. It has been estimated by actuaries that the number is considerably over 200,000, so that there must be a great many men against whom no moral or physical disability could be raised. I deprecate too close an inquiry now into the selection of the battalions which will be wanted to make up our seventy-five battalions. It is clear that from thirty to forty battalions will still be wanted to be drilled into this moving, mobile force of three army corps. This problem is a very complicated one. It is complicated by the fact that we have no barrack room, by the fact that the Militia battalions which have hitherto been embodied have been embodied because their Regular battalions have been sent to South Africa, and also by the fact of the varying strength of the Militia battalions. What I would ask the Committee to believe is that the War Office staff started to grapple with this difficult problem; they are now striving to find out how they can select the seventy-five battalions, and I think they should be left a free hand, without being obliged now to mention this or that battalion and so possibly give rise to subsequent disappointment. It may be that here and there it will be right and proper to send a particular Militia battalion to a particular barrack, and that that barrack will not give sufficient accommodation for such a battalion. Such cases have, indeed, happened already; and in such cases we have been obliged to allow a certain number of the men to go on leave. But if it happens in future, in such cases, since we consider it important to get to work at once, we shall have to resort to measures of expediency, and perhaps billet the men or hire some extra accommodation for them. That, however, will only be done on a small scale, where a particular battalion does not fit a particular barrack. We have been urged to embody immediately the whole of the Militia. We do not think that would be a very wise course. It could only be done by one of two means—either by hutting an enormous number of men, in which case the huts could not be ready until the men could be provided for in tents, or we should have to billet the whole of the Militia of the country; and we believe that would be the very worst preparation for a force upon which we shall depend so largely during the coming year. Hon. Members will see that we shall need to find by some means a great number of officers for the Army. We wish to avoid one course which we should consider erroneous under the present circumstances. We do not wish to fleece the Militia and Volunteers in order to find officers for the Regular Army; but we do believe that the offer of a small number of commissions in the Regular Army to the officers of the Militia and Volunteers will increase instead of diminish the number of officers in these Auxiliary forces. We propose to offer one Army commission to each battalion of Militia, and it is confidently hoped that at least three young gentlemen will enter a battalion under the belief that each will be the fortunate one to secure the appointment.

Mr. Wyndham.

Mr. Wyndham.

*SIR JOHN COLOMB (Great Yarmouth): Does that mean in time of peace? One commission annually?

MR. WYNDHAM: No, I am not talking of times of peace, but now. I am not talking of a permanent scheme, though it will probably be made permanent. We shall need 253 artillery officers, and 622 officers of the Line; but for the bulk of these officers we propose to offer commissions to our colonists; to all the Universities—not Oxford, Cambridge, and Trinity College alone—but Durham, Victoria, Edinburgh, and in fact all the Universities of the United Kingdom, and a certain small number to the public schools. Then we have the reserve of officers. Some 300 of these have already volunteered for service, and 100 are already employed. We shall look to this reserve of officers to come forward; and we shall look to those who are not in the reserve, but have had five or seven years training in the Regular Army, to show that if the country requires their assistance now they are ready to offer their services. I am afraid the Committee will consider I am explaining this point at too great a length, but it is a very important point. We are deeply sensible of the fact that we are making very large demands upon the temper and patriotism of the country. We are practically asking every man who has had any military training to offer the advantage of that training to us during this year; and we are practically asking a great many people who have the time to acquire military training to devote that time during the course of this year. If we do that, what shall we have to show in return? I have stated that we have 109,000 Regulars in the country. The increase which I have suggested will at least add 30,000 Regular troops to the Army—I think the number will be higher, but put it as low as 30,000. I stated at the outset that we have 328,500 of Auxiliary forces in this country. If there is the response which I anticipate I put the expansion at 50,000 at the lowest. I believe myself that it will be very much higher. But on those figures we ought soon to have in this country 517,500 men trained to arms or to a great extent undergoing training in the course of the next few months. Personally, I believe the figures will approach more nearly to 600,000 than to 500,000. It must be remembered that this is not an army which is going to march about; but it is a force which has had opportunities of acquiring training, and which will, therefore, be available in the event of any such force being required.

Mr. Wyndham.

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN (Stirling Burghs): Are these increases temporary or permanent?

MR. WYNDHAM: The Regular troops are very largely permanent, or a great part of them—the fifteen battalions of infantry and the forty-three batteries of artillery. It is temporary as regards the artillery, because, as we get our artillery back from South Africa, we shall fold up the artillery of the two army corps. But I cannot disguise from the Leader of the Opposition that the fifteen battalions of infantry are in our mind permanent additions to the Regular Army. The demands which we make of course depend on the view which this Committee takes of our proposals. We cannot very well issue this invitation, and it cannot be accepted, unless the Committee adopts the broad features of this scheme. It may, and probably will, find something to criticise in points of detail. That we expect and welcome. But I think we may anticipate that it will not be criticised on the ground that on the whole it is too large. I think this Committee will feel that as to the scope of it, at any rate, we are all in substantial agreement—at any rate the majority of this House, and the majority of the people. Times have changed. It cannot be urged against us now, as it was urged some time ago by a clever writer, Mr. Bagehot, against a great statesman, that we object to war merely because it is war, or to expenditure because it is expenditure. No; war, as that writer went on to say, is often necessary. Finance is not an end; money is but a means. He went on to say that it may be one of our duties to see to the military defence of England; and, if so, we must not sit down and count the cost. If so, this is not the age for arithmetic; it is also for statesmen to sacrifice cherished hopes. I do not quote that as an invitation or an incitement to the Committee. I quote it as a prophecy of the temper of the nation to-day. It may be that the sacrifice will be required. But I am convinced that we shall all remember that, thanks to like sacrifices made by our fathers, we have been able to turn our energies to the arts of peace. In memory of our fathers, and for the sake of our children, we shall not shrink when the call is made on ourselves. I should not like to close on a note which might be thought alarming. I said at the outset that this risk, which may become a fact, is not near. I say it again. I may therefore be asked why we should rush forward to anticipate it. For answer I borrow an old phrase—that it is too late to look for instruments when the work calls for execution. Let us begin the search now. We need not seek far afield. The weapons lie apt to our hand in the patriotic fervour of our country. We have but to take them up and set an edge upon them; then, if the call comes, we shall be ready to answer.

Motion made, and Question proposed,
 “That a further number of Land Forces, not exceeding 120,000, all ranks, be maintained for the Service of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland at Home and Abroad, during the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1900.”
 —(Mr. Wyndham.)

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: The hon. Gentleman has exposed to us, and not at too great a length, a great scheme for strengthening the Army, and directed especially to the home defensive forces of this country. We have listened to the hon. Gentleman with that delight which we always experience when he speaks, and he has in most particulars explained with great power of luminous exposition. The first observation I would make is, that we, being here in Committee of Supply for the purpose of voting money for the service of the country, the element of cost has been from the first to the last totally disregarded. We have not heard a single figure from the hon. Gentleman as to what those great changes and increases in the Army are likely to amount to in money. He has not even told us how much of the money required is due to the war now in progress, and how much to future preparation.

MR. WYNDHAM: £420,000 for future preparation.

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: Of course, having heard this elaborate scheme of the Government, as explained by the hon. Gentleman, the Committee cannot be expected to pronounce an opinion upon it suddenly. I believe the frame of mind of nine-tenths of those who hear me is that, for the purpose of the present war and for the sake of re-enforcing our Army in South Africa and making good any gaps in our home defence which the despatch of reinforcements may cause—for these purposes we are ready to agree to almost anything the hon. Member asks for. It is not upon any point connected with the conduct or necessity of the present war that much criticism or anxiety will be shown by us. We shall not look too closely at his proposals, whatever ideas we may have of our own as to the particular course which should be taken. But what the Committee is entitled to regard, I will not say with jealousy, but with the extremest caution, is proposals which go into the future. We should not, I think, in a moment, not, as the hon. Member very properly said, of panic—because there is no panic in the body of the people—but in a moment of anxiety and alarm, in a troubled air, at all events, commit ourselves to any great scheme for the development or increase or extension or reconstruction or alteration of our armed forces, but we should remember that that is a matter requiring the most serious and careful investigation and consideration, for which we are justified in asking the Government to give us full time to consider and examine it. I confess that I was greatly relieved when I heard the hon. Member disclaim any intention to apply compulsion in this matter. I have seen letters in the press about conscription, as if conscription was a possibility in this country, as if it were a possibility on either of two grounds—first, because the duties imposed in time of peace upon our Army for garrisoning distant places are duties which never have been, and never could be, imposed upon a conscript army; and, secondly, because the very idea of conscription is foreign to the disposition and temper of our people, and would have the immediate effect, as schemes of conscription have had before, of destroying all that natural fervour to which the hon. Gentleman referred, which leads our people in so magnificent a way to offer their services to their country without any compulsion being applied. I am not in a position to discuss or criticise the detailed provisions which the hon. Gentleman explained to us. I followed the hon. Gentleman as well as I could, and I am sure no one could have explained the proposals with greater facility and clearness and persuasiveness than he, but still we require to see these things in print and to think over them before we can pronounce a definite opinion upon them. There are, however, one or two broad lines upon which I entirely agree with him. The Government propose to develop and to lean largely on the Auxiliary forces. Although I am not one who would admit that successive Administrations have treated the Auxiliary forces with the neglect, or almost the contempt, which is sometimes attributed to them, it cannot be denied that more could be done than has hitherto been done. We have expected from them a far greater amount of proficiency than we were entitled to expect, especially the Volunteers. Therefore, when I heard the hon. Gentleman propose that there should be a change in that respect, and that the Militia should be put on the footing of the Line of the Army, that they should be embodied for a month, that they should have greater opportunities of target practice, that the officers should have means of instruction, and when I heard that the Volunteers should have the best weapons, that they also should be better trained, and have more opportunities, and should be treated generously in every respect to make themselves efficient, I entirely agreed with him. The only question is whether, if you put too much upon those forces, they will respond to your demands. Take the class of men who join your Volunteers or Militia. Are they the class of men who can go away for a month every year or for a longer period? Such are the considerations which must govern the position, and not what we, sitting at our desks, think is the best thing to do. We have to consider the degree in which they will be tasteful or distasteful to men of this character, and that can only be found out by experience. I approve of the idea, and although it may not be carried out to the full extent which the hon. Member hopes for, still it can be carried to a very great length. Another point upon which, I think, most of those who have considered these matters closely will agree, is that it is most desirable to increase considerably both our artillery and our cavalry. I am fully aware of the effect upon the infantry of the narrow limits of battalions: but, after all, these are matters upon which we must reserve our opinion. These are matters which can be discussed quite as naturally and properly upon the Estimates for next year as upon those for this exceptional year. I should like to look upon this exceptional Estimate, though it does run into hundreds of thousands of pounds, as a War Estimate simply, and to leave the question of future increases and rearrangements for discussion upon the ordinary Estimates of the year. But I am bound to say that if we find that this gives a large increase to the fighting strength of the country we shall have to ask ourselves two questions—Is this increased fighting strength necessary, and what is it that requires this increase of force? We fall back upon the old dictum—that your policy determines your armaments, which is as true now as when it was originally uttered. If it is only that the experience of this war, the first great war we have had since the Crimean War, has shown certain defects—which I have no doubt it has—certain deficiencies, certain points in organisation which require to be modified, certain deficiencies, especially in matériel, then by all means fill up the deficiencies and correct the defects; but if this large addition to the forces of the country means an alteration in the policy of this country, an alteration in the character of this country, an alteration in the character of the British Empire so that it becomes a military empire, this kingdom a military kingdom, not only we, but a large body of men in the country, not confined to one side of politics, would object to the proposal.

Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman.

We should be pardoned, I am sure, if we looked with the extremest jealousy upon any proposal which might tend in that direction, because we should regard it as one of the greatest calamities that could befall our country to take a step in that direction. There is one other thing I should like to point out to the Committee, the analogy which is being drawn between this and the Crimean War. I see it often stated that we are in the same position that we were in during the Crimean War. I remember the Crimean War well. There is no analogy whatever between the two cases. In the Crimean War everything broke down—the transport and medical services broke down, the commissariat did not exist, every service connected with the Army failed, and the efficient strength of the Army itself almost vanished during those dreadful months of the first winter in the Crimea. What do we find now?

We see an army of 180,000 men sent, not to the Crimea, but to the other side of the world, without hitch or difficulty, an army well found, well fed, well armed, well hospitalised, if I may coin the word; we hear no complaints of the manner in which that army has been provided with all that is required for it. There is no comparison between the two cases. All that can be said of the present army is that it is not large enough for the task it is called upon to perform. But let me point out that that may be a fault of the task quite as much as of the army, and therefore I ask that whatever we do we shall not, in our realisation of the facts now before us in South Africa, in our discovery of the difficulties we have to meet there, rush into some great project of future military development, which, I believe, would be the very worst thing that could happen to our country. I am glad of the moderation which I discern in the proposals of the hon. Member; he has not taken the advice which has been so freely given him in the public prints. So far as I can judge at present, I by no means find fault with his proposals as going too far, but on looking into them and when we hear from him, as I hope we shall, some estimate of future numbers and cost, we shall be better able to judge whether the scheme of the Government tends in the direction to which I have referred, and which, I believe, the whole feeling and sentiment of the country will oppose in the strongest manner possible.

*SIR CHARLES DILKE (Gloucestershire, Forest of Dean): Agreeing as I do with what has fallen from the Leader of the Opposition—namely, that we ought to distinguish between the general reorganisation of the Army and the prosecution of the present war—I must dissent from the encomiums passed on the War Office. Having said that, I shall say no more on that point; we shall discuss it later. War is a bad time for reorganising the War Office, and we should avoid as far as we can this session general propositions for Army reform and reorganisation. I cannot refrain from expressing considerable disappointment with the tone of a large portion of the statement of the hon. Gentleman who introduced this motion. There was in that statement far too much about fixed defences, home Army, home defences, and invasion, and far too little contemplation of the real military problems of the country which he has to face; and although at the conclusion he did something to remove the impression he had made, the earlier part of his speech does give support to the heresy that this country could, in regard to invasion, or home defence, rely on something other than its Fleet. The Fleet of this country must be its main protection, and it is rather from the point of view of the effect produced upon foreign nations by the existence of weak parts in our armour that we should consider this question. These proposals produce enormous numbers of men rather than an army in the correct sense of the term. At the end of his speech the hon. Member mentioned figures amounting to 600,000 men, but I confess that I should have listened to him with more pleasure if I had seen greater evidence of a determination to form a more mobile force. There are many points upon which a number of questions are necessary for the elucidation of the statement which the Under Secretary of State for War has just made. After his introductory remarks he alluded to home defences, and the proposals to turn the Auxiliary forces to the best account. He also spoke of the measures which would be necessary for the prosecution of the war. As I understand this vote which is now before us, it is very largely concerned with the prosecution of the war. By far the largest figures in this Vote are for the prosecution of the war, and yet not one word of explanation was given to the House as to how these figures are arrived at, or, what is more important, what are the further steps which the Government still feel it necessary to take. The situation in regard to the war has somewhat changed since the hon. Member addressed the House on Monday last, and the hopes expressed of the probability of an early termination of the war have not turned out to be so well founded as many of us hoped at that time. Therefore, I think the country will be somewhat anxious to know what are the further steps which the Government are taking with regard to the prosecution of the war itself. To my mind the statement made by the hon. Member plays too much into the hands of those who believe in fixed or passive defence, rather than those who believe in building up a strong striking force. As regards the future, all the hon. Gentleman's suggestions must be considered, by those who have taken an interest in these subjects, from the point of view of how far they suggest to the House the line upon which future organisation is likely to proceed. The hon. Member very rightly told us that he did not presume to tie our hands in the future. He also said that the suggestions he did make must be considered by the Committee, so far as they projected into the future, inasmuch as certain proposed changes which were now indicated by him would last for all time. One of those changes was a change in the direction of further elasticity of the conditions of service in the Army. He stated that the three years service system was to be increased, but he did not say to what extent. He did not state—and it is a most curious omission—whether the three years men were to have what a great many Members asked for at the time when this system was first initiated here, namely, the same pay as the other men. At that time the Leader of the House protested fiercely against the opinion that you must pay them the same as the other men, and he said that all the men would want to serve three years only if that were the case. But you can easily limit their numbers if you wish to, and there are many ways in which a limitation of numbers can be effected—for example, by the adoption of a higher physical standard. At the present moment the numbers are strictly limited to some battalions, and in those battalions to 150 men. Now I should like to know in what degree is that three years service to be increased, and are they to have the same pay, because to-day the Government have announced that the Militia are to have the same pay as the Line—including the extra 3d. Do you intend to pay the three years men serving in the Regular Army only the rate of pay retained for them two years ago, or do you mean to raise their pay so as to give a fair chance to this three years system? It is not a mere question of the pay of these particular men. Those members of the Committee who have listened to our discussions know that the elasticity of the conditions of service lies at the base of this whole question of recruiting. You are only taking power by this proposal to raise a little over 30,000 additional men for the Army as permanent men, including an increase of twelve battalions in infantry of the line. The main increase as regards numbers, apart from this, is an increase of forty-three batteries of artillery. With regard to this increase we are told that they are to be rolled up when the Army comes back from South Africa; therefore, we cannot tell what the numbers of the actual increase will be, because we do not know how many men are to be rolled up. So that the numbers are not at all clearly explained to the House. We know it has been put at about 30,000 men. All those who have carefully studied the reports of the Inspector General of Recruiting know exactly what the difficulties are in times of peace. It is very easy in time of war to add so many battalions to the Army and increase the military strength of the establishment, but the difficulty of obtaining them in time of peace remains. This lies at the very base of the whole of your permanent proposals, and should be considered by the Committee. But we cannot settle that question in any way now. We cannot decide it this session, but we can ask the Government to give the fullest details in this matter. The hon. Member, in his speech, has told us of the increase in the three years men, but he has not told us anything about that very vital matter of their pay which lies at the base of a fair treatment of the system, and we cannot, therefore, judge to what extent the Government are proposing, as regards the future, this elasticity of service to which many of us attach so much importance. With regard to the next matter to which the hon. Member alluded in his speech—for I think it will be most convenient for me to follow the order which he maintained in his speech, so I will now come to the next point upon which he laid stress—he spoke of how we were to turn our Auxiliary forces here to the best account, and the first suggestion he made was the very frank adoption of the main criticism which hon. Members of this House who have taken an interest in this subject have urged against the Government for years—namely, the total inadequacy of the artillery force at home for the large number of men. He proposes to convert a large number of obsolete batteries into batteries armed with modern guns. I see the First Lord of the Admiralty in his place, and no doubt he is painfully conscious of the difficulties in the way of manufacturing guns for the Navy. May I ask this question: Have the Government considered how the guns are to be rapidly obtained which this new departure will require? Have they considered whether the manufacturing power of this country is sufficient, or are they prepared to give guarantees to manufacturers to secure them that permanence of orders which is necessary in their business? Is the manufacturing power of the Government sufficient to produce these guns, or are the resources of the Government sufficient to manufacture these guns without diminishing the rate of supply of new guns to the Navy? This matter of the guns for the Navy is one of the very highest importance. The Members of this House who take an interest in this question of our defences are painfully aware that one point in which our Navy is weak is the difficulty of manufacturing the most modern guns. As regards these most modern guns, there is a difference of opinion as to whether or not we are sufficiently supplied, but we are undoubtedly hopelessly behind foreign nations as regards the number of modern guns in our batteries and among our guns used for the purposes of drill. The Government are being pressed to supply these deficiencies, and there is no doubt they will be supplied. But are we quite certain that in making this attempt the supply of guns to the Fleet will not suffer in rapidity in consequence? The next point which the hon. Member raised was the question of the future of the Yeomanry, and his suggestion was that the intention of the Government was to convert this force more into mounted infantry rather than cavalry. For years past the critics in this House have spoken upon the Yeomanry vote, and it has been opposed by military Members of this House on the ground that the Yeomanry were being trained as a cavalry force, and that the conditions of their service were such that the Yeomanry could never possibly be an efficient cavalry force, and should be made a mounted infantry force. We have seen during the operations in this war in South Africa how necessary that has been, for we are now trying to turn the British Yeomanry, who have been trained as cavalry, into mounted infantry. That is a tardy acceptance of what many hon. Members have been urging upon the Government for years, and now the War Office have very tardily come round to the views which have been expressed for years in this House. I come to the hon. Member's proposal with regard to the new battalions. Here we come upon the political rather than upon purely military ground. Why an increase of twelve battalions to the regular Army? Why have any increase at all? Why not a larger increase? Not one word has been vouchsafed to the Committee upon this subject. Does it mean that a survey has been made now, at the present period of the war, of what will be the necessities of South Africa after the war is over?

MR. WYNDHAM: That has been taken into account, but we do not propose to increase the Army to a number which would enable it to discharge that duty without strain for all time, because we imagine that duty will be a diminishing strain.

*SIR CHARLES DILKE: We were told the same story by the former Under Secretary for War; in fact, he used the same word. Many hon. Members of this House are not in favour of a revolutionary change of system: they are rather in favour of patching up the system, and they pointed to the linked battalion system to which they said you are not giving a fair chance, because the number of your battalions abroad is greater than the number at home. The Government have tardily come up to the requirements put before them, and they have stated that it is their intention to increase the Army up to the limit of the permanent strain. They did not absolutely meet the full figure because they thought that the strain was temporary and would be a diminishing strain. If the House is to retain the existing military system; if it is to retain the linked-battalion system, then we must have a battalion at home for each battalion abroad, otherwise the whole of the recruiting system breaks down. How do the Government meet this? They make no proposal for it, but they do make a proposition to increase the Regular Army by twelve battalions of infantry, and that means six battalions abroad and six at home. That means that you are to have six additional battalions abroad for all the new strain which is likely to arise in the future. If you are postponing a settlement of this problem until after the war is over it is another matter, but if you are pretending to face it now do not tell us that six battalions, or even less, will be the garrison which South Africa will require. The Government tell us that this will be a diminishing strain, but they do not meet the full demand which the linked-battalion system involves. We hear the old story of the diminishing strain, but all I can say is that six battalions for South Africa is too little to put before this House, and is not adequate to the circumstances of the case. The hon. Member, in answer to a question I asked him, said the Government had in view the case of India, but throughout the whole of his address the word India was not mentioned once. There was not the faintest reference to the fact that they had largely denuded India of a garrison which was thought necessary by every military authority in this country and in India. I put a question the other day as to the extent to which the Indian garrison had been reduced, and the facts are fully known to the House. The time has come—and it is more important because the garrison has not been too large—when it is necessary to replace the troops which you have taken away. Otherwise you will be unable to meet the demand for a permanent reduction of the garrison in India. Surely you do not believe that that garrison has been much too large for the purpose. While you are speaking of the contribution of the colonies, it must be remembered that the expenses in India are on an enormously higher scale than those of the colonies. The colonies have contributed generously at all times, but their contributions have been voluntary. It must be remembered that India has been made to contribute whether she wished to or not, and she has contributed upon an enormously higher scale. The first act of the present Government was to reduce the contribution from the rich colony of the Straits Settlements to the Imperial defence of Singapore. The contribution of India is enormous, for she contributes upon a gigantic scale, and this contribution has been kept up at the present rate ever since the increase when the late Lord Randolph Churchill was Secretary of State for India. Do you defend that, and do you believe it is only an adequate garrison now? If so, how can you come to this House and explain what you are going to do while this war continues without saying one word as to the replacing of the troops brought from India which are now shut up in Ladysmith? Besides this, you have also drawn troops from India within the very last month. Surely the Government ought to recognise that it is one of their first duties to remedy the amazing disproportion in our Army at home of cavalry and artillery to other arms. The official statement of the hon. Member led us back again to the words with which he began. He led us back in his last words to the 600,000 men that we should have in this country, but he did not say one word which pointed to the rapid organisation in this country of a mobile force. Have we contemplated the possibility of our getting into war in what the hon. Member rather proudly and rightly called the present position of the British Fleet? Surely it is not an invasion of England that we stand in fear of. Surely our need would much more likely be for a mobile force and an army which can strike a blow. There are also demands in South Africa which may still be made upon us for a mobile force. The whole speech of the hon. Member was devoted to the piling up in this country of what we have here already, that is of hundreds of thousands of men. It is not a paper army, because the men exist, but it is an army which is not an army in the proper sense of the word, because it is insufficiently supplied with all the necessities for a great military force. It has at present no cavalry or artillery, although this deficiency in artillery is to be supplied. That deficiency is one which cannot be overlooked, and I admit the Government are doing the best they can. The last fifteen batteries of artillery which have gone out to South Africa have gone out in a condition which is not creditable to our military authorities. The batteries which are being made up now in advance of the decision of the House in this country are woefully deficient, for the Militia and garrison artillery have been put into those batteries, and they are not even supplied with officers capable of really training the men, for they are largely made up of men drawn from the garrison artillery. I admit freely that the Government cannot do better than what they are doing in this particular way, but it certainly proves the justice of the criticism which has been laid before the House and against the Government that it is impossible to improvise artillery in time of war, and that in this country, in spite of the enormous military expenditure upon land forces, the War Office has never faced the real preparation of army corps.

Sir Charles Dilke.

*MR. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis): Once again the hon. Gentleman the Under Secretary for War has made to the Committee a very lucid statement. I have watched the hon. Gentleman's career with great satisfaction, and I have often wondered why Her Majesty's Government left him out so long in order to take on other Under Secretaries coming from a party not its own. I confess that I have listened to this statement with some surprise. I came down to hear what measures the Government were going to take in reference to the Army in South Africa. I had expected to hear that they were immediately preparing another 50,000 men to go out, and perhaps that they were going to call together the remnants of the Militia so as to find material for another force. I formed that opinion because the majority of the items in this Vote — amounting to £10,000,000 out of £13,000,000—are concerned with matters which can only have to do with the Army in South Africa. The whole of the speech of the hon. Gentleman himself, however, was devoted to home defence, and to listen to him one would imagine that there was no war going on in South Africa. I should have thought that the first subject with which his speech would have been concerned was first of all South Africa; then that of India, which has been alluded to by the right hon. Baronet opposite; and last of all home defence, which presses least. The defence of India is extremely important at this moment, because it is impossible to forget that we have there a Viceroy who has announced in the House of Commons that his policy is to join the Russian frontier, and that Russia having brought her troops to the waters of the Oxus we should take ours there also. In addition to that, you have recently sent out to the Presidency of Bombay a new Governor without any administrative capacity. [AN HON. MEMBER: Oh, oh!] I beg pardon, I mean experience — whatever, and who distinguished himself by rising in this House to propose an increase in the salary of the President of the Board of Trade. The hon. Gentleman raised the question of invasion. I do not know that it is greater now than it ever was, though I am not sure that it is not a little nearer. But let us clear our minds upon this question of invasion. You cannot defend this country by soldiers; you can only defend it by sailors, and if your fleet and sailors are sufficient you have no reason whatever to fear an invasion of this country. The hon. Gentleman in the course of his speech suggested the proper use to which to put the fleet. That is to keep off the coasts of the enemy, and to take care they do not get out, or, if they do, to destroy them. If that be done I cannot see how anyone can consider an invasion of this country possible. I will not follow the hon. Gentleman through his very luminous and interesting statement. I am not a military man, and I have not yet gained an adequate idea of what the effect of his proposals would be. I have only risen to express the hope that he will supplement his statement by telling the Committee what the Government immediately intend to do to reinforce the Army in South Africa. That is the most important point. There are two other points I would wish to mention. One is with regard to the new force about to be raised. I do hope the hon. Gentleman will give us some assurance that less time will be spent in drill and more in shooting. To my mind we have gone wrong ever since the time of Frederick the Great. We have worshipped the false god drill, and have forgotten the ancient tradition of our country, which was to win battles by shooting straight, a tradition by the aid of which we destroyed the best chivalry of France at Crécy, and on other fields. Even in the Yeomanry there seems to be little trouble taken to secure accurate shooting, without which I believe no modern army will be able to do its work. I therefore trust that we shall have some assurance on this point. Then there is the matter of home defence which ought to be looked into. Do the Government intend to overhaul the forts, to provide garrisons for them, and above all to overhaul their stock of ammunition? This I believe, is a point which requires very keen and special attention. I confess I am still without the knowledge which I came down to the House hoping I should obtain, namely, the knowledge that Her Majesty's Government have realised the enormous importance of keeping up the supply of men in South Africa, and that they were about to take immediate steps to raise another force. We have not heard that to-day, and I trust that during the course of the evening we may hear what after all is the real purpose of the statement of the hon. Gentleman.

*MR. CHANNING (Northamptonshire, E.): The hon. and gallant Gentleman who has just sat down appeared to think that the Under Secretary for War should not have called attention to the question of home defence. I think, on the contrary, that the Under Secretary was welcomed by the House when he directed attention to what is perhaps the most serious issue which the Committee can consider at present. Undoubtedly there has been a feeling, not of alarm, but of serious anxiety at the depletion of our means of home defence in case of any European complication arising. In this discussion I will not attempt to enter into the South African question or the conduct of the war. The questions which the statement of the Under Secretary has raised are questions of vital importance, which can be discussed without introducing political considerations, which perhaps are best left alone at present. I listened with great satisfaction to all the hon. Gentleman said with regard to the Auxiliary forces, until he came almost to the end of his statement; but I must say that the attention which I have given to the subject leads me to believe that the Government would act more wisely if, instead of suggesting a very large and permanent increase of the Regular Army and organising all the subsidiary parts of an army corps, they had adopted the policy of going further in the re-organisation and relative combination of the Auxiliary forces. They would then be doing something to meet the desires of the country, and would perhaps ultimately provide better machinery for national defence than by permanently organising three additional army corps. The hon. Gentleman said that the Volunteers are to be armed with modern weapons; and that guns of modern and effective type are to be provided for their use in this country. I also heard with great satisfaction that each battalion of Volunteers should be encouraged to form a company of mounted infantry. When we have gone so far as that, would it not be a more practical course to go a step further and meet the wishes which I know are at present entertained by some of the most intelligent Volunteer officers. Instead of merely continuing the present system of Volunteer battalions, which are practically isolated, and therefore of no really effective use in actual operations, instead of turning, as is proposed, most of the Yeomanry into equally isolated squadrons of mounted infantry, would it not be possible to combine together and to train so that they may act together all the several branches and arms of these auxiliary forces; so that they might form, in some sense, Volunteer Army Corps, which might be ready for actual use? I venture very respectfully to submit that suggestion to the Committee. I would support in the heartiest way the expressions which fell, very wisely it seems to me, from the Leader of the Opposition when he entered a caveat against any large and tremendous scheme for the re-organisation of the military system of this country. So far as I have been able to follow the figures of the Under Secretary, his proposals practically foreshadow the doubling of the Regular Army of this country.

Mr. Gibson Bowles.

MR. WYNDHAM dissented.

*MR. CHANNING: I am very glad the hon. Gentleman shakes his head. At any rate, I should deprecate, and would be prepared to oppose, any large increase of the permanent army of the country. In carrying out this scheme it would be wise to deal with the Volunteer force as a whole, to bring its several branches together, so that they may be used as an army corps in defence of the country, and not be treated as in the past as isolated units, which can only have a relatively small value.

MR. BIDDULPH (Herefordshire, Ross): I should like to say one word with regard to the question of the Yeomanry. If the Yeomanry are to be made of any use they must be put on a different footing than they are at present. The expenses of the uniforms, which in some cases are enormous, will have to be reduced, and also the expenses connected with training. There are some officers in the Yeomanry who think when they go for a few days training that they may go to any expense, not only for mess but also in gambling. I hope the commanding officers will be told by the War Office that they must restrict the young men in the Yeomanry from gambling and other excesses, which prevent other young men of moderate means from joining these corps. I quite agree that something should be done to make the Yeomanry a more serviceable and reasonable corps, but until the expenses are reduced I am afraid that nothing can be done. The experiment of trying to improve the Yeomanry is well worth adopting, but until you reduce the expenditure and introduce a more businesslike footing I myself despair of seeing any great use being made of it.

CAPTAIN NORTON (Newington, W.): I desire to criticise the statement of the Under Secretary, but only very briefly and in the most friendly spirit. As a Radical, I must say it is a great satisfaction to me to find that the hon. Gentleman was able to develop a scheme which in the opinion of the military authorities would be sufficient both for the defence of this country and for the Empire at large without having recourse to conscription, which I am certain would not, in the long run, have as good results as the voluntary system. It seems to me, looking at the scheme broadly, that if it is carried out on the lines proposed the expense is almost bound to be, in the long run, something enormous. Having no figures or facts at my disposal—only the bare outlines of the scheme—I am unable to criticise it in any detail. With reference to the question of recruiting, I frankly admit that the scheme has tapped every possible source, but I do not know whether in the future, especially if the garrisoning of South Africa is taken into consideration, it will be possible to maintain recruiting at a sufficiently high standing. I regard the suggestion to extend the number of three years men as very valuable. I believe if they can be largely increased it will place us in a very much stronger position than we occupy at the present moment. I am bound to admit that the hon. Gentleman scarcely touched on the question of India. Those of us who have been in that country know that every available unit there must be an absolutely mobile force, and that troops not up to the highest standard are practically valueless. I do not think the hon. Gentleman foreshadowed how a sufficient garrison was to be kept in India. It cannot be denied that after this war some troops will be required in South Africa, and that you will have to return to India the troops you have withdrawn from that country. As regards the mobile force in this country, so far as I can judge, there would be some difficulty in making it sufficiently mobile, because the hon. Gentleman did not foreshadow that the army corps which he proposed to constitute in this country should be a real army corps; that is to say an army corps kept in a state of readiness with a permanent staff and with artillery and cavalry accustomed to work together. As the hon. Gentleman pointed out, as far as the defence of this country is concerned, we must absolutely rely on the Navy, and the mobile force kept in the country will be required for quite another purpose. It will be required for the only purpose in which such a force would be of use to us, namely, to be thrown in a moment into the most vulnerable part of our enemy's territory. Therefore, if it is not of a mobile character it is of no use. As regards the Yeomanry, the proposal to convert them into mounted infantry is certainly a move in the right direction, as their value as cavalry is practically nil. The move is most valuable. The hon. Gentleman furthermore suggested the utilising of ex-soldiers in this country. I am confident that that will not only produce a very valuable force, but will have a marked effect on recruiting, and will tend to popularise the Army throughout the length and breadth of the land. The future of South Africa is also a question which will have to be faced. May I point out that there was one flaw, if I may so speak, in the statement of the hon. Gentleman? He referred to our tapping the colonies for officers, but he made no reference to our making use of those valuable recruiting grounds as regards men. I am disposed to think that in Canada, Australia, and elsewhere there are valuable recruiting grounds untapped, and in the present patriotic state in which the inhabitants of the entire Empire are, I think use might be made of them. I am glad that there is no great alteration proposed as regards our Army system as a whole at the present juncture. This is not the time for it. When this war is brought to a successful issue, as I believe it will be brought in a comparatively short space of time, we may then consider the reorganisation of the Army—whether we should not have a long service force for India and the colonies, with a mobile force at home, and with the remainder of our defensive land forces consisting of short service men, the Reserve, and a standing force of sufficient cavalry and artillery. That is a question which I hope will be brought to a successful issue by the present Government.

*SIR J. FERGUSSON (Manchester, N.E.): I do not desire to indulge in any speculations regarding the army of the future. We have quite enough to think of at present, and the proper time to discuss that will be when the war is over. As regards the troops we have drawn from India in this great emergency, we are all agreed that they shall be returned. India supplied a force which could not be got from any other place at a particular juncture. It arrived, in the words of one of Her Majesty's Ministers, "in the nick of time." Had we not got that force from India the chances are that the Boers would have been able to come down to Durban. The heroic garrison of Ladysmith checked the invasion of Natal, and has earned the undying gratitude of the country. It is a very serious matter that this country, in which so many valuable interests are at stake, and which ought to be so strongly protected, has at the present moment only a small regular force within its shores. There are unlimited resources to draw upon for service abroad and at home, and I do not think that many yet realise the full extent of the patriotism which is being displayed just now. The number of men who are ready to give their lives for their country at the present moment is practically unlimited. To-day I took part on a Committee to organise an additional branch of the Yeomanry corps, to be entirely composed of first-rate rifle men. The men who presented themselves as candidates for officers' commissions were not only thoroughly trained, with long experience in the Auxiliary forces, but they had left flourishing businesses. While we have such a fund to draw upon we know that this country will not be found wanting in a time of emergency. It is not a question whether the country will be found wanting, but whether it will be found organised. Without organisation the most patriotic nation may be helpless in presence of an organised enemy, and some will doubt whether the organisation now proposed is really adequate for the occasion. There is so much of invitation, hope, and conjecture in the scheme that it is hardly of the solid and reliable character which the country expected in the present emergency. No doubt the Government are making a call on the Committee which will be very freely responded to. One or two hon. Members have referred to conscription as an expedient which could not be entertained. Conscription is no doubt foreign to our British ideas; it has never been resorted to even in times of greatest necessity. But is it conscription that the nation at large should be called upon to defend itself? Would it be contended that the Swiss system is conscription? I have known it and admired it for a great number of years. The Swiss are the freest nation in Europe; they are self governed, and they have organised themselves into a nation in arms. If their territory were threatened they would be found to be a nation in arms, just as the Boers are. A small book was recently issued by the Intelligence Department concerning the Swiss Army. All the Swiss are required to join in the defence of their country; they are thoroughly organised and put in line as if against any European army. Perhaps that is the conscription which hon. Members say would be foreign to our ideas; but the Swiss are required to be members of their defence force for twenty-five years, and how much of their time do hon. Members think each Swiss must put in during these twenty-five years? He only gives 135 days to the service of his country. Well, surely that is hardly conscription, and that is a state of things which deserves discussion here. Moreover, every Swiss boy learns his drill at school as an essential part of his school course, and that has had excellent effect on the physique of the youth of the country. Again, they learn rifle-shooting at the Tirs National. That is not a compulsory service, but the emulation is so great that every Swiss lad joins the Tir National. The only considerable tax on his time is in the first year's service, when he has to put in forty-five days drill. If we adopted a system something like that we should have an army of a domestic character which would really be equal to the defence of the country. The Swiss force embraces both artillery and cavalry, and the gunners and drivers are thoroughly trained. Every Canton takes an interest in the annual army manoeuvres, and foreign military attachés think them so important and so well deserving of study that they go to see them. I think that, as in 1858, the Government have lost a great opportunity in not proposing a scheme of a general local militia. In the interesting statement of my hon. friend there were two points which did not appear to me wholly satisfactory. In the first place, he stated the number by which the Auxiliary forces fell short of the establishment to be 76,000, and that he expected to make up 50,000 by recruiting; and then he proceeded to suggest that that would be a substantial addition to the defence of the country. But this is problematical. Another point on which a good deal is wanting is in the instruction department. At the present moment we are a good deal short in trained officers in this country. My hon. friend said that there are 106,000 men of the Regular Army in this country at the present time; but most of them are either unfit for active service by reason of infirmity or of being too young to put in the field. These are for the most part added to the Militia, which has already too few officers. That is a most unsatisfactory state of things, and must lead to a want of discipline. I am surprised that more use has not been made of Reserve officers. I may point out that it would be extremely desirable if a system were introduced by which officers could be speedily trained to supply the manifest wants of the country both in the Regulars and in the Auxiliary forces. Many men would make good officers who are too old to be put among cadets, and not old enough to be entirely superannuated. The Staff College is at present shut up. It should be opened specially, and retired, or Reserve officers employed in training the young officers both of the Regular and Auxiliary forces. I believe the Militia ought to be, and will be, the backbone of the defence of the country. We have neglected it for a good many years, and treated it as the milk-cow of the army, and now we have to fall back upon it to fill the places of the regiments in the field. My hon. friend says that the Auxiliary forces are to be put on a better footing, and that the Militia are to be better treated and better paid. I remember when the men in the Militia were of a different class than now. They were men of settled occupation, who came out to the training in the summer time as an amusement and a holiday. After I left the Army I was myself for fourteen years in command of a Militia battalion. That battalion then consisted of ten companies; then they were reduced to eight; and latterly it was threatened to reduce them to six companies. It came to Aldershot the other day only 450 strong, and of these 150 went out to South Africa, and some regiments are even weaker than that. That is a most unsatisfactory state of affairs. While the proposals are not the best, and while they depend upon invitation here, and conjecture there, I nevertheless hope they will be sufficient to give a substantial addition to the defences of the country.

Captain Norton.

SIR WALTER FOSTER (Derby, Ilkerton): I am bound to say that I listened with considerable interest to the very clear statement which the hon. Gentleman made in introducing his Estimate; but I also must admit that I listened to that statement with some amount of disappointment. We are face to face with great national difficulties, and these arise from the fact that we are fighting this campaign under entirely novel conditions. I think these novel conditions in South Africa ought to have induced the Government, in laying this Estimate before the House, to give us something different from the old lines on which they formerly proceeded. We must remember that we are fighting against a people with a population not equal to that of a second-rate provincial city in England, and able to put a fighting force into the field of considerably less than 100,000 men. It is inconceivable to me, that a great Empire like this, governed by the House of Commons and the House of Lords, can be reduced to anything like an extremity of difficulty, by having to conquer a nationality of only about 300,000 souls. It is almost incredible that the difficulties which have arisen might not have been averted. The truth is we have gone into a modern war very much on ancient methods. We have been meeting forces that have infinitely greater mobility than our own, and armed with artillery considerably superior to ours. The conditions brought about by new methods of warfare are conditions with which our methods are not able adequately to cope. That has been shown in every fight we have had. Although our men have exhibited as much bravery and pluck as ever before, they have not had the success which they deserve: and that is because they are fighting against weapons with which they have not had previous experience. We must meet our difficulties with new methods. I do not see in the statement of the hon. Gentleman a sufficient amount of imagination, if I may say so, in reference to existing needs and the necessities of the case. When he wants to increase the military forces of the country, he goes on the same line of policy as we have been pursuing in the past. If the necessity arose at any time to defend this country from an invasion, it would require to be done very much on the same lines as the Boers are taking in South Africa, and our troops would require to be trained very much like the Boers in the Transvaal and the Orange Free State. But I do not see any adequate provision in the suggestions which the Under Secretary for War has made to bring about that end. It is true that he calls out new regiments of the line and more militia, but he gives us no suggestion that these are to undergo a different training from that given to our soldiers in the past. What we want is, that the new force or forces should be trained on the lines of modern warfare, rendered absolutely necessary by new weapons of precision, with which an enemy will be armed in the future. For that purpose three things are necessary. First of all it must be a very mobile force—a force of mounted infantry to a large extent, and that will not be supplied by the conversion of the Yeomanry, as has been suggested. We want also a very much better training in rifle shooting than we have had in the past, and for that purpose we want facilities given all over the country for practising rifle shooting. In addition to that we want a great improvement not only in the strength, but in the character of our artillery. If these proposals were carried out, then the suggestions of the hon. Gentleman might be adequate to the needs of the country. The hon. Gentleman wants to apply a certain amount of the money he proposes to raise in the increase of the pay of soldiers and Militia. It is obvious that if these men are to spend a considerable amount of time away from their ordinary avocations their pay must be increased, and, so far as that goes, this is a step in the right direction. I hope the hon. Gentleman will carry out his proposal with regard to the Volunteers in a generous spirit, especially in the encouragement of rifle shooting, for I am sure the country would gladly consent to any generous methods of treatment of the Volunteers. Again, we have a great reserve of able young men, full of pluck and daring, who are prevented by straitened means from going into the Army as officers, and if the hon. Gentleman would give these some encouragement, by offering higher pay, he could secure a much better supply of officers, and of better material, than in the past. I hope, likewise, that steps will be taken to fill up the gaps in the Royal Army Medical Corps, and to attract young medical men from the schools.

Sir J. Ferguson.

SIR A. ACLAND-HOOD (Somersetshire, Wellington): The proposals of the Government are only a temporary expedient, and it is fortunate they are so. We have tried raising an army by voluntary enlistment and by making the Army popular, but we are now trying to raise an army by invitation and imagination. The country had looked forward with intense anxiety to the declaration of the Government about the Army, and, as far as I am concerned, I had a feeling of disappointment in listening to the speech of the hon. Gentleman the Under Secretary for War. What the country wants is, first, a scheme of home defence; second, an adequate force for reinforcements in South Africa. As to the latter, we are told by the Government that we have at home 109,000 men. What are they—Reservists, men medically unfit, men under age, or recruits? If we have 109,000 men, how is it we only have seventeen battalions of Infantry? As to the home defence, what the country asks for is a sufficient force to make us safe from invasion. One party among military and naval experts thinks that our Fleet is our first and only line of defence, and that in the event of our Fleet failing it is only waste of money to provide an army to defend our shores. If the Fleet should be annihilated, that is true, but then we may have checks and reverses at sea. In the event of such a check an army at home would give invaluable time to enable our Fleet to recuperate. One lesson from the war is that whatever else we waste, we cannot afford to waste time. The Government scheme of defence is, first an active mobile Army, ready to strike a blow at the invader; and, second, the occupation of certain strategic points for passive defence. The second without the first is useless, yet we depend for active defence on battalions, batteries, and cavalry regiments, not only not yet raised, but only shadowed in this Vote. Why not organise your active defence from the material you already have in the Militia and Volunteers? What the country wants is an army, not a mob. The Volunteers have no staff, no proper organisation, and no proper training. If they are to occupy certain strategic positions for home defence they ought to be exercised in those positions by the officers they will have to serve under; to learn the country, the ranges of positions, and the roads leading to them. It is knowledge of that kind which has enabled the Boers to hold their own. As to the sources from which the numbers required are to be drawn they are: First, Section D of the Army Reserve. Now Section D cannot be called out till Sections A, B and C are called out. The consequence is that when tradesmen, artificers, and so on are wanted for the Engineers and Artillery, they, being in Section D, cannot be called out until the whole of A, B and C—thousands of whom are not wanted—have been called out. The consequence is that these men are now living on furlough at full pay. I hope that an alteration will be made in the Act so as to prevent this in future. The second source from which the numbers are to be drawn is the Volunteers—magnificent material, but not trained or organised. They have been snubbed by every Government, and are now approached with invitations. They are not properly drilled, trained, or organised, and their shooting as a whole is indifferent, which is not their fault, for they have no means of improving it owing to the lack of ranges and the small amount of rounds allowed, and the expense of getting to the ranges. It is a mistake to suppose that in these respects any comparison can be made between the Volunteers and the Boers. The Boers are a highly drilled and well trained force, with every facility for learning manœuvring and shooting. The Under Secretary for War said that the Volunteers and Militia were to have every opportunity of improving their musketry practice. But where are the ranges? They could not be improvised in a few weeks. What the country wants is an army for home defence at once. The scheme of the Government will produce some sort of army in nine or twelve months, by which time the war will probably be over, and the result of the present scheme and the future reorganisation of the Army will be absolute chaos. The country is ready to accept almost any proposal from the Government in order to make home defence secure. It would have taken much more than the present scheme with great eagerness. But though these proposals fall short of what is necessary, they are those of the responsible Government, and as such must be supported by everyone in the House.

MR. COURTENAY WARNER (Staffordshire, Lichfield): The speech which has just been delivered has expressed many of the sentiments and thoughts which have passed through my head as to the statement of the hon. Gentleman the Under Secretary for War. Everybody has been anxiously looking forward to this statement, and expecting to hear that in the shortest possible time another army corps would be prepared to go abroad or defend the country, as might be required. But this scheme apparently does not do that. There is one point I should like to refer to—the increase in the artillery. That increase is not to be permanent, but is to be reduced as soon as the war is over. The increase in the artillery, taking all the guns we have got, and putting down all the forces as they have been mentioned to-night, will be only one gun per thousand men, instead of five per thousand as in foreign armies, and if we are to reduce that number still further it will make a very small number of artillery when we include the Reserve forces. What is needed at the present time is a mobile force that can be used for defence or sent abroad at once. It is quite possible that we may have another check, although I hope we shall not, and it is possible that we may have to send out further troops. We cannot send the Volunteers, who stand on the chalk hills to defend London, or the Militia, which is not yet embodied. Some people say the Militia is embodied; yes, for the reason that the country is almost denuded of trained troops. Had they been embodied sooner, we should have had a further 50,000 trained troops now. The Militia ought to have been embodied sooner, so that trained troops might be provided ready to hand. As to the Militia, there is one question which I should like to ask the hon. Gentleman. He said the Militia was to go into camp and be trained during the summer. Is he going to train any to take the place of the seventeen battalions ordered abroad?

MR. WYNDHAM: We are going to embody them all.

Sir A. Acland-Hood.

MR. COURTENAY WARNER: But to take the place of the seventeen battalions?

MR. WYNDHAM: Oh, yes. The reason we cannot have any more is because of the barrack accommodation.

MR. COURTENAY WARNER: The reason for that is, I think, because most barracks are full. I think it would have been better to have broken up the battalions by placing them in the cavalry and Regular barracks notwithstanding the fact that there might be a little overcrowding. That is one of the ways in which we might have had infantry and garrison artillery at the present time. Another curious statement is that with regard to the cavalry. That is an arm most needed of all. We cannot increase the guns more quickly because it takes, I am told, three months to make a gun; but a cavalry soldier takes some time to make, and according to this scheme the cavalry is not to be increased to any extent. The recent gaps in the cavalry are to be filled, and a full squadron of the Household Brigade is to be made up by a flying squadron, and one troop is to be taken from each Yeomanry regiment in the country. But that depends entirely on the capacity of Yeomanry regiments to supply it. We shall have some mounted infantry, it is true, and that will make up to a certain extent the first force to be mobilised; but there will not be sufficient mounted men to form a large reserve force in the country. This force is talked of as an army on paper, and this force will have no cavalry. The mobile force will have mounted infantry instead of cavalry. There are two questions I should like to ask upon that. With regard to the one month's training of the Yeomanry, one difficulty in the Yeomanry is the horse. To provide a horse for a month is a great tax on the men. What are the Government going to do as to providing that? It is difficult to get officers and mounted men at any time. Has the Government thought about providing the horse? The other question is as to the Militia. It is to be embodied for six months this year and to get extra pay. Is that beyond the extra 3d. which the Army get, or is it the 3d. we got last year, and which I am grateful to the Under Secretary for having given? One last question I wish to ask is this. The right hon. Gentleman opposite said the Militia was short of officers and men; but it is not quite so bad as he makes out, because many battalions are short of men and not short of officers, and many are short of officers and not short of men. A great deal, I think, might be done if they were all trained together so that they might to an extent be amalgamated. I hope, in spite of this statement, we shall hear of something more being done to prepare troops to be moved. A little while ago the service Members of this House approached the hon. Gentleman the Under Secretary for War, and asked that a force including infantry, cavalry, and artillery, and a train should be prepared at once. No such force, so far as I am aware, has been prepared for the last three months, and although the country, it is true, is prepared to go to almost any length to get such a force, this statement is, I think, open to the objection that, although a large number of men will be trained, they will not be sufficiently trained.

COLONEL LOCKWOOD (Essex, Epping) said he always had a robust faith in the reforms proposed from the Government side of the House. His faith in the simplicity of this reform was increased, but he doubted its practicability. The truth was there was very little scheme about it. It relied for its success on the patriotism of the country, and on the power of obtaining the number of recruits asked for. We had been trying to get 30,000 men for some time, but they had not been obtained yet. We were now asking various classes to serve, but the hon. Gentleman the Under Secretary had omitted to say what they would get for serving. He congratulated the Government upon not having given way to the craze for compulsion, the enforcement of the ballot for the Militia. He did not believe in compulsion, and, though it might eventually be forced upon us, the day of the adoption of such a system was yet far distant. What the nation wanted was encouragement, and not compulsion. He was pleased to hear of the proposed change in the drill of Yeomanry to make them more fit to act as units. The Militia was to be called up for six months. Of all the Auxiliary forces this was the one which had been most neglected in the past, and would certainly require more encouragement, and should be liberally dealt with to make up for that neglect, which they would be a long while in forgetting. If Volunteers were called out for considerable periods of time he hoped the voluntary character of the force would not be overlooked, and that their expenses would be met in a generous spirit, and that officers of the Auxiliary forces would not be called upon to pay as they had paid in the past, charges that should be defrayed by the Government. Over and over again officers of regiments had been called upon to pay sums which they should never have been allowed to pay. Upon the question of rifle ranges, the use of smokeless powder, and other matters raised during the discussion, more information would, he hoped, be forthcoming. He should support the measures foreshadowed, though he regarded them as meagre, and practically constituting no scheme beyond fresh enlistment.

COLONEL PILKINGTON (Lancashire, Newton), who was imperfectly heard, was understood to say: I believe in training the Army as quickly as possible, and in getting a mobile force as large as possible prepared to be sent out to South Africa and possibly elsewhere. From the remarks that have been made it is evident that great reliance is going to be placed on the Volunteers. With regard to that force I desire to add a few remarks to those which have been made. It does seem to me that the words which fell from my hon. friend, who spoke as to the Swiss system, are very applicable to the present time. If the hon. Gentleman the Under Secretary had not mentioned the Volunteers I should not have spoken to-night; but if you are going to rely on the Volunteer force, then the War Office ought to take the force seriously into its consideration. The Volunteer force at the present time has in its ranks men ranging from eighteen to sixty, and although that force is most patriotic, and so far as it goes a good force, it is in my opinion not properly organised. It wants organising, and I would suggest that we should adopt some system where every man over twenty-one up to twenty-six should be obliged to be enrolled in the force. I would not call it a Volunteer force at all, but a Regular force, something like the Swiss force. By that means you would get many advantages of the conscription, and get rid of the disadvantages. You would get rid of the barracks, and the men could work steadily at home at their business; they could attend three or four times a week in the spring, summer, and autumn, and every Saturday could drill. After the age of twenty-six they could go into the Reserve force and rest as they do in Switzerland. It seems to me also that Volunteer officers should go through examinations, and if you were more strict with them you would give them a better status in connection with the Line, which is what ought to be done. One thing which is, in my opinion, necessary is that the brigadiers of Volunteers ought to be continually looking them up. Volunteer battalions only see their brigadiers for seven days in the year, and that is not what ought to be. The brigadiers ought to be efficient young officers, and they ought to look up their brigades and see that the men are soldiers in every respect. It may be said that you would not get the people to do that, but, in my opinion, you would get them to do so if you gave them shooting ranges. Every Volunteer regiment ought to have a shooting range close at hand; and it seems to me that a short shooting range could be constructed as on the Continent, with a target 200 yards away, with arches every 20 yards to keep the bullets from straying. It is quite true that many of the Volunteers are not good shots; because they do not practise. Well, the question arises—how is it to be done? It is clear that this is the best time to do it. The country is moved to its centre with enthusiasm and determination, and there should be no trouble in bringing forward a workable and acceptable scheme at a time like the present. I think this one is the very best, because you will secure the youth of the country in the Volunteers, and you will give them something to do, something that will take the place of football and cricket. They will turn their attention to the rifle and make shooting their hobby. What is the use of giving a man a rifle out of the rack if he does not know the sighting of it? It is impossible to make good shooting without practice. Now, I say also that the scheme is a little too vague. This question of the Volunteers wants taking up by the War Office; and if you do not introduce some scheme of this kind, you must have conscription. If you have these Volunteer battalions and brigadiers to look after them, and each of them is attached to a Line battalion; if you organise the youth of the country properly under such a system, you will be able to draft from the Volunteer battalions first-rate shots in time of war. You will be able to get hundreds of such men and to draft first-rate soldiers into the Line battalions at the front. I should not have troubled the House with these remarks on the Volunteers were it not for the prominent part they have played in my hon. friend's speech; but I feel deeply on this subject, and I am perfectly certain that unless you take some such steps as these you will not make the Volunteers the effective force they might be. Select your brigadiers wisely, and put them over these men, and they will tell you what is best to do with them. I would suggest, too, that you should take away the name of "Volunteer," and put them under military laws. They could still live in their own homes, pursue their daily labour, and so the industrial forces of the Kingdom would not be depleted.

Colonel Pilkington.

MR. C. J. MURRAY (Coventry) said in regard to the Volunteer proposals that he would give men the opportunity of serving for three months, and as many of them (he referred especially to the Artillery) would be drafted from the working classes, and it was impossible almost for them to give their whole time to the duties, he would ask his hon. friend to consider whether or no they should be placed under Service conditions as regarded pay and allowances.

MR. MADDISON (Sheffield, Brightside): For some considerable time past there have been floating about rumours that in the statement of the Under Secretary for War the adoption of some form of compulsion, if not actual conscription, would be announced. It was, therefore, a very great relief to me to find that the Government have abandoned the fatal idea of introducing a system so alien to the traditions of the British people. The Under Secretary for War, in almost his opening sentences, said there was no modified compulsion in the scheme, and that the Government had not even considered such a proposal. It was fully expected that hon. and gallant Gentlemen opposite would not welcome that omission, and those anticipations have been far more than realised. Almost every hon. and gallant Gentleman who has addressed the House has regretted to a greater or less degree the fact that there was not some form of compulsion proposed. One hon. Member desired the very name of the Volunteers altered, and that all men from twenty-one to twenty-six years of age should be compelled to serve in this newly named Auxiliary force. Another hon. and gallant Member stated that the country was at present in such a patriotic mood that the Under Secretary for War had only to ask and he could have whatever he wanted. I was rather surprised to hear a complaint of lack of information in the statement of the Under Secretary for War, seeing that to the lay mind it seemed to state in very clear terms the number of troops at our disposal. How that hon. and gallant Member could ask for the statement to be carried still further and to be told how many of that total number were, from some cause or other, non-effective, passes my comprehension, as I should have thought that hardly patriotic. Another hon. and gallant Gentleman advocated the adoption of the Swiss system, and in doing so expressed his conviction that conscription could never be introduced into England. He is doubtless quite right in his view about conscription, but I am very pleased the Government are not prepared to bring in even the thin end of the wedge under the guise of the Swiss system. Speaking with some little knowledge of the working people of England, I say that while it is quite true that the present is a most favourable moment for playing on the patriotic feeling of the nation, and while you might just now get temporary support for some kind of modified compulsion, the Government have far too much sagacity to trust a great reorganising scheme, such as any form of compulsion would be, to the fleeting passion of the moment, which might afterwards leave them stranded, and make their last state worse than their first. It is all very well to argue for conscription or some kind of compulsory service, instancing some Continental State as an example; but it must be borne in mind that you cannot speak of our Army as being for home defence in England at all. It is true you may set apart a certain portion of your forces for home defence, but such an arrangement is completely upset by the example we have had of the use to which a purely Volunteer force - supposed to be, and, so far as the law is concerned, being, entirely for home defence—has, by methods often amounting in their pressure almost to compulsion, been put in South Africa. I believe I am voicing the sentiments of the great masses of the country when I say that, no matter how glittering may be the prospect of dominion and empire, anything, I do not care what, which turns or attempts to turn England into a great military nation after the pattern of Germany will be accounted by the people of this country as dear at any price. The Government have been far too much deceived by the newspapers in connection with the present unfortunate war; but I am glad they have not, so far at any rate, allowed themselves to be misled by those newspapers, morning and evening, weekly and monthly and quarterly, which are assuring the Government that the great masses of the working classes have only one ruling passion, and that is to go to the front. No greater mistake could be made, and again I most heartily congratulate the Government on having resisted the temptation—and it can have been no little one—of including in their scheme some form of compulsory service. I was also very glad to hear, though I do not think the scheme altogether bears out the statement, that the Under Secretary desired to avoid all attempts at panic, that he did not wish to set up the cry, "The country in danger." I was sorry and somewhat surprised to find that an hon. Member on this side of the House evidently regretted that that cry had not been set up, because he was most enthusiastic about embodying the Militia. For my part I think the Government have acted very wisely in doing nothing of the sort. With respect to the scheme as it refers to the Volunteers, I say very candidly that I hate militarism in any form; but if we have—and I am aware that we have to have—armed forces, I very much prefer Volunteer forces to Regular forces. Volunteers remain at least to some considerable extent a citizen force, and that fact consoles me in some degree, because as a citizen force they would not be so completely subservient to the ruling classes and the Government of the day—a state of things which in certain emergencies might be a very bad thing for the workers of this country. I was also very pleased that in dealing with the Volunteers the Under Secretary for War again gave the Committee the clearest indication that compulsion was not in his mind, because when he referred to the three months training he would like the artillery to undergo, he said in a very useful aside, "Of course, we shall not make this compulsory," a statement which was greeted with dissent by those who favour conscription. Here again, apart from any theoretical opinion about compulsory service, I am quite certain the hon. Gentleman was acting in the interests of his own scheme, because I know very well the sort of men who join the artillery Volunteers. They come in the main from a class who are strong trades unionists, men who in the towns earn very good money, and who, by training and tradition, are very independent. The very moment you let them know there was compulsion about this three months training you would lose a large number of the very men you wish to obtain. Therefore, even from the point of view of expediency, I am sure the Under Secretary for War was right in that particular. I do not quite understand the hon. Member who sits for one of the divisions of Essex, who seemed to twit the hon. Gentleman about the vagueness of his scheme with respect to the remuneration of the Volunteers. He said that unless they had some very solid comforts offered to them very few would volunteer. I do not think that is true. What is the fact? No doubt workmen must get something like an equivalent of their earnings, but beyond that I am certain it would not enter into their minds. But when we come to the addition of 30,000 Regulars, I am bound to say the faith of some of us is sorely tried. This is not a mere war vote; this is more than a mere vote of men and money to prosecute the South African campaign. Some of us in this House—and I am one—conscientiously believe that the war in which we are engaged is an unnecessary one, but we also realise—and this fact has shaped our action hitherto—that the Government has got the country into one of the greatest calamities of the century, that the Boers hold British territory and by all appearance are likely to hold it. [An HON. MEMBER: No!] I bow to the opinion of the hon. and gallant Member; I hope he is right and I am wrong. But the fact remains that the Boers are on British territory now, and therefore, much as some of us are against the war, we have not been able to vote against the men and money required to get the Boers off British territory, and if this was a mere vote for that purpose I for my part should follow the same course as hitherto. But this is more than that. Under the shelter of a great national calamity, which has caused considerable excitement, we have proposals of a permanent character, proposals not merely for an emergency. We are face to face with the fact that we are going to add enormously to our permanent military forces, and I say here that this is not caused by the necessities of the nation. This addition is not because England is in danger, but it is the result of a mischievous and mistaken—I almost said a fatal—policy. Therefore I shall feel perfectly free to act towards this demand altogether apart from the situation in South Africa. In conclusion, I solemnly protest against a dangerous militarism, the outcome of a mad Imperialism. The conviction is growing deeper and deeper in the minds of the poorest of the working classes that—it may be all right to supply material for inflated rhetoric or to provide matter for leading articles in the newspapers—they are getting absolutely no return from this vast outlay to which you are putting the country from time to time. Do not mistake me. I do not mean by "outlay" merely a material something; the workers are never materialistic. But you are neither freeing oppressed peoples nor are you on the material side giving the people new markets, a point of which the Colonial Secretary made so much a few years ago. I say here, much as I may be misunderstood, I have a real and a growing fear of this encroachment of that bad system of militarism which does not stop in the inflated Budgets of Governments, but permeates the very life of the people.

*SIR JOHN COLOMB (Great Yarmouth): I for one regret that on Supplementary Estimates to provide for the extra expenses within forty-one days, namely, before 25th March and the exigencies of a temporary war, we have brought before us a scheme of a more or less permanent arrangement. I can hardly believe the Government fully realise the effect of that procedure upon some of their supporters. The feeling and the absolute determination of the country is that this war should be prosecuted with all the resolution and energy and resources of the nation, and be brought to a successful conclusion as soon as possible. Almost every man in this House is ready to vote any money for forty-one days or forty-one months to accomplish that object. But now, when under cover of this temporary emergency we have proposed a permanent plan of alteration of our military forces, to make them, in the opinion of the War Office, adequate to our needs, what is the position of a member of this House? Of these 120,000 men we are now asked to vote I cannot understand how many are asked for for South Africa, for a reserve for over-sea requirements, or for sitting down at home. Therefore, objecting as I do to a passive policy, but determined as I am to give the Government the fullest support in all things that will help to end this war and to make us ready for any emergency over-sea, how can I move a reduction of or cavil at this vote? We are all trapped by the War Office—I do not use the word offensively; we are obliged to swallow a sketch and a scheme of an alteration of our military system under cover of a sort of Supplementary Estimate to meet certain expenses within forty-one days. I extremely regret this step; I think it is unfortunate in every way, but it is doubly unfortunate in one way. I should object to the Government coming forward with any scheme of Army alteration or reform to meet the needs of our Empire under circumstances where the discussion must be confined purely and simply to military questions, and excludes questions of broad policy. I object to such a course most strongly. My hon. friend, whose ability, courtesy and talents we all admire, incidentally threw in a phrase about a certain blue waterschool. The necessities of Empire and the conditions of Empire know no school. This is a broad question, a question of the number, quality, need and extent necessary for home defence. The nature and extent of home fortifications depend absolutely upon the naval policy of the country and the fulfilment of its naval demands. How therefore, can you, on a Votes supposed to be for the prosecution of a purely military war in South Africa, enter upon or discuss the question of home defence? You cannot do it. I confess I am extremely disappointed, because I do not think it is the proper way to treat the defences of this Empire at present. I would first of all like to ask for an explanation when my hon. friend rises to reply of exactly what is to be the net permanent addition to the cavalry and to the field artillery for over sea service. I confess that, for my own part, I strongly believe that the niceties of arrangement in time of peace of the relative proportion of arms is an unsound policy to follow. Taking all things into consideration, I think we should maintain our cavalry and field artillery above all proportion to the infantry in time of peace. If this war shows anything, it shows us how rapidly infantry forces can be created, and how difficult to create artillery and cavalry. This war shows another thing, and it is that we were shamefully deficient in field artillery and in cavalry. The very first checks which our arms inflicted would have been converted into routs if we had had the cavalry and artillery necessary to follow them up, and we are now paying in blood and treasure for the deficiency in these arms, which were reduced in 1887 on what we were then told was the advice of the military authorities. I propose to ask my hon. friend to give the names of those military authorities who gave this advice in 1887, because it is high time that we should have some understanding as to who the military authorities are. Those who advised the Minister for War in 1887 to reduce our field artillery are practically responsible for the disasters which have happened in South Africa. I mention this because I think that, in any scheme to provide for the military needs of the Empire, the subject must be approached upon broad and well-defined principles, and not by tinkering with alterations here and alterations there. What we have to do in dealing with this question is to study history and facts. The War Office does not seem to study either, because it comes down here and talks about home defences without having understood the principle upon which home defence should be undertaken. As the right hon. Gentleman the Member for the Forest of Dean has pointed out, we want the supremacy of the sea and we want a mobile army. You must, of course, have a certain amount of force, at home, but it must be associated as closely as possible with the mobile force, because by association it will become so attached to it that when the hour comes, as has been proved by this war, it will join it over sea; when the demand for a military force comes from over the sea, the advantages of the association will be fully recognised. That is a principle which we should bear steadily in mind. My hon. friend has put in the front of his military programme passive defence. I object to that absolutely and entirely, because I think it is a false principle and a dangerous one. I would ask what is the lesson of this war? Why, it has broken down every theory of passive defence not only in this country but throughout the Empire. Up to the outbreak of this war the whole of our colonies were following our example, and were relying upon passive defence. This war, however, has shown us all the absolute futility of passive defence. This has been brought home to every colony, and for common safety they have had to break through all the self-imposed ties of passive defence, and they have volunteered to send their money and their men wherever our Empire is attacked. I want to know when the people of our Colonies read my hon. friend's speech what will they think? Why they will see that the War Office is in the same old rut as it was in 1870-71. They will see that the Government are not approaching this question from a broad principle of Imperial consolidation, but are simply tinkering with it here and there. They have admitted that the principle of passive defence is wrong. To-morrow the people all over the Empire will read that the War Office and the Government of this country attach the first importance to passive defence.

Mr. Maddison.

MR. WYNDHAM: I think the hon. Member must be in error, or I must have expressed myself with great obscurity. I pointed out that under the defensive scheme we looked to the Auxiliary forces for that form of defence. I clearly defined that in the future we should look to them to take part in a more active form of defence.

*SIR JOHN COLOMB: I am extremely glad of those words from my hon. friend, but I cannot help thinking that all over the Empire the general effect of his speech will be that he attaches more importance to the principle of passive defence than to an active and mobile force. I shall be extremely glad if that is an incorrect view. I hope that my hon. friend when he replies will make it perfectly plain that the policy of this country is a policy of reliance upon our Fleet for the security of all our dominions, and that the great military requirement to be met in the interests of our Empire is the establishment of a mobile army adapted entirely to our own needs, and not blindly following the example of Continental countries whose position is unlike our own.

Sir John Colomb.

MR. BUCHANAN (Aberdeenshire, E.):

I think we are somewhat at a disadvantage in this discussion, because the Under Secretary for War, in the interesting speech he has just delivered, did not dwell exactly upon the subject which many of us anticipated he would deal with. We were told last week over and over again, both inside and outside of this House, that by carrying on the debate on the Queen's Speech we were preventing the country from knowing what the Government were going to do with regard to the prosecution of the war in South Africa. That was continually being dinned into our ears, and now, when the opportunity comes round, the hon. Gentleman makes a very able and interesting speech, but from the beginning to the end of it he never mentions South Africa. With regard to the subject matter dealt with by the hon. Gentleman, I cannot speak with the same knowledge as my hon. and gallant friend who has just sat down. But I have listened with great attention to the speech of the hon. Gentleman, and from a purely outside point of view I have drawn one or two general conclusions. I should like to ask him what is the number of men under his new scheme that he proposes to add to the permanent establishment of the Army. I gather that there will be twelve or fifteen battalions of infantry, but I could not make out the number of cavalry, and there will also be forty-three batteries of artillery.

MR. WYNDHAM: We propose to raise fifteen battalions of infantry; but the House has already voted three, and we are now asking the Committee to vote another twelve.

MR. BUCHANAN: I think it is desirable for the general information of hon. Members of this House that we should have it clearly stated what is the net amount of the permanent addition to the armed forces of this country. Then again, from beginning to end of his speech, the hon. Member did not say a single word about pounds, shillings, and pence. What is all this to cost? We want to get an idea of the cost of this permanent addition to the Regular Army, and what it will add to the Estimates of the year, supposing this scheme is carried out. He told us in the course of his speech that the Army Estimates last year amounted to £20,750,000, but the hon. Gentleman knows that the military expenditure of the country was considerably more than that. There was £1,000,000 upon the Colonial Office Vote, and £1,750,000 under the Military Works Loan Act. I think it would be very useful if the hon. Member was able to state the permanent increase in the forces of the country, and the amount of increase in the permanent expenditure. There is one other point I wish to make. I say with all submission that it seems to me that the hon. Gentleman's speech would have been better delivered upon the introduction of the Army Estimates. He has already told us that in this Estimate out of £13,000,000 there is only £420,000 for purposes which he explained to us in his speech. I think it would have been more to the convenience of the House and the regulation of business if this scheme had been set forth upon the introduction of the Army Estimates. Will the hon. Gentleman tell us when the Army Estimates are to be introduced—whether they will be introduced at an early date, and whether in the memorandum he will see that there is set forth a complete description of the scheme which he has laid before the House this evening, and then we shall be able to judge better of the details. I should like to refer to the other part of his speech relating to the Estimate now before us, and I ask him to give us some further information as to what we are voting this evening. It will be within the recollection of the House that last October, when we passed a similar Vote, the hon. Gentleman, in a very interesting speech, explained to us with considerable detail the way in which the 35,000 men were made up, and he gave us a number of details with regard to the items in the Vote. I should like to hear from him something of the same sort this evening.

MR. WYNDHAM: I gave the figures several times during the course of last week.

MR. BUCHANAN: I cannot quite make out these numbers. Are these men included in the 120,000?

MR. WYNDHAM: Of course they would embrace the portion of the Reserve not sent out.

MR. BUCHANAN: Last October the 35,000 men included 21,000 Reserves. Does this include the whole of them?

MR. WYNDHAM: Yes, the whole of them.

MR. BUCHANAN: The hon. Gentleman gave us an estimate then, and I think it would be convenient if he also gave us one on this occasion. I should like to know if that 35,000 includes those in Natal and also the native Indian troops moved to the Mauritius. With regard to the colonial forces in South Africa does that 26,000 men include all sorts of colonial forces serving now? I am afraid that I do not make my question quite plain, but I have no doubt the hon. Gentleman will be able to explain what troops are included in this 120,000. But besides this 120,000 men he has got another 14,000 men to play with, and we should like to know whether he has raised these men, or whether he proposes to raise them during the present financial year. I think the Committee would like some information from the hon. Gentleman as to what the Government have been doing, are doing, and are going to do for the prosecution of the war in South Africa. What troops have they been sending out, are sending out, and are going to send out? In his speech the hon. gentleman stopped his narrative on the 17th of December, and from that date he did not give us any particulars as to the course which the Government propose to take. As we are asked here to vote £13,000,000, we ought to have some information from the responsible Minister in this House as to what they propose to do with it. I do not want to say anything about the war ; but everyone will agree that, although it has denuded our defensive forces, this danger will be diminished if the war is quickly brought to an end and prosecuted with vigour ; and the more overpowering the numbers of our troops are in South Africa the more quickly will the war be brought to an end. We want to get from the hon. Gentleman some particulars upon this subject, and the public will be very much disappointed to-morrow morning if he does not give these particulars. We should like some further particulars about this £13,000,000, but perhaps I had better postpone my question upon this subject until we come to that Vote. If £10,000,000 was to be the complete Estimate for the forecast of the war on the 10th of October last, I cannot understand for the life of me how £13,000,000 is likely to be enough up to the 31st of March, in view of the largely increased forces in South Africa.

*COLONEL SANDYS (Lancashire, Bootle) : Before making my few remarks I wish to compliment the Under Secretary for War upon the very excellent statement he has made to us with regard to the Government proposals for home defence. I do not for a moment, however, suppose that these measures will be entirely satisfactory to the country, although I regard them as an instalment in the direction so much desired. It will be within the recollection of the House that in the autumn of last year a vote was taken for a sum of £10,000,000, and then it was supposed that a force of 75,000 men would be adequate for dealing with the military situation then before us. But what is that situation now ? We are confronted with a force supposed to be about 150,000 men, armed with the best arms in Europe, commanded by able strategists from Russia, France, and Belgium, besides Transvaal officers, and a large force of German artillerists who are occupying positions which have proved hitherto practically impregnable. It goes without saying that in the face of these facts the number of men and the amount of money supposed at first to be sufficient must now be very largely supplemented. Hon. Members on the other side of the House, in speaking upon this question, have, in some cases, stated that the requirements have been over-estimated ; in point of fact they indicate, to some extent, that the sum asked for was excessive. The opinion, however, which I have formed from those with whom I have been in consultation in various parts of the country is that the people do not care what sum of money the Government ask for, but they do ask that there should be provided an adequate force in the country to defend our interests both at home and abroad. I therefore welcome the statement made by the hon. Gentleman the Under Secretary of State for War in which he proposes to put the forces at home in a condition adequate for home defence. There were objections made by the right hon. Baronet the Member for the Forest of Dean, and my hon. and gallant friend below me, who said that they thought the policy of passive defence was a wrong conclusion. I understood the hon. Gentleman the Under Secretary of State for War in his speech to indicate that we had a force of 328,000 men of all arms in the Auxiliary forces at home, and that in addition to this we had a force of 109,000 Regular soldiers in the country at the present time available for home defence, making a total force of 437,000 men. I do not mean to say that they are organised into fighting units. They are not yet told off into Brigades, Divisions, or Army Corps, but I welcome the statement of the Under Secretary of State for War because it shows that the Government have to some extent realised the position of affairs. They have so far grasped the situation as to enable us, in case of foreign complications, to have an army here at home in, it is hoped, a reasonable time, which will be reliable for home defence. It will, in addition to forces for the defence of strategic points, give us a mobile force that we can move from time to time to where it is required, and once having got this mobile force under arms and under canvas, we may say that we have begun to meet the danger of foreign interference. There were, however, one or two points in the speech of my hon. friend that met less with my approbation. One was the action of the Government in deciding that there is to be no compulsory military service at present ; and I beg to add my expression of regret to that of the hon. Members who have addressed the House this evening, and who in some form or other have deplored the decision that there is to be no compulsory military service. I consider, Sir, that whatever measures we take at the present time to meet the exigencies of the moment, the question of the adoption of compulsory service in the Army of this country is only a question of time. We shall have to choose between some form of compulsory service and defeat at the hands of a foreign enemy. We shall have to choose one or other of the horns of this dilemma. This is not merely my opinion, but that of the highest military critics on the Continent, who have predicted our fate in the event of our being engaged in a very serious war, unless we adopt compulsory service for our Army in some shape or way beforehand. Well, Sir, we are at present engaged in a very serious war, one which will tax our military resources to the uttermost, fighting, as we are doing, an enemy 6,000 miles away from home. But it would be a very different thing fighting a first-class Power, or a combination of two first-class foreign Powers in Europe, where, in case of defeat, it would mean the invasion of this country and its occupation by a foreign army, and the payment of a fine—a humiliation compared with which a little mild compulsory military service would be as nothing. I would remind the House that compulsory service in the Militia Force is the constitutional law of this country at the present time. No man, under the British Constitution, can be compelled to serve in the Army; but every man between the ages of 18 and 40 is by the law of England subject to serve in the Militia, that is to say, if the Militia Ballot Act were put into force. Just now, the Act is hung up; but it can be brought into effective operation by a resolution in this House any evening; and, then ipso facto, every man between those ages would be liable to serve. This form of compulsory service has existed in England from the time of King Alfred to the present day. I do not say that the force we are to have may not be adequate to our needs. The Government is going to try an experiment, and if it does not succeed, we can then fall back upon the Militia Ballot Act. Another point that I take exception to is that the twelve new Line battalions to be raised are to form part of a scheme for increasing the number of battalions of certain regiments to four. Well, that I regard as a continuance of the pernicious system of linked battalions—that bad system of Lord Cardwell's which has ruined the British Army, and has entirely broken down now, under the strain of this present war, so far as the linked battalions are concerned. It is impossible that there should be continual changing of officers from one battalion to another without loss of efficiency. The only advantage of the four battalion regiment is that the officers can exchange from one battalion to another without losing their place in the regiment; and I may remind the House that an officer who exchanges has to go to the bottom of the cadre when he goes from one regiment to another. What we want to get is a true connection between officers and men, so that they become known to each other, and this object is to a considerable extent frustrated by the continual changing of officers from one battalion to another, even in the same regiment. Therefore, I say, let the officers serve their whole period as far as is possible in the battalion to which they belong. The four-battalion regiment is faulty as a military institution and ought to be abolished. We have now a splendid opportunity of putting our offensive and defensive forces into a condition commensurate with the military needs of the country. We may never have such an opportunity presented to us again. Taking all things into consideration, I regard the war in South Africa as a providential opportunity for preparing the means of saving the country from future disaster. [Cries from Irish benches of "Oh, oh!"] That is the opinion which I hold, and we cannot be too thankful that this opportunity has come to us now in time to show the country its military weakness, and to make us alive to the necessity for placing our military forces on a footing commensurate with the needs of the country. The next time we are faced with a crisis like this it might be in a war with a European Power, and we should then have neither the time nor the opportunity to set our house in order before we were committed to a fight for our very existence which we can now prepare for, as we have a breathing time given to us for it, but if we neglect the present opportunity we have only ourselves to blame for the inevitable consequences of our neglect of military foresight and preparations.

MR. ALLAN (Gateshead) said that while he was bound to criticise the Government's latest proposals he must congratulate the hon. Gentleman the Under Secretary of State for War on his speech that night. At the same time he was bound to say that while he listened to that speech he felt grievously disappointed. He had heard no elucidation of the mystery of what was going to be done in South Africa, and for what purpose the £13,000,000 was required. It was stated that £420,000 of this money was to be spent in home defence. Well, he looked upon that as a mere bagatelle; but he was left in utter ignorance as to what was to be done with the balance. He further directed the attention of the Committee to certain facts in regard to the expenditure of this money, which he did not think was fully accounted for. He wished to know from the Under Secretary of State for War why it was that this great Empire—voting between £21,000,000 and £22,000,000 per annum for military purposes—was brought face to face with the stress and strain we were now experiencing in South Africa. Why was it that Great Britain was compelled to go down on her knees and be driven to buy guns—not directly, but through an Italian agent—in France? Why was it that we were compelled to buy shrapnel and shell from Germany? How was it that we had been compelled to seek aid from countries with which at no distant date we might be at war? He wanted to know what we were getting for our twenty-one millions. He asked what they were doing at Woolwich in the Arsenal, and why they were now calling in all the ammunition from the Volunteer depôts. Could it be possible that we had not enough ammunition to carry on this war? He could remember a Government being turned out of office for a deficiency in the store of cordite, yet here they were now, in the first few months of a serious campaign, obliged to send to France to buy guns through an Italian agent, and to Germany for shell and shrapnel. He naturally asked under such circumstances how the £13,000,000 was to be spent. The speech of the hon. Gentleman told them nothing on that head. Then, again, as to the question of quick-firing guns they were told last year that the military authorities had concluded a series of experiments with these guns. He objected to them at the time as a waste of public money. Well, what was our position to-day? We were obliged to buy elsewhere, for we had no quick-firing piece fit to cope with the arms of the enemy in South Africa. Where were the millions going? Let the House ask the moribund lot in Pall Mall. [Laughter.] This was no laughing matter. Our country was going through a grave crisis. England had never received such a humiliation as she had received in South Africa since the battle of Bannockburn. [Laughter.] Nevertheless, it was absolutely true. It was a historical fact. Now, the money had been voted. Where, then, was our ammunition? Where was our artillery? Practically all the guns we possessed were muzzle-loaders. ["Oh!"] They were not quick-firers. We were only making them now. Again, as to the question of home defence, the hon. Member the Under Secretary of State for War said £420,000 was required for that purpose. Why were the batteries around our coasts equipped only with muzzle-loaders? Yet in face of facts like these, it was only proposed to spend £420,000 on home defence. No doubt, at the end of March another forty or fifty millions would be asked for. Turning next to the subject of the Volunteers, the hon. Member said he happened to be an old Volunteer himself, and he declared to the House that in his opinion the treatment of the Volunteers of this country had been shabby in the extreme. They had no rifle ranges to resort to except those at a great distance. No wonder there was difficulty in getting men to join. Why was it? We must look again for answer to the War Office—to the gentry in Pall Mall, where they had no idea whatever of encouraging the citizen soldier to practise the art of defending his own country in the hour of need.

MAJOR RASCH (Essex, S.E.): I am entirely in agreement with the remarks of the hon. Member for Gateshead on the subject of our field guns in South Africa: everybody knows that they are not quick-firing guns, such as are used in France and Germany. Our guns fire about four shots a minute, whereas the guns in Germany will fire from ten to fifteen shots per minute. I would like to say, Sir, that it is rather difficult to be in agreement with the speech of the right hon. Member the Leader of the Opposition, who holds a brief for the War Office, as right hon. Gentlemen in his position always do. The right hon. Gentleman said he was not in accord with the suggestion made as to conscription. The Under Secretary of State for War has said nothing about conscription. But I do believe that this country will be obliged to have recourse to the ballot for the Militia, if we do not have some other form of compulsion. Of this I am certain, that unless we feed and clothe our Army better and find the men some employment after they have left the service, and give them some hope of promotion from the ranks, there will have to be some sort of compulsory service if we do not have conscription. Although the speech of the Under Secretary of State for War was extremely instructive, it did not convince me. It appeared to me to be a speech which this House has heard several times before; and the scheme it foreshadowed was extremely like that introduced by Mr. Cardwell in 1876. The hon. Gentleman told us that there are 109,000 Regular troops in this country at the present moment; but surely the hon. Gentleman knows that the Regulars in this country now are immature and inefficient, otherwise they would be out in South Africa and not at home. They have no regimental organisation; and there are practically no batteries, although they have a certain number of guns. Now what does the hon. Gentleman say as to the Militia? He proposes to give them transport and extra pay, and if the hon. Gentleman knew the Militia as I have had an opportunity of knowing them for the last half dozen years he would acknowledge that these suggestions have not come too soon. A considerable proportion of their battalions is made up of recruits who are not available for service, and they do not anything like represent the numbers as they appear in the Army List. As to the Volunteers, it is about time that their Artillery should be equipped with new guns. The 40-pounders they have now are practically useless. I should also favour the capitation increase; but I think it would be more simple if the men received, say, 6d. an hour while at drill or on duty. Personally, I do not see much use in enlisting large masses of undisciplined men. What is the use of doing that, if you have not the necessary ranges? What you want, of course, is a disposable army corps, composed of forces which are capable of offence, which is practically the vital principle of defence. When Kruger sent his ultimatum there were no troops in the country which we could send out at once; whereas if we had had a disposable army corps at Aldershot four months ago we would not now be seeing General White fighting with his back to the wall at Ladysmith. I also think that the proposal to allow old soldiers to re-engage is a good one, and that officers in the Reserve should have a chance of serving in the Regular forces. As to the Yeomanry, I have never been an enthusiastic admirer of that branch of the service, although I am bound to say that I admire very much the way in which the Yeomanry have come to the front during the last few months. I believe if the War Office took them in hand and turned them from cavalry into mounted infantry they would regain the reputation for utility which in recent years has been denied to them.

MR. LABOUCHERE (Northampton):

Mr. Lowther, since I have had the honour of being a Member of this House, and no matter who has been the War Minister for the time being, I have always noticed that the colonels who sit in this House criticise the military proposals as those of a set of imbeciles and incompetent men. Now, my hon. friend the Member for Gateshead wants to know what the money is to be spent for. If my hon. friend had taken the trouble to look at the Estimate he would have seen for himself. As far as I am able to read it, the £13,000,000, with the exception of the £420,000 to be spent on home defence, is to be spent on the war up to March of the present year. Well, Sir, a person may consider this war absolutely unnecessary and absolutely unjust; he may consider that the objects aimed at are undesirable in the interests of the country; but that does not alter the fact that the war does exist, and that this Vote is practically for money expended. If we choose to send men out to Africa, we are bound in honour not to deprive them of the money we have engaged to pay them. Under these circumstances, although I have my own view in regard to the war, I do not object to this Vote. Moreover, I do not object, when we are at war, and have denuded the country of nearly all our troops, to provide for the defence of the country in case of attack by some foreign Power. But what I do object to in the speech of the hon. Gentleman the Under Secretary of State for War is that he has grafted on to his demands for the present emergency a scheme for the permanent increase of the Army. I could not follow the hon. Gentleman in all the details of his scheme, but his figures seemed to show a plan for taking troops from one force and adding them to another. As a matter of fact, the hon. Gentleman did say that there was to be a permanent increase of our soldiers by something like 32,000 men per annum.

MR. WYNDHAM: I said the present proposal was for an increase of 32,000 men, but I also certainly said that when the army came back from South Africa their services would not be required, and the Army would be reduced to the peace establishment.

MR. LABOUCHERE: Well, we ought to know definitely what the Government scheme is, and by how many men the Army is to be increased. I take it that the increase will be not less than 20,000 men. Although I say that we ought to be ready to grant this Vote for the money which has been already spent, it must not be taken that we assent to a permanent increase in the Army; and I do not see how far the hon. Gentleman was entitled to engraft on the Vote of money for the present emergency a scheme for the permanent increase of the Army. I have followed this question for a considerable number of years. I remember the time of the establishment of the Volunteers. We were told then what an excellent thing that was, and that it would not be necessary to increase the Army. Then we were told, when we were asked to vote a large number of additional ships for the fleet, that we would not have to be asked for an increased Vote for the Army; but ever since then the numbers and the cost of the Army have gone up by leaps and bounds. The idea was that we ought to have troops for the defence of this country and for the defence of our garrisons abroad, and 40,000 or 50,000 men to send to a foreign country in the event of war. The War Minister himself has said that we cannot expect to cope with the great Continental armies, or dream of being able to send an army abroad sufficient to fight the army of France or of Germany: but at the present moment you have sent an army of 150,000 to South Africa. Are we to consider that our normal military establishment should be such that we shall be able to send abroad an army of 150,000 men, and yet have a sufficient army at home to defend the country? I hope occasions like the present will never occur again; but if you adopt that policy, it is very obvious that we must have a perpetual increase to our Army and Navy. Now I am opposed to that policy. The Under Secretary for War says he hopes that the patriotism of the country will enable him to fill up the ranks. I have no doubt that a sufficient number of men will come forward in defence of their country if it is attacked, but I very much doubt if you can have such a number of men in times of peace without conscription. I gathered the other day from an admirable speech by Lord Rosebery that his Lordship considers conscription will shortly be necessary, and the hon. and gallant Gentleman who has just sat down took the same view. We must look all these facts in the face, and I am perfectly convinced that if the present policy is persevered with, within one or two years we shall have conscription. I hope I have made my position clear in this matter. I am not going to oppose the Vote, because I believe that, the money having been spent, it would be most improper that the bill should not be paid. But I do protest against the representative of the War Office interpolating in a proposal for the payment of this money a scheme for permanently increasing the Army. It must be clearly understood that when that scheme comes on for discussion on its merits we shall be free to approve of or to reject it irrespective of the present Vote. There are one or two questions I would venture to ask the Under Secretary for War. The hon. Gentleman spoke of the Volunteers, and said he was going to increase their pay and the extent of their organisation. Does he intend to apply that to Ireland, or to the United Kingdom alone? [IRISH MEMBERS on the Irish Benches: Hear, hear.] That is a most important question, and I am curious to know whether it is so or not. The hon. Gentleman the Under Secretary for War professed the most wonderful contempt for money, as if this Vote were so many halfpennies; he said that patriotism was everything, and that the money would be given freely. That is all very well when you talk of the present war; but when we go into a new scheme we should ask what that scheme is to cost, and if the hon. Gentleman will not tell us, the Chancellor of the Exchequer ought to inform the Committee what that scheme is to involve. I know that some gentlemen want the English Constitution changed, and declare that the Treasury ought not to control our expenditure: but I do not agree with that. Before we have a scheme adopted, we should have some notion as to what it is to cost. Another question is, whether this £13,000,000 we are asked to vote now will represent the total expenditure up to the 31st March, or only a portion of it?

Mr. Labouchere.

MR. WYNDHAM: The total expenditure up to the 31st March; but, of course, the operations in which we are engaged involve very heavy charges besides.

MR. LABOUCHERE: The hon. Gentleman distinctly tells us that it is the total expenditure up to 31st March, exclusive of terminal charges, by which I suppose he means bringing back the troops. But will the total expenditure for the war that is due be covered by this £13,000,000?

MR. WYNDHAM: That is due.

*MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER (Belfast, West): We have an estimate before us, which deals with many millions of pounds. The Under Secretary for War has spoken in great detail about a portion, a very insignificant portion, of the Estimate; but £10,000,000 of the whole Estimate refers to the expenditure in connection with the war in South Africa, and, if my memory serves me right, the words "South Africa" did not once fall from my hon. friend's lips, and no particulars of any sort or kind were given in regard to the expenditure in South Africa, or on any other item of the budget which my hon. friend presented to the House. It seems to me that that is rather a topsy-turvy arrangement. I do not know whether I am out of order—I think I am not—in departing from the arrangement of the discussion which my hon. friend proposed; but, so far as I can understand, this debate is almost the only occasion on which we can raise the question, very important to many of us, of the expenditure of the money included in the major portion of this Vote. When I heard my hon. friend make his speech, I did not know whether to laugh or cry; to laugh, because there is something rather comic in the proposals my hon. friend made to the House. I think we must all agree that the Under Secretary has been proposing to us measures which are of the nature of emergency measures, and that if we leave that fact out of sight we shall entirely misapprehend the appeal he made to the House. I admit, then, that what he proposed is an emergency measure, that it is the best, perhaps, that can be done under the circumstances, and that it is our duty, as patriotic men, to give credit to the War Office for their desire to get us through the emergency. But, after all, we have some sort of responsibility as individual Members of Parliament, and I think it is reasonable that, before giving carte blanche for these emergency measures, we should make some sort of inquiry into the question of whether these emergency measures will satisfy the need that we all admit exists. I think I may justify my frame of mind. I said that I felt half inclined to laugh because I heard my friend get up and propose point after point as essential for the country's need, which has been the commonplace, year after year, of that small number of hon. Members who have taken the views I have endeavoured to expound in regard to the necessities of the Army. It was laughable that my hon. friend should have discovered at this, the eleventh, I may almost say, the twelfth hour, that there was some reason, some method in our proposals; that two and two did make four; and that the time had at last come when it was necessary to admit our facts. There was a melancholy side to the proposals of the hon. Gentleman—a very melancholy side. Here is an expenditure of £13,000,000, which does not nearly exhaust the total expenditure, on the purely military preparations of the country. Now, it is melancholy that we should be confronted with a demand of this kind in a war with a small Power, that we should be told that so inadequate were our preparations for that war, with all our enormous resources, that we should consider it a reasonable and fit thing for the Under Secretary to come down to the House and ask us for—what I am sure we are ready to give—a blank cheque to enable him to discharge the very elementary duties of the office of which he is so distinguished a member. We have been told that it is absolutely essential that more batteries should be provided. Of course, it is essential; everybody has said that it was essential for years past. We are told that guns of position should be supplied to the Volunteers, and that these should not be obsolete, but guns of the most modern description. We have said so for years. The other day, I read an account of how two nine-pounder guns at Mafeking were found to be outranged by the Boer guns by 2,000 yards. These guns were the guns of the Natal Volunteers. That is precisely analogous to the armament we have given to our own Volunteers. We have never regarded the Volunteers seriously. It was the same War Office which comes down now and asked for the most modern guns for the Volunteers which provided for our excellent and well-intentioned Volunteer gunners the guns which under the stress of war would fail as the guns failed at the siege of Mafeking. We are told that we are to have a number of three years men. Of course we are, because it has been obvious any time during the last ten years that that was the only way you can get men under the conditions of recruiting, so as to make up a large reserve. But the three years system was at one time anathema with the War Office. There is another development, side by side with the recruiting of three years men, we are to have the recruiting of long service men. We have already got back to twelve years long service men to the extent of 5,000, but now, apparently, we are to have a full return to long service and pensions. I do not know how these changes have come over the spirit of our dream, but I do know that three years service men, long service men, and pensioned men used all alike to be anathema. I want to know whether it is reason, or the pressure of emergency, which has changed the opinion of the War Office in these matters. And then, in regard to Yeomanry, I was astonished to find, for the first time, what an extraordinarily valuable body the Yeomanry were. I remember when a member of the present Government said that, in his opinion, the kindest thing the Government could do would be to disband the Yeomanry, but now we are told, with regard to this very force so described by the Minister for Agriculture, that there is no such body in the country. I have had a great deal of correspondence with officers of the Militia, and their opinion has always been that the process applied by the War Office was killing that force, is destroying the ambition of the officers and the efficiency of the men. Year after year officers of the Militia have complained of the way they have been treated when they applied for some recognition of the force. But now we are told that the Militia is the one force on which we are to depend, and we are to go round the country gentlemen, who have been doing all that in them lay to try and get some recognition from the War Office, begging them to try if they cannot furbish up the Militia in order to meet the needs of the War Office at the present time. Only last session I was rebuked for saying that £20,000 was a ludicrous vote for ranges for the Volunteers, but now we are told that the one thing essential for the Volunteers is the provision of rifle ranges. Cavalry officers told us again and again that we were departing from the best Continental models in organising our cavalry regiments in three squadrons; but now we are told that we and they were right, and that the old system is to be re-established. These are facts. Now, as to the Household troops. We are told that they are to be brought up to their proper strength. I do not know whether the country is aware that only one regiment of the Household Cavalry has been made up out of three regiments for this war. How is it that the sound principle has been departed from that a regiment should remain unbroken? The reason is that not one of the three regiments of Household Cavalry could supply two squadrons from its own composition. These are all things that I complained of years ago, and which are now to be remedied, and I want to know why all these things have changed their aspect within the short period of three months, and why what was unreasonable and ridiculous, amateur, and impossible then has now become necessary? The only solution that I can think of is that the War Office have had applied to these contradictions, impossibilities, and incompatibilities the touchstone of war. Never, during the last twenty years, has the British Army been organised by the War Office for the purpose of going to war, and the moment you apply that touchstone all these fads and fallacies and preconceived ideas which we were told were essential to the system vanished, and the stern realities prevailed. And now we have my hon. friend the Under Secretary for War coming down to the House stating that these very things we demanded are essential if we are to be saved from the difficulties into which the War Office has plunged us. I say this, not from a desire to embarrass the Government, but because I do think it is necessary that the Committee and the country should be careful indeed how they entrust to this same organisation the vast sums which are now asked for and the vast powers demanded to be conceded. My hon. friend the Under Secretary said a great deal about the muscles and the ribs and other anatomical parts of the body being a protection to the heart and the lungs, and something also about the mailed fist, but he said nothing about that part of the body which, after all, plays a very important part—the brain, which directs the fist and gives an impulse to the muscles. In my opinion that is what the country is particularly anxious about at this moment. I suppose there is no man in this House, or out of it, who is disposed to deny to the hon. Member the credit he deserves for his proposals. But there is a very large number of men who agree with me, that, if these proposals are to bear the stamp of permanence they ought to be opposed. Nay, more, that they ought to be criticised, opposed, and thwarted until we have an assurance that the organisation and the brains which are to control them are something totally different from the brains and organisation which have exposed us to the calamities which have made all these things essential. I regret that my right hon. friend the First Lord of the Treasury has thought it necessary to subscribe to a eulogy of the War Department as strong as that which he felt it his duty to pronounce the other night. I think that eulogy would have been almost excessive if pronounced on a committee of archangels directing the movements of the heavenly hosts before the battle of Armageddon. But whether that be so or not, I think that though perhaps as grateful appreciation of strenuous service by able men under the pressure of an emergency it was permissible, it was not exactly appropriate to the present situation. Of course, whenever you get a number of English officers and gentlemen in an emergency, and when the country is in danger, they will do their best—neither sleep by night nor rest by day—until they have done all they can do. But I do not know that the attitude and mind of the country towards the War Office at the present moment is exactly that which the right hon. Gentleman seems to have imagined. With all its application, all its good intentions, with the purse of the country freely open to it, and the support of the country behind it, the War Office has landed us in a state of things which it is lamentable to contemplate, and in a series of mishaps and entanglements which, happily, have not been common in the history of this country. I intend to postpone criticism of that organisation to another day, but I think it most important that the myth which the First Lord of the Treasury has gone a good way to create should be dissipated before it assumes a solid form in the minds of the majority of the people of this country. I am prepared, when the appointed time comes, to demonstrate that the great success which the right hon. Gentleman claims for the War Department has been a very moderate success indeed. That they have foreseen the difficulties which they would have to contend with, that they have made any adequate preparations for the performance of those duties, I am prepared to deny, and, believe, to prove. I must say that I regret the right hon. Gentleman should have thought it necessary at the present time to put the matter quite as high as he has done. I am sure there is no Member in this House who admires more, and who would be more ready to sympathise with, the spirit that always stands up for a Department which is attacked than myself, and I personally would have been perfectly willing for a long time to come to abstain from criticism of the details of the work of the War Department, but I do think it is absolutely necessary at the present time to say a very little about what the War Department has done. The Under Secretary for War spoke to-night about 106,000 Regular troops in this country. I regret that he used that expression, because though it is literally and absolutely true, and I think I could enumerate every single unit which makes up that total, that expression will go forth to-morrow as a statement made on authority by the Under Secretary of State. Yet as a military organisation that 106,000 men have no existence at all. It is an unorganised and incoherent body, and, as an hon. Member said just now, if it were anything else it would not be in this country at this moment. We have entrusted enormous sums to the War Department, and yet what have we got in return? At the beginning of this war 185,000 men were being paid for by the country as Regular soldiers in the Army and the first class Reserve. Yet what do we find? That when we come to squeeze the sponge, when we attempt to get what value we can out of that 185,000 men, it resolves itself into 84,000 or 85,000 effective men for the service of the country. This is a very serious state of things, that we should be paying so much and getting so little. It is a crowning mercy for this country—and we have had many to be thankful for—that this lesson should come at a time when we are still able to profit by it. I do hope that we may not be misled by optimistic views of our present situation into neglecting this lesson and failing to profit by it. Let me ask the Committee to consider for one moment what would be our present condition if we were at war, not with two small inland States, but with some serious European Power? Should we be able to do then what we have done now? My hon. friend spoke of 124,000 regular soldiers being in South Africa. But he omitted to tell the Committee, though I should like to do so, where those men came from. He omitted to tell the Committee that we have depleted the garrison of India by 7,000 men; that we have swept the colonial garrisons; that Malta, Crete, Cyprus, the Mauritius, Singapore, the West Indies, and, I believe, Halifax, Bermuda, and Ceylon, have been called upon to provide their contingents to make up that body of men; that even of the considerable number of men whom he correctly says have left this country several battalions have been brought back from the Mediterranean and despatched from this country. What would be the case in a real, a serious war? I think I may challenge contradiction when I say that if we were engaged in a serious war our first call would be to provide not reinforcements but troops to the extent of nearly 20,000 to bring the garrison of India up to a war footing. So far from depleting our Mediterranean garrisons, we should have to reinforce them, and every movement of troops would have to be made in face of a vigilant navy, and of the possibility of having our transports interfered with. We were told that the Guards were to be sent to Gibraltar as the part of the spear always ready for action, and a great deal of excellent eloquence was expended in this House in proving the value of sending the Guards to Gibraltar. But what happened? The moment this war with the Boer Republics broke out a battalion of the Guards were called on. What was the first evidence of the activity of that battalion of the Guards? A transport arrived in Southampton Water with 300 men of the battalion of the Guards at Gibraltar incompetent to take part in any war at all, and who were consequently shipped home. Again I ask the Committee what would be the condition of this country if we had not been given this lesson, this trial of our resources, but had been engaged at this time in a real war? I have frequently been found fault with because I have said that our present system, the very system which my hon. friend now asks us to perpetuate and to exaggerate, was not a system suited to the needs of the Empire. I regret that we are asked sans façon to add twelve battalions to the Army. Except as an emergency measure I will not consent from my own personal point of view to any addition of the kind. The mere addition of battalions will not do this country any good at all, and whereas the last additions have not helped this country so future additions will not help it, unless we have an entire change in the administration of these battalions. I do not want to talk vague generalities to this Committee, as they have other things to talk about, but I do want to put one or two very pregnant facts before them. I will ask the hon. Gentleman the Under Secretary for War to contradict me if I am wrong, but I say that between the 1st July and the 20th October—nearly a fortnight after the issue of the ultimatum by the Transvaal—this country was unable to send and did not send to the assistance of General White, hardly pressed as he was in Natal, one single brigade of troops. Such is the organisation of our army which we are asked to perpetuate. What is the fact? We did send a contingent. We sent one battalion, the 5th Fusiliers, which was here by accident because of an international agreement by which the garrison of Crete had been reduced by one-half, and that battalion were here en route from Crete to the West Indies, still in their khaki uniform, and were sent to the Cape. What was the other battalion? The other battalion was a very weak battalion of the Munster Fusiliers from Fermoy; it was sent off, and, I believe, at the present time is engaged in guarding prisoners on board the "Manilla" in Simon's Bay. The only additional troops beyond those were one brigadedivision of artillery which, to my certain knowledge, had been under orders for twelve months at Aldershot. In the stress and emergency of this Empire, out of the 109,000 men on our pay rolls at home, and out of the 77,000 men on our Reserve rolls, we were able to send only 1½ battalions of infantry and a brigade division of artillery. I shall be told that that is a mistake, that we sent 10,000 men. What did we do? What we did do was this: we took 5,000 men from India, which I have said before, and now repeat, was a most illegitimate and dangerous transaction; we took men from four of the Mediterranean stations; we took in a hurry 200 men from the garrison of the Mauritius; but the contribution from the 106,000 Regular troops in this country was, as I have said, 1½ battalions of infantry and a brigade division of artillery. And even a fortnight after the ultimatum of the Boer Government was issued we were able to send from this country only a balloon section of the Royal Engineers and a troop of New South Wales cavalry, of whom, I believe, a considerable number went home when they reached the Cape. Here I want to come to a point in which I do trust the Committee will follow me. I have always said that the gross error of our system was that, given the conditions of our Empire, we were not able to meet the sudden calls that were certain to be made upon it. I have said, until I am weary of saying it—[Several HON. MEMBERS: Hear, hear!] I am sorry if I have wearied hon. Members opposite. [Several HON. MEMBERS: No, no! go on.] I have said, until I am weary of saying it, that our battalions as they exist are unfit for any purpose whatever except to serve at depots. I have produced figures again and again to prove the justice of my remarks, and have been told that my figures were incorrect, and that my conclusions had no relation to facts. I have here before me the actual facts with regard to ten battalions at Aldershot. They are not ten selected battalions, but ten battalions taken at random, and the proposition I want to prove is this—that if we had desired, as we ought to have desired, to send troops to General White at the commencement of this war, we could not have done it, and we could not possibly do it without calling out the whole of the Army Reserve. Here are ten battalions which alone require 5,530 men to bring them up to war strength. That is no fancy figure. I will give, if desired, the actual figures, battalion by battalion, of what are called the "details"—the War Office always calls matters of principle matters of detail. Out of those ten battalions, 3,185 men were left behind, and are still in this country as unfit to go. I go back to my proposition, and say that these battalions could not have gone. You have a battalion of 770 men, you deduct from it 381 men, and you require 693 men from the Reserve. I say that the remainder of that battalion, 389 men, rank and file, non-commissioned officers, pioneers, and so on, are not a battalion at all in the parlance of any military nation of the world; and that you could not send one single battalion of the whole of the Aldershot Division without calling up the Reserves. The result was that you had to wait, week after week, until the 20th October, when the first mobilised battalion sailed in the "Roslyn Castle" to the Cape. That is not a system which is compatible with the exigencies of the Empire, and I again ask the Committee to note that that is one of the points on which we have been flouted and contradicted over and over again in this House. Those figures can be verified by anybody; they are not selected figures. But they do point to the fact that the War Office, having had this enormous power and this enormous responsibility, have not prepared us for the emergency which they knew we should have to contemplate. I have said many things in the past about the incompetence of the War Office to despatch troops when emergency arose. I have nothing to retract on that matter. I have said, and I repeat—not what has been attributed to me, but what I did say, and what many of us have said—that if the equivalent of two army corps were sent from this country the whole of our military organisation at home would be destroyed. It has been destroyed. I go further, and I say that two army corps were not, in fact, sent from this country, and that the break-down of the second army corps was exactly and precisely the break-down we had anticipated. Let me give the Committee one instance. We have always said—I remember saying it ten years ago—that in the one particular of an ammunition train—an essential portion of an army corps—there was no organisation. What happened? The first army corps went out complete, with all its batteries and with an ammunition train. Officers, all anxious to go to the front, volunteered to form that ammunition train. The result was that when you came to form the batteries and the ammunition train for the second army corps you were all at sea; you had not the officers for the ammunition train, and ever since that there has been one lengthening chain of deficiency in those batteries, until now at this moment, there are subalterns of eighteen years running batteries at Woolwich. There are now a number of skeleton batteries which have no existence except on the War Office books, and the failure has been more and more pronounced as every battery has gone out. I did not intend to go so far into detail to-night, and I apologise to the Committee for having done so, but I do so fear the myth which the right

Mr. Arnold-Forster.

Mr. Arnold-Forster.

Mr. Arnold-Forster.

hon. Gentleman the First Lord of the Treasury has set up about the efficiency of these transactions. I do want the Committee to understand that in order to produce this force abroad we have absolutely destroyed the whole of our military organisation, not only at home, but in the colonies and in India, and that we have performed an operation which, in the event of a real war with a first-class Power, would have put this country in jeopardy greater than any it has been in since the time of the mutiny of the Fleet at the Nore. What is my conclusion? My conclusion, perhaps, is not so irrelevant to the subject of this vote as some hon. Members may suppose from the way I have apparently diverged from the actual matter which the Under Secretary for War has submitted to-night. But I do not know that I need apologise, because I think I am well within the four corners of the Vote in discussing these matters. The hon. Gentleman elected to deal with one portion—no doubt a very interesting portion—of this Vote, represented by £400,000, while I have elected to deal, most inadequately, with a portion of the Vote, representing some £10,000,000 or £12,000,000. Therefore, I think I have not been going altogether outside my rights. In conclusion I wish to draw the attention of the Committee to this, that we must be very careful how we entrust this power to the present organisation. To my mind, and the conclusion has been borne in upon me for a succession of years, we are not rightly served in the War Office. I do not desire now to impugn the action of any individuals. The real difficulty, the real danger of the situation is that we are, so to speak, criticising an administrative jelly-fish, that there is really no person who is responsible: the curse of the situation is that no one is responsible. My hon. friend would himself admit that all he desires is not accomplished, and that it is not within his power to accomplish all that he desires. I would only say in passing, with regard to the personnel of the War Office, that there are—this is plain truth—officers at the War Office who have greatly adorned the military profession, and who, in the opinion of some persons, are equally capable of adorning private life. But whether or not that be so, whether or not we have the right men in the military side of the War Office, is a question about which there may be many opinions, but that there ought to be somebody who, at a time like this, should take the responsibility upon his shoulders there can be no doubt at all. I propose to ask every assemblage of my countrymen whom I may be able to address, as I have already asked my constituents, whether they are content to go on indefinitely with this organisation or want of organisation that leaves us exposed to a crisis of this kind. Though we have been talking in a very quiet way in this Committee, we ought to realise that there is a solemn fact behind it all, namely, that we are being asked in the presence of the enemy, at a time when no man knows from day to day to what extent these dangers may develop, or how far they may overwhelm us—we are being asked to do exactly those things which common sense and common prudence, and the general voice of the public, have demanded should be done at any time during the last twenty years. And now, when we make this demand, what are we met with? This seems to me to be the most disquieting feature of the whole situation. We are met with declarations that it is the inevitable destiny of this country to muddle through the first days, or the first weeks, or the first months, or the first year of a campaign, and that if we muddle on long enough, all will at last be well. I do not subscribe to that doctrine. I take quite another view of the position, dangers, and future of this country. I look back to some forty or fifty or sixty years ago, and I find that every European country was committed to a system of feudalism, and that this country, learning a new lesson, devoted itself to the policy of “go as you please” and laissez faire, and by adopting it we placed ourselves far in advance of the feudally organised countries of Europe. But, meanwhile, the years have gone by, and those Continental countries which we have passed in the race have found a new doctrine; they have found the doctrine of scientific methods, and the application of scientific methods to produce complete results, and they have distanced us as certainly as those who are armed with modern arms of precision have distanced those who are armed with the old “Brown Bess.” I shall never rest as long as I am a Member of this House, or indeed as long as I am alive, until we have some recognition that this truth must be applied to our Military Service, indeed, to every branch of our public organisation. I have kept the Committee too long, but I would implore them to listen to one further illustration. We have our Army organisation; we have our War Office, whose melancholy confession of improvidence and incompetence has been voiced to-night through the pleasant expressions of my hon. friend. The measure of what we are asked to do now is the measure of the neglect and incompetence of the past. We have that strange body, the Council of Defence. I should belie every feeling which is implanted in my breast if I were to say one word in disrespect of those who compose the Council of Defence, but I do say that it is something like a joke that at this time, in the nineteenth or the twentieth century, whichever it may be, the fortunes and fate of this country should be in any way dependent upon an organisation of that kind. I recognise, and I am sure all constitutional Members of this House recognise the need of some channel of communication between the professional heads of the great services, and the constitutional heads of the Government. To that extent I not only admit, but I rejoice in the existence, and welcome the creation of this somewhat anomalous body. I only wish, I confess I do wish, that that body was not so ethereal by virtue of its being a sub-committee of the Cabinet, that it keeps no minutes, and has therefore nothing to remind it of what had taken place at the former meeting, because, so far as my knowledge goes, these meetings take place at considerable intervals, and it is conceivable that in those intervals the members of the Committee may have forgotten what took place on the previous occasion. I should only like to urge that members of that Committee should be more constant and enthusiastic in the performance of their duties than they at present are. But I do think it is a serious reflection that that is practically the only organised body charged with providing for the enormously complicated and highly specialised task of the defence of this Empire, the preparation for the defence in times of peace, and the execution of the measures devised in times of peace in time of war. In a great country which is organised not only for peace but for war, we have quite a different state of things. In Germany a member of the general staff is taken at the age of fourteen; from that moment he is devoted to his profession; he is taught everything it is necessary for him to know and all that the experience of 100 years of successful warfare can suggest, until he is turned out a full-blown member of the general staff. Even then no hour is considered well spent unless he is further qualifying himself for the task he is to perform. It would be an exaggeration if I suggested that the Cabinet Committee of Defence had studied these problems to the extent and in the way considered necessary in other countries, but I do not think it is too much to demand that there should be some educated specialist body in this country to whom this enormously complicated task should be entrusted. I do not for one moment believe that any progress whatever—I will not say “no progress whatever”; that is probably an exaggeration—but I do not believe that any substantial progress has yet been made towards realising the ideal which the Duke of Devonshire's Committee set before it, namely, to provide some regular method of communication between the services, and to provide a system of organised defence. I see no signs of it; but from what has taken place during the last few months there are absolutely certain indications that no such system exists, because what has taken place is absolutely incompatible with the existence of such a system. I do hope that we shall learn the lessons we have got to learn in a time when we can profit by them. The days are dark, but they may be much darker, and if we are to be met by the cheery optimism of the First Lord of the Treasury, if we are to be told that all is well when all is not well—

MR. A. J. BALFOUR made an observation which was inaudible in the Press Gallery.

*MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER: I welcome that admission. I will not say anything that may appear unjust and exaggerated with regard to the First Lord of the Treasury. I know perfectly well that he cares as much about these matters as I do; but I think—and I believe the opinion is shared by many others besides myself—that the optimism he has displayed and the tone he has adopted with regard to the complications in respect of which we are now asked for this enormous expenditure, are not at all appropriate to the moment.

Mr. Arnold-Forster.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: The hon. Gentleman is interpreting the views I have expressed in a manner which I cannot tolerate. I have not gone beyond this statement of fact—that the War Office have contrived to send to South Africa a fully-equipped body of men larger than was ever sent from the shores of this country before. I have said that criticism of the Government of this or any other country in their warlike policy has been directed to the fact that they were not able to carry out the promises they made. The War Office have performed every promise they ever made. That is not optimism, but a naked statement of fact.

*MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER: I accept the statement of the right hon. Gentleman, and welcome it as an earnest, not that he shares my opinion—that would be too sanguine a hope—but that he admits there is a fair field for inquiry, and a great possibility of improvement.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: Hear, hear!

*MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER: That is all I desire to express to the Committee. I hope an opportunity will be given at a later stage for some qualification of the statement that has been made. I care little for that, however, but I do care that we should jealously guard the vote we are asked to give as far as the scheme is permanent. As far as it is temporary I shall enthusiastically support it. But when we come face to face with this problem of how we are to provide for the defence of the Empire in the future, we should ask whether we are justified in acting without inquiry, and the most searching inquiry, into the credentials of those to whom we are asked to entrust this great duty.

MR. WYNDHAM: I hope I shall not be considered discourteous to those hon. Gentlemen who have risen at the same time as myself in intervening at this stage of the debate; but if I remained silent longer I might forget some of the arguments used and the questions asked, and then I would be guilty of even greater discourtesy to the hon. Members who have preceded me. I think I had better first of all address myself to the long and interesting speech of the hon. Member for West Belfast, who takes such an interest in these matters. I will do the hon. Member the credit of believing that he knows he has raised questions and issues upon details of fact, and that he cannot seriously expect me to-night to argue out with him once again the old battle over the system of short service and Reserve. It no doubt sounds very convincing when you listen to it put forward as a haphazard and therefore a fair illustration of what is taking place, when the hon. Member says, "I take ten battalions and I find that with six you had to leave 600 men and with the other four 400 men," but it really has nothing to do with the case. The hon. Member said we did not and could not send troops to Sir George White from this country. It is true we did not, but it is quite untrue that we could not. We had a scheme before us. As I informed the Committee in October, and again the other day, there were two alternative plans—one to send 10,000 men from this country and the other to send 10,000 men from India and the Mediterranean garrisons. As a matter of fact, we sent the men from India because the passage was somewhat shorter. The battalions were selected after the Reserve had been called out. Had we intended to send eight battalions—the number we sent from India and the Mediterranean—without calling out the Reserve, we should, of course, have taken the eight battalions which were most ready to go on foreign service. I must decline altogether to argue this question again on matters of detail. These young lads in the battalions at home would be of the same age if they were not in those battalions. They must grow. It reduces me to an absurd position, but I have to assume that position, and I have to inform some hon. Members of this House that if you allow a man to enter the Army at the age of eighteen it takes two years before he arrives at the age of twenty, and the only question between us is what you will do with him during those two years. You can, we admit, put him in a dépôt. In that case he has what we consider an inferior chance of being properly trained, and he is not available in any event for any form of military service. Or you can take the course that we have pursued, and put him in a home battalion which is linked with another battalion on the foreign rota. Then you have the Reserve to fall back upon—the Reserve which we have openly stated to be part of our first line. All you do is to take men, thoroughly trained, put them in that battalion in which they have served seven years, and send them off to the front with their own officers. Meanwhile, the younger man who enlists at eighteen has the benefit of the traditions of that battalion, and the benefit of being exercised in an effective unit on Salisbury Plain or in other manœuvres, and when he reaches the age of twenty he is every bit as good as the men who have preceded him to the seat of war. We think the merits of the case are on our side, because you do two things at one time, and that is the great art of getting on in any profession in life; you train your men at home, and you have your foreign battalion at the same time. That is economy. Although I admit economy is out of fashion, and although I have been accused this evening of bringing in a large Estimate, the third in one year, without dwelling on finance, still we do care about economy. It is better to train young men in that way, because they get a more efficient training, and it is more economical. Not that mere cheapness is economy, but when cheapness is combined with efficiency, that is economy. We know this system is sound, and we believe it is economical, and when the hon. Member alarms the Committee by picking a battalion here and there, and stating that they cannot fight without leaving 600 men behind, he does not touch the remoter fringe of this question. His statement of facts is rather argumentative, and he will take it in good part, I am sure, if I say that in part his arguments seem to lack something of consistency. He said he was prepared to withhold the permanent part of the scheme until he was sure, by some anatomical illustration, that there were brains to direct that force; but he must not oppose a great part of our scheme, because only five months ago he was impressing with some reiteration upon the Committee that he himself had urged upon the Government some five or six of the proposals which we are now submitting to the House. Therefore we need not wait for the brains, we have them already—we have in fact followed his leading in respect of some of our proposals. Then, again, I cannot allow the hon. Member to say that we have treated these proposals in earlier days as being unsound or baseless. We said there were other proposals which ought to be attended to first. Consider for one moment the talk we have had this evening about the obsolete guns of the Volunteers. Will any hon. Member assert that it would have been prudent for this or any other Government to have supplied the Volunteers with the most modern guns before we had succeeded in raising the batteries for three army corps of the Regular troops? We have been told over and over again that our first duty was to have a mobile force, and our first care therefore was to provide that mobile force with its necessary complement of guns. The hon. Member knows as well as I do that when we came into office in 1895 we had not the guns for three army corps, and, therefore, we should have been unable then to send two army corps out of the country. That we have been able to do now. I feel I cannot dwell longer upon the speech of the hon. Member, because I believe I shall employ the short time left to me more fittingly in trying to answer some of the questions put to me in the course of this debate. The right hon. Baronet the Leader of the Opposition took exception at the start to the fact that I did not dwell sufficiently on the important part—the overwhelming part, I would say—which the Fleet plays in our home defence. Well, I put in the Fleet at the beginning of my speech, and I put it in at the end of my speech; but although I spoke for an hour and a quarter I was only able to dwell upon one aspect of the Estimate. The right hon. Baronet also asked what was the amount for home defence, and the amount for the prosecution of the war. £420,000 is for home defence and the remainder for the war. The fact that we asked the Committee to consider our scheme as a Supplementary Estimate has been the subject of criticism. What else could we do? We ask, I will say frankly, for a covering sanction for things that have been already done. The hon. Baronet the Member for the Berwick Division of Northumberland asked in his speech last week if the action then taken by the Opposition impeded the Government in taking steps to build up a home defence, and I honestly told him it did not. As the Executive of the country we have been engaged for some time past in carrying out our scheme on the broad lines which I have divulged this evening. Therefore we have incurred expenditure; we must pay for that expenditure, but we cannot pay for it without first obtaining the authority of the House before March 31st, and therefore there was no other course open to us. I have been asked—What are the numbers of men permanently added to the Regular Army? Since we have abandoned any idea of proceeding by compulsion, it follows that our scheme must be a scheme of invitation. That, of course, is the essence of the voluntary system. You say, “If you give your services, we will give you certain remuneration.” Unless we proceed by compulsion, that must be the basis of our scheme. The question, therefore, is not very easy to answer. I gave all the facts necessary in order that hon. Members could form as good a notion as I could on that subject. What we are doing is to raise fifteen battalions of infantry—three already voted by the House, but not raised, and twelve now to be voted and raised. We are adding forty-three batteries of artillery. We are strengthening the Army Service Corps, and we are strengthening the Royal Engineers. If and when we get back from South Africa the Army that is there —[An Hon. Member laughed.] I do not think that is a laughing matter. Whenever we have in this country the three full army corps at war strength, then we shall, more or less, fold up the artillery, the engineers, and the Army Service Corps of two army corps in such a way that they may expand when again necessary into the artillery, the engineers, and the Army Service Corps of two army corps. That is one permanent feature of the plan I have endeavoured to explain, and I commend it to the consideration of the Committee. Whereas in times past we have always aimed at the maximum of three army corps, from this forward, if the House sanctions the scheme, we will aim at a maximum of five army corps. That is a very considerable permanent addition to the military defences of this country. The right hon. Baronet also raised a question of great importance with respect to the guns of the Volunteers. He said we ought to consider the importance of not competing, so to speak, with the Navy. I can assure the Committee, on the authority of the First Lord of the Admiralty and on my own knowledge, that the Navy has not been put, and will not be put, behind the Army in any respect. The right hon. Gentleman also dwelt on the fact that we had borrowed troops from India. Of course, we will repay what we borrowed at the earliest possible moment. But what has been the extent of our borrowing? Four regiments of cavalry out of nine—that is heavy borrowing, but, as the right hon. Gentleman knows, the native cavalry is numerous and efficient—two batteries of horse artillery out of eleven; three batteries of field artillery out of forty-two; and although we have borrowed eight battalions of infantry out of fifty-two, we have already paid back some, for the battalions in India now stand at forty-seven, so that there is only a loss of five white battalions. It is one of the first duties we shall discharge, just as we are already taking steps to pay back the guns we have borrowed.

Mr. Wyndham.

*SIR CHARLES DILKE: How about the three year men?

MR. WYNDHAM: The men are, I admit, a very important point, and one which requires a little further consideration. The right hon. Baronet says we now propose to take a greater number of three year men, and the hon. Member for West Belfast also brought that point against us. But it is very easily disposed of. You must have in the home battalion about 700 seven year men in order to feed with drafts the linked battalion in India, and the number of three year men you can take in the home battalion depends absolutely upon the number by which your home battalion exceeds that figure. Last year our home establishment exceeded that limit by 100, and we agreed to take 100 of these men. We now propose to increase the home battalions this year again, and that will allow us to take 200 three year men on any battalion in the home establishment. My hon. friend the Member for King's Lynn deserves an answer, as he was the first of several Members who argued, "You have come down to us with a plan for organising three army corps for home defence; but we want to hear how you are going to reinforce India if it should need reinforcing, and how you are going to reinforce Lord Roberts if he should need reinforcements in South Africa." Well, Sir, we believe the best way to do that is to do what we are doing now—namely, to engage in the work of organising these three army corps, and if one is required abroad we can send it away and set to work to organise another. The Committee is aware we have a division ready to embark at a moment's notice, and in the course of a few weeks we may have an army corps ready to embark, and when that embarks we will go on with the next. That is really the only practical manner in which this problem can be approached. The way to provide troops ready to take the field in South Africa or in India is to work them up to the highest point of efficiency as a first step at home. The hon. Member for the Ross Division of Herefordshire, referring to the Yeomanry cavalry, said it would be necessary to reduce very much the expensive character of that force. I agree with him, provided that we do not break down its traditions altogether. But I cannot let pass, as one who has served twelve years in the Yeomanry, his allegation that the officers spend the whole of their training in gambling and amusement. I have never seen a card during the whole time I have served in the regiment to which I belong, and I know no body of men more zealous to get the utmost benefit they can out of the opportunities given to them. Then the right hon. Baronet the Member for North East Manchester dwelt at some length on the Swiss system of Militia. I know the Intelligence Department of the War Office has recently published a short book on that subject. No doubt it is a most interesting one, but it has this difference from the system we propose, namely, that although as the right hon. Baronet declares, there is no conscription in the Swiss system, there is compulsion, and compulsion does not merely give you all the men you want at a certain age, for a certain pay, and for a definite number of days, but it also enables you to work them as hard as you like during those days. That is a most fundamental difference between the two systems, and, if we attempted to apply not to our Volunteers or Militia but even to our Regular Army the course of drill which is applied to recruits obtained by compulsion, the recruiting returns would fall down in a manner which would be most disastrous.

The hon. Member was still speaking at midnight when, it being midnight, the Chairman left the Chair to make his Report to the House.

Committee report Progress; to sit again to-morrow.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE AND ART DEPARTMENTS.

Report presented,—relative thereto [ordered 12th February; Colonel Wyndham Murray]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 47.]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: On the motion for adjournment, perhaps the right hon. Gentleman will say what business will be taken to-morrow and Thursday.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: To-morrow we propose to continue the discussion on the Army Supplementary Estimates. On Thursday we propose to put down the ordinary sessional Supply rule first, one or two Bills will afterwards be introduced under the Standing Orders with which the right hon. Gentleman is acquainted, and we shall then deal with the Civil Service Supplementary Estimates. Supposing the War Office Estimates are not concluded to-morrow they will be taken before the Civil Service Supplementary Estimates on Thursday, and if both are concluded we hope to take the Bill introduced by my right hon. friend the President of the Board of Trade.

SIR HENRY CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: When will Ways and Means be taken?

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: As soon as these two Votes are carried, but that stage will be purely formal.

MR. CALDWELL (Lanarkshire, Mid): What about Friday?

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: Supply will be taken on Friday.

Adjourned at five minutes after Twelve of the clock.

NOMINATION OF TEMPORARY CHAIRMEN OF COMMITTEES.

In pursuance of Standing Order No. 1, "Sittings of the House,"

I hereby nominate—

Mr. Arthur O'Connor,

Mr. John Edward Ellis,

The Right Hon. Charles Bailby Stuart-Wortley,

The Right Hon. Edmond Robert Wodehouse, and

Mr. John Grant Lawson,

to act during this Session as temporary Chairmen of Committees when requested by the Chairman of Ways and Means.

WILLIAM COURT GULLY,

Speaker.

10th February, 1900.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Tuesday, 13th February, 1900.

EARL OF MEXBOROUGH
AND
VISCOUNT CLIFDEN.

Ordered and Directed, by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That Certificates be sent by the Clerk of the Parliaments to the Clerk of the Crown in Ireland, stating that the Lord Chancellor of the United Kingdom has reported to the House of Lords that the right of the Earl of Mexborough and the Viscount Clifden to vote at the elections of Representative Peers for Ireland has been established to the satisfaction of him the said Lord Chancellor; and that the House of Lords has ordered such reports to be sent to the said Clerk of the Crown in Ireland: And it is hereby also Ordered, That the said Reports of the said Lord Chancellor be sent to the Clerk of the Crown in Ireland.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

The LORD CHANCELLOR acquainted the House that the Clerk of the Parliaments had laid upon the Table the Certificate from the Examiners that the Standing Orders applicable to the following Bill have been complied with:—

Cork Electric Tramways (Blackrock Extension).

And the Certificate that the Standing Orders applicable to the following Bill have not been complied with:—

Barnsley Corporation.

The same were ordered to lie on the Table.

BRISTOL WATER BILL [H.L.].

CALEDONIAN RAILWAY BILL [H.L.].

DEARNE VALLEY RAILWAY BILL [H.L.].

IMSCHENETZKY'S URALITE PATENT BILL [H.L.].

MILFORD DOCKS BILL [H.L.].

SOUTH ESSEX WATER BOARD BILL [H.L.].

WHITECHAPEL AND BOW RAILWAY BILL [H.L.].

GLYNCORRWG URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL GAS BILL [H.L.].

GWYRFAI RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL WATER BILL [H.L.].

PURFLEET AND GRAVESEND JUNCTION RAILWAY BILL [H.L.].

WALSALL CORPORATION BILL [H.L.].

WORKINGTON RAILWAYS AND DOCKS BILL [H.L.].

Presented, and read 1^a.

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

TREATY SERIES, No. 4.

Declaration between the United Kingdom and the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg respecting the reciprocal protection of trade marks; signed at Luxemburg, 25th January, 1900. Presented (by command), and ordered to lie on the Table.

FOOT AND MOUTH DISEASE.

LORD BURGHCLERE: My Lords, I beg to ask Her Majesty's Government what number of cattle have been slaughtered during the present outbreak of foot and mouth disease, and over what area do the restrictions extend; what was the date of the notification of the first suspected outbreak, and the date of its confirmation by the Board of Agriculture; and whether the Board of Agriculture have any reason to believe that the disease existed unnotified before the first suspected outbreak was reported to them. I am quite certain I need not assure Her Majesty's Government that in putting this question I have not the slightest intention of throwing any reflection upon the officials of the Board of Agriculture, whose skill and ability in dealing with the suppression of disease I so very well know. But I think that agricultural interests generally would be glad to receive some official intelligence as to the spread of this outbreak, which appears to be rather serious. I would lay particular stress on the latter part of my question—namely, whether the Board of Agriculture have any reason to believe that the disease existed unnotified before the first suspected outbreak was reported to them. As your Lordships are aware, foot and mouth disease is one of the very highest infectivity, and if it gets hold of referred to

SERIES.]

3 D

a district it spreads like wildfire, doing damage to agricultural interests to the extent of hundreds of thousands of pounds. I am afraid it sometimes happens—it only happens, I am glad to say, in a very few instances—that through a mistaken idea of his own interests a farmer does not report a suspected case in time, but I hope that has not occurred on this occasion. I should be glad of an assurance on the subject. It cannot be too often laid down that it is to the interest of the farmer, to the interest of the public purse, and to the interest of the agricultural body at large that every suspected outbreak should be reported as soon as possible to the Board of Agriculture so that the officers there, in whom, I am sure, we all have the greatest confidence, may be able to deal with it promptly and effectively.

THE LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL (The Duke of DEVONSHIRE): In the absence of my noble friend the Lord Privy Seal, the duty of answering the question of the noble Lord opposite has fallen upon me. I have to inform him that there have been slaughtered in all 127 cattle, eight sheep, and forty-two swine in connection with the present outbreak of foot and mouth disease in the counties of Norfolk and Suffolk. The restrictions imposed extend over a district comprising twelve petty sessional divisions in Norfolk and seven in Suffolk, with the boroughs therein. The first information which we received as to the suspected appearance of the disease was from the superintendent of police on 29th January Instructions as to the isolation of the premises and the observance of the rules applicable to infected places were at once sent off to the police and to the local authorities, and an experienced veterinary surgeon was despatched to the spot. His report went to confirm the suspicion previously entertained, and on 31st January our chief veterinary officer also visited the infected place and declared foot and mouth disease to exist. So far as our inquiries have proceeded we have no reason to believe that any person concerned was guilty of any offence in regard to the failure to give notice of the existence of disease for which proceedings could be taken under the Diseases of Animals Acts. The long immunity from the disease which Norfolk and Suffolk have enjoyed and the fact that in several respects it resembles other animal diseases would alike tend to allay suspicion as to the real character of the outbreak.

House adjourned at twenty minutes before Five of the clock, to Thursday next, half-past Ten of the clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Tuesday, 13th February, 1900.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

PRIVATE BILLS [Lords].

Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, that in respect of the Bills comprised in the List reported by the Chairman of Ways and Means as intended to originate in the House of Lords, they have certified that the Standing Orders have been complied with in the following case, viz. :—

Cork Electric Tramways.

And that they have certified that the Standing Orders have not been complied with in the following case, viz. :—

Barnsley Corporation.

PRIVATE BILL PETITIONS [Lords] (STANDING ORDERS NOT COMPLIED WITH).

Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, that in the case of the Petition for the following Bill, originating in the Lords, the Standing Orders have not been complied with, viz. :—

Barnsley Corporation Bill [Lords].

Ordered, That the Report be referred to the Select Committee on Standing Orders.

ROCHDALE CORPORATION BILL.

“To enable the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the borough of Rochdale to re-construct the existing Tramways in the said borough when required by them, and to construct additional Tramways in and adjacent to the borough; and to make further provisions for the good government of the borough; and for other purposes." Read the first time; to be read a second time.

SOUTHPORT AND LYTHAM TRAMROAD.

Petition, and Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Seton-Karr, Mr. Gilliat, and Sir Joseph Leese.

PETITIONS.

GOVERNMENT PROPERTY (EXEMPTION FROM RATES).

Petitions from Stepney, for alteration of Law; to lie upon the Table.

NATIONAL OLD AGE PENSIONS.

Petition from Tipton, in favour; to lie upon the Table.

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS ON SUNDAY BILL.

Petition from Melton Mowbray, in favour; to lie upon the Table.

TOWN COUNCILS (SCOTLAND) BILL.

Petitions in favour, from Stornoway; Pittenweem; and Wigtown; to lie upon the Table.

VACCINATION ACTS, 1867 TO 1898.

Petition from Northwich, for alteration of Law; to lie upon the Table.

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

TREATY SERIES (No. 4, 1900).

Copy presented,—of Declaration between the United Kingdom and the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg respecting the Reciprocal Protection of Trade Marks. Signed at Luxemburg, 25th January, 1900 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

AMERICAN MAILS.

Return ordered, "Showing the number of days, hours, and minutes occupied in the transit of Her Majesty's Mails, both outward and inward, carried during the year 1899 by steamships between Queens-town and New York, and also between Southampton and New York, the Return to specify the names of the steamers, and to indicate by asterisks or otherwise those not carrying the mails under contract."— (Sir John Leng.)

QUESTIONS.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—COMMANDS AT THE FRONT.

SIR HENRY HOWORTH (Salford, S.): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether the several generals in command at the front in South Africa were selected by the Secretary of State for War or by the Commander-in-Chief, or whether the responsibility for their selection was shared by the two officials just named; and, in the case of any general in command of a detached army in the field in South Africa, with whom does the responsibility of maintaining him in his position or of recalling him rest—with the Secretary of State for War, the Commander-in-Chief, or the General in supreme command of Her Majesty's forces in South Africa.

*THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR (MR. WYNDHAM, Dover): Selections for command in the field are made by the Commander-in-Chief subject to the approval of the Secretary of State. The general in chief command in the field has full powers in regard to his subordinate generals. There need be no mystery. Every selection put forward has been approved.

PRISONERS AT MAFEKING.

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN (Kilkenny): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether he will cause inquiry to be made into the truth of the statement alleged to have been made by Colonel Baden-Powell to the effect that he had forty Fenian prisoners, including the late station-master of Mafeking, in custody; can he state what was their offence, and why they were described as Fenians; and whether the late station-master of Mafeking, Mr. Quinlan (alleged to have been shot), is still a prisoner.

*MR. WYNDHAM: No, Sir. As I have already told the hon. Member, there is no information whatever in the War Office on this subject, and I cannot undertake to trouble Lord Roberts at such a time with questions based on hearsay. It would be more unwarranted in this than in other cases, because, as the hon. Members knows, Lord Roberts cannot communicate with Colonel Baden-Powell.

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN: I understand that there are means of communicating. May I ask how it is that letters can come direct from there, and yet none reach the War Office?

[No answer was given.]

THE MAGERSFONTEIN ENGAGEMENT.

MR. WEIR (Ross and Cromarty): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War, in view of the fact that no information has been sought or received by the War Office since the 22nd December last in regard to Major Mackenzie, of the Seaforth Highlanders, will further steps be taken to ascertain if this officer is still alive, and the number and names of Highlanders buried by the Boers without identification after the battle of Magersfontein.

*MR. WYNDHAM: Endeavours have been made to obtain information in regard to Major Mackenzie, and information has at length been received from Pretoria that he is not a prisoner there, and that the Transvaal Government is trying to find out whether he was killed and buried on the field of battle. It would further appear that the enemy secured the identity tickets only of their prisoners, and not of the dead Highlanders who were buried on the spot, and I am afraid that it must be assumed that those of the men reported missing who have not since been accounted for were killed and buried there.

SPION KOP.

CAPTAIN NORTON (Newington, W.): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War if he can say whether there is any truth in the statement that no party of Royal Engineers was detailed in the first instance to accompany the battalions attacking Spion Kop, and that no such party was sent forward until it was too late and the troops were in retreat; and whether as a consequence of this neglect the entrenchments were laid out in a direction which rendered the men occupying them liable to a severe reverse fire.

*MR. WYNDHAM: Nothing is known of the matter to which the hon. Member refers.

SEPARATION ALLOWANCES.

MR. HAMMOND (Carlton): I beg to ask the Financial Secretary to the War Office if any separation allowance would be made to the widowed mothers of unmarried men at present serving in Irish Militia regiments, most of those persons being wholly dependent for their livelihood on the support of their sons.

*THE FINANCIAL SECRETARY TO THE WAR OFFICE (Mr. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS, Birmingham, S.): Separation allowance is not issued in such cases. The man, however, may, if he chooses, allot a portion of his pay to his widowed mother.

MR. FLAVIN (Kerry, N.): Is the hon. Gentleman aware that mothers of these unmarried soldiers are now chargeable to the rates in Ireland? Will not the War Office make some provision for them?

*MR. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS: I am not aware of that. We can only proceed according to the Queen's regulations. We have no power to do as the hon. Member suggests.

COMMEMORATION IN SCHOOLS OF DEEDS OF HEROISM.

MR. YERBURGH (Chester): I beg to ask the Vice-President of the Committee of Council on Education whether his attention has been drawn to a letter from the Bishop of Chester upon the proposal to inscribe upon the walls of our public elementary schools the names and record of their old scholars who have distinguished themselves by acts of heroism and self-sacrifice, or have earned in other ways a high place in their country's regard; and whether the Education Department will sanction this proposal; and, if so, whether he would take steps to encourage its adoption.

THE VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF COUNCIL ON EDUCATION (Sir J. GORST, Cambridge University): The Committee of Council consider the proposal of the Bishop of Chester a most excellent one, and will do their best to secure its adoption by the managers of elementary schools.

GERMAN POLICY IN SOUTH AFRICA

MR. HEDDERLEY (Burgis): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs Majesty's Government from the German Government any communications tending to modify the declaration made by Baron von Marschall, in his dispatches to Count Hatzfeldt of 1st February and 15th October, 1895, that the beginning and the end of German policy in South Africa was the maintenance of the Transvaal as an independent State, as laid down in the Treaty of 1884, and a guarantee of the status quo as regards the railways and the harbour of Delagoa Bay; and, if so, whether he can state in what way and to what extent any such communications modify the German policy as declared in 1895; and whether Her Majesty's Government propose to give to Parliament any information tending to show what the German policy is at present.

*THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS (Mr. BRODRICK, Surrey, Guildford): No communication has been received from the German Government on the subject of the Convention of 1884, which as a matter of fact has, through the existence of a state of war, terminated.

TRANSVAAL GOLD MINES.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government have received any intimation of the concurrence of foreign Powers with the notice issued by Sir Alfred Milner on 26th January, 1900, pledging Her Majesty's Government to refuse to recognise, and to treat as invalid, confiscations of gold mines in the Transvaal owned by British or other subjects, whether carried out by the executive or under colour of legislation; if so, does this concurrence extend to cases in which the confiscated gold mine has been, after confiscation according to the terms of law, sold by the Transvaal Government to subjects of the foreign Powers in question; and will he lay upon the Table of this House the correspondence which has passed relative to this subject.

*MR. BRODRICK: No such intimation has been received, nor has there been any correspondence with foreign Powers.

MILITIA REGIMENTS AND FOREIGN SERVICE.

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War

whether the colonel of a Militia regiment takes the declaration of his men who volunteer for foreign service en masse, or each individual separately; and with what formalities.

*MR. WYNDHAM: I must refer the hon. Member to my reply to a question put on Thursday, the 8th instant, by the hon. Member for the St. Patrick's Division of Dublin.

VOLUNTEER COMMISSIONS.

COLONEL MILWARD (Stratford-upon-Avon): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether it is the intention of the Government to offer commissions in the Line to officers serving in the Volunteer force as well as to those serving in the Militia.

*MR. WYNDHAM: Yes, Sir.

SWISS MILITARY SYSTEM.

MR. SEELY (Lincoln): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether the War Office have any report on the Swiss military system; and whether, if there is one, he could have it printed as a Parliamentary Paper.

*MR. WYNDHAM: The handbook of the Swiss Army, 1398, prepared by the Intelligence Department, has been published, and will doubtless give the hon. Member the information he wishes to obtain; it can be bought at a very small price.

"MILITARY AUTHORITIES" — THE ROYAL HORSE ARTILLERY.

*SIR JOHN COLOMB (Great Yarmouth): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War to give the names of the military authorities referred to in the House on 13th July, 1887, by the then Secretary of State for War as having proposed the conversion of fourteen field batteries into ammunition columns. I beg also to ask the Under Secretary of State for War to state the names of the military authorities who recommended or approved the reduction of Royal Horse Artillery in 1887.

*MR. WYNDHAM: In reply to these questions put by the hon. and gallant Member, I can only refer him to the reply which I gave on Friday. I am unable to trace the statement mentioned by the hon. Member as having been made by the then Secretary of State for War on July 13th, 1887. If the Secretary of State for War referred to the military authorities, he no doubt referred to his military advisers on the Headquarters Staff.

*SIR JOHN COLOMB: If the hon. Gentleman objects to giving the names of the authorities responsible, will he say if any of them are still advisers of the War Office?

*MR. WYNDHAM: If the hon. and gallant Member will look up the Headquarters list at the date he refers to, he will find an answer to his question. Lord Wolseley, of course, was not Commander-in-Chief at that time.

*SIR JOHN COLOMB: The hon. Gentleman forgets the definition he gave me of military authorities as the Commander-in-Chief and the Army Board, for there was no Army Board in 1887.

WAR OFFICE REORGANISATION COMMITTEE.

CAPTAIN NORTON: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War if he can state when the War Office Reorganisation Committee, presided over by the Financial Secretary to the War Office, and appointed in October, 1898, expects to conclude its labours; what progress has been made in the methods of conducting business in the Adjutant General's, Ordnance, and Accountant General's Departments; whether the Department of Works and Buildings, for which the Inspector General of Fortifications is responsible, has been overhauled by the Committee; and when, in view of the increasing public interest in the proper conduct of all departments of the Army, the Secretary of State will be able to place upon the Table of the House a report of the results of the inquiry of that Committee, which has been sitting for the past sixteen months.

*MR. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS: I would refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave to the hon. Member for South Donegal on this subject yesterday, but I may observe that the scope of the inquiry was by no means as extensive as the terms of the question would suggest.

CAPTAIN NORTON: My question was not quite the same, and the hon. Gentleman has left two or three points unanswered.

IRISH GARRISONS.

MR. J. P. FARRELL (Cavan, W.): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether it is contemplated to concentrate any large body of troops in either Mullingar or Longford in the near future; and whether the War Office have had laid before them plans for the erection of a large military station in one or other of these towns; and, if so, will there be any statement made to the House on the subject.

*MR. WYNDHAM: The answer to both parts of the question is in the negative.

ARMY ESTIMATES.

MR. BUCHANAN (Aberdeenshire, E.): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War when the Army Estimates will be issued to Members.

*MR. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS: We hope to issue them in about three weeks. With the changes in contemplation, and the war in progress, the preparation of estimates necessarily occupies more than the ordinary time.

SUPPRESSION OF RIOTS BY THE MILITARY.

*MR. D. A. THOMAS (Merthyr Tydvil): I beg to ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer whether, as a consequence of the recent decision of the Appeal Court, that the expenses of troops employed to suppress rioting is an Imperial and not a local charge, the Government propose legislating with a view to placing such expense in future upon county councils.

*MR. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS: The question of legislation on the subject is under consideration, but the hon. Member does not accurately state the decision of the Court. It was not to the effect that the costs were an Imperial charge. The Court did not decide the point by whom the costs are payable.

*MR. D. A. THOMAS: Can the hon. Gentleman say whether the Court of Appeal did not uphold the decision of Justices Darling and Channell, which was that the expenses should be defrayed not out of local but out of Imperial funds?

*MR. J. POWELL WILLIAMS : I am informed that the decision was not to that effect. It was that the local authorities were not liable. It did not say who was liable. The Court of Appeal upheld the learned judges' decision.

MALTA—INSANITARY CONDITION OF BARRACKS, ETC.

MR. STEVENSON (Suffolk, Eye) : I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether he will consider the propriety of appointing an Inter-Departmental Committee, upon which the Treasury, War Office, and Admiralty would be represented, for the purpose of investigating the complaints which have recently been made as to the unsatisfactory condition of the barracks, hospitals, and burial grounds at Malta, with a view to the adoption of remedial measures in the interest of the health of the soldiers and sailors at that station, and of the families of officials employed at the dockyard at Valetta.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES (Mr. J. CHAMBERLAIN, Birmingham, W.) : I have not contemplated such a Committee as necessary, but will confer with the heads of the other Departments named as to its expediency.

TONGA.

MR. HOGAN (Tipperary, Mid) : I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether the proclamation of the native kingdom of Tonga as an exclusively British sphere of influence involves any change in the present government or political constitution of the group ; if so, what is the nature of the contemplated changes ; and has Her Majesty's Government assumed responsibility for any financial indebtedness of Tonga to Germany or to German traders.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN : No statement can be made as to the future position of Tonga pending the result of Mr. Thomson's mission to discuss the subject with the King. Her Majesty's Government have not assumed any financial responsibility for Tongan indebtedness.

COLONIAL RUM.

MR. LAWRENCE (Liverpool, Abercrombie) : I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies when he proposes to lay on the Table the return regarding local excise duties on colonial rum.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN : The Paper was laid in dummy in October last, the answers from the colonies being then nearly all received ; since that date a few further papers have been received, and the whole are now in print, but owing to the pressure of more urgent work in the printing branch, the revision has not as yet been completed. It is hoped, however, that the return will be delivered within a month from the present time.

THE LATE MR. STOKES.

MR. HEDDERWICK : I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs when the Government received the compensation money paid by Belgium in respect of the hanging of the late Mr. Stokes ; and whether the money has yet been paid over to Mr. Stokes' widow ; if so, when.

MR. BRODRICK : (1) Yes ; the sum of 150,000*l.* (£5,922 12*s.* 3*d.*) was paid on the 9th November, 1895, and was invested in the Two-and-Three-Quarter per Cent. Consolidated Stock. (.) Mr. Stokes' widow died before the money was paid to Her Majesty's Government. An allowance has since been made to the support of the family, and a deed is about to be completed investing the capital in the name of trustees, of whom Mr. Greene, Member for Shrewsbury, is one, for the benefit of the daughter, Nellie Stokes.

NEW HEBRIDES—SALE OF SPIRITS AND FIREARMS TO NATIVES.

MR. HOGAN : I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether any measure of success has yet attended the remonstrances of Her Majesty's Government against the sale of spirits and firearms to the natives of the New Hebrides by French traders.

MR. BRODRICK : No answer has been obtained from the French Government.

BRITISH NORTH BORNEO—TREATMENT OF NATIVES.

MR. WEIR : I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies if he will state the nature of the differences which have arisen between the native population and the Chartered Company of British North Borneo; have any efforts been made by the British North Borneo Company to discuss the grievances of the natives with a view to an amicable settlement, as on a previous occasion, when Mat Salleh delivered his sword to Mr. Cowie, the manager of the British North Borneo Company; will he state the nature of the expedition sent against Mat Salleh and his followers; and whether the expenses will be charged to the British taxpayer or to the British North Borneo Company.

*MR. BRODRICK: No differences have arisen so far as Her Majesty's Government are aware between the British North Borneo Company and the native population in the company's territory, except in the case of Mat Salleh and his immediate followers. Every effort was made by the officers of the company to enter into communication with Mat Salleh, but he declined to respond, and two of the company's messengers who were conveying a friendly message to him were murdered by his followers. The expedition against Mat Salleh was composed of about 150 men of the company's police, and the whole cost will be borne by the company.

GERMAN RAILWAYS IN ASIA.

MR. MACLEAN (Cardiff): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs if the attention of Her Majesty's Government has been called to the action of Russia and Germany in constructing railways across the Asiatic Continent, and especially to the concession made by the Sultan of Turkey for a German line as far as the seaport of Bussorah in the Persian Gulf, and to the consolidation of the commercial and financial authority of Russia in Northern Persia; and what steps the Foreign Office is taking to maintain British interests in that part of the world, and to prevent the control of railways up to the Indian frontier from falling into the hands of foreign Powers.

*MR. BRODRICK: Her Majesty's Government are aware of the concession given by the Sultan of Turkey for a German line to the seaport of Bussorah, and of the progress of Russian railways in Asia. If and when British interests are affected Her Majesty's Government will take whatever steps are necessary to maintain them.

THE GERMAN NAVY.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, have Her Majesty's Government any information relative to any communications or negotiations between the Government of Germany and the Government of the Netherlands relative to the co-operation of Holland with Germany in the development of a largely increased German Navy.

MR. BRODRICK: The answer is in the negative.

INDIAN RAILWAY SURVEYS.

MR. MACLEAN: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India whether, in the year 1876, a large survey party was assembled on the Indian frontier under instructions from the Government of India to initiate all the preliminary arrangements for linking together the Indian and Russian railway systems; and whether the proposed operations of this survey party were countermanded by a cable message from the India Office in London.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA (Lord G. HAMILTON, Middlesex, Ealing): There is no trace of any record in the India Office of any such transaction.

THE PEN TRADE.

*SIR CHARLES DILKE (Gloucestershire, Forest of Dean): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the inquiries of the inspectors into the complaints as to the need for an order for particulars in the pen trade are yet complete; and, if so, whether an order is to be made.

*THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT (Sir M. WHITE RIDLEY, Lancashire, Blackpool): I have received the inspectors' reports on this matter, and the question of issuing an order is still under my consideration.

GLEN CLELLAND COLLIERS.

MR. WOODS (Essex, Walthamstow): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his attention has been called to a fatal accident which happened on 8th August last at the Glen Clelland Colliery in Scotland, belonging to Messrs. Kerr and Mitchell, whereby a Russian Pole named Stanislaus Ambroziviczus met with his death; whether he is aware that the man did not understand the English language, and that he worked in the mine with another Pole who was also ignorant of the English language; whether his attention has been drawn to the statement of the jury at the inquest in their verdict, that neither of these two men were able to speak or understand the English language, and that their experience of mining was very limited; and in their opinion, in such an occupation as coal mining, the fact that any workman who was unable to understand the orders or warnings addressed to him constituted a danger to both himself and his fellow-workmen; whether the employment of two such men by the management is a contravention of Rule 39 of the Coal Mines Regulation Act; and whether he will cause full inquiry into the circumstances of this case, and take such steps as will give effect to the opinion expressed by the jury who tried this case.

*SIR M. WHITE RIDLEY: I find on inquiry that the facts of the case are substantially in accordance with the first three paragraphs. But there does not appear to have been any contravention of Rule 39. I am informed by the inspector for the district that he has repeatedly impressed their responsibility upon the mine owners who employ Polish workmen; and that the Abstract of the Mines Acts and the Special Rules have been translated into Russian for the benefit of these workmen. He adds that no accident caused by their ignorance of the English language has hitherto come to his knowledge.

SCOTCH WHISKY SAMPLES.

*MR. JOHN WILSON (Lanarkshire, Govan): I beg to ask the Lord Advocate if he is aware that small sample bottles of whisky are being freely distributed to dwelling-houses in Scotland by representatives of distillers and spirit dealers; and whether it is possible under the existing law to prevent this practice of promoting drinking by placing special temptations in the way of women and young people at their homes; and, if not, whether he will consider the desirability of introducing a short Bill to stop it.

*THE LORD ADVOCATE (Mr. A. GRAHAM MURRAY, Buteshire): In reply to the first paragraph of the question, I have no special information, but I do not doubt that distillers, like other manufacturers, distribute samples of their wares. In reply to the second paragraph, such distribution is lawful, and I have no reason to believe that it has any such injurious effects as to call for legislation.

SCOTTISH FISHERY CRUISER.

MR. WEIR: I beg to ask the Lord Advocate whether he is now in a position to state when the new cruiser for the Scottish Fishery Board will be ready for service; and, if not, will he say if tenders have yet been invited.

*MR. A. GRAHAM MURRAY: The question of a new cruiser for the superintendence of the fisheries is receiving the earnest attention of the Fishery Board, and no time whatever is being lost in carrying out the necessary negotiations. I may add that the Secretary for Scotland cannot undertake to give further information at present.

VICTORIA AND ALBERT MUSEUM.

LORD BALCARRES (Lancashire, Chorley): I beg to ask the Vice-President of the Committee of Council on Education whether the collection of gold ornaments bequeathed by the late Signor Giuliano to the Victoria and Albert Museum, and recently stolen, has been recovered; whether the police force in the Museum had been reduced prior to the robbery; and if it is likely to be increased.

SIR J. GORST: The answer to the first paragraph of the question is in the negative. None of the ornaments have been recovered. In answer to the second and third paragraphs I may say that the police force was reduced four and a half years ago. Since the robbery it has been again increased.

SCIENCE AND ART DEPARTMENT— COUNCIL OF ADVICE FOR ART MATTERS.

LORD BALCARRES: I beg to ask the Vice-President of the Committee of Council on Education whether the four artists recently appointed as a council of advice for art matters relating to the Science and Art Department will be at liberty to advise on administrative or departmental questions concerning the Art Museum; whether they will advise on the authenticity of objects offered for purchase; whether they are to be paid for their services; and whether they will meet at regular intervals.

SIR J. GORST: The answer to the first paragraph is No. The answer to the second paragraph is that they will advise on the artistic value of objects. The answer to the third paragraph is in the affirmative. The answer to the fourth paragraph is that they will meet at regular times, and also whenever required.

FOOT-AND-MOUTH DISEASE REGULATIONS.

MR. F. W. WILSON (Norfolk, Mid): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Agriculture whether his attention has been called to a resolution of the Norfolk Chamber of Agriculture urging him to insist upon the immediate slaughter of diseased cattle, and asking for some modification of the restrictions, so as to allow, by special licence, fat cattle, sheep, and pigs to be moved from the scheduled districts to slaughter-houses; and whether he is able to grant either or both of these concessions.

*THE FIRST COMMISSIONER OF WORKS (MR. AKERS DOUGLAS, Kent, St. Augustine, for MR. LONG): The attention of my right hon. friend has been called to the suggestions made by the Norfolk Chamber of Agriculture, and he asks me to say that experience has shown that the slaughter of cattle affected with foot and mouth disease is in some cases more likely to be instrumental in spreading the disease than their isolation under strict conditions. The course to be adopted must therefore be settled by reference to the particular circumstances of each individual case. With regard to the movement of animals for slaughter, my right hon. friend hopes to be in a position to give some relief in this direction in the course of a day or two.

UNCLAIMED WAGES OF DECEASED SEAMEN.

SIR J. LENG (Dundee): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade how the unclaimed balance for the year 1898-9 of £5,757, in respect of the wages and effects of deceased seamen, will be applied, and for what purpose £17,747 has been accumulated under this head since the year 1893-4.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF TRADE (MR. RITCHIE, Croydon): The unclaimed balance of the estates of deceased seamen for the year 1898-9 of £5,737 will be applied to the payment of claims on the estates it represents. After six years what balance is still unclaimed will be paid over to the Exchequer in accordance with the provisions of the Merchant Shipping (Mercantile Marine Fund) Act of 1898. The sum of £17,747 has been accumulated under this head to comply with this Act and the Merchant Shipping Act of 1894, which do not permit the Board of Trade to deal with the unclaimed estates of deceased seamen till six years after their receipt, and require the Board after that period to pay the balance then unclaimed into the Exchequer. Previously to the Act of 1898 they were paid into the Mercantile Marine Fund.

POSTAGE RATES TO SOUTHERN ITALY.

MR. HOGAN: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether he has seen, at page 24 of the recently issued Consular Report on Southern Italy, the statement that hardly a day passes on which surcharged letters are not left at the Consulate, many if not most of them for seamen, to whom the payment of threepence per letter is a severe tax; and whether any steps are practicable that would remedy this grievance.

THE FINANCIAL SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY (MR. HANBURY, Preston): Notices have been exhibited in every post office warning the public that penny postage is only applicable to certain specified parts of the British Empire, and that for all other parts of the world, including of course Italy, the 2½d. rate remains unchanged. The correct rates are duly set forth in the Postal Guide, which may be seen at any post office in the United Kingdom; and several communications have been sent to the newspapers on the subject.

CIVIL SERVICE ESTIMATES.

MR. BUCHANAN: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury when the Supplementary Civil Service Estimates will be issued.

MR. HANBURY: I hope that they will be circulated to-morrow morning.

ADULTERATION OF IRISH WHISKY
IN BOND.

*MR. WILLIAM JOHNSTON (Belfast, S.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland if excise officers in Belfast have recently found in a bonded store a cask of whisky 30 per cent. weaker than it ought to have been; whether the matter has been referred to the Board of Customs; and whether any penalty has been or will be inflicted.

MR. HANBURY: The revenue officers employed in a bonded warehouse in Belfast under the Customs lately found that, after the contents of a number of casks of British plain spirits had been blended—which operation should have made the whole to be of uniform strength—and drawn off into separate casks, the spirits in one of the casks proved, on being tried, to be of considerably lower strength than that of the bulk, for, whereas the strength of the bulk was 22·5 degrees over proof, the contents of this cask were found to be of a strength of only 12·3 degrees under proof, or 34·8 degrees below the proper strength. The matter having been reported to the Board of Customs, and the explanation of the warehouse-keepers not being satisfactory, the Board have directed the seizure of the cask in question and its contents.

*MR. WILLIAM JOHNSTON: Will the right hon. Gentleman give the name of the owner, because there are a number of innocent people in Belfast who may be implicated?

MR. HANBURY: I don't know the name.

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN: Was not the whisky extracted from the cask without the knowledge of the owner, by a thirsty Orangeman, who put water in its place?

*MR. WILLIAM JOHNSTON: Is not the person referred to in the question Mr. Samuel Young, the Member for Cavan?

MR. SAMUEL YOUNG (Cavan, E.): I hope to be protected from these attacks. I am not the person.

*MR. SPEAKER: Order, order!

AUSTRALIAN MINTS.

MR. HOGAN: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury whether replies have now been received from all the Australian Governments concerned in the question of the coining of silver in the colonial branches of the Royal Mint; and whether any decision has been arrived at.

MR. HANBURY: No, Sir. The Treasury have received no communication on the subject since I stated the position in reply to a question by the hon. Member on the 24th of October last.

IRISH RURAL DISTRICT COUNCILS.

MR. ENGLEDEW (Kildare, N.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether the Government will introduce a short Act, allowing the reduction of the number of members necessary to constitute a quorum of rural district councillors at their meetings from one-fourth to one-eighth, provided such proportion of one-eighth does not reduce the number to less than eight members, in which case the latter number should constitute a quorum.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL FOR IRELAND (MR. ATKINSON, Londonderry, N.) (for MR. G. W. BALFOUR): The Government are considering the propriety of introducing a short amending Bill, dealing, amongst other things, with the matter mentioned in the question.

ROYAL IRISH CONSTABULARY.

MR. DALY (Monaghan, S.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that a circular has been issued to the Royal Irish Constabulary in Ireland suspending the granting of leave of absence except in very urgent cases, and that the issuing of this circular has caused great disappointment in the police force ; and whether he will have this objectionable circular withdrawn.

MR. ATKINSON (for Mr. G. W. BALFOUR) : No such circular has ever been issued to the Constabulary.

WESTPORT LANDLORDS.

DR. AMBROSE (Mayo, W.) : I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that there are several landlords in the neighbourhood of Westport, County Mayo, who are anxious to sell their estates to the Congested Districts Board ; and if he can give any reasons why the Congested Districts Board will not purchase such estates.

MR. ATKINSON (for Mr. G. W. BALFOUR) : I am not aware what may be the views of landlords such as those referred to, save so far as they may be disclosed in confidential negotiations which may have passed between them and the Congested Districts Board. It would obviously be improper to disclose information so obtained.

IRISH POOR LAW OFFICERS' SALARIES.

MR. HAMMOND : I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland from what source has been paid to the local Poor Law Boards of Ireland the Government allowance on account of the payment of the salaries of medical officers of workhouses and dispensaries for the quarter ending 31st March, 1898.

MR. ATKINSON (for Mr. G. W. BALFOUR) : Recoupment in respect of the salaries mentioned in the question for the period ended 31st March, 1898, was made out of moneys voted by Parliament.

IRISH JUDICIAL APPOINTMENTS—RELIGIOUS DISABILITIES.

MR. DALY : I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he can state if the right hon. the Lord Chief Justice, Sir Peter O'Brien, is qualified to act as a Lord Justice for the Government in Ireland ; and, if not, whether he can state if it is because he is a Roman Catholic.

MR. ATKINSON (for Mr. G. W. BALFOUR) : This question is similar to one put by the hon. Member on the 5th instant. I have nothing to add to the reply given by me on that occasion.

IRISH COUNTY COURT PRINTING.

MR. ENGLEDEW : I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether the cost of printing and advertisements in connection with the assize and county courts and the office of the clerk of the Crown and Peace can be charged on the funds of the county councils in Ireland, having regard to the fact that the salaries of the judges and officers of such courts are paid from the Imperial Exchequer.

MR. ATKINSON (for Mr. G. W. BALFOUR) : The cost of the printing and advertisements mentioned must be paid by the county council out of the county rates, as was formerly done by the grand jury, to whose powers and duties the county council have succeeded.

IRISH LUNATIC ASYLUM RATE IN AID.

MR. POWER (Waterford, E.) : I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he has received a copy of a resolution adopted by the Joint Committee of Management of the Waterford District Asylum complaining of the action of the Treasury in charging the whole rate in aid for Irish asylums for the year ending 31st December, 1898, upon the Local Taxation Account, thus saddling that fund with full liabilities for the entire year 1898, during nine months of which year scarcely any income accrued to that fund ; and, if so, what reply has been given to that resolution, and what action it is proposed to take to remedy the state of things complained of by the resolution.

MR. ATKINSON (for Mr. G. W. BALFOUR) : This matter is under the consideration of the Treasury.

GRANARD (CO. LONGFORD) ESTATE.

MR. J. P. FARRELL : I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that about 100 tenants on the Granard (County Longford) Estate have been debarred from purchasing their holdings by reason of the action of the Land Commission in refusing to sanction advances on agreements made for sale; whether the trustees of Maynooth College are now willing to sell to these tenants on fair and equitable terms; and whether, as fully nine-tenths of this estate has become the property of the tenants, he will urge the Land Commission to expedite the transfer when the new agreements are made.

MR. ATKINSON (for Mr. G. W. BALFOUR): The Commissioner before whom the applications for advances upon the Granard Estate were pending refused 127 of these applications on the grounds of insufficient security, etc. In 111 of the cases appeals from the decision of the Commissioner were made pursuant to the provisions of the 29th Section of the Purchase of Land Act, 1891, with the result that the applications in 100 of the cases were sanctioned and advances made. In these cases the sales have been long since completed. The orders of the Commissioner in eleven cases refusing advances were affirmed. In the remaining sixteen cases no appeals were taken against the decision of the Commissioner, and no further agreements which may have been entered into between the parties in these cases, or in the eleven cases above referred to, have as yet been lodged. There is only one case under the Land Purchase Acts upon this estate at present pending in the Land Commission. The Commissioners have no information with regard to the second paragraph. If new agreements are entered into by the parties, and lodged with the Land Commission in the prescribed manner, they will be dealt with as rapidly as is possible.

GUN LICENCES IN ROSCOMMON.

MR. HAYDEN (Roscommon, S.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that some persons holding gun licences who reside in Beechwood, Roscommon, have been called upon by the police of that district, and presented with a document for signature, the contents of which they declined to disclose; whether he will state what the document contained; and whether this document is required to be universally signed by holders of gun licences; and if not, on what principle are selections made in Roscommon.

MR. ATKINSON (for Mr. G. W. BALFOUR): It having been ascertained that in several instances persons who obtain licences to keep one description of firearm are in fact keeping and using another, the police at Beechwood, with a view to prevent this practice and to check the official register of firearms, asked some persons in that district to give a written description of the weapons in their possession. Each person was presented with a slip of paper, on which was written the words, "The gun in my possession is a —," a blank being left for a description of the gun to be completed by its owner. This is the only foundation for the suggestion in the question.

EXTRA POLICE AT TALLOW.

MR. SHEE (Waterford, W.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland on how many occasions during the last nine months extra police have been drafted into the town of Tallow, county Waterford; how many extra police have been employed on each occasion; and what is the total cost of such extra police chargeable to the county Waterford in respect of that period; and whether, seeing that the town of Tallow is in a peaceful and orderly state, will he explain what are the circumstances under which it was considered necessary to detail such extra police, and who made the requisition for or directed their employment.

MR. ATKINSON (for Mr. G. W. BALFOUR): An extra force of police has been drafted into Tallow on ten occasions during the past nine months, the number of additional constables employed on each of these occasions varying from ten to eighty-three. The total cost of the extra force so employed and chargeable to the county Waterford will be nearly £4. The police were employed for the preservation of the public peace on the occasion of meetings convened under the auspices of the United Irish League, and were requisitioned by the authorities locally responsible for the maintenance of the peace.

MR. FLYNN (Cork): Was there any real ground for calling in extra police? Is it seriously contended any breach of the public peace was contemplated?

MR. ATKINSON: The persons locally responsible for the maintenance of the peace thought there were serious grounds for fearing a breach, and the fact that no breach occurred was probably due to the presence of the police.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL (Donegal, S.): Who is the person responsible?

*MR. SPEAKER: Order, order! The question has been fully answered.

IRISH NATIONAL SCHOOL TEACHERS.

MR. ARTHUR O'CONNOR (Donegal, E.): I beg to ask the Vice-President of the Department of Agriculture for Ireland whether he yet is in a position to state what provision is to be made to recoup the teachers of national schools in Ireland and national education generally for the sum of £78,000 handed over to the new Board of Agriculture in Ireland last year.

THE VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE FOR IRELAND (Mr. PLUNKETT, Dublin County, S.): The necessary provision for this purpose will be made in the Estimate for Public Education, Ireland, for the coming financial year.

THE COMPANY BILL.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will have any objection to the insertion of a clause in the Company Bill introduced by the Government, prohibiting the union of the offices of Minister of the Crown and company director.

MR. RITCHIE: Yes, Sir.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: Do I understand the right hon. Gentleman consents?

MR. RITCHIE: I said "Yes" to the hon. Gentleman's question.

NEW BILLS.

FACTORY AND WORKSHOP ACT (1878) AMENDMENT.

Bill to amend the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, so that the period of employment on a Saturday shall cease at twelve o'clock at noon instead of one o'clock, as at present, ordered to be brought in by Mr. Harwood and Mr. Kenyon.

FACTORY AND WORKSHOP ACT (1878) AMENDMENT BILL.

"To amend the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, so that the period of employment on a Saturday shall cease at twelve o'clock at noon instead of one o'clock, as at present," presented, and read the first time; to be read a second time upon Wednesday, 4th April, and to be printed. [Bill 80.]

ANCIENT MONUMENTS PROTECTION.

Bill to amend the Ancient Monuments Protection Acts, ordered to be brought in by Lord Balcarras, Sir John Brunner, Mr. Carson, Mr. Jebb, Sir John Stirling-Maxwell, and Mr. Bryce.

ANCIENT MONUMENTS PROTECTION BILL.

"To amend the Ancient Monuments Protection Acts," presented, and read the first time; to be read a second time upon Tuesday next, and to be printed. [Bill 81.]

HIGHWAYS AND BRIDGES ACT (1891) AMENDMENT.

Bill to amend the provisions of the Highways and Bridges Act, 1891, ordered to be brought in by Mr. Jeffreys, Sir John Dorington, Lord Edmund Fitzmaurice, Mr. Hobhouse, Mr. Beaumont, Mr. Grant Lawson, Mr. Mount, and Mr. Humphreys-Owen.

HIGHWAYS AND BRIDGES ACT (1891) AMENDMENT BILL.

"To amend the provisions of the Highways and Bridges Act, 1891," presented, and read the first time; to be read a second time upon Wednesday, 28th February, and to be printed. [Bill 82.]

FIRST READINGS—THE TEN MINUTE RULE—POINT OF PROCEDURE.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: Will you allow me, Mr. Speaker, to bring under your notice a matter affecting the procedure and practice of this House? I wish to know if there is any remedy for the systematic abuse of the Ten Minute Rule by the right hon. Gentleman the President of the Board of Trade, who yesterday—

*MR. SPEAKER: Order, order! If the hon. Gentleman rises to ask a question as to procedure, he must not make a speech attacking a Member.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: I do not wish to attack anyone, but to describe what occurred. It will be in the recollection of the House that yesterday afternoon, just before a very important Ministerial statement, the President of the Board of Trade introduced the Companies Bill under the Ten Minute Rule. I submit that that Bill is a Bill of first-rate importance, and one of high complication, which should not have been introduced under the Ten Minute Rule. Its introduction was therefore a breach of faith with the House which passed the rule. When the resolution on which that rule was based was agreed to, the late Mr. W. H. Smith, as Leader of the House, gave a distinct guarantee that motions under the rule should only be introduced in certain circumstances, and that they should not be made in relation to complicated Bills, or Bills of first-rate importance. His words were—

“It is not intended by this resolution to give the Government power to introduce without explanation any Bill of great public importance.”

It was on the strength of that guarantee that the resolution was passed, and I submit that the President of the Board of Trade has been guilty of a breach of faith in introducing under the rule such a Bill as that dealing with public companies.

*MR. SPEAKER: I said, in answer to the hon. Gentleman yesterday, that the Standing Order does not give the Speaker any power to decide what Bills may or may not be introduced under this rule. The Standing Order leaves it to the discretion of the Member to decide whether the Bill which he desires to introduce comes within the rule. Hon. Members may, of course, entertain most varying opinions as to the degree of importance to be attached to any particular Bill. With regard to the Companies Bill it is absolutely impossible for me to judge whether it is a measure of great public importance. All I see on the Paper with reference to it is that it is “A Bill to Amend the Law relating to Companies.” I cannot tell from the title what the nature of the Bill is, and I am therefore unable, nor is it my duty, to express any opinion on the point raised by the hon. Member.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: May I ask the First Lord of the Treasury, who never broke a pledge, even to Ireland—

*MR. SPEAKER: The hon. Member cannot, on a point of order, address a question to the Leader of the House.

*MR. D. A. THOMAS: May I suggest that the degree of importance of the Bill is characterised by the fact that it is named first in the Queen’s Speech.

SUPPLY.

Considered in Committee.

(In the Committee.)

ARMY (SUPPLEMENTARY) ESTIMATES,
1899-1900.

NUMBER OF LAND FORCES.

Motion made, and Question proposed,
“That a further number of Land Forces, not exceeding 120,000, all ranks, be maintained for the Service of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland at Home and Abroad, during the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1900.”
—(Mr. Wyndham.)

*COLONEL BROOKFIELD (Sussex, Rye): What I principally notice in connection with the question now under discussion, is the very satisfactory increase of interest which the House now takes in this particular class of subject. Yesterday, even the hon. Member for Northampton was heard to admit that it might be necessary to keep some troops in this country, while the hon. Member for Gateshead complained that the amount asked for was a mere bagatelle, and, in his opinion, not half enough. I was also very glad to note that my hon. friend the Under Secretary for War, in his statement, appreciated the general drift of public opinion, and was fully aware of the facts of the present situation. Some speakers expressed disapproval, because the statement did not contain more on the subject of South Africa. But my own view is that the complications there form only one incident, and that the real question which we have to deal with is the general improvement of our whole military system. With regard to the changes that the hon. Gentleman foreshadowed, very few Members will deny that they are in the right direction, and I am sure we all wish them every success. The main doubt I entertain on the matter is whether the hon. Gentleman is not a great deal too sanguine as to the practical effect of the proposals he has made. He was careful in the early part of his remarks to disavow having any recourse to compulsion, and I noticed that this disavowal was received with ominous approval by hon. Gentlemen opposite, and especially by the right hon. Gentleman the Leader of the Opposition. I have observed—it may only be a coincidence—that when anything that is doomed to ultimate failure, and deserves such a fate, is referred to in connection with the War Office, the right hon. Gentleman invariably gets up and gives his blessing to it. He has been described as a Tory in the worst sense of the term, and I think that the word accurately expresses his attitude on all questions of Army reform. In disavowing any recourse to compulsion my hon. friend adumbrated a very large increase in both the Regular Army and the Auxiliary forces. Although I am one of those who would much rather not have compulsory service, I must say I do not think that Ministers should go out of their way to encourage the idea that it is impossible. Nothing could be more creditable to this country than to supply the immense number of men now required without compulsion. But there are circumstances which may account for my hon. friend feeling rather too sanguine. To begin with, it is amply demonstrated that the present war is a very popular one with the masses of the country, who are offering their sympathy in a practical form by going out to take their share in the fighting. But we might at any time be confronted with a war exceedingly unpopular; and in such a case I think we should, in trusting to the voluntary system, find ourselves leaning on a broken reed. My hon. friend called his general proposals a “scheme of invitation,” and obviously that implied that his proposals might either be accepted or rejected. My earnest hope is that they may be accepted and that the country may respond to his invitation, but I venture to repeat my wish that he had not appeared to commit himself against the possibility of having recourse to some form of compulsion. There are some Members of this House who like the compulsory system of military service for the sake of the thing itself, but personally I do not think we should regard either the voluntary or the compulsory system otherwise than as a means to an end, that end being the efficiency and mobility of our forces. With regard to the more important general proposals of the Government, I usually associate myself with my hon. friend the Member for West Belfast, and his opinions. But I fear that his experience in this House has rather tended to make him a little hypercritical and sometimes unfair with regard to propositions that come from the Government. I certainly do consider it unfair for him to exercise his satire at the expense of the 109,000 men who have been referred to as being at home. Of course we all know that they are largely composed of young and immature soldiers. But everything must have a beginning, and we cannot expect that men under twenty years of age shall be as fit for foreign service as older men. I believe that if my hon. friend could see these men dressed as blue-jackets he would say that they were, on the whole, a very useful body. With regard to the proposals relating to our Auxiliary forces I think the whole country will be disposed to congratulate my hon. friend and the Government on having at length decided to give some official countenance to the Militia—that much-neglected but useful military body, which, in season and out of season, has borne the heat and burden of the day for many years past, and has always been found willing to do what is required of it in an unostentatious and unadvertising way. The increase of pay and the provision of transport for the Militia must be admitted to be substantial improvements, but when my hon. friend goes on to propose a training of not less than three months every year, I am again inclined to say that he is showing rather too sanguine a temperament. I think that the class of Militiamen who can find time to go out for three months in the year might just as well join Line battalions at once and become Regular soldiers. Probably that is the intention. But the old-fashioned Militiaman will, I think, find it very difficult to go out for three months: while as to the officers, the difficulty will be still more formidable. Of late years the officers of the Militia have very largely ceased to be drawn from the ranks of the country gentlemen. They are to an increasing extent recruited from professional men and men of business, stockbrokers, &c., who go into the force not exactly in a spirit of leisurely patriotism, but rather with the idea of getting a short holiday, and at the same time of gaining some acquaintance with the profession of arms. My hon. friend expressed a hope that the country gentlemen would help him with respect to the officering of the force. I live most of the year among country gentlemen, and my opinion of them as regards the patriotic duties they are ready to perform is a rather low one. In many parts of the country, no doubt, they are behaving very well under the excitement of the present crisis, and are joining Yeomanry corps, and so on, but I fear that for the ordinary uninteresting military work of peaceful times we may appeal to them in vain. The idle young men who have least to do always complain that they are most busy, and it is impossible to obtain their services. The Government may be quite right politically in banishing the idea of applying compulsion to the working classes, but if they could only apply a little of it to the classes from whom the officers are recruited I believe no complaint would be heard, and that it would be for the good of the social community at large, and especially of the young men principally concerned. It would make them do their duty when they fail to do it of their own accord. As regards the Volunteers, I could have wished that some systematic attempt had been made to deal with the question of field artillery. It is, I admit, a very difficult question, and there is much to be said on both sides of it, but I hold the opinion that it would not have been impossible to provide the Volunteers with field artillery by borrowing a little from the Continental system, and giving them the assistance of Regular soldiers in the most difficult part of their duty—that is, driving. But as the Government have announced the very substantial addition of thirty-six field batteries and seven batteries of horse artillery to the Regular Army, I do not think we should make any further complaint on the subject of artillery in the immediate present. With regard to the Infantry Volunteers, I am sure that many of the proposals will be hailed with great satisfaction by commanding officers of battalions. They will be extremely pleased with the permission to recruit to a higher limit. I do not, however, quite understand whether that means recruiting in their existing stations, or whether it means that they may go further afield, which would involve the appointment of additional instructors and the coming to Parliament for more money. Whether it will have the effect of popularising the Volunteers at the expense of the Militia, too, is a matter for the Government rather than for Volunteer officers to consider. Undoubtedly the Volunteers now absorb a large number of men who, from an abstract point of view, ought to be serving in the Militia. I do not think that the latter force attracts a sufficient number of the lower middle class, whom it would be very desirable to draw to the colours, and the only plan I have ever heard proposed to secure the desirable end of grouping our possible soldiers in their proper places is that of creating double battalion regiments composed of men of a particular class. The sanction for Volunteers to train for one month a year instead of a week I hail personally with the greatest satisfaction. I think it is an admirable boon, but I fear that many of my friends will find it extremely difficult to carry it out. What is easy for one Volunteer corps is very difficult for another, and what suits a man recruited in a city would not do for a man living in a rural district in Scotland. I should have thought that a little elasticity might have been provided under the management of the general officers, so that different localities—so long as they did not spend more money than they were entitled to—might settle matters as they pleased. I was glad to hear my hon. friend, in speaking of these concessions, state that they are to be accompanied by stringent conditions. I am anxious to hear what those conditions will be, for I have too often found that they only have reference to some detail as to shooting qualifications, and I think that Volunteers have long outstepped that period of their existence. I miss now, as I have done in many previous Army statements in this House, any reference to discipline. The Volunteer force is still suffered to remain very much, in many substantial respects, in the same state with regard to discipline as when it was first established in the evil days of 1859. [AN HON. MEMBER: No, no!] I say it is so, in spite of itself, and that the authorities have not levelled it up or made it advance with the times as regards discipline. Let me refer hon. Members to the extraordinary regulation which prescribes that meetings of all ranks of a corps shall be held—meetings at which a proposition may be made by a private, seconded by a sergeant, and opposed by the commanding officer. Of course, there are ways and means of getting out of this ridiculous regulation, but I see no reason why it should not be expunged. At present it only constitutes a standing subject of ridicule from Regulars and Militia. These meetings are thoroughly pernicious, and I speak with some experience on the subject. While in some quarters there is a desire to stereotype these absurdities in the Volunteer service, the Volunteers themselves resent them more perhaps than anyone else. Again, I think it will be necessary before long for the authorities to draw up some precise regulation as to volunteering for active service. I think it would save a great deal of trouble if a register were kept of the men willing to act as regular soldiers in case of emergency, instead of only asking for volunteers when an unexpected emergency arises. Almost the most substantial concession contained in the very encouraging announcement in regard to the Volunteers is the intention of occasionally presenting them with a commission in the Regular Army. That is a privilege which should have been conceded long ago. I cannot help thinking that the present moment—or during the progress of the present war would be a favourable one for reviving among the Volunteers the practice which at one time prevailed with regard to the Militia, under which any officer bringing in a hundred men to join the Regular Army was rewarded with a commission. Many officers would have done this in the present emergency, and I think some of the results would have been more satisfactory than under the present system, and that a new means would have been found to assist recruiting. I think we ought to regard with extreme satisfaction the manner in which our Volunteers have come forward to join their territorial regiments, and those who find fault with the territorial system ought to recognise that this is one of its advantages, that it forms a closer union between the Regular and the Auxiliary battalions. Nothing was said in my hon. friend's field.

statement with regard to the War Office, which leads to the suspicion that it is going on like the old four-wheeled cabs in London, for another quarter of a century. The hon. Gentleman has disarmed a good deal of criticism by the tactful way in which he has made his statement, and by the remarkable gift he has exhibited of showing between the lines of what he says what he would also personally like to say. I regard his proposals for home defence, making due allowance for what is too sanguine, as the most important and most satisfactory that have been made for many years past—probably during the present generation—and I wish them every success.

MR. EDMUND ROBERTSON (Dundee): I do not want to discourage or depreciate the merits of the statement which the hon. Gentleman made last night, which I admire; but I think it has been received in the House with an almost universal sense of disappointment. That expression of disappointment has been as strong on the other side of the House as on this, and if we have been disappointed, what must be the disappointment of those outside, who called upon the Opposition to abrogate its principal functions because, forsooth, while we were debating the Address we were supposed to be standing in the way of something that was to be proceeded with on the part of the War Office? We have been subjected to that sort of criticism by persons—or at all events by one person, who appears to have transgressed and broken the rules of the high public office now vested in him. I certainly did not expect to hear such a statement as I have listened to to-night. We expected some detailed account of what the Government were going to do in the prosecution of the war which is now in progress. We have had instead a statement which dealt with the projected reforms, or rather with a permanent increase in our military system, and the Estimates which have been submitted to us, like the statement of the hon. Gentleman, are divided between the provision for the war which is now going on—as to which no objection comes from me—and the provision made for this permanent increase of our military forces. But whilst £13,000,000 of this Estimate are to be devoted to the war, the greater part of the hon. Gentleman's speech was devoted to the provision which is to be made for the permanent increase of the military forces. In the few observations which I propose to submit to the Committee I wish to address myself first of all to that part of the subject which deals with the South African question. Whatever my feelings may be about the war, I do not propose to object to a single farthing of the money which is now being asked for for the purposes of the war, and there are only two questions which I desire to submit to the hon. Gentleman, who will no doubt give us the information I desire before the debate closes. First of all I think we ought to have a complete statement as to the extent to which the Army has, during the progress of this war, been obliged to borrow guns from the Navy. We know that some thirty-eight guns have been borrowed from the Navy up to a certain date, and the process has been going on. There is also another minor point. I understand that the searchlights, which have been so useful on many critical occasions in South Africa, have been borrowed from the Navy. I think the hon. Gentleman would do well to tell us to what extent that has taken place, and how it comes about that an army engaged in such a war had to borrow searchlights even from the Navy.

THE UNDERSECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR (MR. WYNDHAM, Dover): I am not aware of it.

MR. EDMUND ROBERTSON: The searchlights used by the Army have been borrowed from the Navy, and that certainly requires explanation. I will finish by asking how is the borrowing of guns and of searchlights to be made good to the naval service? They must be replaced, I imagine; and I should like to know whether the borrowed guns are to be a Navy charge or an Army charge? In connection with the progress of the war I should like to know the status of the colonial troops who have been engaged. I take it that while these troops have been to some extent equipped by the colonies, their pay is to be a charge upon us, and forms part of the £13,000,000 now being asked for. I understand also that the colonial troops are to be paid at the same rate as the Imperial troops.

*SIR CHARLES DILKE (Gloucester, Forest of Dean): They are paid by the Colonial as well as by the Imperial Government.

MR. WYNDHAM: The understanding with the Canadian and Australian authorities is that we should give the men arms and ammunition, pay them Imperial rates, and take them home.

MR. EDMUND ROBERTSON: What I am driving at is the alleged inequality of remuneration—I don't care from what source—between the Colonial troops and the Imperial troops. According to my right hon. friend they are getting paid from two sources, as compared with our own troops, who are only getting our own pay. That, no doubt, will be explained.

MR. WYNDHAM: It is for the Governments of self-governing colonies to give the men what they please.

MR. EDMUND ROBERTSON: I do not know that it is a satisfactory service to have two sets of soldiers belonging to the same rank, and one of them getting a different rate of pay to the other. I should like to say a word or two about the permanent provision which is being made in this Estimate for the increase in the Army. I object altogether to the manner in which the proposal for that increase has been submitted to the House. How has it been submitted? We have had a vast new scheme involving a large permanent addition to our forces laid before us in a Supplementary Estimate, a large proportion of which deals with expenditure for the war. I have protested more than once in this House against this way of abusing Supplementary Estimates. A year and a half ago the First Lord of the Admiralty came down to this House with a proposal for the increase of the Fleet without a Supplementary Estimate at all, and he obtained Parliamentary sanction for a large increase in the ship-building programme of the year. I think that was bad enough, but I regard the mode of procedure now adopted as, if anything, worse. I do not think that it is a proper use of Supplementary Estimates to use them for the purpose of launching a vast new permanent scheme of military defence, and at the risk of making myself wearisome to some of my hearers, I will venture to repeat once more a sentence which, two years ago, I quoted from a speech made by Mr. Gladstone, in which he said—

“To render Parliamentary control effectual it was necessary that the House of Commons should have the money transactions of the year presented to it in one mass and in one account. If Supplementary Estimates were easily resorted to, the House would be pledged, in self-defence, to appoint a permanent Finance Committee.”

I am not betraying any secret when I say that that sentence is the golden rule of all Administrations, and I doubt if any man has ever held office in a spending department who has not been made acquainted with the rule. I think it was broken in spirit a year and a half ago by the First Lord of the Admiralty, and I think it is now being broken in spirit by the War Office when we are asked to sanction, in such a debate as this, a large Supplementary Estimate like this, making the great permanent addition to the Army which they are now seeking. It is impossible that this House can sanction these proposals in the manner they are now submitted to us, and for my part, I reserve all rights of criticism, and even of opposition and objection, if that should seem necessary. Usually, if this House once sanctions a Vote, that sanction is taken at something like the Second Reading of the Bill, which carries with it the approval of the House, but a proposal like this cannot do that. I have no objection whatever to this Vote if the hon. Gentleman, on behalf of the Government, will undertake to treat this £420,000 merely as a text from which he was able to preach his sermon last night, and not as something done with Parliamentary sanction, which would justify the Government in proceeding to execute a large scheme involving a permanent increase in the Army. I quite understand that the Committee was impatient to hear the military proposals of the Government, and that a certain sum should be put down to make the statement intelligible; but if any more serious significance is to be attributed by the Government to the amount, I for one will not be bound by it without fuller information, and I will reserve all rights of criticism, objection, and opposition. As I have said, I am not called upon now to enter into the merits of the scheme which has been submitted to us. A permanent increase of the military forces of the country ought to be justified by some permanent change in the condition of the country. I ask any hon. Member whether any case whatever was made out by the Under Secretary for War or those who supported him for any permanent addition to the military forces of this country. I submit there was none, and I do not think the hon. Gentleman in charge of the Estimate professed to set up any change in our condition such as would necessitate a permanent addition to our forces. There is also another objection. I agree with the hon. and gallant Member for Great Yarmouth in the criticism he passed last night on these proposals. The point is one which has often been taken, and I believe it is perfectly sound. It is that we should not enter upon the consideration of the defence of this country without considering all through both the naval and military position. I will not enlarge on the hon. Admiral's views or on the merits of the “blue water” school of politicians. I am satisfied of the soundness of the principle laid down, which I believe Members on both sides will endorse, that it is waste of time and futile to ask this Committee to consider military proposals without considering also the naval position. Until I know where the Navy is to be put in the joint scheme of defence—because it must be a joint scheme—I cannot offer any support to these proposals. You propose a great increase in the forces of this country, and you have indicated certain changes in detail, but I venture to say you have overlooked the one thing which at this moment is giving the country concern. There was not a whisper of real Army reform in the speech of the Under Secretary for War. What the country wants is not merely that the number of men and the amount of money should be increased, but that the whole Army from top to bottom should be subjected to a radical reorganisation. If I may presume to speak for the country—and it is a very difficult thing to speak for it nowadays—I think it wants to be assured that our Army, whether large or small, is a business army and a scientific army.

Mr. Edmund Robertson.

*COLONEL BLUNDELL. (Lancashire. Ince): So it is.

MR. EDMUND ROBERTSON: The hon. and gallant Gentleman says it is: but many people who certainly have not his experience believe it is neither a business army nor a scientific army.

What we want is an assurance that the Army shall be reorganised from that point of view. I will take one example. The hon. and gallant Gentleman who just now objected to my statement will not deny that the public are not satisfied that we get the best class of man for the rank and file in the Army. My own belief is that the first reform should be to increase the pay of all ranks. Until you increase the pay of the private you will not get the best men to enlist. I believe also that we should open up a larger field for the admission of educated private soldiers to commissions. I am quite sure that is the popular opinion—at all events I would approve of such a change; but I believe that the misgiving in the public mind refers even more to the class of officers than it does to the class of privates. In my opinion, the financial question, as in most public matters, is at the bottom of this matter. I believe the Army is too cheap—although that may seem a paradox. I believe you do not pay any rank at a sufficiently high rate of remuneration, and that you bar out the great majority of your countrymen by the enormous expense with which you saddle a military career. That, I am certain, is a point which must have consideration when the Army comes to be reorganised. I have here a paper written by a well-known military expert, not a military man, I mean Mr. Charles Williams, who discusses the war every morning in the columns of the Morning Leader. He makes the following statement, which I cannot vouch for, but which I accept on his authority. Speaking of a young officer he says—

“His military and mufti outfit would be cheap at £200, and it would be indispensable to provide an annual allowance for at least ten years, or until the rank of captain is attained. Taking one consideration with another, the average young officer by the time he becomes captain has cost his relatives not far from £3,000, and in many cases much more.”

If you handicap your Army in that way you cannot get the selection you otherwise would. Why should not every able-bodied and able-minded young man, no matter what his rank, have access to a career which is to many the most desirable of all? You are barring out by the vile and ignoble structure of money you are raising between them and the Army men who possibly would make your best generals. My idea of the British Army is an army in which every young man physically, mentally, and otherwise fitted for military service should be encouraged to enter, and that from the earliest moment he should be able to support himself and not be obliged to depend on subsidies. I should insist further that every kind of expensive amusement which by custom is now made obligatory in the rank of officer should be stamped out with a stern hand. [Laughter.] I hope hon. Gentlemen who object to the metaphor will not object to the substance of what I say. I do not object to the amusements themselves, but to the exclusive effect which they have on candidates who might otherwise enter the Army. I believe that the country is not satisfied that we are dealing fairly with the Army, that we are not going the proper way to get the best men, and that if we get the best men a proper career is not open to them. These are some of the many points which the Committee should consider before any permanent increase in the military system of the country is sanctioned. I will only say, in conclusion, that while we do not object to the amount of money asked for, we do insist on holding open for consideration the question of the permanent increase of the Army. We shall give freely all you want for the prosecution of the war, but you should wait until your Army Estimates are ready before asking for an increase in the military establishment. The Navy Estimates are ready and placed on the Table of the House, and the Army Estimates ought to have been in the same forward state.

MR. WYNDHAM: I am sorry to intervene, but so many questions have been put and so many arguments addressed to me that I feel unless I rise every now and again I shall never be able to reply to them all. The hon. Member who has just sat down asked me as to our borrowings from the Navy. We have borrowed 35 guns and 1,100 men. This misdeemeanour, if such it be, was covered by the general explanation I gave the other day. The borrowings will be made good by the simplest possible method of all, by handing back the same number of similar articles to the Navy. We have been doing that already. We are purchasing a number of guns now and transferring them to the Navy. As to the pay of the colonial troops, I do not think this is the moment for entering into considerations of that kind. Things are going very well. Nobody watches them with a more loving eye, if I may venture to say so, than myself; but we do feel that the success we have gained has been largely due to the fact that we have not fussed over the offers the colonies have made to us, but have met them in that spirit of the warmest acceptance which they deserve. We have not been urging our own suggestions and views upon the colonies; we wished to hear from them in the first instance. It may be that the colonial troops who have fought side by side with the men from home may like in the future to claim, if not some active share in the work of our Army, still some recognised right to share in that work in times of Imperial danger. I hope that may be so; but to discuss at this moment the different rates of pay that prevail in this or that part of Her Majesty's dominions would not conduce to, but rather retard that consummation. An hon. Member has taken us to task upon the ground of financial purity because we have proceeded by Supplementary Estimates; but we have an absolutely clean sheet this time. This is a genuine Supplementary Estimate. These are new charges, and all the money has been spent. If we had waited for the permission of the House before taking the steps which we have done we should have received the condemnation of the country, and we believe we shall get the sanction of the Committee for the steps which we have taken. The hon. Gentleman said a good deal with which I cordially agree. I do not think, to pass to another point, that we ought to proceed to drastic measures in order to put something in the pockets of officers in the Army, or that it is necessary to trample anything down with our hands, or to stamp it down with our feet, or whatever the treatment may be which commends itself to the hon. Member, but I do think some effort should be made not to close the door of our Army, and certainly not the door of our cavalry to every man who does not enjoy an income of £150 a year in the one case and £500 in the other. In view of this crisis it is nothing less than a scandal and a danger to the Empire that we cannot get young men into the cavalry unless their fathers or their friends are able to give them incomes to enable them to live. I may tell the Committee that we have been working at that problem. An important committee sat during last winter, presided over by General French, who is gathering fresh laurels every day in South Africa. That Committee has dealt in great detail with this very subject, which is one of the greatest public importance. I was glad that the hon. and gallant Gentleman the Member for Rye hailed with satisfaction our proposals for giving Volunteer regiments facilities for training during one month, but he went on to say that the proposals ought to be more elastic. That criticism is due to some misapprehension. We offer facilities; we do not exact services from the Volunteers, and I tried to make it clear that we should consult the peculiar conditions of the several corps in the matter. We wish in all these matters to work in consultation and co-operation with hon. Members, like the hon. and gallant Member for Rye, who are well qualified to speak for that force. I may say that what I stated as regards the Volunteers holds good in respect of the Yeomanry. I have been asked several questions about the Yeomanry. I happen to know that a number of Yeomanry commanding officers are to hold a meeting next Friday. I have seen some of them, and we have invited the fullest expression of their opinion both as regards the Volunteers and the Yeomanry. I have to say that the proposal that they should encamp for one month is only fixed on our part as a desirable thing for this year. It is an emergency proposal, though we think a very necessary one, but it is one of those measures which I venture to call instructive experiments. If it turns out that such a period of training is not only useful to the force but also appreciated by it, then that would be one of the very best reasons why it might with advantage be continued in the years to come, though, perhaps, on a modified and reduced scale. I shall now go on as briefly as I can to the many questions addressed to me yesterday. I could not complete my reply last night to all the points then raised, and was obliged to bivouac on the field of battle. Taking up the thread of the debate last night, I have a personal correction to make of a statement I made in reply to the right hon. Baronet the Member for the Forest of Dean. I said we had borrowed eight battalions from India for the war. That was the number we borrowed not only from India but from the Mediterranean; we only borrowed four from India. With regard to the question asked by the hon. Member for King's Lynn, whether we are going to overhaul the armaments and ammunition of our forts in this country, I have to say that we are, but I purposely left that out in my speech last night, because we propose to lay our scheme before Parliament later in the session. Regret has been expressed that we have not attempted to form an army corps of Auxiliary forces. It is under consideration at this moment whether that is or is not a practical proposal, and therefore I should not be justified in discussing it this afternoon. The right hon. the Member for Ilkeston asked whether we are making any addition to the Royal Army Service Corps. Yes, Sir, we are. We are offering instead of 30 commissions 100 commissions, and we are estimating for an increase of 250 non-commissioned officers and men. I am asked for further particulars as to the terms that will be given to the Yeomanry, more especially in the matter of horses. That is one of the questions which will be carefully, and I hope liberally, considered in consultation with the Yeomanry commanding officers. We came to an arrangement satisfactory to both parties in respect of the mounted infantry which have been sent to South Africa. That being so, we hope we shall not fail to solve what, after all, is a much easier problem. We are now considering very carefully all the provisions for giving bounties to the Militia. We have not yet arrived at a definite conclusion, but the trend of our opinion is that the bounties and the conditions are too various and complicated; that it is an anomaly, and not wise, to have one man getting £3 10s., another £2, and a third £1. In any case, we shall not offer for three, four, or five months work a sum considered adequate for one month. The hon. Member for South-East Essex made a statement in respect of the guns to which I must take exception. He told us that our guns could only fire five rounds a minute, whereas the guns of foreign armies fired ten and fifteen rounds. Well, that is not so. In this matter aimed rounds are the only rounds that count. For the German guns only five rounds a minute are claimed. With our present guns we can fire almost five rounds a minute; but the new guns which we have ordered with certain improvements, which make them practically quick-firing guns, will fire eight aimed rounds a minute. We have ordered guns of that type for the forty-three batteries, and the only reason why we do not order more is that we wish to profit by the reports which we shall receive from South Africa before plunging into a re-arming programme. It is quite clear that when the bulk of the artillery has been engaged in a long war you are approaching near to the time of re-armament, and we must profit by the experience of the war. If we find that we can better those guns which fire eight rounds a minute, they will be a sort of transitional weapon, and they will be given to the Auxiliary forces when the Regular forces are armed with weapons of greater value, and I think the Auxiliary forces will be very glad to hear that at any rate they will differ materially from those now in use. The hon. Member for Northampton asked me whether we proposed to raise Volunteers in Ireland. No, it is not our intention. He also asked me what the scheme would cost, and several hon. Members have asked for greater detail in respect of the money portion of this Estimate. I tried to show that it was not an easy question to answer. Part of this programme is permanent in every sense of the word; part of it is permanent, but subject to contraction in certain contingencies. The fifteen battalions are permanent. Although the men have been voted, money has not been taken for them in previous Estimates; and therefore in respect of money we must regard the fifteen battalions as an increase of the Line involving a permanent increase of £750,000. We want depôts, which will cost £35,000, so that the permanent up-keep may be put at £785,000. There will be a capital charge for barracks, which I would put at £1,500,000. Then there are what I may call semi-permanent provisions—namely, the batteries. When, as now, you have two army corps abroad, and these added batteries for two additional army corps are in full blast, the full charge of their up-keep will be on the Estimates. Taking seven batteries of Horse Artillery at £15,000 and thirty-six batteries of Field at £12,000, there will be an annual charge of £535,000. But it is impossible for me to say what the annual charge would be when you had reduced these batteries, because that is a question of policy which cannot be debated on this Supplementary Estimate. We can hear what hon. Members have to say to that when we come to the Army Estimates, of this year and the year in which it is proposed to reduce these batteries in consequence of the artillery having returned from South Africa. An hon. Member wanted to know how the 120,000 men were made up. He is aware that such a number really has no relation to the forces in the field. They are made up in this way. Gross excess on original estimate, and also further demands made that will give us in respect of the Army Reserve recalled to the colours 55,000 men; in respect of the Colonial forces we are asking for 26,000 more than the 9,000 originally asked for; Yeomanry and Volunteers, 20,000; European troops moved from India, 2,500, in addition to the original 6,000; native Indian troops moved to garrison at Mauritius, 3,500; and an estimated further gain by re-recruiting up to 31st March, 13,000. If you add this to what was done in October you get the gross excess over the original estimate of 155,000 men. We have asked for sanction for men borrowed from India for any purpose, and every colonial soldier in receipt of Imperial pay. The speech of my hon. and gallant friend the Member for the Wellington Division of Somerset was a very able and interesting speech; but I failed to make my meaning clear to him. He took exception to the fact that there are now 109,000 Regulars in this country, and he went on to say that I had connected them in some direct manner with the field army of three army corps and three cavalry brigades. If I left that impression on his mind I bungled my job yesterday. I thought I had made it clear. I tried to do so. I explicitly stated in the beginning of my remarks that I was only putting before the Committee the raw material in mere numbers we had at our disposal, and I tried to make it clear what were the methods of organisation to which we have recourse in order to get a mobile army out of that mass of raw material. We have in February 109,000 Regulars, and we expect to get 30,000 more. We have 28,000 Auxiliaries, and we expect to get 50,000 more, the total of Regulars and Auxiliaries at the end of the year being 517,500. As far as organisation goes the plan of the Government is, while training these men to greater efficiency, to make out of that number a field army of three army corps and three cavalry brigades of 340,000 men. It may be asked, "Why do you make these proposals for home defence instead of submitting proposals for the reinforcement of India and South Africa?" As this field army is formed it is available, and the quickest way of doing that work is to set our hands to the task of collecting the units, placing them in the barracks, and giving facilities for proper training. The hon. and gallant Member said the best thing in the debate last night. He described our scheme as being one of "invitation and imagination." It is very witty, and I will admit that it is perfectly true. But I waited to hear his alternative; and I do not know on what better method you can proceed. If you set compulsion on one side you must turn to some method of encouragement. It is a scheme of invitation. We do invite, and I hope we invite cordially. It is a scheme of imagination, because we suggest as an exercise of the imagination that it is a scheme about which we all ought to think a great deal, but, perhaps, talk as little as possible. It has been said, also, that I had been guilty of heresy in respect of the Navy. We are hardly allowed to manage military forces for home defence without being accused of forgetting the existence and the importance of the Fleet for the protection of the country—the policy of the "blue-water school." I belong to that school. I do not regard the military force as being important to anything like the same degree as the Navy in this matter. I am ready to whittle down with the best whittlers. I will put it as low as this. I do not look upon this as a defence against attack. I regard it as an insurance against the fear which might spring from a threat. That is putting it low enough. All the same, we ought to have that insurance. I think that if the Fleet were sent away, and we had no military system of defence, you might have a panic which might turn out a strong Government or force the hands of a weak Government; and this might be courting an Imperial disaster.

Mr. Wyndham.

Mr. Wyndham.

*ADMIRAL FIELD (Sussex, Eastbourne): There is no doubt that the war has brought out grave shortcomings in our military system. I care very little for these reforms so long as we get the substance for the Navy and Army. An hon. Member who spoke just now seemed to condemn the military department because it had been compelled to borrow from the Navy guns, men, and search-lights. There is no room, I say, for such criticism as that. The whole of the service on South African stations are proud to be of service in this war. It is quite true that the Navy lent heavy guns, and it is quite true that a clever officer, Captain Percy Scott, designed the carriage for them, but there is nothing in that. It is our duty to render assistance, and when Sir George White applied for our assistance he got it. I understand the Admiralty have sent more guns out to replace those which were lent to the Army, so that where the War Office has to repay I fail to see. I am not prepared to support the hon. Member for Dundee in his view of this military programme, and that this is not the proper time for proposing a vote of this nature. The hon. Member seems to cast aside the fact that we are at war, and to suggest that we should wait with dignity until the Estimates come on in their regular course before we embark on any scheme of this kind. But I would remind the hon. Gentleman that time is the essence of the whole business. If there have been shortcomings on the part of the Cabinet, the Ministers concerned have been candid enough to acknowledge them. They have confessed their faults. But the faults do not, in my opinion, lie with the War Office, but with past Parliaments and past Governments. I will prove my words. The Navy was in the same condition in 1885, probably in a worse condition than the Army is now. And why was that? Because the Government, like Governments before and since, were too anxious to square their budgets with popular feeling, irrespective of the needs of the services. Two years ago there was a reduction in the duty on tobacco which meant £1,250,000. Had that £1,250,000 been preserved and handed over to the War Office we should not have been in the plight we are in now. We should not be asked for £750,000 for new battalions and £530,000 for new artillery. The tobacco tax would have met the whole of the expenditure. Nobody asked that it should be taken off. I was entirely opposed to it. Public opinion did not demand it; but the nation does demand that our naval and military efficiency shall be maintained. You cannot have your cake and eat it. Now you are called upon to spend money like water; whereas if you had pursued a sound policy and the Government had had the courage of its convictions we should not have been in the hole we are in now. I have listened with great attention to the able statement put forward by the Under Secretary of State for War. He referred to the "blue water school," but whatever he may say about us he must admit that the present expedition to South Africa was only possible because the Navy is strong. Sir, when the "red school"—the military school—can point to a result similar to that achieved by the agitation of the "blue water school" they will have something to be proud of. Get some distinguished man to "stump" the country and agitate for the redress of your military grievances, just as Admiral Sir Geoffrey Hornby did in our behalf, and the nation will very soon give all you ask. When I am addressing the House on these questions I regard the two services as one. I do not put one before the other. The only rivalry between them is as to which of us shall die first for our country, and in that matter I am quite willing to grant precedence to the sister service.

MR. F. W. WILSON (Norfolk, Mid) said that one of the first things to be taught the men of this country was the way to shoot, and he would like to ask the Under Secretary of State for War what steps were to be taken by the War Office to secure the reopening of closed rifle ranges. He was afraid that much could not be done unless some compulsion was applied. He knew of a case where a single squatter's cottage and the convenience of its inmates had been put before the benefits of an adjacent rifle range which had to be closed. Again, at such an important centre as Colchester the range was closed for years because of the objections of the lord of the manor, and no doubt the lord of the manor was a very magnificent person. Musketry training at short ranges only was not enough. Long ranges must be opened and compulsory powers secured for that purpose in the future. As to the mounted infantry being raised in connection with the Yeomanry, he would like to know whether it was to be insisted on that candidates should have the cavalry seat instead of the splendid hunting seat which men had been accustomed to in their youth. It seemed to him that when they invited country gentlemen to join they put a great obstacle in their way by insisting on the cavalry seat. The hon. member also thought that the Volunteers should be drilled in the art of taking cover. One of the reasons of the Boers' successes was that they did take all such cover, and refused to fight in the open. With regard to the reopening of rifle ranges he urged that there should be full charge ammunition and full range, as the Volunteers had found the half-charge ammunition hopeless for rifle shooting. He hoped in the rearrangement of Army matters this question of rifle shooting would not be overlooked, but it could only be dealt with satisfactorily by the putting into force of compulsory powers.

*SIR HERBERT MAXWELL (Wigtonshire): If I understand the hon. and learned Member for Dundee aright, he wished the Committee to believe that we were not to rely upon our land forces for defence. I should be the last man to underrate the importance of a strong fleet. The Fleet must of course always be our first line of defence, but the Fleet is not enough unless it is supported by an adequate mobile land force. There is at least one instance within this century to which I may appeal as evidence in support of that view. It was not long after the beginning of this century, about six years after the battle of the Nile had been fought, and when the maritime power of England was paramount, that the Fleet very nearly failed us for defence. I do not for the moment remember whether Mr. Addington or Mr. Pitt was Prime Minister; it was after the year 1804, when Napoleon had 150,000 men lying at Boulogne, with a flotilla ready to bring them over to this country if he could but lure away our fleet. Cornwallis was watching one French fleet at Brest, Nelson was watching the combined French and Spanish fleet in Cadiz. The combined fleet managed to get out of Cadiz, gave Nelson the slip, and got five days start across the Atlantic. Nelson followed, and was six months absent. That combined fleet escaped back again across the Atlantic, and had it not encountered another British fleet under Sir James Calder in the Bay of Biscay, it is my belief that the army which Napoleon had at Boulogne would have been able to make a safe passage across the Channel. It may be said that that did not come off, that the Fleet proved effective. Yes, but it was too near to be pleasant, and it is our duty to see that we do not run any such risks in the future. I, therefore, hope that my hon. friend will receive, as he no doubt deserves, the heartfelt thanks of this country for the able and lucid propositions he has laid before the Committee. I have not enough to contribute to this debate to presume to stand before the Committee very long, but there is one branch of the service with regard to which I can speak from experience, and which I would press the hon. Gentleman to consider well before he makes any far-reaching changes in it—I allude to what is now spoken of, but with very little reason, as the "old constitutional force," the Militia. It is a remarkable thing, but it is not present to the mind of everyone that we have not a single Militia regiment left. We have nothing but territorial regiments. The old Militia has been so far incorporated with the Army that the name "Militia" has disappeared from the Army List, except within brackets, and the old county Militia regiments have become third and fourth battalions to the Line regiments. I believe that was a change in the right direction, my only complaint being that it did not go sufficiently far or deep. I would urge upon my hon. friend the expediency of altogether abolishing the misleading title "Militia." It is a discredited title—I say it with pain, for I served for more than twenty-one years with the Militia; I was very fond of the service, and always hoped to see it put on a proper footing. It is a discredited title, being always associated with inferiority to something—to the Army it used to be, to the Line battalions of the same regiments as it is now. Of course, I do not claim that a force which is brought up for only short periodical training can be as efficient in any respect as a force always under arms. It is impossible that it should be so. What I mean is that whatever force you have you must make it something with which those of whom it is composed, whatever their rank, can take a pride. They must not always be reminded that they are inferior to regular soldiers. If they are so reminded you will not draw the best class of officers, nor get the best kind of recruits. During the time I served with the force the point which impressed itself most upon my mind in the way of discouragement was the system of Militia Reserve. Ever since, at all events, the commencement of this century, the Militia has supplied the Army with a very large number of recruits. During the Crimean War it sent 30,000 to the Line regiments. At that time every officer who brought 100 recruits from the Militia to the Line received a commission in the Regular Army. That was altered under the territorial system, and although the Militia still supplies a large number who join the Line battalions, those men do not join under their own officers. They are taught to look upon their officers as fit only for drill purposes, and when there is real work to be done you draw away the best men from the Militia battalions and send them to the Line. The effect of that is two-fold. It deprives the men of all respect for their own officers, and it prevents the officers taking any pride in their work. What I would like to see done is this—not that the present Militia battalions should be put on an equal footing in regard to privileges, and esteem, if you like, with the Regular Service, because they do not earn that, they do not work for it; but, in so far as the Militia contributes to the efficiency of the Line regiments, let all ranks share alike; send the men to serve under their own officers—for it is well known that men always serve best under their own officers—and exact from those officers a higher standard of qualification. At present there are schools all over the country for the instruction and education of Militia officers, but there is no obligation for those officers to take advantage of them. That obligation should be made a very strict one. I would like to see every officer compelled to justify his right to wear the Queen's uniform by passing a certain standard of efficiency. Until that is done it cannot be expected that the men will have a proper degree of confidence in and respect for their officers. I do not think I need labour this question any longer. I am sure my hon. friend, a soldier himself, has enough sympathy with the Auxiliary Services to ponder well the changes he proposes to make. As far as I have been able to follow those proposals they are in the right direction. But I am not quite sure whether he has realised the strain he is about to put, by greatly extending the period of training, on the class of men from whom the ranks of the Militia are recruited. Perhaps I have not correctly gathered his idea, but as far as I understand it he proposes to embody and encamp Militia regiments for a period of six months.

Mr. F. W. Wilson.

MR. WYNDHAM: For this year.

*SIR HERBERT MAXWELL: For this year only. Then I have no doubt they will heartily respond to his call, as they have already responded to the call of duty. But I would ask hon. Members never to forget the strain which has been put upon the men in the ranks of the Militia by that call. There never was a time when men of all kinds were so well paid or work so plentiful as the present, and yet the Militia have come forward almost to a man. I hope that that will be reckoned to the credit of the Militia force in the future. Hitherto they have had no credit for what they have done, although it is quite true that they have shed their blood as freely on the battlefields of Europe as any soldiers of the Queen ever have done, but they have done it as units, and not under their own officers. Now, for the first time, Militia battalions have been sent to the front, and I am not afraid of the way in which they will bear themselves. At the same time, that is not the work for which the Militia was intended, and I do not believe that hon. Members think it is desirable that the present system of allowing battalions to volunteer for the front should be continued. A soldier's duty is to go where he is sent, and not where he wants to go, and until you get that spirit you will not get out of the men all they are capable of. May I express a hope that the rest of this debate may be a little more practical than a great part of it has been in the past. We are a very peculiar people. We sit in this chamber and we consider ourselves in camera. We discuss the most delicate problems, and we make out to our own satisfaction that the War Office has been asleep, that our generals are incompetent, and that the whole administration of the affairs of this country is in a state of muddle and embarrassment. There is not much harm done here, and it may be very edifying to some of our foreign critics. But it may also be a little misleading, and it does not tend to smooth the path of our relations with other countries that we should always be washing our dirty linen in public.

COLONEL KENYON-SLANEY (Shropshire, Newport): I have been somewhat struck with the proposals of the Government. I do not think it wrong that the Service Members of this House should take this opportunity of indulging in a little self-pride in regard to the results that have been achieved, apparently by their continual pegging away at the objects they have had in view. We have heard Members asking for an increase of infantry in former times, and we have heard hon. Members, above everything else, pointing out the enormous necessity of increasing the amount of artillery. Some of us have pointed out the mistakes that were made in recent alterations, and we have expressed our desire for more cavalry. Upon every one of these points we now find that the Executive Government is in accord with us, and therefore I hope and trust that the somewhat cheap and silly attack levelled at us colonels and military critics by the hon. Member for Northampton will cease, now that the country has taken up in earnest the practical points which the colonels in this House have been urging all these years. I do not at all agree with all the criticisms which have been made from the other side of the House. I think we have wasted too much time in taking credit to ourselves and identifying ourselves and our own judgment with the position in which the Government is placed under these proposals which are now offered for our acceptance. What are the chief points on which I think the country is looking most anxiously to this debate? I do not think we are wrong in saying that probably the chief point which the country wishes to know about is the number of reinforcements which are available for South Africa. The noble Lord the Secretary of State for War assured the country that 50,000 men were now under orders or on their way to South Africa. I believe the number of men indicated in that statement is as many as the generals wish to have under their command, and as long as that number can be maintained so long will the military exigencies of the case be met, and the country will derive much satisfaction from that statement. Now I come to the other point dealt with by these proposals. Some people, both outside and inside this House, seem to think that these proposals are aimed at the fear of an invasion from a foreign country. I think that is an unwise view to take of the situation. I have faith in the position which the Fleet holds, and it is certain we shall at all events have considerable notice and warning of any possible attitude of invasion or any possible preparation for such an invasion. How much notice does the country think would be wanted to bring not 500,000 men, but quadruple that number of men into the field, ready to defend this country in case an invasion were imminent, for the purpose of repelling any such invasion? I take leave to say that the number of men in this country who know how to use a rifle and who are capable of falling into line instantly for this purpose can hardly practically be estimated. If the Government have plenty of rifles, and take care that opportunities are afforded for practising rifle shooting, the men would be forthcoming in hundreds of thousands for the purpose of repelling invasion. Therefore I regard this cry of invasion as more or less of a bogey. There are people who lay stress upon this idea of an invasion, and it is probably quite right that that section of public feeling should be assured by the measures put forward. I notice that the right hon. Gentleman who leads the Opposition announced that this policy would dictate an increase of the armaments in foreign countries. Possibly the policy of foreign countries dictates our policy at home. I think the right hon. Gentleman should not take shelter under that dictum without considering to what extent it may be developed. This subject before us may be arranged under two heads—emergency proposals and permanent proposals. Without professing to have any particular authority for saying so, I myself believe that these proposals are, on the whole, the best that could be made. I believe they take advantage of the best resources at our command for the immediate present, and that they deal with those resources on the whole in the most practical and rapid way in which those resources could be utilised. If that is so there ought to be universal satisfaction with these proposals from that point of view, and a general desire to give effect to them, and see them carried into active practice. With reference to these emergency proposals there are some points which should be dealt with, but they are matters of detail which will be elaborated bit by bit as the scheme works out. With regard to the Militia I do not wish to dwell upon that point beyond saying that I agree very much with what fell from my right hon. friend who preceded me, and I am glad to notice that full attention is to be paid to that branch of the service, and that it will be developed in a way satisfactory to them and to their feelings of pride. With regard to the Volunteers, I hope and trust that with the feelings now existing in the country the people will respond to the invitation of the Government. I only hope the full strength of the Volunteers will be maintained, not only during the progress of this war, but after it is over, when we shall have to establish things upon a firmer footing for the future. I do not wish to dwell upon this point in detail, but I think that in the case of Volunteer corps belonging to counties and country districts it will be very difficult to get those men to come out for any length of time under canvas. You might be able to develop what would be a very popular movement among the Volunteers, and that is to give a certain amount of money and support to officers commanding companies to undertake field days on their own account in the districts in which they live. Opportunities would be willingly granted by the local landowners, and such experience would be of very considerable value. The country generally would take an interest in seeing these manœuvres going on amongst them, and this would help to engender a military feeling in the Volunteers much greater than people would imagine. Like everyone else I attach the greatest importance to what the Government intend to do in regard to providing rifle ranges. Although the long ranges are necessary, yet short ranges would be extremely useful, and I hope the Government will take full advantage of opportunities for getting short ranges. If you can teach men to use the sights on the rifle you will have gone some distance towards getting them to make the proper use of the rifle and getting the best possible results out of the weapon placed in their hands. But these, I understand, are mostly to be treated as emergency proposals. Personally I should not be so much interested in these emergency proposals if I did not think they would lead up to those more permanent proposals which I hope are in the mind of the Government at the present time. The immediate permanent proposals are not very large. I think on this point the whole tone of the speech of the hon. Member for Dundee was exaggerated throughout. He talked of vast changes, enormous expense, and so on. With regard to the permanent proposals the changes are not vast and the expense is not enormous. They are large, but it is using exaggerated language to talk of this addition to our permanent Army as vast. Those of us who have been desirous of seeing the fighting forces of this country put upon a proper footing welcome these proposals as an indication of a permanent increase in some important points. We are delighted to see that so large an addition is to be made in our artillery; we are delighted that there are to be more cavalry and more infantry battalions taken under this Vote. But why do we want all these? It is not because we are so interested in the defensive scheme which some people talk of, or that we wish to see our home defences permanently increased on these shores, but because we recognise in this permanent increase in the Army an addition which will give to us a stronger mobile and striking force. I am anxious to see these emergency proposals carried out to the full, not for the moment, but because they lead up to the increase of the permanent force in the future, greater mobility and striking power which most of us believe to be absolutely necessary to our military organisation, and which all military authorities ought to aim at. It seems to me as if some hon. Members have talked rather as if they were inclined only to have had emergency proposals and put the others by, and few of them are men who recognise the necessity of greater striking power. We should welcome this addition, and also this better system by which these forces shall be utilised in the future. Let us get the men and be thankful we can get so many, because this increase will be one of great value, and I hope it will lead up to a greater and a more permanent increase in the future. It is apparent to all that for the immediate moment it is wise to stiffen our Auxiliary forces by improvements of a permanent character, and if the ideas of the Government are successful—and I hope and trust they will be—just in proportion as they are successful so will they be able to utilise more and more the Regular forces in directions which we think are of paramount importance. I do not wish to speak at length upon these points, and I do not think it will be wise to enter into minute criticism for which we shall have a future opportunity. I think, however, we may say broadly that, under the circumstances as they exist at this moment, the proposals of the Government do meet the immediate necessities of the war, and they also indicate a resolution to deal with the larger questions in the future in a broader spirit than they have been dealt with hitherto, and they will result not only in an increase of the forces of the Army, but they will also give us an opportunity of remodelling our organisation so that every single fighting man in this island may be taken advantage of to the utmost of his capability. What we want to secure our position even more than a well organised defensive force is a force so organised, so mobile, and under such command that it can leave our shores with the greatest rapidity whenever it is required. I think these proposals tap the best sources which the Government could tap, and I wish them hearty success. I think we ought to be grateful to the Government for gauging public opinion so accurately, and for doing their best to give effect to it.

Sir H. Maxwell.

CAPTAIN SINCLAIR (Forfarshire) : So far as the emergency proposals go, I agree entirely with the hon. Gentleman who has just sat down that they deserve our heartiest support. However great the disappointment may be in some quarters of the House because the Government have not gone in for a more radical scheme, that course would have been open to the most damaging criticism. To swap horses at such a time as this is entirely out of the question, and in taking such steps as are necessary to consider our position by proceeding on the old lines and developing those lines the Government have done all they could to receive and claim our support. So far as home defences go, my own opinion is that the result of this debate will be rather to further the impression that if we are at present in a position of embarrassment and humiliation it is not upon the War Office or the military authorities of the country that the responsibility should be laid. The hon. Gentleman the Under Secretary for War practically said that in his speech upon a former occasion, a fortnight ago, when he said that you cannot hold the War Office responsible for the diplomatic policy of the Government. For my part, holding as I do that our military system, with all the criticism which has been levelled against it, and with all its defects, is the best system that has hitherto been shown to be workable in this country, I can only look with satisfaction at the way in which the War Office has performed a task far greater than certain people ever expected it was able to do. Another point of great importance is the question of the home defences. The Cardwell system has always subordinated the home defences of this country to our interests abroad, and I am delighted that this opportunity has come to do what is necessary, and that is to put the home defences upon a right basis. It is perfectly true that it involves expense, but if you spend a certain amount of money and get an inefficient machine, you had better spend the complement of that money and put your home defences upon a proper and a satisfactory basis. Then there is the question of the permanent addition to the forces, and the Government have been criticised for mixing up their War Estimate with the permanent addition to the defensive power of the country. I should have thought it would have been quite possible, knowing that the House would have sanctioned what they have done, to have presented us with their whole scheme at a later date, and so focus the discussion, and enable us to discuss from a more general point of view the whole problem. At the same time, recognising the enormous amount of work laid upon the Under Secretary for War, there may have been difficulties in bringing forward the whole scheme. I cannot help feeling that, in spite of all the satisfaction that is felt with the proposals of the Government, there is considerable disappointment and anxiety as to the future. I do not mean as to the proceedings in South Africa or home defences, but I cannot help believing that altogether there is a conviction that this must of necessity be a very tentative proposal. The hon. Gentleman pointed out with satisfaction that if these schemes were realised it would be possible for the Government to proceed to still larger schemes. For my part, I should regard these larger schemes with great seriousness. How are you going to effect by your present system any great extension of your voluntary forces? Last year we discussed at great length the question of recruiting, and it was evident from every side that in spite of every effort that had been put forward by the Government to increase the forces of the country, the total addition to the Army last year was only between 5,000 and 6,000 men. Now you are going to add by your present scheme 25,000 men, apart from the additions to your Volunteers, Militia, and other services, all of which increase and multiply the drain upon the resources of the country. I should very much like the Under-Secretary to give us some grounds for his markedly sanguine anticipations in this matter. More than once in his speech last night he repeated his own personal belief—founded, no doubt, largely upon the belief of others—that this would not present an insuperable difficulty. Every atom of experience that we have seems to me to show that we have very nearly exhausted our present supply of recruits. You may do what you like in additional facilities, in pay, in barracks, and in clothing, but if you want to make any serious addition, you are going to have an enormous addition to the cost of your Army, because you have got to go right into the labour market and compete with unskilled or skilled labour, which is very much higher paid than your soldiers. This is a very old story, and I do not want to go into it at length. But after all, if we are to look at this question seriously we have got to look ahead, and if the scheme of the Government fails, what then? It seems to me that you have only two alternatives—you have either got to increase the pay of the Army or adopt some other form of enlistment. Every sixpence paid to your Army of between 220,000 and 250,000 men means a couple of million pounds. How far are you prepared to go—that is, apart from the barracks, ranges, ammunition, frequent rifle practice, ordnance, rifles, and so forth? The other alternative is some form of compulsory enlistment, which has been hinted at in the House here. It is not necessary to discuss this, but we must keep in mind on occasions such as this these alternatives which are staring us in the face if the present scheme of the Government fails. We are bound to face these contingencies. People talk as if there were no difficulties in the question of compulsory enlistment. It would involve an entire change of system not only in our military organisation but also in our civil life. Conscription means an elaborate means of enrolment; it means that no man can leave his country without notifying his change of address, and it is altogether foreign to the ideas, habits, and customs of this country. Apart from all that, it is only too well known that such modified attempts at compulsion as were tried in this country did not meet with success. I wish to press my request on the Under-Secretary for War that he would give us some ground for hoping that the proposals of the Government are likely to meet with the success which we all desire. There are only two alternatives: we must either increase our Army by this or other means or modify our policy. The hon. Member for Dundee expressed the view that no increase was necessary. It is, however, a fact that an increase is urgently necessary. The responsibilities we have incurred abroad during the last twenty or thirty years, responsibilities of coaling stations and other important points in different parts of the world have, although I regret and deplore the fact, necessitated a limited and moderate increase in our military forces, if our system—the Cardwell system, as it is called—is to work smoothly. I only hope myself that that extension will be kept within moderate limits, and that we shall not only maintain the Cardwell system in regard to the home establishment, but that we shall also remember that a complement to that system is to allow the colonies whenever possible to rely on their own forces for defence, so that we may concentrate our home force as much as possible within these islands.

Col. Kenyon-Slaney.

*MR. LEES KNOWLES (Salford, W.): As a Volunteer of something like twenty years standing, I wish to congratulate the Government upon the position in which they have placed Volunteers by these proposals. When one reflects upon that position in years gone by one is impressed by this wonderful alteration. In 1863, when a guard of honour of Volunteers was offered, it was stated there was a rule that no guard of honour was ever furnished by Volunteers to the Royal Family. However, I noticed the other day that a guard of honour of Volunteers was furnished at Osborne to Her Majesty the Queen. That shows the difference between the status of Volunteers in years gone by and at the present time. As regards the business of war, the essentials of an army are equipment and mobility. I will not allude to mobility, but with regard to equipment I am extremely glad that our Volunteers will be armed with modern weapons and that adequate range accommodation is to be provided for them. In connection with that I would suggest that further railway facilities might be given to enable the Volunteers to travel more rapidly and at a cheaper rate greater distances from our centres of population, and thus they might be enabled to obtain ranges at a cheaper cost. At Salford our Volunteers travel for an hour by train and have a most excellent range on a grouse moor at Crowden. That idea might be followed out, perhaps, in other localities. It is a question of expense for the executive Government. I am glad that our Volunteers are, so far as is possible, to be brought under further military discipline. I think that it will be beneficial to the country, that it will improve the health and develop the muscles of our men, and teach them regularity and obedience. I should also hope that some means might be adopted whereby garrison duty in addition to camp life might be provided for the Volunteers. Many Volunteers have business engagements, and it seems to me that the Government ought to make friends with the employers of labour throughout the country. At the present moment the employers are showing great self-denial, and are doing all they can in connection with the Volunteer movement. I believe the more real you make the service of the Volunteers, the more popular it will be in the country. It must not be forgotten that they have really done some good work. It has been admitted in debate that some of the best shooting has been done by them, and even from a scientific point of view much good work has been done by them. I remember, for instance, that a member of a Volunteer corps recently invented an improvement in the matter of signalling. It has been already said that there is an immense amount of material to be obtained in the country. In Salford, with a population of 200,000, we could easily double our battalion. I think also we should not forget the cadet corps, and we would have a most excellent shooting force if our police were able to practise at ranges and become marksmen. It is said that there is a want of Volunteer officers. When I was at Cambridge I remember I thought, "I can go in for rowing, cricket, athletics, or any kind of sport at the university, and when I go down I can join a Volunteer corps." In my time, therefore, the Volunteer corps at the University was not so popular as it is now, and the effect was that when men came down from Cambridge it was difficult to induce them to take commissions in other Volunteer corps. I think something ought to be done to popularise the Volunteer corps at our universities and public schools. I think also it would be a very good thing if there were a kind of rotation in and out of the ranks, as men in these corps are all gentlemen and of equal social position. I am the only man in the House of Commons who, as a member of the Inns of Court Volunteers—usually called "The Devil's Own"—had the honour of marching past the Queen in the Jubilee year as a private and the right-hand man of my company. Another matter I am particularly keen about, and that is to bind together, if possible, our regimental territorial families. I think we ought to do everything we can to induce the Line battalions to take an interest in the Militia battalions and the Militia battalions to take an interest in the Volunteers, and each in one another. We are trying to do that in my county, and we have recently started in Salford a compassionate fund for the benefit of the three branches of our territorial regiment. At the present moment the Lancashire Fusiliers have three Line battalions out of the country; one at the front, one at Malta, and one at Crete, and the Volunteer battalions at home ought to look after the interests of the Line battalions abroad. I think, also, we ought to do something to induce our Volunteers to pass into their own battalions of the Line. I think there must be some way of doing that. I believe that one reason why Volunteers are inclined sometimes to pass into battalions of another regiment is that they think they cannot be followed if they leave debts behind them. I think that the territorial family ought to be bound together into one united whole, and that some sort of privilege should be given to Volunteers and Militiamen who pass forward to a Line battalion of their territorial regiment. I myself wrote to the War Office some time ago on the subject, and suggested that in our own case we should like to pass on a company from our Volunteers and name it after our town. When men from it came back to Salford they would be able to return to their old friends, and might be able to use our headquarters as a kind of club house. The military authorities recognise the necessity for strengthening the tie between the Army and the Auxiliary forces, and the more they combine them together, the better for the Army and the State. The War Office have adopted my idea to some extent, for they recently raised companies of Volunteers in cases where their Line battalions are fighting in South Africa. They apparently recognise that it is desirable for general efficiency that Volunteers should take a special interest in their battalions abroad. In this matter we have with us the interest of the Commander-in-Chief, who recently wrote me a letter stating that he took a deep interest in the Volunteers' movement and their future.

Mr. Lees Knowles.

*COLONEL WELBY (Taunton): The hon. and gallant Member for Forfar at the beginning of his speech praised the War Office system very much, and said it was the best that could be devised for our requirements, and that it had done better than was expected. The country, however, expected that the War Office would be able to defend the Empire, and I say in that respect it has to a very great extent failed. If anyone were to state in this House that the Navy were not efficient to defend the Empire, I think such an imputation would be very much resented. This war is one that was common talk for many years, and surely it is a war which might have been prepared against, and all the plans of which should be considered and prepared, just as the Navy would have done. I desire to join with those who have congratulated the Under Secretary of State for War for the able speech in which he set forth the measures which are going to be taken. I am only sorry that I am obliged to state that I was much disappointed by the contents of that speech, because it strained at securing an increase in our forces rather than better organising the forces we already possess. As a military critic I am of opinion that instead of increasing the number of troops we ought to make our forces more efficient. I believe we have already a sufficient number for the defence of this country and for any operations in which we are likely to be engaged. What we are deficient in is organisation, and I am sorry indeed that the hon. Gentleman representing the War Office should have been obliged to lay stress upon the number to be added to the Army rather than upon an increase of efficiency. He has said, and said rightly, that we cannot possibly have compulsion to provide soldiers for our garrisons and services abroad. But how is this very great increase which is proposed going to be provided? I ask where are the men to come from? Even in this time, when recruiting is popular, I doubt, in the present state of the labour market, whether it is possible to procure a larger number of men except by offering them a considerable bounty. There is no question as to the importance of the forty-three batteries about to be added to the Army. I can only say that when, after the war is over, it is intended to reduce them to cadres, I should prefer, if they have to be reduced, that they should be reduced to a peace establishment rather than to cadres, because I believe the former would be much more efficient. With regard to the Infantry to be added, I would ask the Under Secretary for War whether in view of the wonderful enthusiasm shown by our colonies to take a part in the Imperial Army it might not be possible to raise some of those new infantry battalions in our colonies. There are certain Imperial ports, like Halifax, which might well be guarded by such troops, thereby setting free the Imperial troops supplied by this country. I am afraid the only result of this proposed infantry increase will be that after the war is over the battalions will be reduced, and that we will have a number of half pay officers going about the country very discontented with the treatment they have received from the Government. The filling up of the battalions of Militia and Volunteers seems to me to be only what was to be expected to happen in time of war, but I understood from the

hon. Gentleman that if any Volunteer corps 1,000 strong found it had a considerable number ready to join it could add another battalion to its strength. I would urge the hon. Gentleman before another battalion is created that there should be a very careful inspection of the members of the existing battalion both as regards military and physical efficiency. I would also ask him whether it would not be better, when a wave of enthusiasm is passing over the country, which may easily decrease, to increase each battalion to twelve companies of 100 each. With regard to the Yeomanry, I am one of those who cannot favourably regard the proposed alteration. If it were a very large force, one likely to be reckoned by tens of thousands, I would say by all means let them be trained as mounted infantry; but it is a small force, and by the conditions of the country it will always remain a small force. Men who are brought up as cavalry soldiers always do cavalry work better than men brought up as mounted infantry, and it would have been better to have retained the Yeomanry as cavalry. The whole of the preparations which the hon. Gentleman foreshadowed seem to me to be influenced by what is called "passive defence." Under that system 96 battalions of Militia and 75 Volunteer battalions are allocated to seaport towns. I would ask what those battalions are going to do in the event of war. Are they for the purpose of preventing an enemy landing? If they are, we should want something more; there should be field artillery attached to such a force, and they would want ammunition columns. If it were intended to repel the landing of an enemy's whole force at, for instance, near Dover, it would be no use sending these battalions without artillery, columns, and brain. The sending of these battalions to these seaport towns is a very pernicious system, and it would be much better to organise a large field force and have it thoroughly mobile. The hon. Gentleman has referred to three army corps, a very difficult thing to define. He says an army corps, as he means it, is a proportion of the three arms and services, upon which all military critics agree, and seeks a name to describe it. I am afraid there is not a name which could be applied to that force which would not be misleading, because any special name given to it would pre-suppose special organisation, which the hon. Gentleman himself says cannot be supplied at the present time. I would put the term entirely out of consideration. I believe it is exceedingly misleading. I think it has misled the First Lord of the Treasury, and I am sure it is misleading the outside public. The hon. Gentleman knows as well as I do that an army corps is not a separate unit itself, but that it is made up of two or more units which are in themselves independent. In our system we have three divisions, in the Continental armies there are only two, and I would ask the hon. Gentleman whether in his scheme of defence he would not talk of divisions, and, instead of three army corps, talk about nine divisions. As soon as we have got the divisions we can group them together by threes into army corps, give them a general and staff and call them army corps, but to talk about an army corps which is not specially organised is really misleading to the country. though, of course, I do not say that the hon. Gentleman wishes to mislead. It would be a very great advantage to organise this field force by divisions instead of an army corps. If we organise it by divisions we can adapt it to the organisation we already possess. Many of our present districts, each with a general and a numerous staff, are very large in their areas, and contain a large force of Militia and Volunteers, while others, like the Thames, Woolwich, and South-Eastern districts, are very small. I would ask whether in organising this field force it would not be possible for every large district to prepare a division of its own, and to make use of the general and the staff already in existence? If we were to have these divisions of Militia and Volunteers with guns it would be of inestimable value to the units of the battalions which belong to them, and it would give experience to the staff and to our generals. We all think that our generals have not had a fair chance of studying their work in the field on a large scale in this country before taking command on active service. It would be far better to put on one side the use of the phrase "army corps," and to organise the whole of the troops which are going to be mobilised into divisions, and, as far as possible, to put one division in each of the existing districts. If that were done there would be thereby provided a force which would be efficient in the almost impossible contingency of an invasion of this country, and efficient also for reinforcing the war in which we are now engaged in South Africa.

Col. Welby.

MR. SETON-KARR (St. Helens): I want to emphasise the enormous importance of improving the rifle shooting of Her Majesty's forces. I listened to the speech of my hon. friend the Under Secretary for War with great interest, and noticed that he only proposed to give increased facilities for rifle practice to the Volunteers. That is a most excellent object, but he did not say anything in regard to increasing the facilities for rifle practice and rifle training by the Militia and Regular forces. I take personally great interest in rifle shooting, and it seems to me that there was something wanting in the hon. Gentleman's speech, and that he did not appear to fully realise the enormous increase in the power of the modern rifle, and the necessity of educating Her Majesty's forces in using the rifle. In the days of the old "Brown Bess" there was not such a thing as practice at shooting at a mark; no man could do more than hit a haystack. The qualities necessary in a soldier were different then from what they are now, and the men did not require to be educated up to the skill now necessary in using modern weapons. Our Army is now armed with an almost perfect weapon, except in some minor mechanical details, which in that respect make it inferior to the rifle possessed by the Boers and the French. Our rifle throws a bullet with as marvellous accuracy as any modern weapon, but I do not think our military authorities have grasped the enormous importance of educating our men to the use of that rifle, although I have not the slightest doubt that they have learned a good deal of late about the power of modern firearms. Let me give an instance. I heard a story of what happened in the days of the Martini rifle. A coat-of-mail was sent down to Woolwich to be tested, and a company of soldiers were told off to fire at the coat-of-mail, but not a single shot struck it. Let me give another instance. At the battle of Ulundi twenty years ago, our soldiers were armed with the Martini rifle, and, firing at a comparatively short range, they killed 1,000 Zulus and won the battle. But it is calculated that only one in fifteen of the shots fired hit a Zulu at all.

Now, if we had had good shooting we might have dispensed with a large proportion of the men engaged and their transport. I quite agree with my hon. and gallant friend who has just sat down that it is of more importance, from a strictly rational business point of view, that we should provide quality rather than quantity in our soldiers, especially in their shooting powers. I think if the British soldier were properly trained he would be just as good a rifleman as is to be found in the world. I am informed that the utmost number of days in the year which the ordinary soldier devotes to musketry practice is sixteen, and that he does not fire, at the outside, more than 250 rounds in that period, including company practice. The Militiaman has only three days rifle practice, and only fires sixty rounds. The Volunteer, unless he chooses to provide his own ammunition, does not fire many more rounds in the year. I contend that it is impossible to produce good rifle shots under these conditions. It cannot be done. Unless you give facilities to our soldiers to fire a great many more rounds in the year, and to practise at long distances, and at unmeasured ranges, you will never turn out shots like the Boers or the cowboys on Western ranches. These latter, owing to the conditions of their life, and the country in which they live, can go to their front door almost and practise firing from there. Of course, we cannot get such facilities in such a crowded country as this; still a great deal more might be done than at present, and I think we should hear a little more on this subject from my hon. friend the Under Secretary for War. I have no doubt it may seem presumptuous on my part, who am not a soldier, to offer these remarks to the Committee, but I sometimes think there is a danger of hon. and gallant Members of this House, old soldiers, being influenced by the hide-bound traditions of the service. They have been brought up in a school that thinks everything of drill and the smart appearance of the regiment on parade, but not in the school in which it is considered as all important that the men should be good shots and that some inducements should be offered to them to make themselves good shots. I happen to be one of a body of gentlemen engaged at the present moment in recruiting a company of sharpshooters for the Yeomanry force, and I may tell the Committee that the men I have come across have been very largely attracted to this company because, as they say, they want to belong to a corps in which all the men will be good shots. "We want," say they, "to know whom we are going into action with, and whether the man on our right side and on our left can use his rifle effectively. That will strengthen us in action." It seems to me that if some inducement of that kind were offered in some of the regiments of Her Majesty's regular forces, it might be of very great use in attracting the best class of rifle shots—men who would be proud to belong to a distinguished corps of sharpshooters. If I have a fault to find with the proposals of the Under Secretary, it is that they are not large enough. I am glad, however, that they are so large, and I hope that, when the proper time comes, the military authorities will not grudge the expense of making our soldiers the best riflemen in the world.

*MR. LOUGH (Islington, W.): As I am not a military man, I ought, perhaps, to apologise for intervening in this debate; but my excuse is that, although the Estimate is for £13,000,000, only £420,000 has been explained to us as necessary for reorganising the Army. It is a pity so much has been made of that £420,000. While quite willing to provide all that can be needed for the war, I should like to ask one or two questions in regard to the twelve and a half millions which have to be applied to South Africa. Will that sum be all spent on the 31st March? The Under Secretary in his speech stated that the ten millions voted in October was "based on expectations" as to what the war would cost, but these had been disappointed. Most of the expectations formed by the Government in reference to this sad business have been disappointed. If the hon. Gentleman can assure us that the sum of £23,000,000 will be sufficient to meet all the expenses up to the 31st March, he will do something to allay an uneasy feeling widespread throughout the nation. We have not sufficient details of this large sum and I ask, when will these fuller details be supplied? There is an additional sum of five millions, making ten altogether for transport—when will the particulars of that be supplied? I ask these questions, because these moneys will not be printed in next year's Estimates.

Mr. Seton-Karr.

MR. WYNDHAM: They will come before the Public Accounts Committee.

*MR. LOUGH: Surely the hon. Gentleman does not mean to say that the House of Commons will not have an opportunity of considering the details some time or other. Another question which we should consider is, whether the War Office is open to the charge made by supporters of the Government in the House and in the press of having fallen short of its duty in the national emergency through which we are passing? During the short recess there was a great explosion of public opinion, and the parties into which the Government supporters were divided threatened to tear each other in pieces. I hoped, as an opponent of the Government, that that criticism would take some form in the House; but it has not. Now, I am one of those who thought that there was no definiteness in that attack. It sprang from those who desire a great increase in our annual expenditure. I think the War Office has deserved well of the country. It has raised a far larger force than was believed to be necessary, and has done the work wonderfully considering the difficulties with which it had to deal. The hospital service has won the encomiums of the great civil surgeons who have gone out to Africa. There has also been criticism of that mysterious body called the "Committee of National Defence." None of us know exactly what that body is; but we understand that it is a small Committee of the Cabinet. Years ago we were told that its great function was to establish harmony between the War Office and the Admiralty. That function has been well performed during the last three or four months. The War Office and the Admiralty have worked extremely well together, and everything I have said in praise of the War Office may also be said in praise of the Admiralty. It may be asked why, if both discharged their duties so well, is there so much disappointment in the country? I think that disappointment is very unreasonable. If there was to be disappointment it should have been with this House, and it arose from the policy adopted. The fact is that the War Office and the Admiralty—the former particularly—have had to face a far greater undertaking than this House realised. We did not know the magnitude of that task, nor had it been realised by the Government and the nation. The Boer preparations were greater, and the Boer fighting powers far larger than were supposed. A good deal has been said about the spirit of the nation during the present crisis. In some ways that spirit has been admirable. There has been a great willingness — too much, I think — to provide the Government with help of all kinds; and the Government have been a little too ready in accepting voluntary offers. I think there has been too much sending round the hat to provide our soldiers with food, clothing, luxuries, and all that sort of thing. That is a system which deserves, and should receive, more attention from the War Office. Our soldiers in the field, who offer their lives for their country, are worthy of the best support of the nation in every way, and the taxpayers would be willing to provide everything for their comfort. I have been surprised to see how many offers of contributions have been accepted, and I think the Government ought to examine into this matter. If these clothes and comforts are necessary, the War Office ought to send them. It seems to me that some regiments may be a great deal more popular than others, and these will get a good many things which are not sent to the others. Where all behave equally well all should be treated alike; and the War Office should see that each regiment is treated in this respect as well as another. I believe that it is such questions connected with the war that we ought to discuss under this Vote, and not the reorganisation of the Army; and, like others, I have been placed in great difficulty by the mode of procedure of the Government. There has been mixed up with the necessary war Vote, which we all want to grant, suggestions which require a great deal more consideration than we can possibly give to them at the present time. The hon. Gentleman may say that some of these questions of reorganisation are urgent at the moment, but he has not made that clear. The hon. Gentleman said at the commencement of his speech that nothing would be done of a permanent character by the Government at the present moment, except what was necessary in connection with the present war. [Mr. WYNDHAM dissented.] Some statement of that kind was made, at any rate. We ought not, in the emergency in which we are placed, to undertake an elaborate permanent scheme for the reorganisation of the Army. The only tendency of such action is to raise unduly our already extravagant expenditure without any guarantee of greater efficiency. We ought to have more time for consideration, and the House and the country should have a better opportunity of looking into plans than can fairly be expected now. The hon. Gentleman says we must get more men, but he has himself met that difficulty by admitting that the War Office has got as many recruits as it wants. No reasonable objection can be made against the proposed increase of pay to the Militia and Volunteers, but we could freely consider it at a later time when the present emergency is over. I conclude by again hoping that the hon. Gentleman will give us fuller explanation of what is taking place in South Africa, and of the details of the expenditure incurred.

*CAPTAIN PRETYMAN (Suffolk, Woodbridge) said he wished to say a few words in connection with the proposals laid before the Committee in regard to the artillery, and especially in regard to the division of work suggested as between the Regular and Volunteer artillery. The Under Secretary for War has made a proposal which appeared to him to be, of all the excellent proposals laid before the Committee, the most excellent and necessary—namely, a proposal for the increase of the Regular artillery by no fewer than forty-three batteries. He happened to be an officer in one of the old horse artillery batteries, and the first time he entered the precincts of the House he sat under the gallery and heard the motion made for the reduction of that arm, which was so bitterly condemned both by military opinion and by the country, because that was a force which could not be improvised, and could not be efficiently provided by any Volunteer force. He had examined the proposals laid before the House of Lords by the Secretary of State for War and compared them with what had been said in that House, and it was not clear to his mind that it was not proposed to use the Volunteer artillery as a mobile force. He believed—and he had had some experience with artillery—that the Government could not get better value for the money which it spent on Artillery than that which it spent on the Volunteer artillery in giving them guns of position for coast defence. It was a remarkable fact that all instructors and officers, both in the Volunteers and in the Regular service, bore testimony to the shortness of the period in which a Volunteer artilleryman became proficient in his work. He had also a particular knowledge of the district in which he was situated, and as to how it would be armed in case of war. If they compared the cost of a regular garrison battery of artillery with the cost of a battery of a Volunteer corps, the House would realise that it got better value for the small sum it spent on the latter than from what it spent on garrison batteries. In the case of Regular field artillery they had to have specially trained gunners and drivers, and no driver was efficient until he had served at least two years. He did not, therefore, think it was possible to make a mobile Volunteer field artillery. He had noticed from the statement made in the House of Lords that the Volunteers were to be provided with 15-pounder field guns, and that was the reason why he had risen to press the point; it was not a question of detail, but of policy, and he welcomed the statement that forty-three regular batteries were to be raised, which would be allotted to the new army corps, largely composed of auxiliary forces. He hoped that when details came to be worked out, every encouragement would be given to Volunteer artillery corps in every district where we had defences, and that they would be trained in the defence of their own district. He hoped that nothing would be done to check manifestations of military zeal, and that the War Office would do all they could to encourage the formation of Volunteer batteries. He suggested that there should be a nucleus of Reserve men in such batteries. He wished to press upon the House the importance of having the Regular batteries kept up to their full strength, and said that in the Egyptian War of 1881-2, in order to make up a battery to full strength, they had, on an occasion that came under his notice, to emasculate six other batteries in order to do so. That was a destructive criticism of our military system. But it must be borne in mind that on that occasion no Reserves were called up. At present, by calling up the Reserves, they could have all the seven batteries at full strength, and that, he thought, was an answer to a great deal of the criticism they had heard. As to the Volunteer system generally, everything showed that the Government was thoroughly alive to the necessity of strengthening the efficiency of the Volunteers; their weakness, he thought, lay in the small supply of officers generally, and he suggested that that weakness could be met by giving more encouragement to large employers of labour in our towns to form corps out of their own workpeople, and to officer them. In order to do that they must remove some of the expenses which fell on Volunteer officers, and also let them feel that they were real soldiers. He believed they would welcome any extra demands that might be made on them for efficiency, if they felt they were treated as real soldiers. As to the scheme now proposed, he reminded the House that it rested solely on voluntary effort. There was no doubt we had sufficient men in the country, and if we could not get them by voluntary effort, we must get them somehow; but all would agree that every effort should be made to get them voluntarily. They must, therefore, give them inducements to volunteer. As to the criticism on the War Office, he believed that the Department had done the best it could with the materials at its disposal. They set up no claim to perfection, and he believed they would consider all suggestions made to them. He considered it an encouraging feature of that discussion that no serious criticisms had been made of the proposals of the War Office, although they had not departed in any material particular from the system on which they had been working for the last few years. It was a system which could provide what we wanted—a mobile field force, and one which was capable of almost indefinite extension. As to our want of success in the present war, so far it appeared to be due to the fact that we had not realised at the beginning the real strength of the forces arrayed against us. He suggested that some reform should be made in the matter of the interchange of staff and regimental officers; young officers were frequently taken on to the staff and when promoted to positions of responsibility were often deficient in regimental training. There should be a constant interchange between the officers of the staff and those serving with the regiments, so as to bring about more mutual confidence when they came to work together in time of war, and combine the special knowledge of both in order to produce the best results. He hoped that on both sides of the House the fullest support would be given to the proposals of the Government, both in the matter of carrying on the present war to a successful issue and also in the matter of providing a permanent increase in the defensive forces of the country.

Capt. Pretyman.

SIR E. T. GOURLEY (Sunderland) contended that the main object of the Government in bringing forward this scheme was, firstly, to meet the exigencies of the situation in South Africa, and, secondly, for the purpose of home defence. His view of the matter was that the whole of the War Office required to be put into the melting-pot. The permanent officials constituted the portion of the War Office which required to be reformed, and in that portion Parliament ought to apply the pruning-hook. In the present crisis supports were sent out to South Africa consisting entirely of infantry, without either cavalry or artillery, and afterwards, when artillery was found to be required, it was sent out by the slowest transports that could be obtained. Had it been sent by the transports then ready, the artillery could have got to the Cape of Good Hope by the date at which it eventually sailed from England. Had it been sent out by swift vessels it would, in his opinion, have made all the difference in the battles of Colenso and Dundee. It would, he thought, have saved the situation. With regard to the question of horses, they could have been purchased in South Africa to a large extent, but the War Office instead purchased them in this country and sent them thousands of miles over the sea to South Africa before they were fit for service. It stood to reason that native horses, which could have been obtained at the beginning of the war, were worth far more than horses sent from home, which had to be acclimatised before they could be used. Again, if at the commencement of the campaign the Government had accepted the offer of mounted infantry which they had since been so glad to avail themselves of, we should not be in the difficult position in which we find ourselves at the present moment. The House was told that the Government underestimated the resources of the Boers, but such a thing should never have occurred in the most expensive War Office in the world. There was no excuse whatever for the blunders and conduct of the War Office in the preparations for the war, especially with regard to heavy guns. With regard to the scheme put forward, it was not clear whether the Militia was to be embodied for four or five months this year or every year. He took it for granted that it was only this year, but even in that case it might, and probably would, disorganise the trade of various districts if so large a body of men were called out for so long. In the district which he represented no less than 2,000 men would be affected, and it was hardly to be expected that the employers of those men would keep their positions open until they were disembodied. He would like to point out to the hon. Gentleman that what we want in the Volunteers is efficiency. At present, about one-third of the men in our Volunteer regiments resign annually; and in order to obtain the capitation grant the new men were hurried through their exercises, but it was almost impossible for them to become really efficient. What was really wanted was a change of something like this character: Instead of a Volunteer being allowed to engage himself for, say, six months, and then to send in his resignation, he should bind himself for twelve months, and during that time to make himself efficient by a proper attendance at battalion drill and shooting exercise, otherwise the proposed increase of the capitation grant might be money misspent so far as ensuring efficiency was concerned. Again, by way of encouraging the men to become efficient, he held that those who had to leave their employment early to go to a distant range should be allowed their full expenses, and also the part pay they had sacrificed in consequence of leaving their employment. He would suggest that in order to maintain a force in a state of efficiency, and by way of counteracting the enormous number of annual resignations, it would be well to offer those men who had passed a certain stage of efficiency in battalion drill a retainer after the fashion adopted by the Naval Reserve. Another point he would direct attention to was the cost of officers' uniforms. At present it was an exceedingly costly item, and it should be borne in mind that Volunteer officers were not as a rule wealthy men. They were comparatively poor; and it would be well, in his judgment, if the War Office could see its way to find nearly the entire cost of the Volunteer officers' uniforms. Now the hon. Gentleman in the very able speech which he delivered last night seemed to think that occasion might arise when there would be a temporary absence of the Fleet. He could only say in reference to that, that whatever policy the War Office might pursue, whatever policy the Admiralty might be guided by, he trusted that there would be a good understanding arrived at as to the position of our first line of defence. The Fleet should never, under any circumstances, be allowed to leave the Channel. So long as we held the Channel there could be no fear of anything whatever in the shape of invasion by a foreign Power. To illustrate his meaning, we had engaged, in connection with the present war, something like one hundred transports. Having regard to the use we had made of them in the conveyance of the British Army to South Africa, we could calculate how many transports would be required to bring an army across, say, from Calais or Antwerp. They would require something like a hundred large vessels to transport to England an army of 100,000 or 150,000 men with all the impedimenta belonging to munitions of war. Well, given our Fleet a proper strategical position, in its present high state of efficiency, it could effectively arrest and deal with such an invading force as that, and the bogey of invasion would have no terrors for us.

*COLONEL BLUNDELL: The question of compulsory service has recurred often in the course of this debate, and we may have to come to that some day; but the time is not yet. What I rise most particularly to do is to ask the House to pause before it consents to condemn our army in South Africa as not a good one. My humble opinion is that our army in South Africa is quite equal to a force of similar dimensions that any European Power can put into the field. You may ask, Well, what about the great reverses we have met with already? I will tell you. Our army has been confronted with an entire change in tactics, and with an enormous development in the power of rifles, Maxims, Nordenfeldts, and other small arms. We have known a similar case to our own occurring in the war of 1870, when the Prussian Guards at St. Privat were absolutely paralysed by the deadly effect of the rifle then possessed by the French troops. One of their generals in attacking before Metz had an enormous number of men swept out of action by that weapon. What did the King of Prussia do? He did not trouble himself about his War Office, but he at once issued an order to his officers that they must conform to the conditions of modern fire in their dispositions. In the same way, Sir Redvers Buller, I doubt not, has profited by the lessons which the present campaign has taught him. Sir Redvers Buller is a man as brave as his sword; to him the temptation to push on at Vaal Krantz must have been terrible, but he withdrew his troops when he found that the fire they would be exposed to made success impossible on that line. I feel certain that the sequel will show the country that we have an army which understands its business as well as the army of any Continental Power.

MR. FLYNN (Cork, N.): This debate has resolved itself into a discussion between military experts and those who consider themselves military experts. I, as an unmilitary expert and a mere humble civilian, venture to oppose this Vote, because the issues at stake are confounded between the justice of carrying on the war and the condition of the Army; and as regards the latter issue, after the powerful speech of the hon. Member for West Belfast—to which we all listened with such awe and respect in his powerful indictment of the War Office—I could not find it in my heart to vote in support of a single demand of the War Office until it is purged of many of its sins. To come to this House and blindly vote £2,500,000 of money when the military experts are divided as to its expenditure seems to me an unreasonable demand. I cannot see how the Government can justify it, and I and my hon. friends will oppose the granting of a single additional penny, because we are convinced that the war is unjust, unnecessary, cruel, and a gigantic conspiracy against liberty. I have witnessed a remarkable change come over this House. At one time the party that was dominant was that of peace, retrenchment, and reform; but we seem to have passed to the very antithesis of that. We are all for fighting—fighting for everything and fighting everybody. The irony of it all was seen when England sent a representative to the Peace Conference at the Hague, where a representative of the Orange Free State sat also. Now when the opportunity of arbitration offers it is rejected with scorn. The cry is for more war, more bloodshed, and fresh sacrifices of hundreds and thousands of gallant lives. Then there is another matter. The Government of the country are willing to take the Irish Militia regiments; and the question arises whether these regiments included the North Cork Militia, who were reported to have gone voluntarily to the front. I am informed by friends in Cork that they were told their services were required at Malta or Gibraltar; but now it is reported that they are going to South Africa. We are asked to vote £2,500,000 in support of a movement like this; but the Irish party flatly decline to do anything of the sort. The business of the Financial Secretary is not so much to look after the War Department as to see that no Irish meat is supplied to the troops. Meat must be obtained from Canada and Australia, and hay from the Patagonian Islands. That is the work of the Army administrators, and then at a time of national crisis people are amazed that they do not understand military tactics. It is not to be surprised at. On Votes 6 and 7 we shall have to expatiate on this present campaign, but in view of the acknowledged incapacity of the War Office, and the proved incompetence of its instruments, and above all, in view of the great blunders of its officers from highest to lowest, it is the duty of the Committee to refuse this Vote.

Sir E. T. Gourley.

*COLONEL WILLIAMS (Dorset, W.): I do not desire to unduly prolong this debate, but I wish to say a few words about the Volunteers. I should not have troubled the Committee by going into details if the hon. Gentleman had not invited suggestions; but points of detail are so vital in regard to the Volunteers that I may certainly be pardoned for saying a few words on that subject. I want first of all to recognise very frankly the way in which the Under Secretary for War has grasped a good many of the conditions of Volunteering, which are essentially different in the country from those in the town. I think the difficulty which many hon. Members do not perceive is that whereas a Militiaman and a Yeoman give up a definite portion of every year to military training the Volunteer is a man who cannot afford to give up a long period of time, but is willing to devote the odds and ends of his spare time to do what he can and train himself for the defence of the country. I am one of those who deprecate the sending of too large a force of Volunteers out on foreign service. I quite appreciate the motive which led to these Volunteers being employed abroad, and I appreciate the spirit in which it was done, but I am bound to say that that force was recruited for home service and not for foreign service. I do not believe that the sending out of Volunteers will encourage recruiting, because many of the men who would be willing to give up a considerable portion of their spare time to Volunteering will consider twice before they enlist if it comes to be understood that they are to volunteer for active service, or that it will not be lightly regarded if they do not volunteer. With regard to the men themselves there is no doubt that the Volunteers are now taken from a much lower stratum of society. It is exceedingly hard in times of peace for men to leave their employment for any length of time for military training. I should, however, like to say a word of praise for the spirit in which employers of labour have met Volunteers. I have had ten years experience in command of a Volunteer battalion, and I can very faithfully say that employers are always ready, although put to considerable inconvenience, to give the men the time to attend instruction and so forth. But the essential weakness of our Volunteers is the want of money, and I am extremely glad to learn that we are to have a larger capitation grant, and also that part of the increased money is to go to enable them to form transport. I must express my satisfaction with the proposal to utilise this money for transport purposes. I think there is more than one Volunteer battalion which has undertaken this duty, and it has been proved that, given a sufficient grant, it is quite possible to organise from the material at our disposal—from the carts and wagons freely lent—what would be a very efficient transport for a force of Volunteers. With reference to camping out every year, and the invitation to Volunteers to attend instruction for a month, I fully realise the value of that if we could do it, but I fear there are very few Volunteer regiments who could go into camp for a whole month at a time. If the grant was given upon a certain number of days attendance, and they would not all be taken away at one time, perhaps it would be possible to arrange matters. I have seen the increasing difficulty of men getting leave for so long a time. In my own battalion it has been the custom to devote the 10s. allowed by the Government to paying the men the wages which they lose, because the employers, although they give the time freely, cannot be expected to pay the men's wages as well. Therefore, if the camps are maintained for a longer time than a week, I hope great care will be taken that men are allowed to attend as they can, and not too large a number of men are expected out at the same time. The difficulties of battalion drill in a country district I know from experience are very great. Take my own battalion for instance. I have ten companies scattered over the whole of one county, and it costs me something like £50 to bring my battalion together. It is true that the Government grant now goes some way to meet that, but unless I can get at least half the battalion together it is very hard to get that grant. Although I should very often like to get two or three companies together for battalion drill, at the present time I cannot do it, because I do not get the grant for less than half the battalion. I trust, therefore, that an increased allowance for attending battalion drill may be given, and also, if possible, that some slight addition will be made to the travelling expenses to provide the funds for other purposes than travelling, which at present have to come either out of the corps funds or the officers' pockets. My remarks apply still more forcibly to shooting. I am very grateful for the promise to provide more ranges. I hope, however, it will not always be considered necessary to make those ranges up to a thousand yards. A man who can shoot well at 500 yards or 600 yards will not do badly at 1,000 yards with a little practice. A man in my own battalion who shot very high up in the Queen's Hundred, who had only fired at 800 yards a few times in his life, and never at 1,000 yards, managed to get 26th or 27th place in the final stage of the Queen's. That is a proof that a man who is a good shot at 600 yards can easily accommodate himself to the longer ranges. In reference to travelling, I know of men who live seven miles away from a range, and it takes them about half a day to get there and back, for they have no railway to help them, and the necessity for an increased travelling allowance to the range is a very vital one. I know that the Government are providing more ranges in different places, and these may be a very good thing for those who live near to them, but those who live a long way off require travelling allowances. May I say a word about recruiting? Volunteers are to be invited to raise their numbers to 1,000, and if possible to arrange for a second battalion. I am in the position of always being well up to my 1,000, and I could, at the present moment, raise two more companies in new neighbourhoods, which would make my battalion up to twelve companies. I do not think it is advisable to have in one battalion much more than 1,200 men, but there are cases in which it would be advisable to allow a colonel to raise one or two extra companies rather than have two battalions which must be composed of smaller units more scattered. I thank the Committee for listening to what I have said, and I hope the Under Secretary for War will realise that I have only spoken in order to give him, as he asked, some idea of the difficulties Volunteers have to meet.

Col. Williams.

*SIR ALBERT ROLLIT (Islington, S.): I desire to say a few words chiefly in relation to the Militia and Volunteers. Under this Vote the increase of the Volunteers appears to be an essential condition; therefore anything which bears upon that question seems to me to be relevant to the proposal now before the Committee. The hon. Gentleman who introduced the Government proposals said that he relied upon a large increase of recruiting in the Volunteer force. I have heard doubts expressed upon that subject, but anyone who is familiar with what has taken place recently in the Metropolitan Volunteer corps will be of the opinion that the hopes of the Government will be realised. I believe that if the Government had not, unwisely, issued their special Army orders against any excess of the establishment, the present numbers would have been considerably exceeded. Even now many companies are recruiting very largely, and have no difficulty in doing so. As one interested in the Volunteer force, I am glad that the time has now come when they are being treated with greater encouragement and greater help, and the hon. Gentleman has stated that the conditions of service will be made more exacting. I think there has been a gradual and sure increase of efficiency in the Volunteers since their formation, and they have never refrained from any reasonable liability to secure this. Therefore, if there is any comment to be made on this subject, it is that the Volunteer force, after forty years' existence and encountering financial and military difficulties, is only now being really recognised on a proper scale, and receiving that complete equipment and those modern weapons which are absolutely essential for the performance of their duty. What the Volunteers think is that if they do their duty to the State the State is bound to do its duty to them. I will take the case of obsolete guns. Not only is the use of those guns an unwise military course of action, but it has discouraged the men, because they knew that they were purposely wasting their time and learning to fire weapons which could not possibly be of use in time of war. The question of transport is one of the chief difficulties, and altogether the Volunteers have not had those conditions of success which would have led to their being in a far better position than they are to-day. One hon. Member, in addressing the House, said that it was their great object to induce the Volunteers to realise that they were soldiers. I venture to say they must be treated in all respects as soldiers, and if they are I am quite sure they will realise their position. The hon. Gentleman was not quite clear as to whether he was going to give a commission to each battalion of Volunteers, but he mentioned specifically the Militia. That would be a very great service, and every step which convinces Volunteers that they are being assimilated to the Regular Army is of the greatest value to the force. I think the proposal to enlarge the scope of the university candidates is an excellent one. I do not know why it has hitherto been restricted, and in the University of London a good opportunity has already been offered us as to commissions in the Royal Artillery, and we have met with much success in the presentation of candidates. There is one other matter which may perhaps be regarded as a minor one, but it arises upon the question which has been raised by an hon. Member as to the recognition of the social status of the Volunteers. I understood the last speaker to say that it had not improved, but deteriorated since the formation of the force. I do not altogether agree with that. In the first few months of the force it perhaps was so, but there has been a tendency, certainly in the towns, towards an improvement in recent years. On the other hand, I would like to ask why there has not been more social recognition of the force. Why should we, very rightly, give to the chairmen of vestries and district councils by virtue of their position commissions of the peace, and not give them to those who are performing services to the State as commanding officers of the Volunteers? There is a real reason besides the social one why commanding officers should be placed on the commission of the peace. They have to swear in recruits, and often have to run about to find a justice of the peace. It would be a proper recognition of their position, and it would be of great value, and be valued if that honour were conferred upon them. One point has been constantly urged by some of us in this House in regard to the Volunteers, and it has not even yet been accomplished. I am speaking of the subject of providing more and better ranges. I know the difficulties in the way in London and in the great towns, due to a great extent to the use of modern weapons of precision and long range. But, as has been said before, what is the value of any soldier if he cannot shoot well? If we do not take care to give every facility for our Volunteers practising shooting we shall be relying upon a broken reed, and they will be simply a force on paper which will not be effective in the end. I am glad that additional facilities are to be offered, for under existing circumstances the wonder is that they have been able to get a knowledge of shooting at all. Up to the present they have often been obliged to take the most inconvenient days to practise, and have had to go long distances. The Military Lands Act proposed to give additional facilities to our municipal corporations to acquire ranges, and this is distinctly a local question. Proximity is the essence of it, and if the War Department were to appeal to the corporations to apply that Act more generally, I believe that not only would they be willing to do so, but I have some reason to know that many of them would be willing to provide the funds necessary for that purpose. For instance, Nottingham has set a very good example by helping to find a range for the Sherwood Foresters in that district. I have only one more word to say, and it is one of regret. It provides an illustration which I think is pregnant to this proposal, and it is that throughout the very able speech of the Secretary of State for War he said very little about a Volunteer Reserve. He dismissed that to the official limbo of favourable consideration. [Mr. Wyndham: "No, no."] I am very glad to see the hon. Gentleman rather repudiates that suggestion, but he said very few words about it. He dismissed it in two sentences. As a matter of fact it is no new suggestion, as the Under-secretary for War seemed to suppose on the part of Lord Wemyss, for the proposal exists and has been in the archives of the War Office for the last ten years, and all that time it has been supposed to be under favourable consideration. The then commanding officer of the Volunteer Battalion of the East Yorkshire Regiment made a definite and detailed proposal to the War Office so long ago as the period I have mentioned. That has received really no attention, and it is to be regretted that a system which would not only retain a large number of efficient Volunteers in connection with their regiments, but which would have the great additional value when a Volunteer removes from one town to another of keeping him still in contact with the force, should not have been applied. I hope that what has now been suggested will be carried out at no very distant date. The higher capitation grant is, of course, very acceptable, and will remove a great burden from the pockets of the Volunteer officers. I confess I have some doubts whether the great majority of the Volunteers can afford to spend a month in camp. I have also this to say about that subject. The proposals now made are to make the Volunteers an absolutely essential part of our national defence. Why, then, when they are in camp for a month or a week, should they not be paid like other embodied troops? They make a sacrifice of their time at other periods, and that is all they should be called upon to give. I know the sacrifices which both the officers and men have had to make, and if the Volunteers submit to the more exacting conditions for the benefit of their country, why should they not receive pay when they are embodied? I shall be told that the cost is great, but why should one portion of the community, who give no service, escape the cost and put the burden upon those who are willing to make this sacrifice of their time? The Government, quite rightly, at any rate for the present, though I think the Militia ballot might soon be applied in some modified form, have decided to forego compulsion or conscription, but if the burden is to be cast on the Volunteers only and others are to render no such service, but are to escape any contribution of either time or money, it is an inequitable treatment of the Volunteers. I would strongly urge that, giving their time as they do, they should at any rate be completely recompensed for any expense to which they are put. The rise in the Militia pay is also most satisfactory. I have the greatest reliance on that force, especially in relation to the defence of our commercial harbours, to which the Under-Secretary referred, when the defence may well be left solely to the Militia and the presence of the coast battalions of Royal Engineers and Royal Artillerymen may be safely dispensed with, and so some seasoned men put at the disposal of the War Office. I have only to add that, for the emergency, at any rate, the proposals put before the Committee by the Government are entitled to every consideration; they were introduced in a most able speech, and I trust they will be carried out, and carried out completely, in the same spirit in the War Office.

Sir Albert Rollit.

*MR. TULLY (Leitrim, S.): We, as Irishmen, object to the principle underlying this Vote. In fact, we would not interfere in the matter at all were it not for the fact that in order to raise the money for these extra men you will send your tax-collectors to Ireland to collect a portion of the sum necessary, although we get none of the benefit of the expenditure and have no Volunteers in Ireland. We are not allowed to form Volunteer corps in Ireland, but we are expected to bear a portion of the cost, and I think Irishmen have a right to protest against such treatment. In Ireland we have no possible interest in this war. None of us have shares in South African mines, and in the event of your succeeding, which does not seem very probable at present, in defeating these two Republics, very few of our people will benefit in any respect. Very few will emigrate to South Africa; very few will be found under the British flag if it ever floats over Pretoria; if they emigrate they will go, as they have always done, to the free soil administered by the United States. We have therefore no earthly interest in the war; we regard it as unjust and unnecessary. You complain that you cannot get enough soldiers to fill your Army. Looking at the statistics, there never was a time in your history when you had fewer Irishmen in the ranks than you have at present. I would contrast that with what has happened when the existence of another country was at stake. When the unity of the United States was threatened Irishmen flocked from all parts of Ireland to the support of the Stars and Stripes. When the American Civil War concluded there were over 100,000 Irishmen among the soldiers who were disbanded—some of the finest fighting material the world has ever seen. I think you would give your very eyes to be able to get 100,000 such men to rally to your flag and fight for you in South Africa. All I say is that if instead of spending these millions we are called upon to vote on the war in South Africa you spent them in conciliating the people of Ireland, in giving them a grip in their own land, you would probably have more chance of getting some of that fighting material. I cannot, as an Irish Member, regard these proposals as such as should commend themselves to the Committee. We look upon the war with minds filled with different ideas from those held by English Members. You think you must win simply because you are English. We look at the facts of the situation with our minds not filled with any such preconceived ideas. We do not think you must win simply because you are English. Up to the present, when the war has been going on for five months, you have not shown yourselves able to make any substantial headway, and we think the proposals to add 120,000 men to your Army are utterly inadequate if you wish to win in this conflict. We read in your own papers the remarks of foreign military critics, and they say that your plan of campaign in South Africa is altogether wrong, and that with the men and the matériel, the bad guns, bad rifles, and bad generalship at your disposal you have no possible chance of succeeding under present conditions. I therefore object to the proposals as being entirely inadequate from your own point of view of success, and I believe, as some of the papers state to-day, that the scheme is simply an elaborate hoax, and that it does not mean anything serious in regard to your position in South Africa. I also object to this Vote as being a wasteful Vote, because when you look at the facts of the situation there is the possibility that perhaps in a week or a fortnight the news may come in that Lord Roberts has had a similar experience to that of General Buller, and then you will be coming down here in a panic demanding many more men and much more money to carry on this iniquitous war. Another reason for my objection to this Vote is that you are holding out inducements to get more men for the Army and for the Militia. I heard the Under Secretary for War state last night that among the additional inducements to Militiamen was the threepenny mess. I do not know what the threepenny mess means, as we are not allowed to know anything about military matters in Ireland—it is treason if we do; but from the treatment you have given Irish Militiamen, I do not think you are likely to get many more recruits in Ireland under existing conditions. You called up a number of Irish Militia regiments and drafted them over to England, and all the special service men who could be induced to sign were sent off to the Cape. It was no part of the bargain of those poor men that they should go to South Africa to fight under the English flag, and certainly they were surprised at being trapped into such a position. The treatment meted out to the friends of these men is something equal to that experienced by the veterans of your Crimean campaign. A number of the men who have been suddenly drafted off to South Africa had their parents dependent upon them, and when they have applied for some of the sustentation money, they have been told that the War Office regulations would permit of no money being given them. I know, as chairman of a board of guardians in Ireland, that in our union we are actually supporting a number of parents of men who are fighting at the front in the Connaught Rangers at Colenso. I also know the quality of some of these Militiamen whom you have called up. Some of them have actually been taken out of the union hospitals, where they have been classed as infirm; they have been taken out, clothed in the red coat, marched off to the station, and I suppose they are now figuring on the War Office sheets as effective soldiers of England. If you go on offering these further inducements you will get more of this wastrel class that are no good for anything. Another reason you are not likely to get many more recruits in Ireland is the treatment the families of these men are experiencing. Not only are the parents deprived of assistance from Government funds, but the other relatives who do get such assistance are being treated in a manner which certainly does not commend itself to my judgment. Under the recent Act I happen to be constituted a magistrate by the votes of the people, and on the few occasions I have attended the local courts I have seen the wives, brothers or sisters of these men—who, on reading the accounts of the battles, had become a little excited, though not more excited than people in your own streets on a Saturday night—sent off to prison. As a Nationalist, opposed to the war, I have protested against that, but that is the work of magistrates supposed to represent the English garrison in Ireland. To show you how worthless that garrison is to you for all practical purposes, I was reading in the Pall Mall Gazette the other day a description of the squadron of Imperial Yeomanry that was raised in Ireland. It was stated that almost the whole of the recruits came from the west and south of Ireland, and that very few were obtained in the north. And that is the garrison for whom you have made so many sacrifices! And yet you have rejected every claim we have put forward for justice to our people. It has been said that the Under Secretary for War is the first Minister to raise the spectre of invasion, and to use it as a means of getting additional men and money. You are trying to raise volunteers here in England to protect you from invasion, but yet you deny us the right of raising volunteers in Ireland. I should like to know the meaning of that. Does that mean that if we are invaded by Germany or Russia we must turn either German or Cossack? I object to that. We ought to have the right to arm and defend ourselves in case of such an invasion. On all these grounds I object to this Vote, and shall join my voice with the voices of other gentlemen from Ireland in resisting at every possible stage these proposals for more men and money to carry on this war.

Mr. Tully.

LORD WILLOUGHBY DE ERESBY (Lincolnshire, Horncastle): I confess I am somewhat disappointed with the statement of the Under Secretary of State for War, because I had hoped that after several months deliberation Her Majesty's Government would have taken some stronger steps towards bringing the military forces of this country to a greater state of efficiency, and to more readily and adequately increase their numbers. As far as I understand the scheme, the Government propose to increase the Army by invitation. My only hope is that their estimates of the numbers of men to be obtained and the rapidity with which they can be trained to be a useful force may be right and my estimates wrong. I am rather afraid that some evil counsel still prevails at the War Office. It is quite plain, from the magnitude of the scheme proposed, that the Government consider the present crisis not dangerous, but deserving some special effort. There is a vote for raising some 120,000 extra men, forty-three batteries of horse artillery, twelve fresh cavalry regiments, and seventeen battalions of infantry. As regards the forty-three batteries of artillery, I am afraid it would be a very long time before they or even any large proportion of them could be made efficient. I myself have no actual knowledge of artillery training, and am, therefore not qualified to speak of the difficulties involved in raising such a large force. But when we come to the question of raising twelve cavalry regiments I am afraid I cannot share the optimism of the Under Secretary for War. One of the parts of his proposal was that the three regiments of Household Cavalry should at the present moment be brought up to war strength. I heard on very good authority that in one of those regiments of Household Cavalry there exists at the present moment thirty trained men. I am quite willing to admit that there are some sixty or seventy recruits in addition, and a fairly large number of non-commissioned officers, but I certainly do not believe that recruits have been falling into those regiments. It seems to me that to get those three regiments up to war strength of 600 men, at the present rate of increase, would take some four or five years. As regards the recruiting for the infantry, I suppose it is pretty good at the present time; but there is one point I should like to bring before the Committee. The Under Secretary, in supporting his scheme, in order to give some proof that his estimate would be fulfilled, quoted the number of recruits received during the month of January. He told us there had been some 6,000 recruits during that month

—some 2,000 over the number in the previous month; and another part of his argument as to how recruits would fall in was the readiness with which men had volunteered for service in South Africa. As regards the 6,000 recruits of whom the Under Secretary was so proud, I think he has overlooked the fact that during that month we also, unfortunately, had some very heavy casualties. While it is perfectly true we had 6,000 recruits, yet from that number has to be deducted some 3,000 casualties, so that it cannot be said that those 6,000 will in the course of the next few months go to increase the numbers of the Army. Large numbers will have to be found not only to fill up the casualties which are sure to occur in South Africa, but also to fill up the regiments in India and the colonies. The second portion of the hon. Gentleman's estimate was based on the fact that so many men came forward for the Volunteers and the Imperial Yeomanry, and also from the Militia, for service in South Africa. I will only refer to that in passing by saying that when the hon. Gentleman spoke first of all in this House on the South African question he stated that there was no denying the fact that in this country there were thousands of men who would be perfectly willing to soldier if they were to go on active service, but that, unfortunately, among his countrymen there was a rooted dislike to doing guard and barrack drill. I am very much afraid that those men when they see that this increase would largely be left at home will not flock to the standard in the large numbers anticipated. There were three courses open to the Government, namely, to go on as they have always gone on—that is, to try to get soldiers by invitation; secondly, to try to increase the Army and the land forces by better pay; and, thirdly, by compulsory service. We are told that compulsory service would never be stood in this country, but I am inclined to think that if the Government were to come to this House and say we were in national danger, compulsory service would be accepted and freely given by the people of this country. But I do not suppose that at present the Government can tell the House the country is in grave national danger. We are, however, in a grave emergency, and I think the Government ought, by some means, such as offering better pay, to have tried to raise a field force among men who at the present moment are partially acquainted with military exercises. Judging by the success which attended the recruiting for the Imperial Yeomanry, I believe that if the Government had called on the Volunteers, offering good terms and pay, they would in a very short time have secured an efficient field force of 50,000, if not 100,000 men, with a certain amount of knowledge of the duties they would have to perform. By the method in which you are proceeding at the present time every recruit will have to be taught to ride and shoot, and all the special duties of the particular branch of the service which he joins. By adopting the plan I have just suggested, I believe you would have obtained an enormous number of men, and you would have created a greater feeling of security and rest in the country. There is one other point to which I should like to refer, namely, the question of the instruction given to our Auxiliary forces in the past. I was extremely pleased to hear from the Under Secretary for War that the instruction given to officers in the Auxiliary forces is to be improved. I remember when I first joined the Auxiliary force, there was a school at Aldershot to which Yeomanry officers went, and many Yeomanry officers made themselves efficient in their drill at that school. That establishment, however, was done away with, and some other scheme started, by which Yeomanry officers were sent to different cavalry regiments to learn their drill. I do not wish in the least to disparage present officers of the Auxiliary forces, but, from my own experience, I am perfectly certain that since these schools were abolished the officers are not nearly as efficient as they used to be. It is a great necessity of this country that we should have a large body of officers who are, at all events, partially acquainted with their work, who could officiate as instructors, and also help when their country was in difficulty. I would only add that I hope the Government will see their way, when they again start these schools for Auxiliary officers, to give those officers also some education in military training. However important it is that officers should know the words of command, it is even more important that they should have some knowledge of how to pitch a tent, or to throw up a shelter trench. From what I have heard—never having been in the Army—I believe this training is very much neglected, even among officers of the Regular forces. As far as digging a trench is concerned, they are probably sent to dig it on a piece of ground where hundreds of men have dug trenches for the last twelve months. I do not think that in such a way an officer can receive a good and thorough military training. Another point is that a larger permanent staff is absolutely necessary for the Auxiliary forces. The Government have tried for economical reasons to cut down that staff. I speak from experience, for at the present moment, in my own Yeomanry regiment, which at the last training turned out the strongest in the whole country, the best squadron leader has gone to South Africa, three or four young officers have gone, fifty of the best troopers have gone, the best sergeant-major has gone, and the adjutant has gone back to his regiment. If that is typical of the other regiments throughout the country, then, if we were trusting to the Auxiliary forces for the efficient defence of the country, we are leaning on a broken reed. I should be pleased to hear that some of the 109,000 troops who the Under Secretary says are in this country are men who thoroughly know their work and are capable of being sent off to augment the regiments in South Africa. I am rather afraid that it will be some time before the 9th or 10th Divisions can be put into the field. It would have been much more reassuring to the people of this country if the Government had come down and stated boldly that they had taken measures by which the 11th and 12th Divisions were to be speedily equipped and made ready for the field. I can only say, in conclusion, that I hope the view I take on this matter is wrong and that the Under Secretary is right, that men will flock to the standards and recruits pour in, and that he will be able to raise the additional regiments he requires. On the other hand, I cannot disguise from myself that we are passing through a critical stage, and therefore I would have liked to have seen stronger proposals put forward.

*COLONEL MILWARD: An hon. Member opposite said that at the end of the War of Independence in America there were 100,000 Irishmen fighting for America, and that he wished that only that number of Irishmen were in South Africa. I most cordially echo that wish. Everyone who has watched the course of this war has been struck with the courage and heroism displayed by the Irish regiments. My esteemed friend asked some question as to why the Irish Militia were sent to this country and not retained in Ireland. It was suggested that it was because these men were rebels. Never had a more unfortunate statement been made. Whatever may be the political feeling of Irish Members, and to which they may give expression in this House, I am perfectly certain that it would be impossible for men of whatever nationality to show more courage and devotion than Irishmen have shown in South Africa. I admit that, at the far end of this debate, it is very difficult to say anything new, but I wish to assure the Government that so far as I can gauge their intentions, I cordially approve their proposals. It is true that there is nothing novel or revolutionary in these proposals: they are merely an expansion of what already exists. There is no conscription, no ballot even for the Militia. I do not myself approve of conscription. We have always found the men we wanted by other means. Still I differ very much from an expression which fell from the Prime Minister when he said that not the youngest man now living would see conscription. There is a feeling rising in quarters not expected in favour of conscription or the ballot. Manufacturers and employers of labour see that the Germans, who have conscription, are outstripping us in industrial pursuits, and they are asking how it is that the nation which is entirely a military nation is able to thus outstrip us. In considering the proposals of the Government we have also to keep in view the previous proposals made during the last three or four years for the increase of the Army. In 1896 the Under Secretary proposed that there should be added to the Army 81 guns, or 15 batteries. In 1897 he proposed to further add three new infantry battalions and two new Colonial regiments, one battery of field artillery and 3,500 garrison artillery. In all, between 1896 and 1898 there have been added to the Regular forces no fewer than 28,000 men. In the very remarkable statement made by the Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs, then Under Secretary for War, in 1898, he said that the force which, if it ever were needed, we could put on board ship was 75,000 men, and that no such force had ever been embarked before by this country. But only two years after that statement had been made we have put on board ship 150,000 men—a fully-equipped army in every respect—without counting the Colonial troops or the troops already in South Africa. It is difficult after that to level criticism at the War Office. It is now proposed to add to these numbers 258 guns and twelve battalions of infantry, and I believe that such is the spirit of our country, these men will be raised, and these guns will be ready in a very short time. The suggestions which I rose to make are, I hope, of a practical character in regard to home defence. First of all, there is the question of rifle ranges. After the new arms were supplied to the Volunteers and Militia a great many of the ranges were discarded, and now they are very few. Now no one can doubt the value of shooting, especially at unknown ranges, but if you have only short ranges, with rifles sighted up to 1,500 or 2,000 yards, it is impossible to train our soldiers, Volunteer or Regular, in firing at unknown distances. I venture to suggest to the Under Secretary for War whether it might be possible to lay upon County Councils the duty of providing ranges throughout the country. These know more of the local circumstances, they are acquainted with the owners of the land, and they would be better able to carry the matter through than the War Office. These ranges would be available for the Volunteers and the Militia and the Regular troops quartered in the district, and also for the shooting of rifle clubs, which it is desired to encourage at the present moment. These ranges could take the place of those at which our bowmen and yeomen of old used to practise. I regret very much that amongst the items of the scheme submitted by the hon. Gentleman there is no provision for the drilling of our boys in the primary schools. There are at present in many of these schools instructors of drill, but the War Office in conjunction with the Education Department should see to it that every school obtained the services of an old soldier to drill the boys. Nothing would do more good physically than military drill, and nothing would interest them more. As to the length of training of the Militia and Volunteers—if the Government hope that, in this time of emergency, the Militia will give up three months and the Volunteers one month to camp training, that may be done. Whatever the difficulties, the men both of the Militia and the Volunteers would make the sacrifice of their time; but that would be only for this year or the duration of the war. And unless that is made perfectly plain I do not believe that the Government will be able to obtain the men. The men have to consider not only themselves but their employers, and I ask the Committee to consider whether the men in our manufacturing centres can be spared, year after year, for three months, or even for one month, from their industrial employment.

Lord Willoughby de Eresby.

MR. WYNDHAM: That is not a permanent, but an emergency provision.

*COLONEL MILWARD: I am very glad to hear that; but it must be made plain that this is only for one year, and that hereafter we will revert to the old conditions. I believe that the conditions respecting the Volunteers should be made more stringent than they have hitherto been. No man has a right to join the Volunteers who is not physically fit, who means to go only for one or two days to camp, or put in a few drills. We want to make the force a real military force, and it must have real military training. I would like to say a word or two as to the officers. The real root of the difficulty both in the Militia and the Volunteers is that there is too great a paucity of officers; and I am glad to hear that commissions in the Regular Army are to be offered to the Militia and Volunteers. In the Militia the difficulty is not as to first and second lieutenants, but as to captains and majors, for the former hope to pass into the Regular Army, and they leave the Militia if they do not succeed. A great deal might be done through the Lords Lieutenant of counties. I believe that the Lords Lieutenant have more local influence than any other person, and are much more likely to provide officers from the country gentlemen. That is a point at which I would put on compulsion. Noblesse oblige. There are comparatively few men in this country available for such positions. As soon as they become married they are under the influence of their wives. The wives say to their husbands, "When you go to camp what am I to do? I want to go to the seaside or elsewhere for a holiday, and the money you spend in camp would take me and the family there." That is not a mere argument, but a fact, as I know perfectly well. Of course, if you are going to call up these men for a month or three months the difficulty will be increased. It should be remembered, also, that an officer of Volunteers has to give up his time night after night, and on the Saturday afternoon to go to the rifle range, and that when he goes to camp he has to pay his whole expenses. The question of expenses is, I am perfectly certain, a most important one. As it is absolutely necessary that we should have officers for the Militia and the Volunteers, I would adopt the course of taking the ballot among a certain class of the community, say income tax payers, in order to provide officers if they will not come forward from motives of patriotism. I am very pleased to agree to almost all the proposals which come from the Government. The Volunteers and the Militia have been regarded by their friends as the backbone of the defence of this country, and by their critics as a military sham. These forces are anxious to prove they are the one and not the other; and I am certain that the more you call upon them, and the more desire you show to make them an integral part of the Army, the more results you will get from them, and the more will they become a force which may be relied upon for the defence of this country in time of danger.

DR. FARQUHARSON (Aberdeenshire, W.): It is quite evident that there is some little confusion between the proposals intended for an emergency and those which have to do with some permanent alterations in the administration of the War Office. I am prepared to vote for the men or measures with which the Government propose to carry out this war to a speedy and triumphant issue. One of the hon. Members opposite expressed disappointment that the Under Secretary for War had not brought forward some larger and wider scheme of War Office reorganisation. I congratulate him on not having done so. I think it would be a highly imprudent thing to do in the midst of this war. After the war has been brought to a triumphant conclusion we can quietly consider what ought to be done, irrespective of the strain placed at present on the patriotism of the country. I do not see any necessity for making any large permanent additions to our Army. Of course, writers and speakers, ranging widely through the unknown, have dilated as to what a combination of foreign nations might do against us. I have always been sceptical as to what foreign nations could do. We have got to take the statements made by the accredited representatives of those nations, who are living on friendly terms with us, and speak of us in terms of brotherhood and equality. But if ever the necessity arose to enlarge our military forces, I take no despairing view about recruiting in the future. We have heard that the last year or two have been record years for recruiting, and is there any reason why that should not continue? The most popular man in the country is Tommy Atkins, and there is no reason why he should not continue to be so when he comes back covered with glory from the Transvaal, and that popularity will have a great influence on recruiting. We know that employers of labour have come to the front in aiding the military authorities in bringing Reservists up and in keeping their berths open for them while they are on active service; but I look forward with some apprehension as to what view employers of labour will take of their workmen being removed into camp for three months every year. I am very glad to hear that the Militia is now to form an essential part of the military constitution, but I want to know what permanent arrangements are to be made to increase its popularity. I agree with the hon. Gentleman who spoke of the influence of the Lords Lieutenant of counties in securing officers for the Militia. In Aberdeenshire there is no difficulty in getting officers, because our regiment is popular; the great difficulty is in getting men. Lord Aberdeen called a meeting of the tenants to consider the very alarming drop made in the rank and file from 800 to 200 or 300. A great deal of discussion took place as to what the reasons for that were, and one suggestion was that the Militia recruits no longer got the old bounty. I would ask the Under Secretary for War whether the old bounties are to be restored, or whether the bounties he now offers are to be of a temporary character.

Colonel Milward.

MR. WYNDHAM: I think I have informed the Committee several times that we are not prepared at this moment to state the exact terms, but we are considering the desirability of altering and consolidating the various bounties of the Militia, and that would not be a temporary but a permanent measure.

DR. FARQUHARSON: I am very glad to hear that, because all the tenants said that the small number of recruits was owing to the withdrawal of the bounty. The fact is that in Aberdeen we are going to make up the necessary sum if we cannot get it from the Government, and in that way we hope to restore our regiment to its old numbers. Another point which was brought forward by the Lord Provost of Aberdeen was that the military authorities do not study enough the time for the embodiment of the Militia. If you embody a regiment when the hay or corn harvest, or any principal agricultural operation is in full swing, it is natural that the men will not come forward. The time for the annual training should be suited to the exigencies of the industrial occupation of the men. If you consider and study the convenience of the rank and file, it will be more popular. My hon. friend also said that commissions were to be given to the universities and the public schools, and the Militia. I should like to know, are the candidates to be examined for what we call the literary examination?

MR. WYNDHAM: No.

DR. FARQUHARSON: I am glad to hear that, because I think those examinations are rather overdone. I have seen some of the questions, and I could not get within twenty yards of answering them, and any of the young gentlemen in order to answer such questions must be a walking "Encyclopædia Britannica." In conclusion, I will just say it is a very great satisfaction to me to hear that my hon. friend is going to considerably increase the Army Medical Department. That department has come out with its reputation simply untarnished: notwithstanding the great strain of this campaign, everything has been done admirably for the benefit of the troops. I have to thank my hon. friend for the sympathetic answer that he gave the other day when I asked him to contradict some injurious statements which had been made in The Times upon this subject. The department has done its work well, and I am glad it is going to be increased.

*MR. WILLIAM JOHNSTON (Belfast, S.): In the few words I desire to address to the Committee at this time I would like to begin by congratulating the Government and the War Office upon the scheme put forward by the hon. Gentleman the Under Secretary. The hon. Member for West Islington a short time ago found fault with the War Office for having accepted too many offers from various sources in this crisis of our country. I, on the other hand, rather complain of the War Office for not having accepted some of the offers from the North of Ireland. The City of Derry Grand Orange Lodge offered to the War Office 200 good marksmen and good riders, but in the communication I received from Lord Lansdowne the noble Lord regretted he could not accept the offer, so that Great Britain lost the services of 200 men who would have upheld the honour of the British flag.

MR. WILLIAM REDMOND: I would rather fight for the Boers.

*MR. WILLIAM JOHNSTON: I have listened patiently to adverse criticisms of hon. Gentlemen on the other side of the House, and I claim a fair hearing. I forwarded an offer from the Newry Orangemen, to form a Volunteer corps for home service, from among their 700 members. I regret the answer given to a question I put to the Treasury some time ago. I did not get a favourable reply to my question to the First Lord of the Treasury to my offer to raise Volunteers in Ireland; the right hon. Gentleman regretted he could not accept the proposition. The country has witnessed with great approbation the magnificent assistance given by the colonies, and I venture to say if an opportunity had been given to those for whom I speak, they would gladly come forward, and would do their best either at home or abroad for the honour of our flag. If permission was given, 10,000 men in Belfast, alone, could immediately be obtained to enrol themselves in a Volunteer force to maintain the integrity of the British Empire.

know it is not a subject which commends itself to hon. Gentlemen opposite who represent Ireland; those who sympathise with the enemies of England on all occasions are not likely at this time to support the honour of our flag. I venture to call attention to a report of an entertainment given in Belfast on Saturday last where 300 of the Ulster Yeomanry were assembled, who, although the idea was only started a month or two ago, have passed the requirements of Colonel Graves and have already been enrolled. I should like to read, from the Belfast Newsletter—

THE CHAIRMAN: Order, order! It is unusual in this House to produce a newspaper.

*MR. WILLIAM JOHNSTON: I apologise, Mr. Lowther, for having produced one. I would merely say that in a speech made by Lord Londonderry, the newly-appointed Lord Lieutenant of Belfast, he said, although 300 had passed under Colonel Graves to go out and fight in South Africa, more than double that number could be easily obtained. Colonel Graves told them they went out as Ulstermen as well as Irishmen, to do honour to the country to which they belonged. In conclusion, I venture to appeal to this House to permit at least the loyal Irish to rally round the flag of England, and I implore the Government to consider the application made by me a short time ago, and permit them to become soldiers of the Queen.

GENERAL RUSSELL (Cheltenham), who was very indistinctly heard, was understood to say: This was not the time to put the Army into the melting-pot—to reorganise either the Army or the War Office. He was glad that the Government did not propose to introduce compulsory service. There were many reasons against compulsory service, the chief of which was that it must lead to great delay and opposition. But whether it might not be necessary eventually to fall back on some form of compulsion was a question that could not now be decided. Some hon. Members on the other side said that no case had been made out for the permanent increase of the Army. That was not the opinion of the military advisers and of independent experts in this country, who held that the Army was entirely insufficient to fill up gaps in foreign stations, and to meet the needs of the Empire. He heartily welcomed the proposals of the Government, although he doubted whether the required number of men would be forthcoming. If the men were to be obtained, the Government would have to offer more inducements. They would have to pay them better, make the Army more attractive, and, above all, to devise proper employment for men after they had left the service. He expressed the hope that there would be no more of that veiled hostility to the employment of old soldiers in Government offices. The soldier was a working man just as much as the navy, and was entitled to as much consideration. To supply the deficiency in officers he thought we should take a lesson from the Germans, who had a large reserve of officers who were regularly trained and were ready to fill up vacancies at any moment. When down at Aldershot that day seeing some regiments off to South Africa, he noticed they were no less than six officers short. What would be the condition of those regiments two or three weeks after the casualties of a campaign? He wished to know if it was the fact that our artillery was inferior to that of the Boers, and whether the Government had sent out to South Africa disappearing platforms such as the Boers were apparently using. He expressed the opinion that the Intelligence Department was underpaid. He hoped when the reorganisation of the Army took place the Council of National Defence would be reorganised too. The Council of National Defence was, he thought, improperly constituted in respect that not a single expert had a seat in it. He hoped that this would be remedied when the work of reorganisation was undertaken.

CAPTAIN JESSEL (St. Pancras, S.): It is true, no doubt, that the War Office has done a great deal in the exercise of its organising powers in regard to the present war; it is true that they have transported a large army across the sea, and it is true that that army has been very well equipped, and that the hospital arrangements have been admirably executed; but what the nation has a right to demand of the War Office is that they should organise victory at the front. The real reason why we have not been more successful in South Africa is owing, in great measure, to the faults of our system, and at this late hour of the evening I am not going to enter into an attack on our Army system. It has been discussed at very great length already, and all I can say is that I hope

Mr. William Johnston.

one result will be that steps will be taken to alter the system. On the whole I think that there is a great deal to be said for the proposals of the Government. They have recognised for the first time the importance of the Volunteer and Militia forces. I would suggest that an appeal should be issued to the Lords Lieutenant of the counties to strengthen the Militia, because this is not the time for the Militia ballot. Then there is the danger of locking up men in the Volunteer force to the detriment of the Militia. I hope some statement will be made as to the provision of Volunteer transport, and I wish that the Government had proposed a permanent increase in the cavalry. Our weakness in that arm makes it doubtful whether it is wise to convert the Yeomanry into mounted infantry. The change may seriously affect the Yeomanry, especially in view of the fact that mounted companies are to be raised for the Volunteer battalions. I am glad that the Government have at last shown an inclination to recognise the utility of the reserve of officers. The only such officer within my acquaintance who has been employed was required to pay his own passage to the Cape. I am also glad that we are going to get more officers from the colonies. We all admire the way in which the officers have come forward from the colonies, and I hope the authorities will see their way to induce the colonies to enter into some permanent arrangement with our garrisons with a view to permanent service in other parts of Her Majesty's dominions.

*MR. ABEL SMITH (Christchurch) said that as an amateur he did not propose to criticise these military proposals; but he welcomed most cordially the changes which had been indicated by his hon. friend with regard to the Auxiliary forces. He suggested that recruiting for the Yeomanry would be assisted if a system of registering horses such as was applied for cavalry and other purposes were put in force. Numbers of young men who were ready to serve Her Majesty abroad would gladly join the Yeomanry if they could furnish their own horses. A system of registration would enable them to have horses in readiness. He was perfectly certain that if the War Office took commanding officers and others into their confidence, and were willing to accept suggestions, they would do much to increase the strength and efficiency of the Auxiliary forces.

MR. DALY (Monaghan): From the different standpoints from which hon. and right hon. Gentlemen have put the Army and Navy before the Under Secretary of State for War, I would not be surprised if, after listening to them all, the hon. Gentleman has a pain in his head by this time. We have heard admirals, generals, colonels, and lieutenants by the score. As far as I am concerned, I do not agree with the very large scheme which the hon. Gentleman has brought forward, because, from the Irish point of view, this large demand upon Parliament is, I think, quite unnecessary and quite uncalled for. As an Irish Member, I feel called upon to enter my protest against it, and when the time comes to go into the division lobby I shall vote against the Government on this proposal. Sir, we have heard a great deal of the loyalty and the inconvenience that Englishmen are prepared to put themselves to to help the Empire; but I have scarcely heard one hon. Gentleman, whether a baronet or lord, whose first word and last was not "pay, pay, pay." There is to be increase of pay, increase of rations; and the Volunteers and the Yeomanry are to come in for their share of this increase of pay. This is where your great patriotism comes in. You must give better rations and better pay or you won't get a single man to help you. Mr. Lowther, I am not a military man, and I am glad I am not, but I have not heard a military man in this House that agrees with the scheme that was brought forward last night. What I am surprised at is that the hon. Gentleman the Under Secretary of State for War did not in the first instance invite them all to a friendly party to canvass their views, and secure something like unanimity amongst them on this subject. Now, I believe, Sir, that from start to finish this war has been largely a war for the Stock Exchange. I have never made any other distinction of it than that. I wish to say that I entirely disapprove of this large Vote of men and money for the purpose of crushing a very small State. What seems to me most remarkable about the war, after what we have heard of the great deeds of English soldiers, is that, although there are only 59,000 Transvaal Boers and Free Staters in the field, this country has pitted against them an army of 200,000 men. That is the brilliant British Army. Well,

I don't think it very creditable that it should take four Britons to beat one Boer, and now we are asked to vote a further 120,000, which will increase the number in the proportion of six to one. It is no small wonder that I raise my voice against this proposal, coming as I do from a down-trodden country, seeing that the British forces are arrayed against a little force with the object of overwhelming them by sheer brute force. Up to the present I have heard a good deal of General Buller going forward. But now I see he is going backward. A large sum of money is now being voted, but the poor farmers in Ireland, who supply the best produce and the best horses in the world, will not benefit by it to the extent of a penny. The War Office buy hay in Patagonia and get their bacon from Russia, and it is not the slightest wonder that the soldiers in South Africa have not been able to fight, and have been practically no use in the field. I feel it my duty to oppose this Vote, because I believe the war is unjust and unnecessary, and that it is a war which we will have to contribute to largely without receiving any recompense. We will have to pay the piper, and all we can do is to protest and object in every possible way. Seeing that such a number of Army men in this House object to this scheme, I would advise the hon. Gentleman—he may take my advice, although perhaps if he does not he will not be far wrong—to drop the scheme altogether, which is opposed by his friends on his own side of the House as well as by his friends on this side, and to introduce another scheme, which may be received with more favour.

*MR. HEDDERWICK (Wick Burghs): A great deal of dissatisfaction has been expressed in the course of this debate with the proposals laid before the House by the Under Secretary of State for War. I venture to hope that the hon. Gentleman will not take these expressions of dissatisfaction too seriously. It is very natural, I think, that the service Members in the House should have hoped to see advantage taken of the present wave of excitement to advance reforms which for many years they have advocated and which they have much at heart: but I think if these hon. Gentlemen will reflect for one moment they will be disposed to admit that it would be a miracle if in so brief a time the Government have been able to present to the House a cut and dried scheme which would include not only the reform of the War Office but also the reform of the entire military system of the country. Any such scheme must be maturely considered and carefully thought out in all its details. The hon. Gentleman is to be congratulated upon the moderation of the proposals which he has laid before the House, and on the fact that they are mainly applicable to the emergency with which we are at present face to face. The moderation of the proposals will commend them to the country. It certainly commends them to many hon. Members of this House, who have not the intimate knowledge of military matters possessed by the service Members, and who would not be prepared at a moment's notice to approve of a large scheme hastily introduced. I hope that the proposals of the Government will have the strong support of the main body of the Opposition. In saying that I am not so much moved by a consideration of the gravity of the war in the Transvaal alone. Deplorable I consider the war, but I feel confident that in the end this country must triumph. I am influenced by other and far wider considerations. Rightly or wrongly, I cannot rid myself of the apprehension that our present difficulties may be made the opportunities of those nations who envy us our vast possessions and grudge us our world-wide commerce. Already, apparently, Germany, taking advantage of the situation, has carried off Samoa after many years of vain intriguing, and we have further humbled ourselves to her by apologising for the exercise of a maritime right which every belligerent enjoys by the law of nations. Then in China and Persia we have interests which seem to be incompatible with the vast ambition and far-reaching designs of Russia. We have grounds of quarrel, too, of old standing with France in Egypt and Newfoundland, and now it seems as if another cause of trouble were looming up for us in Morocco. From these sources what complications may await us in the near future—may be sprung upon us, perhaps, while our hands are tied in the Transvaal! Holding these views, constrained by these apprehensions, it seems to me desirable that we should convince the world that we are a united people when confronted with an emergency, and I venture, therefore, to express the hope that the great body of the Liberal party, however justly they may have found fault with the want of foresight or with the want of preparation on the part of the Government in the initial stages of this campaign, will strongly support the proposals which the Government have now laid before the House. I will not attempt to criticise the details of these proposals; I make no pretence of military knowledge such as would entitle me so to inflict myself upon the patience of the House. I merely embrace this opportunity of assuring the Government at least of my support in respect of these particular proposals, which, in the circumstances, appear to me to be reasonable and to indicate a commendable calmness of judgment.

MR. GRAY (West Ham, N.): I will not weary the House by discussing the minute details of this scheme, because I do not feel myself competent to form a judgment on it; but one thing I am convinced of is that outside this House there is a great and steadily growing opinion that every able-bodied adult man should take some part in the defence of the Empire. It is impossible for any man to move from one end of the country to the other, particularly during the progress of the war, without seeing evidence of that opinion in every direction. I have found that there are probably many thousands of men anxious to take part in the defence of their country, but who, owing to the state of their business, are quite unable to spare the time to join a Volunteer corps; there are thousands who would be perfectly ready to make themselves skilled marksmen if facilities were only offered to them. There are tradesmen, many of them old Volunteers, who are anxious to keep up their shooting skill, and most desirous of being ready to serve should the need arise, but who are quite unable to spare the time to make the necessary drills and become efficient in a Volunteer corps. There is a steady movement throughout the country for the formation of rifle clubs, which would include a large number of expert shots. I have seen such clubs in the rural districts of Austria, where village after village has its own club, and I see no reason why the Government should not encourage these clubs by offering prizes for marksmanship, just as plates are offered for horse-racing.

MR. FLAVIN (Kerry, N.): Would the hon. Member extend it to Ireland?

MR. GRAY: Were the Irish peasant left free to form his own judgment I certainly would. I have watched peasants and tradesmen in Austria taking part in inter-village competitions, and showing the results of their marksmanship with considerable pride. There was a time in England when a large part of our defensive as well as our offensive force depended on the skill of the Yeomanry as marksmen. I see no reason why that time should not recur. There are, of course, many difficulties in the way, such as the cost of providing rifles, the securing of the necessary ammunition, and above all the obtaining of ranges. But all these difficulties are not insuperable if the Government would only help. It is only right that this movement should be countenanced, and I hope that the War Office will look with favour on it at this juncture. The Government have a great opportunity now, owing to the enthusiasm throughout the country, which may not recur for many years, and if they would only grant men such as I have indicated the right, under proper conditions, to use ranges, if they would loan them rifles and provide them with ammunition at cost price, I see no reason why we should not have in this country a defensive force of many thousands, something in the nature of the Reserve. I do hope that before the debate closes some statement may be made by the Under Secretary for War on this subject. I am perfectly certain that a large number of men are anxiously awaiting some lead from the War Office in the matter. There is just one other topic to which I would wish to refer, namely, the suggestion that lads in our public schools ought to receive a certain amount of military training. It may not, however, be generally realised that very young children cannot stand the ordinary form of drill, and it may not be known that physical exercises—known as Swedish drill—are now compulsory in every county, and there are very few schools in which time is not devoted to such exercises every week. That form of physical drill is more beneficial to young children than ordinary company drill, which places too great a strain on the muscles of a young child. Under proper conditions, however, no doubt much might be done in the direction of military drill. I have looked at school children drilling in Battersea Park under sergeants in the Guards, and they presented a very creditable appearance. The movement, however, is one which must be developed cautiously and on the right lines, and I hope that we shall not rush at once at compulsory military drill in schools. I rejoice greatly that the Government have decided to put aside conscription. I am sure the country is not ready for it, and I consider that the Volunteer movement, if properly encouraged, will lift us out of our present difficulties and make us stronger and better prepared to meet difficulties in the future.

MR. BRYN ROBERTS (Carnarvonshire, Eifion): The hon. Member who has just spoken has urged the importance of every adult man in the United Kingdom volunteering in defence of the Empire. What does the hon. Member mean by the Empire? Does he mean that every able-bodied man in Great Britain and Ireland should volunteer for the purpose of going abroad to support an expedition set on foot by a Jingo Government? If he only means this country, then we all agree with him, assuming that it is necessary to defend it. This country has not been invaded for over eight centuries, and we are not likely to have another invasion for eight centuries more unless we interfere with other people. The hon. Member cited the example of Austria, but Austria is in daily fear of invasion, or at any rate is daily liable to invasion. Nothing but an imaginary line drawn across the map distinguishes its boundaries, and on that ground it is necessary that it should have a strong defensive army for the purposes of repelling an invasion. There is not the slightest possibility of any attack on us; therefore I say our home defences are sufficient. I dissociate myself also from what has been said by my hon. friend the Member for the Wick Burghs. He said he would support the Government in all their proposals with respect to this war. I am not able to do so, and I will tell the Committee why. If I agreed with the proposals of the Government, then I would agree with the policy which necessitated this increase. I disagree thoroughly with that policy. I consider the war is absolutely unjust, and I believe it is our duty in honour and conscience to bring it to a close as soon as we can, but I am not willing to vote for an additional single man in order to carry it on. As far as my vote goes it will be given to indicate that it is our duty to open negotiations at once, to confess that we are in the wrong, and to dismiss the Colonial Secretary and his satellites from the service of the Crown, as a guarantee that we do not intend to interfere with the independence of the Transvaal in the future. There is no necessity for this abnormal increase of the Army as long as we carried out the foreign policy practised by the Liberal party almost for generations. The Army is ample, and it would remain ample if we continued the foreign policy of Mr. Gladstone, not meddling or interfering in the concerns of other people, and especially not making aggressive movements or organising jingo expeditions against other countries. In that case no country in the world would raise a finger against us, and the Volunteer and Militia forces alone would be quite sufficient for defensive purposes. This war has proved that for defensive purposes our Army is not only big enough but too big. If 40,000 farmers in the Transvaal have proved themselves capable of resisting the whole force of the British Empire, surely the 6,000,000 able-bodied men in England would be able to do so with the regular Army, if they were given the same cause to fight—namely, in defence of their own homes.

Motion made, and Question, "That the Chairman do report Progress; and ask leave to sit again" — (Mr. William Redmond)—put and agreed to.

Committee report Progress; to sit again To-morrow.

OUT-DOOR RELIEF (FRIENDLY SOCIETIES) (No. 2) BILL.

[SECOND READING.]

Order for Second Reading read.

*MR. STRACHEY (Somerset, S.): I beg to move that this Bill be read a second time. It consists of only one clause, and has the sanction and approval of the friendly societies of this country, and has received the unanimous approval of the National Conference of Friendly Societies. It provides that where a board of guardians grants outdoor relief to any member of a friendly society, it shall not take into consideration any sum up to five shillings which may have been granted by the society.

MR. BANBURY (Camberwell, Peckham): At this time of the evening it is impossible to discuss this Bill. It is perfectly true it is a very small Bill, and consists of only two clauses, but it nevertheless interferes very seriously—

It being midnight, the debate stood adjourned. Debate to be resumed upon Tuesday, 27th February.

Adjourned at one minute after Twelve of the clock.

Mr. Gray.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Wednesday, 14th February, 1900.

PETITIONS.

MINES (EIGHT HOURS) BILL.

Petitions in favour, from Ormiston; Oxenford; Tranent; Elphinstone; Penston; and Prestongrange; to lie upon the Table.

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS ON SUNDAY BILL.

Petitions in favour, from Horsham; and Manningtree; to lie upon the Table.

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS TO CHILDREN BILL.

Two petitions from Manchester, in favour; to lie upon the Table.

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

CIVIL SERVICES (SUPPLEMENTARY—ESTIMATE, 1899-1900).

Estimate presented,—of the further amount required in the year ending 31st March, 1900, for sundry Colonial Services [by Command]; Referred to the Committee of Supply, and to be printed. [No. 48.]

TRADE REPORTS (ANNUAL SERIES).

Copy presented,—of Diplomatic and Consular Reports, Annual Series, No. 2379 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

INQUIRY INTO CHARITIES (ADMINISTRATIVE COUNTY OF DURHAM).

Return ordered, “comprising (1) the Reports made to the Charity Commissioners, in the result of an inquiry held in every parish wholly or partly within the administrative county of Durham into Endowments, subject to the provisions of the Charitable Trusts Acts, 1853 to 1894, and appropriated in whole or in part for the benefit of that county, or of any part thereof, together with the Reports on those Endowments of the Commissioners for inquiring concerning Charities, 1818 to 1837; (2) a digest, showing in the case of each such parish whether any, and, if any, what such Endowments are recorded in the books of the Charity Commissioners in the parish; and (3) an index, alphabetically arranged, of names and places mentioned in the Reports.”—(Mr. Grant Lawson.)

INQUIRY INTO CHARITIES (COUNTY OF MONTGOMERY).

Return ordered, “comprising (1) the Reports made to the Charity Commissioners in the result of an inquiry held in every parish wholly or partly within the county of Montgomery into Endowments, subject to the provisions of the Charitable Trusts Acts, 1853 to 1894, and appropriated in whole or in part for the benefit of that county, or of any part thereof, together with the Reports on those Endowments of the Commissioners for inquiring concerning Charities, 1818 to 1837; (2) a digest showing, in the case of each such parish, whether any, and, if any, what such Endowments are recorded in the books of the Charity Commissioners in the parish; and (3) an Index, alphabetically arranged, of names and places mentioned in the Reports.”—(Mr. Grant Lawson.)

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1884.

Ordered, That the Order of the 18th day of October, 1899, that the Treasury Minute under the Superannuation Act, 1884, relating to. Mary Byrne, Postmistress, Beaumaris, do lie upon the Table, be read and discharged.

Ordered, That the said Treasury Minute be withdrawn.—(Mr. Hanbury.)

LOCAL GOVERNMENT (IRELAND) ACT (1898) AMENDMENT BILL.

[SECOND READING.]

Order for Second Reading read.

*MR. TULLY (Leitrim, S.): I beg, Sir, to move the Second Reading of this Bill, and in doing so I must claim the indulgence of this House while I strive to explain and justify, if I can, the principles contained in it. It is a complex question and one presenting great and serious difficulties. It is designed as an amendment to the Local Government (Ireland) Act that was carried through this House by the right hon. Gentleman the Chief Secretary for Ireland, and I think, Sir, there is not one of us on these benches who does not regret the cause which has led to his absence from the House at this juncture. I must say at the outset that that Act was a great and far-reaching measure, and I suppose it was as large a measure of reform as the right hon. Gentleman could expect to carry through under the circumstances. But from our experience of the working of the Act, extending over nearly twelve months, we are convinced that a number of amendments are required to make it a thoroughly practical and workmanlike measure. Sir, in Ireland we have had to labour under circumstances of considerable difficulty in carrying out the work of local government. In England reform in local affairs and in local bodies came by stages—in Ireland it reached the people in a lump. In England you first got municipal reform based on household suffrage; then you got county councils on a democratic basis; and after some years you got parish councils. But the way you managed these things for us in Ireland was different. All our local bodies and institutions were flung into the melting pot together, and we got municipal reform, county councils and district councils at the same time. Considering that the Act started with an almost complete revolution in the administrative local bodies, I think Englishmen will admit that it is so far creditable to Irishmen, after nearly twelve months working, under circumstances of great difficulty, that so few mistakes have been made. For one thing we have not given much work to our friends, the lawyers, in Ireland. The complaint that we come here to-day to make is not one that we would expect to hear from the opposite Benches—that these bodies are extravagant. Our complaint is that it is the central body, whose duty it is to supervise these local bodies, which is extravagant, and which has wasted the money of the taxpayers in Ireland. I will not attempt to conceal that some of the proposals contained in this Bill are drastic proposals, but as far as we can they are an attempt on our part to bring the laws of local government in Ireland into harmony with the wishes of the majority of the people, and as far as is practicable under the different circumstances into harmony with the laws of local government as existing in England and Scotland. In England and Scotland your local government Boards are amenable to the influence exercised by the votes of the people in the polling booths. You have in England and Scotland no law for the free chartering of armed police on any district of the country at the whim of an irresponsible Executive. You have no law for compensation for malicious injuries—for making the ratepayers a kind of insurance society for the property of people who will not avail themselves of the advantages of insurance. We claim equality and equal laws in these matters. In England your Local Government Board has two members in this House who change as each Government is changed by the votes of the people. In Scotland, the Scotch Local government Board has two members in this House, the Scotch Secretary and the Scotch Solicitor General, who are elected by the votes of the people, and change with each Government. In Ireland we have nothing similar. The right hon. Gentleman, the Member for Montrose, in his speech on the Second Reading of the Local Government (Ireland) Bill, and who himself, as Chief Secretary for Ireland, was, for a time head of the Irish Local Government Board, drew attention to the unrepresentative nature of that Board, and he emphasised it as a weak point in your measure, that you made no provision for bringing that Board into harmony with the views of the people of Ireland, constitutionally expressed. Well, we are striving in this Bill to bring about that harmony. We propose to set up a Board which will exercise a certain supervision over the acts of the Local Government Board, so far as they come into collision with the wishes of the local bodies. For precedent we have gone to a certain extent to the machinery which is to be found in the Board of Agriculture Act which was passed in this House last year, and which provides for an advisory Board; and you have so far demonstrated the practicability of the principle of popular control that you have provided that eight members of the Board of Agriculture are to be elected by the county councils and other representative people, and four are to be nominated by the Department. In the Board we propose to set up four members are to be elected by the chairmen of the thirty-three county councils in Ireland, one by the six county boroughs, and two are to be appointed by the Local Government Board. That is the machinery we propose to apply; and it is simple and inexpensive. Here, in England, the views of the county councils are to this extent recognised—that you have passed a County Councils Association Act, an Act by which the county councils can pay the expenses of that association out of the rates. We have no such body, recognised by statute, in Ireland. We propose to set up this new Board under the name of the Board of Control, which was the name of a good old fossilised body which existed in Ireland previous to the passing of the Local Government Act, which did away with it. We have, however, no objection to the name, and we would take it again if we got the powers tempered by the restraints exercised by vote by ballot. Well, Sir, the Local Government Board in Ireland is, as I have said, entirely out of touch with the people; and the effect of the Act of 1898 was to widen the gulf that separates the Local Government Board in Ireland from what I might call the ratepaying classes in Ireland. Under the old state of things, before the passing of the Act, the landlords paid half the rates; but under the Act they have been relieved from that responsibility. So long as the landlords paid their share of the rates we had no complaint against the Local Government Board in regard to increasing the rates; but the moment the landlords as landlords ceased to pay rates we find a complete change come over the spirit of the Local Government Board. We find that instead of that body checking waste and extravagance, it is doing everything in its power to encourage wasteful and extravagant expenditure. When we find this going on, we cannot help entertaining the suspicion that perhaps the Local Government Board, in striving to make local self-government expensive, are at the same time striving to make it unpopular. Well, Sir, when the Local Government Act was passed, you proceeded to strengthen that body; and the executive, by way of promoting harmony between them and the people of Ireland, selected a gentleman (Mr. Richard Bagwell) as an additional member of the Local Government Board. He was a gentleman who had spent his time as a Unionist pamphleteer, reviling our people, and actually libelling Irish Members who sat upon these benches. Well, one of the first public acts of Mr. Bagwell was to make a speech denouncing the very Act under which he held office as a salaried servant of the Crown! Now what is it we find in Ireland since the Local Government Board set to work to increase the cost of administration? We find that no more roads are to be mended; we find that no more paupers are to be supported in the workhouses; and no more lunatics are to be cared for in the asylums. The system of keeping the accounts has been simplified by substituting county rating and union rating for the old system of baronial rating and divisional rating, and although the clerical work has been thus reduced, the Local Government Board has in nearly every county in Ireland doubled the salaries of the officials. That is what we complain of, and the same complaint is made not only in the south and west, but also in the north of Ireland. In the county with which I am acquainted, the secretary was paid a salary of £293 by the Grand Jury—that was all that came out of the ratepayers' pockets—and he also levied fees off the road contractors. Although the county paid for the printing, he charged them fees for tender forms and specifications, and while there was no statute to authorise these charges, these fees were levied off contractors by the Grand Jury officials all over Ireland. We offered our secretary £700 a year on condition that he did all the work, and paid any accountant and clerks he needed. The Local Government Board step in and say that the gentleman who got £293 from the Grand Jury must now get £600 a year, and we must besides pay an accountant and clerks to do all the work, while he need not do anything at all. That is a typical instance of what the Local Government Board are doing all over Ireland. It is true of Kerry in the south, and it is true of Fermanagh in the north, where the Unionist county council adopted even a stronger resolution of protest than we did in Roscommon in the west, and my hon. friend (Mr. Jordan) will bear me out in this matter. What they have done in raising salaries in the case of the county council officials, the Local Government Board have also done in the case of the district council and poor law officials. The other day a member of an English council told me that his experience of officials was that their one aim in life after they are appointed is to study how they will get an increase of salary, and if one of them sees an official in a neighbouring union or council getting more salary than he does, he concentrates all his energies to induce his paymasters to bring him to the same level. What is true of officials in England is true of Ireland, and the Local Government Board, perhaps, in raising salaries wholesale wish to attach to themselves all the devotion and all the support of every official under all the new bodies. They have carried this principle so far that in one case, where an official was found content with his salary, they insisted on his taking £10 more than he asked for. This was in Abbeylax Union, and the Clerk there has been obliged to accept a higher salary than he thought fair himself. I am glad the Financial Secretary to the Treasury is present, because there is one point to which I wish to direct his attention, namely, as affecting the compensations which have been granted by the Local Government Board. In the union with which I am acquainted, it was part of the clerk's duties to check the rate collectors' accounts once a fortnight. The Local Government Board issue an order that where the clerks of union do this work now, although it was part of their former duties, they must get 5s. per hundred ratings, and in the case to which I refer this came to £45 a year. The clerk claimed that he had lost £10 a year as returning officer and £12 a year under the Cattle Diseases Act, and the Local Government Board sanction his claim for £110 compensation for diminution of income, although he had already got £45 extra as I have described, and then the Local Government Board come in and say he must get £80 a year for his new duties under the district council, although this new work replaces the duties that were transferred from him. Half this compensation for diminution of income is to come out of money controlled by the Financial Secretary to the Treasury. In Belmullet Union the same thing was sanctioned by the Local Government Board, but I believe the Imperial Treasury have come in and told the Local Government Board that although they may fire away the money of the Irish ratepayers they are not going to fire away the money of the Imperial Treasury. I am afraid that nearly all these compensations have now been paid, but I hope the hon. Gentleman will make some inquiry into the matter, and he will find cases just as extraordinary as those I have quoted. The reason I have given these details is in order to make out a case, as it strikes us in Ireland, why we want control or some check on this body of gentlemen in Dublin who are appointed by English parties, who are entirely irresponsible to Irish opinion, and who ignore and flout us. I will deal with a few of the other acts of the Local Government Board since the new bodies have taken office. Of the object of the first matter to which I will refer I do not complain; the object was a worthy one, but I object to the means adopted by the Local Government Board to attain that object. I refer to the Board's action with regard to dispensary doctors. I, for one, think dispensary doctors in Ireland have been ill-paid, badly paid. In some cases their salary has not been more than the wages of an ordinary skilled mechanic. What I complain of is that the Local Government Board issued an ukase under Section 12 of the Act of 1851, breaking the contracts these doctors had with the new bodies, and ordering that they should have an increase of salary, without any regard to local feeling.

Mr. Tully.

Mr. Tully.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL FOR IRELAND (Mr. ATKINSON, Londonderry, N.): The hon. Gentleman is under some misapprehension; there is no increase of salary.

*MR. TULLY: There is an extra expense, which is the same thing to the ratepayers.

MR. ATKINSON: No; the hon. Gentleman is mistaken.

*MR. TULLY: I will explain it to the right hon. Gentleman; I know all about it. I often hear the sacredness of the right of contract referred to in this House. The contracts which the Irish doctors had with the Irish unions were that they were to give twelve months' work for twelve months' pay. But the Local Government Board come in and say, "No; we will give you thirteen months' pay for eleven months' work, because each doctor acted as locum tenens for his neighbour." That is how it has practically worked out in our union. Under this order of the Board the doctors are given a month's leave of absence, and, whether we like it or not, we must pay the salaries of the locum tenens for that period. I do not object to the doctors getting a month's holiday; I do not object even to the expense caused by it; but I do object to the means by which the Local Government Board did it. Although the Board had this power from 1851, they did not put it into force until the landlords had been relieved of paying their portion of the poor rate. Another question which has caused a great deal of discussion in Ireland is one the object of which also is philanthropic—the question of trained nurses. I voted with the Government for the clause myself, but I never thought it would be utilised in the manner it has been. There was to be a trained nurse employed in each union, under rules prescribed by the Local Government Board. Influenced by some of those subterranean influences which exist in Dublin, the Board drafted the rules in such a way that they deliberately excluded the very best class of nurses in the Catholic parts of Ireland—they shut out the nuns, and made this sphere of work a close preserve for nurses coming from hospitals in Dublin, one of which is a limited liability company paying regular dividends. As half the salary is not recouped to the unions unless the appointment is made under these prescribed rules, it is almost impossible, unless the guardians incur heavy financial liability, to have sisters of mercy as nursing officers. The effect of the rules is that in order to be a trained nurse in a workhouse a lady must spend three or four years in a city hospital, and we know that when a lady has spent that time in the city she will hardly be content to remain very long in a little country town. The result is that these nurses flit from one union to another, and the Local Government Board sanction it, and permit this kind of thing to go on. In our union we decided to give the salaries on a sliding scale, so that the longer the nurse stopped the bigger salary she would get. We issued our advertisements on that line. The Local Government Board, however, would not agree to these advertisements, but they actually wrote down to say that if we would issue our advertisements in the form they thought right they would send them to the nurses they had on a special list. Although we had been advertising for a number of months without getting a reply, it was then for the first time that we discovered the existence of this little list and were able to get a reply. We wanted to have Catholic nurses, it being a Catholic district, but the reply we got from the “little list” of the Local Government Board was from a lady in an English rectory, who was asked to come over to a little country town in the west of Ireland and settle down there as a trained nurse. We have also found that the Board have another “little list” in regard to the question of analysts of medicines. One of the provisions of the Act was that the unions would not be recouped half the cost of medicines unless the medicines were analysed by a qualified analyst. We had had a county analyst for years, to whom the county paid £25 a year, a sum which covered all his duties. As soon as the Local Government Act was passed we had a letter from the Local Government Board intimating that we should not be recouped half the cost of medicines unless we appointed a special analyst. Some of the unions advertised, and got gentlemen to tender to do the work at very nominal sums, but the Board would not sanction their appointment. Then to our great surprise we found they had a little list of five or six gentlemen, and unless we accepted the terms of these gentlemen we could not get the appointment sanctioned. In our county, one of those gentlemen, perhaps the most distinguished member of the profession in Ireland, Sir Charles Cameron, had made his bargain with the different unions in the county, and instead of getting £25, for which he had been willing to do the work, under the Grand Jury, he would have made about £300 a year. We, as a county council, were not going to have the ratepayers treated in that way, and we interfered, and decided that unless he would accept £50 and do all the work of the unions, we would remove him as county analyst. He agreed, cancelled his bargain, and took our offer. That was another instance in which the Board had a little list, but how do we know that in other appointments we may have to make they have not other little lists introducing similar conditions? The Government have refused to give us a Catholic University in Ireland, and while we have got a semblance of local government, how do we know but by insisting on certain University tests for candidates, our Catholic fellow-countrymen will be excluded, and we may have to still appoint the same old parties who have monopolised all these things in the past? These are some of the reasons upon which I justify our claim to have a board of control in Ireland elected by representatives of the ratepayers, and if a county council or a district council appeals to this board they will have power to make an order. Clause 5 deals with demands ordered by a judge of assize. There is an obvious misprint here which makes it somewhat obscure. This clause deals with what are known as imperative presentments, but the particular clause to which we take exception is the one dealing with the free quartering of extra police on different districts. There is no such power in England or Scotland, and in those countries the Executive have no power to quarter police on any part of the country they please. This clause is introduced to bring about an equality of the law of Ireland with the law of England and Scotland, and its object is to have some control over the action and whims of an irresponsible Executive, and to prevent the free quartering of any police on particular districts. In this matter we ask for equality between the law of Ireland and England and Scotland. Irishmen get more than a share of their equality when taking the risks of the battlefield. We ask for some equality in the blessings of peace. Clause 6 deals with the question of money and rates. Of course we ask for money in this Bill. There is a saying in Ireland "That every aristocrat's stick has a silver top," and "That every sermon ends in money." We ask that there may be some equality between the treatment given to English occupiers and to Irish occupiers. In England, when you gave the agricultural grant to the English occupiers, they got the full benefit of it. But in Ireland, when you gave the Agricultural Grant, you voted one half of it directly into the pockets of the landlords. All we ask is that Irish occupiers shall get the full benefit of the Agricultural Grant, and the amount we ask for is something slightly in excess of what the landlords are getting under the Agricultural Grant. At the passing of the Act, you promised us three quarters of a million; you have only given us £722,000. In that characteristic manner in which you give doles from your Imperial Treasury you have "docked" us of £25,000 from the sum you promised at the passing of this Act. In the county where I am on the new bodies the Local Government Board are giving their attention to preparing lists of favourite officials instead of giving us information of finance affecting the rates of the county. As far as I can make out in our county—and I had the assistance of a distinguished financier who examined the figures—I found from our scrutiny that, so far as we could make out the returns, we were about £1,000 short compared with what we should have got under the Agricultural Grant. I find that the Most Rev. Dr. Kelly has gone very carefully into these figures, as they affect the Asylum grants, and he finds that the Imperial Treasury have deprived us of a great deal of money which we were entitled to at the passing of the Local Government Act. He says—

"In October, 1897, the British Treasury had received £159,000 of Irish money from the Irish publicans. That amount was a payment for twelve months. Out of that payment the British Treasury had defrayed the expenses of Irish Asylums only for three months up to the end of the year 1897, and then shifted the burden to the Irish Taxation Account. What right had the Treasury to receive and retain twelve months' income, while defraying only three months' liabilities?"

That is the statement of the manner in which we have been treated in regard to the Agricultural Grant to which we were entitled according to the statement of the right hon. Gentleman on the opposite bench. As a private Member I could not, of course, introduce any Bill which would mean a draft on the Consolidated Fund, but I have mentioned the Irish Church surplus. In the Queen's Speech you were striving to give that fund to the landlords, most of whom are absentees from Ireland, and are a worthless class who are no use to you now that you are in a difficulty. I contend that it is far better that this money, if it is to be given in relief of rates, should be given in the Irish towns and on farm buildings. I think there is a wide difference to be drawn upon this question of buildings and their rating in Ireland and England. England is a manufacturing country, while Ireland is an agricultural country, and the little towns live on the agricultural industry, and when it is depressed, they are depressed. It is not so in England, where you depend on manufacturing industries. Therefore, buildings in Ireland should not be treated on the same lines and principles which are applied to them in England and Scotland. If this money is voted, it should be voted in relief of the buildings on farms and in relief of the rates in the towns in Ireland. I am sure you could not give the money from the Imperial Treasury to a better purpose than that of enabling public bodies in Ireland to apply it to matters dealing with the health of the people, sanitation, waterworks, and the building of better houses for the artisans. You could not vote money for a better purpose than that of enabling these public bodies to go on with this work of improving the towns of Ireland. The next clause is one by which we propose that the rates of any hereditament under £4 valuation, if two thirds of the county council or urban council decree it, shall be levied on the landlord, as was the case in the past. There is nothing very novel in this proposal. The hon. Gentleman the Member for North Belfast introduced a clause in the Local Government Bill by which he applied this very provision to county boroughs, and it is now the law, and we simply ask that the powers of that clause shall be extended from the boroughs in Ireland to the county councils and urban councils, because most of the poverty exists in the small villages in Ireland. I have seen since the change came into operation that the rating authorities have had to go to the houses of the very poorest people and claim rates which are in many cases equal to the entire earnings of the family for a single week, and many of them have had to go without food on that account. We cannot levy rates on poor washerwomen, and people living in wretched hovels. The result is that such rates have to be levied on the solvent ratepayers. Consequently the owners of this slum property—and there is no property pays so well, for they make more profit out of slum property than decent houses—escaped their rates and put them on to the other ratepayers. This proposal is already the law in some parts of Ireland, and that law should be clearly and equitably extended to the whole country. We put on a check that this power can only be exercised by a two-thirds majority. There is also in the Bill a minor proposal dealing with the urban districts which become urban authorities. If a town in Ireland proposes to become an urban sanitary authority, only one-fourth of the rates fall on the lands and the other three-fourths fall on the occupier. That is a small question, but it has prevented those people in Ireland becoming urban authorities, and I think it should be the policy to encourage urban authorities that are inclined towards progress and improvement. Then we have another clause, which states that the contributory areas for special sanitary charges shall be determined by the district council. At present these are only fixed with the sanction of the Local Government Board. When special sanitary work was done for a special district, the old rule was that the expense should be charged to the area which derives the benefit of it. The Local Government Board does not care about doubling salaries, but if a parish pump has to be provided that Board steps in and says that in the interests of economy they cannot sanction it—that it would complicate the book-keeping, and cause more expense. The result is that they put an embargo and a block on all sanitary improvement. When the Local Government Board talk of economy it reminds me of Mark Twain's saying, "It would almost make a cast-iron dog laugh." And now as to the exclusion of clergymen from our local boards: the clause proposed in this Bill is copied from the English County Council Act of 1888. We say that the present law excluding the clergy—who, after all, in Ireland are in a great majority priests—is a slur upon them. It is a re-enacting of the old penal laws; it is monstrous, and I shall always protest against it. The next clause deals with the question of the magistrates in Ireland. It is copied nearly word for word from the English Act, and we claim the equality of Ireland with England. We say that the magistrates in Ireland appointed by the votes of the people should be as independent as the magistrates elected by the votes of the people in England. If a magistrate commits himself, or is guilty of some act of indiscretion, we say, let him be tried as a magistrate in England is tried, in open court, but do not let him be tried in secret by the Lord Chancellor of Ireland. The next question we have to deal with is the use of court-houses, schoolrooms, and other buildings, the expense of which is provided for out of the rates. This clause is copied from the Scotch Act. In Scotland you can hold meetings in any room built out of the public rates. There is no restriction as to class or political opinion. I have myself addressed an Irish Nationalist meeting in a public building in Scotland, got under this clause by Irish Nationalists residing there, but if I go over to Ireland I am prevented from doing so. Now, I say in a matter like that we should have equality of treatment, and that the Irish should not have this badge of inferiority put on them. The question of the use of court houses in Ireland has become acute during the last few months, and I am aware that a great deal of the trouble about it was stirred up by a secret circular issued to the sheriffs by Dublin Castle. It was all because the green flag had been hoisted above a court-house, and the circular commanded the sheriffs to interfere. In the county I represent I heard the sheriff—who is a gentleman, who has lived in England a considerable time, and for that reason has, perhaps, more common-sense—say :

Mr. Tully.

“You may hang the green flag from every pane of glass in the building so far as I am concerned, but I have been directed by Dublin Castle, and I must obey my instructions, to prevent you decorating the court-house, if you call it a decoration, with the green flag.”

If I ask for the use of a court-house for the purpose of political meetings it is looked upon as a blasphemy, whereas in Scotland you are allowed to hold such meetings in court-houses, schoolrooms, or any public building erected out of the rates. When you draw this hard and fast line how does it work out in Ireland? In the principal cities and large towns, where politics are supposed to be worked up to fever heat, you have town-halls, built out of the public rates, where meetings can be held, either national or Tory, and all kinds of politics talked; but in the little country towns, where the court-house is the only building large enough for any public meeting, and where life is sad and dull enough, Dublin Castle steps in, prevents a meeting being held, and the court-house remains empty as if it were sacrosanct. I say that it is a monstrous thing. I know that a creamery society, promoted by the right hon. Gentleman the Vice-President of the new Board of Agriculture in Ireland, was actually put out of a court-house. In my own union we have allowed the meetings of his creamery society in our Board room, and I suppose the Local Government Board will come down upon us and turn them out. We are compelled under the law passed in 1898 to hold quarterly meetings of the district council, at which the public have a right by statute to admission. At these meetings the road contractors are appointed, and hundreds have to attend with their sureties. When in Strokestown, in my county, the district council went to discharge this public duty, they found the door of the court house barred and bolted against them, and all because they did not issue a placard summoning the meeting, stating that it was held by permission of the sheriff. The district councils replace the old presentment sessions, which always held their meetings in the court house, but because the councils are elected by the votes of the people, and because their members are drawn from a different class to the old presentment sessions, they cannot hold their meetings unless they put on their placards the badge of inferiority, “We meet by permission of the sheriff.” We find that rooms in these court-houses are used, and have been used for years, for the meetings of the local Freemason lodges and as rent offices, and recently the Sligo court-house was used for the sheriff’s family ball. I shall very briefly refer to the remaining proposals of the Bill. One of them deals with the question of the width of roads. In the old days the grand juries made all the roads for the convenience of the districts in which they themselves lived, and the more populous districts—the mountains, bogs and swamps into which the poor were driven—were left without sufficient road accommodation. The people were compelled to pay for the beautiful roads leading to the deserted houses of landlords, while they themselves had no roads leading to their villages. The greatest amount of inconvenience is caused by this want of roads. Corpses have to be carried over ditches and fields, and clergymen and doctors have to travel through fields to many houses. According to the Act new roads must be sixteen feet wide, and we ask power to make roads in the poorer districts twelve feet wide. It is in the interests of economy, as four feet makes a great difference in the amount of land required. In

Mr. Tully.

Devonshire and also in France there are narrow lanes, and all we ask is that instead of an arbitrary rule being fixed it should be left to the discretion of the county councils to make roads of any any width not less than twelve feet. Of course in such roads stopping places can be provided, as in Devonshire, to allow carts to pass, and no objection to the proposal can be taken on that ground. Another proposal in the Bill provides for direct labour. In some counties this proposal has not been served by the indiscreet advocacy of some new found friends of labour drawn from the camp of hon. Gentlemen opposite. We think that it is an important question if we are to have good roads in Ireland. In England and Scotland the local bodies can employ labour direct to make or repair roads, and we claim the same right in Ireland. The grand juries were tied up by the contract system. It was probably one of the necessities of the case, because they only met twice a year. But the new bodies meet more often—the district councils meet nearly every week—and there would be perfect supervision and no abuse if labour were directly employed. When the new bodies were elected the contractors, who had systematically neglected the roads under the grand juries, imagined they had nothing more to do except to incur the inconvenience of coming to the meetings of the councils for their cheques. We could not find our way to agree to that arrangement, and we were not going to put up with high rates and bad roads. We put down our foot, and the contractors howled when we insisted that there should be good roads. Under one of the provisions of the Act I was, fortunately, able to secure five miles of road for direct labour. The ratepayers thought we were going to rob them, but the result was that we had better roads than we ever had before. The contractors became frightened, they believed the labourers would compete against them for the roads, and contractors who had never swept the roads before are now buying brushes. I think, therefore, that the new bodies in Ireland ought to have the power to employ direct labour. Another clause in the Bill deals with provisional orders. It may seem a contradiction that the first part of the Bill provides that the powers of the Local Government Board should be curtailed, whereas the last clause proposes that provisional orders made by them should not require the sanction of Parliament. It is, however, a very real hardship, and we ask that when a Provisional Order is made by the Local Government Board it ought to be accepted. In one town I know we are promoting a scheme for the better housing of artisans. In that town a penny in the £ produces only £18, and because of some difficulties in Chancery, although there is no opposition we must get compulsory powers and come to Parliament to have the Provisional Order of the Local Government Board confirmed. I say we should get some modification of the law in that respect. Another provision in the Bill proposes the total abolition of claims for malicious injuries. Such claims have always been a fraud and a sham, and no similar power exists in England or Scotland. We claim equality in the matter. Why cannot property be insured, as in this country, against injuries which are only too often inflicted in the interests of the owners? I must apologise for having taken up so much of the time of the House. As I said at the beginning, this is a very complex question, and one full of grave and serious difficulties, especially when we are compelled to bring it forward by way of Bill. But owing to the new rules of Supply we have been deprived of the opportunity of debating the action of the Local Government Board in connection with the administration of the new Act, and accordingly the Board has escaped the criticism it should receive from the representatives of the people in Parliament. I do not know whether I can appeal to hon. Gentlemen opposite to give this Bill favourable consideration. Perhaps if the right hon. Gentleman, whose absence we all deplore, had been present and had been able to listen to the case we submit he would consider it, and perhaps embody some of the reforms we ask for in the law of the land. Notice of opposition to the Second Reading has been put down by an hon. Gentleman opposite, who, as far as I know, has never been in Ireland in his life. Because we ask for equality in the law as between England and Ireland the hon. Gentleman, who knows little or nothing about Irish affairs, blocks our Bill, and I suppose the big battalions of the Government will fling it out later on. I heard one of the military Members opposite say, yesterday, what he would not give for 100,000 Irishmen in the present crisis of English affairs. To begin with, will he give us this Bill, which hurts no Imperial interest, and is a mere fragment of the rights we are entitled to? Very probably that hon. and gallant Gentleman will be found in the lobby against us this evening, and as long as our reasonable demands are treated in this way you need not expect us to take that sympathetic interest in your troubles that you now appear to require from us.

MR. DALY (Monaghan, S.): My task in seconding the motion will be very easy, considering the brilliant manner in which my hon. friend has treated this question and the number of details into which he has gone. I think the experience of every Irish Member in this House is that very seldom does a measure affecting Ireland pass into law which is perfect, and it is for the purpose of endeavouring to repair some of the cracks and flaws, and to supply omissions in the Local Government Act of 1898 that my hon. friend has drafted the little Bill, the First Reading of which he has just moved. After twelve months' working of this Act we have discovered in it defects which it is necessary to remedy, and, in view of the admirable manner in which the county and districts councils have discharged their duties under it, I do hope we shall obtain from the Attorney General for Ireland some assurance that the Government are prepared to give favourable consideration to our proposals. It must be admitted that, after all, when the Bill passed into law it was not much more than a mere skeleton. It took the Local Government Board a long time to fill up the crevices and to put some clothing upon it. That clothing is still ill-fitting. To show how little regard was paid to the Bill when it was passing through this House I may point out that one of its provisions was that the urban council elections should take place on Sunday, the 15th January, and this, not unnaturally, caused a great deal of uneasiness among the people of Ireland, who were shocked at the idea that the sanctity of the Sabbath was thus to be desecrated. I admit that the error was remedied, and that the elections were held on a Monday. But that does not do away with the fact that there were a great many heart-burnings on the point among the Irish people. Seeing that this Act embodies the Grand Jury, the Poor Law Relief, and many other Acts, it is not to be wondered at that there are defects to be found in it, and I believe that if the Government were to accept the measure of my hon. friend it would rectify many of those defects, and ensure much more smooth working in the future. I think the suggestion of my hon. friend the Member for South Leitrim, to establish a Board of Control, is a very happy one. At the present moment there is no such board. The whole of the work falls on the Local Government Board, and, from my experience of more than twenty years in connection with boards of guardians and other local bodies, I must say that the Local Government Board is unsympathetic and unrepresentative of the feelings of the Irish people. It is for the purpose of endeavouring to secure some representation of the people that this provision has been introduced into the Bill. I do not see how a Board of Control could do the least harm. It would be representative of the four great provinces of Ireland, as well as of the cities and boroughs, and inasmuch as the Local Government Board would have two members upon it, I cannot see where any injury is to come in from the acceptance of the provision. I believe, on the contrary, it would give the Irish people confidence in the working of the Act, and at the same time it would relieve the Chief Secretary for Ireland of some of his too numerous duties. We all regret that the right hon. Gentleman is not here to-day; we regret, too, the cause of his absence. We all hope that he will be back before long. But we cannot be surprised at his being laid up, considering the arduous work he is called upon to perform. He is suffering from what we may call a sweating system. He has to appear in so many different capacities that it is surprising he should ever be able to fulfil all his duties. Whether rightly or wrongly, the idea has grown up in the minds of the Irish people that the Local Government Act is being worked in such a way as to discredit them. There is no hangover of the Local Government Board who is not flouting the voices of the representatives of the people. They dictate terms to those representatives, and, in fact, so great has been the increase in salaries through the intervention of the Local Government Board that the Act will be of very little use to the people for a great many years to come. My hon. friend has cited a number of instances in which the Local Government Board have interfered and increased salaries, and have flouted the views of the representatives of the people on the local boards of Ireland. It is unnecessary for me, therefore, to bring forward any further cases to prove the un rebuttable case which my hon. friend has placed before you. I will, however, refer to one. The Castleblaney Board of Guardians quite recently was called upon to appoint a clerk to the union, and they fixed a salary which they deemed adequate for the performance of the duties. But the Local Government Board for three months refused to sanction that salary, although during the whole of the interval the guardians were plagued with applicants for the post at the salary they had fixed. Why should guardians, who know the wants of a district, and exactly what the duties of an officer are, be thus interfered with by the Local Government Board? Then there is the case of the dispensary doctors' holidays. An order—I say nothing as to whether it is right or wrong—has been issued by the Local Government Board upon this subject, and I would ask why should boards of guardians be coerced in this matter? Our workhouses have been built for at least fifty years, and it is an extraordinary thing that it is only when the landlords are relieved of the duty of paying half the poor rates that the Local Government Board come forward and compel boards of guardians to give holidays to the doctors. I put a question to the Chief Secretary on this subject the other day, and asked whether the board of guardians had been consulted in the matter. The answer was in the negative. When later on I asked if it were not a fact that the giving of these holidays involved an expenditure of from £15,000 to £20,000, the right hon. Gentleman did not deny it, but he pointed out that it only represented about half a farthing in the pound of the ratepayers' money. But surely the fact of the cost being so small does not justify the refusal to recoup boards of guardians for an outlay as to the necessity for which they were never consulted. If a doctor falls sick he is entitled to have a substitute appointed in addition.

Mr. Tully.

*THE SECRETARY TO THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD (Mr. T. W. RUSSELL, Tyrone, S.): Why not?

MR. DALY: I am not disputing that. But I am contending that this is a matter which ought to be left in the hands of boards of guardians. Why did not the hon. Member for South Tyrone advocate this change before the landlords escaped paying half the poor rates?

*MR. T. W. RUSSELL: The hon. Member is speaking in ignorance of the facts. For years before I occupied a seat on this front bench I brought in a Bill for the better treatment of dispensary doctors in Ireland, and it would have been passed but for the opposition of a few of the hon. Members opposite.

MR. DALY: It is extraordinary how the opposition of Members on this side of the House prevailed when the landlords were in power. The moment they got out of power our opposition becomes of no effect. The hon. Member talks about my ignorance of the facts, but it seems to me that he thought it a good thing to go before the country and say, "I am in favour of holidays for the doctors, and I will bring in a Bill to secure them, knowing as I do that so long as the landlords are in power it can be brushed aside by the opposition of a few Nationalist Members, but the moment the Local Government Act is passed the Irish Members need not be consulted, and the thing can be done." Why, I again ask, did not the hon. Gentleman do it before the landlords were relieved of the payment of half the poor rates? I believe that if he had been as zealous in pushing this matter forward before the Local Government Act was passed as he now is, the result would have been that we should have got a much larger grant from the Government.

*MR. T. W. RUSSELL: All the Bills I introduced were before the Local Government Act was passed, when the landlords paid half the poor rate, and I repeat, though the majority of the Irish Members were in favour of them, a few Members opposite successfully opposed them.

MR. DALY: I hope the hon. Gentleman has improved his opinion by the explanation. At the same time I am unconvinced. I accept the explanation for what it is worth, and put the cloak of sincerity over it in charity. He did his best under the circumstances. Since the passage of the Local Government Act the Local Government Board have issued orders for making workhouses into a sort of high-class hotel. This has only been done since the rates fell upon tenants and occupiers, and the landlords consequently escape. The Local Government Board know so little about the country districts that they tar them all with the same brush. They do not know which treat the poor well and which do not, so they issue the same hard and fast rule to the whole of the boards of guardians. I say the board of guardians of which I am a member has not been well treated, and that the benefits received from the Agricultural Grant will be scarcely noticed in that district. The average cost on the rates is 1s. 1d. in the £, and after receiving the Agricultural Grant the increases we had to make one way and the other very nearly absorbed it. Then as to the clerks of the unions in Ireland who had to keep the union rating, all that has now been transferred to the county council, but the Local Government Board says the salaries of those gentlemen are not to be less than before, though they perform less duties. In some instances there have been increases of salary. The hon. Gentleman need not shake his head.

MR. ATKINSON: I do not question the hon. Gentleman's statement, but I deny that any salary has been increased whilst the duty has been decreased.

MR. DALY: I will now pass on to a grievance much felt in Ireland, namely, clergymen not being allowed to be members of boards of guardians. In a great many districts they are the largest ratepayers, and it is shocking that the largest ratepayer and generally the best educated man in the district should be said to be not qualified to act on the board of guardians or the district council, when those who cannot write their own names are qualified. I would rather have a clergyman on the council than his nominee, for there may be some reason in arguing with him, but if any man is brought in as his nominee he will not budge a sixteenth of an inch, whatever reason you bring to bear. This is my opinion after twelve months experience of the work of the Local Government Act. There is one other matter I would like to refer to, and that is that the ratepayers of Ireland who pay the salary cannot appoint the court-house porter. Is it any wonder that we are not satisfied, and have grave suspicion of the laws which are made for us in this House? This Bill may amend some of the errors of the Local Government Act; it is a very useful Bill, and it would smooth away many difficulties in the working of the Local Government Act.

Motion made and Question proposed—
"That the Bill be now read a second time."—(Mr. Tully.)

MR. ARCHDALE (Fermanagh, N.) said he did not propose to offer many remarks upon the proposed Bill. When the Local Government Bill was brought in last year, against the wishes of the majority of the Unionist Members, they determined to give it the most loyal support, and since it had passed into law they had done their utmost to facilitate the working of the Act in every possible way. While there were some clauses of the new Bill which were most useful, he could not disguise his opposition to the principle of the measure, more particularly to the suggested Board of Control. The Board of Control would do away with the Local Government Board, and while he admitted that the latter body was not under sufficient control, he could see no advantage in having a Local Government Board in Ireland if there was to be a Board of Control to override its decisions. In moving the Second Reading of the Bill the hon. Member asserted that the Bill introduced the same system of control as the Agricultural Act passed last session. It was not the same system. The Agricultural Board was an advisory Board; the Board of Control under the Bill would be a supreme Board. He thought it was a great pity that politics were so largely introduced in the county councils, and that there seemed to be no prospect of meeting in a central association of the county councils in Dublin to assist the Local Government Board without the political element presenting itself. He thought the Local Government Board interfered to a considerable extent more than they should, but in a great many cases with a good deal of reason. One of the cases mentioned was that of the Sisters of Mercy in the unions. Nobody appreciated the good qualities of the Sisters of Mercy and nuns more than he did, but he believed that the nuns acting as nurses in the different unions were not allowed, according to the rules of the order, to act at night. At that time, therefore, paupers were left to the mercy of some idiotic old pauper who knew nothing about nursing, and that, be it noted, at the very time they most required attention. He did not think that was the proper state of affairs. Nurses should be available both night and day, to do all the good they could for the poor of their respective neighbourhoods, receiving fair pay and fair treatment. He could not help thinking that dispensary doctors in Ireland got the very worst of treatment. He believed that his Unionist colleagues were most anxious to give them good treatment and good pay. He knew that many hon. Members on the other side were also most anxious to see them fairly treated, but unfortunately many of the district councillors did not seem to have the knowledge and understanding of the subject of the old guardians, and in their endeavours to save the rates treated the doctors as if they were not worth their proper pay. As to the proposed repeal of the fifth section of the Local Government Act, he thought that to put England on a par with Ireland in the matter of malicious injuries was to lead the House to a false impression as to what would happen in the country. It was no good to put England on a parallel with Ireland, for everybody knew that the same things did not happen there. Many of them followed the meetings of the United Irish League in the same way that they used to follow the meetings of the Irish National League. He had not so much objection to the rating of the owner instead of the occupier in the case of small tenements under £4. Many of these men were very poor, and the collection gave the rate collector an immense amount of trouble. As to Clause 10, he had not the least objection to a clergyman or priest, or minister of any denomination, being a councillor, but he must say that he did not think it was proper work for them. He thought a minister of religion had much better attend to his own work, and from what he knew of clergymen, he did not think they were particularly anxious to do the work. He saw no objection to Clause 12, entitling the county councils to the use of the court house. As to the direct labour clause (Clause 15), his experience was that labour for the councils was entirely contrary to cheapness and also to good roads. As a county councillor and district councillor he did not think the proposed Board of Control would add to economy, to good work, or to anything conducive to the good of Ireland, and for that reason he was totally opposed to the Amendment Act which the hon. Member had brought forward.

Mr. Daly.

MR. JORDAN (Fermanagh, S.): I rise to support this Bill. The arbitrary action of that irresponsible Board in Dublin, the Local Government Board, compels us to seek redress in this House. The Local Government Board in Dublin is an aggregation of fortuitous atoms responsible to no one. It acts on its own initiative; it rules at its own sweet will; it has no responsibility; it is accountable to no one; it is perfectly absolute and despotic in Ireland; whereas in England the Local Government is a State department, and is managed and represented in this House by a Cabinet Minister and an Under Secretary of State, whose sole business is to attend to that department, and who are accountable to this House for its right administration. But with us, local government is not a department of State, and we have no Parliamentary representative responsible. For although the Chief Secretary for Ireland is said to be the head of the Irish Local Government Board, he does not stand in the same relation to us as the right hon. the President and the Member for South Tyrone stand to the English Local Government Board. The Chief Secretary has too much to do, he is President of too many Boards in Ireland, and it is impossible that he in Ireland could attend, as your Minister in England does, to any one department, and it would be unfair to ask him. We are thus left at the mercy of a coterie of officials in the Custom House, and at the whim of every secretary and clerk in the offices of the Local Government Board to interpret Acts as he thinks fit and to issue mandates to local bodies, irrespective of their applicability, convenience, or expense. To such an extent have the Local Government Board persisted and insisted on their commands being obeyed by urban, district, and county councils and board of guardians, that it has become a public scandal; and there is little but friction and irritation between them and public boards. I have no doubt their orders are often illegal, but they know it is hard for small boards to fight a public department. And then if they have not law they make it in a handy manner by an order in council or a rule. And the most extraordinary part of the case is that all their instructions are in the direction of additional labour to local officials and additional expense, and that to such an extent that I consider the whole of the Agricultural Grant will soon be absorbed in salaries of new men, in additional salaries to old hands, in pensions and expenses of printing, and of various other kinds, until the farmers won't derive a penny-worth of benefit from the grant. They won't assist local authorities to reduce expenditure or even to conduct business at moderate expenditure. Everything is made as expensive as possible. You cannot resist the impression that the Local Government Board intends to penalise Irish ratepayers, that the Local Government Act may become so distasteful to them that they will seek to get back to the old grand jury system to rid themselves of this expensive luxury—more particularly since the landlord goes scot free. If this be true—and it is true—is it any wonder we claim some court of appeal, some responsible tribunal, against the arbitrary decisions of the Local Government Board? Having so arraigned this Board, I think it is only just to prove my case. I shall not deal in generalities. I will cite their action in the county of Fermanagh—the county I represent, both here and on the local boards. I will first state the action of the Local Government Board in regard to the Fermanagh County Council, and in reference to the salary and emoluments of the secretary of the council. An off-scion of one of the respectable houses of the county was appointed some years ago to be secretary of the grand jury at a net salary of £306 a year. The place was a sinecure: a clerk ran the concern for fees while the secretary walked about smoking cigars—he smokes cigarettes now. The council did not wish to dismiss him. They knew he would do little. They appointed three clerks to do the work; they took him at the estimate of the grand jury, who were his friends, and knew his worth. We took him on at their estimate and a little more, for the finance committee fixed his salary at £310 a year. This recommendation came before the county council, and they unanimously adopted the committee's report. He appealed to the Local Government Board, and what was the result? The Local Government Board, without consulting us, without asking our reasons for our decision, without any consideration whatever, in the most arbitrary and despotic manner wrote us that they— they, mark you—had fixed his salary at £500 a year, or £190 of an advance. The announcement fell on the council like a lyddite shell, and several Tory members said, "There is no use in us sitting here as registering machines of the Local Government Board in Dublin. We had better retire and let them do the business themselves." I say it was an insult to override our decision in such a way, and no man will sit on county councils and be dealt with in such a drastic and despotic manner as that. Again, we had voted him £60 as expenses for bringing the Act into operation, and on his appeal, without any reference to us whatever, the Local Government Board in the same arbitrary manner wrote to say they had fixed the sum at £100, or £40 more for this small transaction. We knew the merits of the case; they knew nothing about them, only on the ex parte statement of the secretary. The next thing we hear is that Inspector Saunderson came down to see a certain number of books which have to be inspected every week. When we appointed the three clerks these books were brought to the table, and we were told that the three clerks were necessary to check these books weekly. When the inspector came down to make his inspection the secretary told him—privately, of course—that he could not do all this work weekly, and it was too much for him and the three clerks, and they could not do it. After that we had a recommendation from the Local Government Board, through the inspector, that we should appoint another clerk in addition to the other three, to assist the secretary to do the work, for which we had already appointed three clerks. I think it is perfectly preposterous that we should be treated in this manner by the Local Government Board. I must say that the county council of Fermanagh are most anxious to administer the affairs of the county honestly, fairly, and justly to all parties concerned. It is a Unionist council, and not one of those tag-rag-and-bobtail Nationalist councils. The Earl of Erne is the chairman, and he is a most respectable chairman. And yet this is the way the Local Government Board treats the Unionist council for Fermanagh. I think the least the Local Government Board might have done was to consult us before deciding to make these increases. So indignant was the county council that they at once passed the following resolution, which I will read to the House. His Lordship was in the chair, and the resolution is as follows—

Mr. Jordan.

“ We hereby protest in the strongest possible manner against what this council considers the most high-handed action of the Local Government Board in fixing the salary of the secretary of the council at £500—i.e., £190 over what this council, after due deliberation, thought was quite sufficient, and at granting him £40 over our decision for bringing the Local Government Act into operation, and that we hereby refuse to accept their decision on the matter, and resolve by every means at our disposal to re-ist it.”

What must have been the indignation of that Unionist council, with Lord Erne in the chair, when they passed such a resolution unanimously, without a dissenting voice? I say that when such a resolution can be passed unanimously by the county council of Fermanagh the action of the Local Government Board stands condemned. I see the Under Secretary for the English Local Government Board in his place, and I ask him what would he have done under such circumstances? My opinion is that the President and the Under Secretary himself would have written to the local authority asking them their reasons for their action, and they would probably have sent an inspector down to investigate the matter. All we want is that, if there should happen to be a difference of opinion between us and the officers of the Local Government Board, we should be heard on the other side. If we are heard fairly on the other side then we might arrive at a conclusion by compromise satisfactory to all parties. But for the Local Government Board in Dublin to sit upon us in this way is more than honourable and respectable men can bear, and we won't bear it.

The Fermanagh County Council will carry out that resolution, and they will refuse to pay these sums when the bill is sent in. We had a case not long ago in connection with the poor law guardians. Dr. Clark, one of the dispensers, had charge of six divisions, and his salary was £120 a year. In re-arranging the districts one of these divisions was taken away from him, and the Local Government Board wrote down to the board of guardians, asking them to consider this question, and a full board met to discuss the matter. After due deliberation the board decided to reduce Dr. Clark's salary by one-sixth, leaving the other five divisions at £20 each. It was also decided at the same meeting to give him five years' compensation for the loss of the sixth division, and that was in accordance with the Board's view of the Act. They decided to pay him £100 compensation, but the Local Government Board in a few days changed their mind, and after asking us to consider the question, which we did to the best of our ability and favourably to the doctor, the Local Government Board changed their mind, and said, “ This won't do at all, and you have not got the right theory.” They then increased the salary to £108, and I consider that such action is only mocking us, and is not fair. Then there was the case of the clerk to the union. The Attorney General has stated that there was no case in which an increase of salary had been made to the clerk of the union where the work was reduced. But the clerk to our board has had his work reduced, and yet we pay him the same salary. The other day £60 a year was fixed as his salary as secretary to the rural district council. That is the way the money is voted. Our clerk is a most efficient clerk, and we had got a set of very expensive books sent down, and we asked the Local Government Board to allow us to work our books as before. But, regardless altogether of expense, the Local Government Board said we must throw our books away and have a new set, in order to facilitate the work of the auditor, and they compelled us to get a new set of books. The result was that to keep this difficult set of books we were compelled to add £75 a year to the clerk's salary. That is the way the money is going in the county of Fermanagh, where we seem to have no control whatever over the expenditure.

We are told that this is popular local county government, but it is anything but popular. We are elected, but we are made simply the machines to carry out the whims and fads of the Local Government Board. You talk about a despotic oligarchy in the Transvaal. That may be so, but there is no more despotic oligarchy on the face of the earth to-day, than the half-dozen irresponsible gentlemen on this committee called the Local Government Board, and are we to get no redress? Are we to be always the football of the Local Government Board? Are we to have no control and no court of appeal? I greatly regret that the Chief Secretary for Ireland is not in his place, and I am always suspicious when I see the Attorney General here. I have a most profound respect for him as a lawyer, but he is icy, and if you want anything of the warmth of reform you will not get it from him. He can point out to you the difference between tweedledee and tweedledum splendidly, but you get nothing from him, and I say this with the most profound respect. We might get something from the Chief Secretary for Ireland, because he once said himself that he would like to be in power to see how this scheme would work in Ireland, and I have no doubt that he desires to see the Act work well. If the Chief Secretary were here now and had these things pointed out to him, he might as a statesman—not as a lawyer—give some consideration to what we are saying, because we are pointing out facts and not mere theory. In conclusion I say that, we ought to have some elected body, some board of control by which we should have an appeal against the decisions of the Local Government Board, so that the side of the county councils and district councils should be heard, and in order that we should get some consideration.

MR. GRANT LAWSON (Yorkshire, W.R., Thirsk): My hon. friend, in his eloquent speech, has found fault with my moving the rejection of this Bill, because I am not the representative of an Irish constituency. It is rather a novel argument to urge that English Members are not to take an interest in Irish Bills. I think it would be well if not only Unionist Members from England, but also the Liberal Members from England, were present upon the occasion of the discussion of such Bills as this. I desire that Ireland should be governed, as far as possible, in accordance with Irish ideas, but this measure goes considerably beyond that limit. It is necessary to make a careful study of all the proposals made by Irish Members, and these Bills are valuable because they throw a curious light upon the sort of legislation which Irish Members would be likely to put forward if they had an Irish Parliament. They also have some interest of a literary character, and I will give presently some illustrations. Irish measures have all one great fault in practical legislation, and that is that they attempt to do too much. The ardent spirits and eloquent minds of hon. Gentlemen opposite often exceed the limits of possible legislation allowed by the rules of this House to private Members. This Bill bristles with principles every one of which is suitable for a full-dress Second Reading debate. If I may say so, the main principle of the Bill is the establishment of a Board of Control. But there are in this Bill other principles as loosely strung together as are the beads on a necklace of sham pearls. The principle of this measure is that this House was altogether wrong in the year 1898, when it passed the Irish Local Government Act. That is the second principle underlying this Bill. But I will explain to the House what happened in that year. A great many of the clauses contained in this Bill were proposed as amendments to the Local Government Act. A considerable discussion took place on the subject raised by Clause 8. Clause 10 deals with the question whether clergymen in holy orders should be eligible as members of councils and poor law boards. But this question has also been debated, not long ago, in this House, and defeated by 127 votes to 88. I am not speaking now of the merits of these proposals. Now, it took almost all the power of the Chief Secretary and nearly all the time of the whole session to pass that measure through Parliament two years ago, and the hon. Member opposite now picks out all the controversial points raised in the discussion of that Act, and puts them all into a private Member's Bill, which he asks us to pass in the time—or his share of the time—at the disposal of private Members. I will come back to the fundamental principle of this Bill, and that is the Board of Control. This Board of Control is a very interesting body, formed for the purpose of assisting the Local Government Board in carrying out the Local Government (Ireland) Act, 1898. The House is well aware of the terrible confusion caused in the East India Company by the Board of Control, and I should have thought that the words "Board of Control" would have been avoided in this Bill. Clause 2 says that—"The Board of Control shall consist of the following members—(a) Four persons to be appointed by the chairmen of the thirty-three councils in the prescribed manner; (b) one person to be appointed by the mayors of the six county boroughs; (c) two members of the Local Government Board."

Mr. Jordan.

That is to say, this body is to form machinery for forming itself—an un-created body is to create machinery for its own creation. What is this body to do? Clause 3 says—

"The Board of Control shall meet at least four times a year for the purpose of discussing matters of public interest in connection with any purposes of this Act or the principal Act."

Well, if the power of this Board is limited to debating, that is a wide subject for a limited debating society. Its real object is to weaken the Local Government Board, because only two members of that Board are to be allowed to be upon it, and five out of the seven controllers are to be appointed by the bodies to be controlled. But to get at the real power to be conferred on this Board of Control we must go to Clause 4—

"When, after the passing of this Act, any orders are made by the Local Government Board affecting any county or district council, or poor law board, any such council or board may, within the prescribed time, and in the prescribed manner, appeal therefrom to the Board of Control; and the Board of Control shall at the hearing of such appeal have power, after hearing the parties, in such manner as they think fit, to confirm, annul, or vary any such order."

That is to say, this Board of Control shall have power to review the decisions of the Local Government Board. We have heard much of the conduct of the Irish Local Government Board in connection with certain local government bodies in Ireland. I cannot go into these domestic squabbles; but nearly all the things complained of in this debate, nearly all the powers exercised by the Local Government Board in Ireland can, under the law of England, be exercised by the English Local Government Board with regard to local authorities here. We know that the English Local Government Board has produced uniformity and efficiency in local government. The yoke which the greatest and oldest municipalities in England bear willingly and contentedly the new-born Irish authorities call out against as the gravest tyranny. Would a change be for the better? The Irish Local Government Board have accumulated great experience, and have a staff of inspectors who are paid. The members of the Board of Control are not to be paid, and there is no provision in the Act for paying them. And how are these gentlemen to obtain a knowledge of every single part of Ireland, seeing that they would start with no experience, and would have no inspectors? But not only is this Board of Control to hawk at the Local Government Board, but to put themselves above and come down upon Her Majesty's judges; for in Clause 5 it is said that—

"Where the demand of a sum by any county or district council, or by the treasurer of such council, or other officer of the county, in behalf of the council, is ordered by a judge of assizes, under the Local Government (Ireland) Act, 1898, or any other Act, the county or district council concerned may appeal for such order to the Board of Control, and the Board of Control shall have power, after hearing the parties, if they think fit, to confirm, annul, or vary such order."

That is to say, Her Majesty's judges of assize should bow before the Board of Control, and may be over-ruled by it.

MR. TULLY: I think I explained that that was only as to charges for extra police.

MR. GRANT LAWSON: Unfortunately, the hon. Gentleman draws his clause very much too wide, for it includes any payment ordered by a judge of assize. I do not suppose that ever in modern history was such an attempt to interfere with the bench, except when President Kruger wanted the judges of the High Court of the Transvaal to make their judgments conformable to the wishes of the Raad. Why all this unnecessary phraseology? Why not abolish the Local Government Board altogether? Why not relieve the judges of this part of their duty? Why not relieve the county councils of the payment of their debts? That would be economy, and reduce the sum chargeable against Ireland in the balance sheet. I pass over a good many clauses in the Bill—although some may regard them with suspicion and as capable of being turned into weapons of oppression in capable hands—and come to Clause 11, which deals with making the chairmen of the county councils ex officio justices of the peace. The second sub-section of that clause is really legislation by reference. We have heard of removable magistrates in Ireland, but these magistrates are by this clause to be made irremovable, even for bad conduct, which I should think is a monstrous proposal. One other point I should like to refer to, namely, the question of roads. The hon. Gentleman who moved the Second Reading spoke of the narrow roads in Devonshire. I know something about these roads, and how it is impossible for two carriages going in the opposite directions to pass. In a very interesting work on China, Mrs. Bishop mentions that the roads there are so narrow that two coolies cannot pass one another. The Chinese are a peaceful and deferential race, and when one coolie carrying a weight meets another, if the other believes him to be superior, he steps into the mud to let the superior pass. What are you to do in the case of a twelve-foot road, which Clause 14 provides for? An Irish car averages in width of frame from six to eight feet from board to board, so that two cars meeting on these narrow roads could not pass. I maintain that a twelve-foot road is too narrow. Again, the principal Act says that there shall be an unimpeded footway, but this Bill provides that they shall be no longer so unimpeded. Section 19 says that—

“No Provisional Order made by the Local Government Board after 1st January, 1901, shall require to be confirmed by Parliament.”

That is an attempt to avoid the control of Parliament over local authorities in Ireland, and to pass a Home Rule Bill in half a sitting. I hope that other speakers may expose some other of its absurdities, and it remains for me to propose that it be read this day six months.

MR. HERBERT ROBERTSON (Hackney, S.): I find no fault myself with many of the provisions of the Bill, and I think that, to a certain extent, a Wednesday afternoon could not be better employed than in hearing hon. Members for

Mr. Grant Lawson.

Ireland stating their objections to the working of the new system of local government in Ireland. I take it that the main principle of the Bill is the creation of the Board of Control, which, it is said, is for the purpose of assisting the Local Government Board in carrying out the provisions of the Local Government (Ireland) Act of 1898. I think there is a certain amount of humour in proposing to appoint a Board of Control to assist the Local Government Board, which the Bill practically proposes to abolish. [HON. MEMBERS: No, no!] Whatever may be the wording of the Bill, that is the clear meaning and intention of every section of it. The chief complaint against the Local Government Board is that it has increased expenditure. My personal interest is exactly the same as that of hon. Gentlemen opposite; I want the rates to be lowered. The grounds on which it is stated that the Local Government Board have increased expenses are only two. One is printing. That is a small matter, and is almost necessary. But the one real substantial objection made was on the question of salaries. I think it must be within the recollection of everyone that when the Bill was before the House we all specially desired that the existing officials should be treated fairly and liberally. One instance was given in which a salary had been increased from £293 per annum with certain fees to £600. Well, I presume that the fees brought the original salary up to the £600, so that the expenditure was about the same as before. [HON. MEMBERS: No!] It must have been brought to something near it before that salary was sanctioned by the Local Government Board. The whole of the increase of salary will not fall on the county council, because presumably they will get better terms from the persons with whom they deal if these fees are not paid, or if the fees are paid into the funds of the county council.

MR. FLAVIN (Kerry, N.): The great bulk of these fees were illegal, and that is what we complained of.

MR. HERBERT ROBERTSON: I hold that where the Local Government Board has increased the salary of any particular official there is some rather good reason for it. Then it has been said that the doctors' salaries had also been increased—that a doctor now got thirteen months pay for twelve months work. I would put it that the doctor gets twelve months pay for eleven months work, and I do not really think that any hon. Gentleman will object to his having a month's holiday, which he never had before. The chief charge against the Local Government Board in substance is, that they have taken this particular opportunity, when the landlords' interest in the rates is considerably less than it was before, to make these various changes. I think that is a little unfair to the Local Government Board. Some of the changes—as, for instance, that about the doctors' salaries—should have been made before. After all, it was natural that, when the Local Government Act of 1898 was passed, a certain number of changes would be made, and I cannot help thinking that most people will acquit the Local Government Board of a sinister intention of making local representative government unpopular by increasing expenses. Now there is Clause 6, the object of which is to make the assessment of agricultural land like that in England. I am not sure that that would put a good deal of money into the landlords' pockets. As regards the rating of small occupiers, when this question was before the House, I pointed out that there would be some difficulty in realising the amount, and I should not be displeased if something had been put into the Bill to alter that particular rating. But strong reasons have been given from Ireland by the larger farmers—that is, those who pay over £4 rent—that if the small occupiers had no interest whatever in the amount paid for rates, they would be exceedingly likely to elect representatives on the boards whose action would contribute to the rates going up. I do not think gentlemen who pay rates in Ireland, or the ordinary farmers, would approve of that section. As to Section 10, allowing persons in holy orders to be elected on the boards, I pointed out, when the principal Act was under discussion, that opinion on the opposite side of the House was by no means unanimous on the question, and that there were many Nationalist Members strongly opposed to persons in holy orders entering these boards. Clause 11 is intended to make every justice of the peace appointed under the Act irremovable. I should like to see the Irish Act on that point as it now exists applied to England. As I understand these justices in England are not removable. I should like to see them removable. Another objection is, that the chairman is only a justice of the peace for the particular district in which he resides. But there was a reason for that. I do not care about the proposals for the use of the court-houses. The hon. Member for Thirsk objected to the new roads being less than sixteen feet wide, but there are many old roads that are not more than twelve feet wide, and I cannot see that any serious difficulty arises therefrom. Jaunting cars do not go down these roads.

MR. CARSON (Dublin University): Can a bicycle go down these roads?

MR. HERBERT ROBERTSON: Oh, yes, quite easily. There is seldom a foot-path on these roads, but where there is, I admit that bicyclists generally ride on the foot-path. By Clause 17, foot-paths may be blocked altogether. That reminds me that at the time of my first connection with Ireland, twenty years ago, I saw a triumphal arch put up. I naturally inquired by whose authority the arch had been erected; and the answer was, "Oh, we have no authority in Ireland: every man, as in Israel of old, does that which he thinks right in his eyes." I always found that very much the rule, and that it made Ireland a very pleasant place to live in. One of the most important sections is Clause 16, repealing the Acts granting compensation for criminal injury. Now the persons who suffer from criminal injury are small farmers, who would be ruined if these Acts were repealed. They are very old Acts, and only bring in an old Irish law custom at the time when property was tribal, and when any damage was done, the whole tribe paid. I strongly object to the repeal of these Acts. There are some points in the Bill which I would wish embodied in the law, and when they are brought under the consideration of the Chief Secretary they may be embodied. But on the whole I believe the Bill as it stands is a most pernicious measure, and I hope the House will reject it.

Amendment proposed—

"To leave out the word 'now,' and at the end of the Question to add the words 'upon this day six months.'"—(Mr. Grant Lawson.)

Question proposed, "That the word 'now' stand part of the Question."

MR. ATKINSON: I rise comparatively early in this discussion for the purpose of endeavouring to remove some of the misapprehensions which apparently exist among hon. Members opposite both as to the law and the facts. Before I approach that, however, I must thank the hon. Member who moved the Second Reading of this Bill for the kindly expressions he indulged in with reference to my right hon. friend the Chief Secretary. I regret as much as any hon. Gentleman from Ireland that my right hon. friend is not here to support, as I am perfectly certain he would support, the motion, "That this Bill be read a second time this day six months." I had the honour of being associated with him in the carriage through the House of Commons of the Local Government Act, 1898. I know what his opinions on the different sections of that statute are. I know his anxiety that that Act should be a success, and I am perfectly certain that he would look with horror and dismay on a Bill of this kind, which, if carried, would mean the uprooting and destruction of that system on the establishment of which so much labour was expended, and to the result of which he looked with bright prospects. The Act of 1898 took a considerable time in passing through this House. It took, I think, twenty-two days in Committee and several days on Report, and its different clauses were discussed with considerable acumen and ability and at considerable length by many Members from Ireland. Most of its important clauses came into operation on the 1st of April last year, and some of its clauses only came into operation about six weeks ago. Owing to a doctrine which was preached in Ireland, and to which, I think, several hon. Members were opposed—particularly the hon. and learned Member for Waterford, the hon. and learned Member for North Louth, and the hon. and learned Member for Cork—a doctrine which was summed up as "the humbug of toleration," no representatives of the grand juries were elected on the new Boards, with the result that the elected members are absolutely without experience.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL (Donegal, S.): What about the ex-officio members?

MR. ATKINSON: I wish the hon. Gentleman would only interrupt me when he understands. I said that the elected members are entirely without experience in county administrative affairs, and the proposition is now—after six or nine months trial, before these county councils have struck more than one rate, before their accounts have been audited for the first year—to abolish the control without the constant exercise and operation of which the whole system of local government in Ireland would, as I shall prove by examples, have been reduced to absolute chaos. The Local Government Board have interfered in three capacities in discharge of their statutory duties: first as arbitrators between the county councils and the district councils, and again as the statutory authority to whom individuals who were aggrieved by the actions of the county councils appealed. But they have interfered much more than that; they have interfered when appealed to in thousands of instances by the county councils themselves, who from day to day were begging advice direction, and control upon the thousands of cases that came up before them; and the rule has been this: that in proportion as the councils have asked for advice and have taken advice their proceedings have been satisfactory and their business has been well conducted; and in proportion as they have neglected to ask for advice or have refused to take advice their business has been unsatisfactorily conducted. Now I shall give two instances. I shall give the county of Meath—the best managed county in Ireland. I am not now referring to questions in which the Local Government Board have a right to interfere, but to questions of voluntary interference. The county council of Meath asked for advice on fifteen different matters. They were of this character: as to the attendance of county officers at meetings of the county councils; as to the period which should elapse between the meetings of committees and the meetings of the council; as to the method of communication between the county council and the district councils; as to the mode in which certain damage was to be dealt with; as to how they were to prepare their agenda paper; as to the powers of the county councils regarding direct labour, and other matters of that character, fifteen in number. They appealed to the Local Government Board for advice; that advice was given and taken, and the business of the council was conducted properly. That is absolute and conclusive proof that the action of the Local Government Board has not been oppressive, unjust, offensive, or tyrannical, because they had been treated as guide, philosopher, and friend by several councils. With regard to the county council of Roscommon, in which the hon. Member who moved the Second Reading of this Bill is interested—

MR. TULLY: Is the right hon. Gentleman aware that I am in a small minority on that council?

MR. ATKINSON: I am very sorry to hear it, because the hon. Gentleman showed a great knowledge of the working of county affairs in his speech. The county of Roscommon would not act in the way suggested by the Local Government Board. They were told they ought to get a competent staff, but they would not, with the result that everything got into confusion, and then they had to get fifty clerks to do work which could have been done better by thirty clerks if they had taken the advice of the Local Government Board when it was given. Now I will state another illustration. I turn to Mayo. Mayo may be described as the Mecca of Nationalism. It had the advantage of being represented in this House by an hon. Member who is described as the "Father of the Land League." It has now the advantage of having as one of its inhabitants the "Father of the United Irish League," who no doubt exercises a governing influence and control over the deliberations of the county council. It has the further advantage of being represented in this House by an hon. Member who was for some time recognised as, if not the actual, at least the titular leader of the Irish race at home and abroad. One would have thought that the successful management of local affairs would be conspicuously displayed in Mayo. Mayo asked for advice, but Mayo did not take it, and the consequence was that when its affairs were investigated it was found in November, 1899, after the council had been in existence from the 1st of April, that one collector had not completed his bonds and that another collector had not collected anything at all for the half year, and that the financial statement had not been kept up. The hon. Member for Fermanagh advocated extreme parsimony in connection with the staffs of the county councils.

MR. JORDAN: I did not advocate extreme parsimony. I only advocated what was fair and just.

MR. ATKINSON: We will see about that. The staff of the county council of Mayo consisted of two clerks, and the result was—

MR. TULLY: Is it not a fact that the Local Government Board allowed the secretary to resign in the middle of the half year, thereby disorganising the whole business?

*MR. SPEAKER: Order, order! That may be a very proper observation to make during a speech, but not as an interruption.

MR. ATKINSON: The result was that the affairs of the county of Mayo, with all the advantages I have mentioned, were reduced to such a state of utter and absolute chaos that in their confusion and distress the county council possessing all these qualities for self-government passed a resolution on the 30th January requesting the Local Government Board to send down a qualified accountant forthwith to take over the accounts of the county, and authorising the accountant to appoint a sufficient staff, and also authorising the necessary payments. The council for over eight months had not made out a rate-book; every part of the county business was in a state of absolute chaos, and in their distress they passed a resolution begging the much-decried Local Government Board—who want to bring discredit on county government in Ireland—to send down some officer to relieve them from the misery and confusion into which their own neglect to take advice had brought them. We have Meath at one end, which asked advice and took advice, and Mayo at the other end, which either did not ask for advice or when it got it did not take it. What is the proposal in this Bill? It is absolutely necessary, by the common experience of England, Ireland and Scotland, that there should be some controlling body to exercise control over and direct the operations of local government. The Poor Law Acts of Ireland have been in existence since 1838 ; under these Acts the Local Government Board have exercised a minute, searching, and continuous control. Of course, in endeavouring to bring this Act into operation they had a stupendous duty to discharge. They had thousands of elections to conduct ; they had 550 local bodies to regulate, and I think they regulated them without complaint ; and as I shall presently show, the Local Government Board have every reason to be most satisfied with this debate, because, while there was a strong disposition to attack them, and violently attack them, all that has been brought home to them in this debate is that they interfered in four matters with regard to the salaries of wretched, under-paid, over-driven, and harassed medical doctors, who in many cases scarcely received the remuneration of a decent artisan, and who, by the connivance of farmers and others, from whom better might be expected, were obliged to discharge duties never expected of them. Considering all the duties they have had to perform the Local Government Board have every reason to be proud of the result of this debate, which has brought the charge against them to an issue.

MR. DALY : I do not wish to interrupt the right hon. Gentleman, but no charge has been made against the medical officers in Ireland. The boards of guardians have always been anxious to give them vacations.

MR. ATKINSON : I quite understand the generosity of the hon. Gentleman ; he would be willing to give medical doctors vacations at their own expense.

MR. DALY : Certainly not.

MR. ATKINSON : In bringing the Act into operation the Local Government Board not only conducted these elections, but they wrote 72,000 letters of advice and direction. Their advice was given daily and their interference was also daily. They can only act by sealed order, and these orders are made daily. What is the proposition put forward in this Bill ? It is that these orders should be reviewed by an authority meeting four times a year. I will give a few illustrations of how that would work.

Mr. Atkinson.

The Local Government Board dismiss an officer by sealed order for drunkenness. What is to become of him during the three months that the appeal is pending ? They superannuate an officer by sealed order ; what is to become of him pending the appeal, because the tribunal only meets every three months ? The Board may make an order about assisted emigration. What is to become of the emigrant until the tribunal meets ?

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL : He should stay at home.

MR. ATKINSON : When public graveyards are closed by order of the Local Government Board they occasionally admit by sealed order isolated interments by people having burial rights. What is to become of the remains pending an appeal ? I could give dozens of similar illustrations, and I was astonished that the hon. Gentleman who introduced this Bill, and who seems to have an acquaintance with poor law administration, could ever have entertained the idea that it was possible to construct a tribunal meeting only once in three months to review orders made daily. If that were to be done the dead would remain unburied and the living would starve. Let me say a word about the character of this tribunal. As my hon. friend has already pointed out, it has an advantage over all created things, namely, that before its birth it should regulate the conditions under which it was to come into the world. It is to be elected according to rules which it can only make itself after it is elected. It cannot be elected until it makes the rules, and it cannot make the rules until it is elected.

MR. FLAVIN : Were such things ever done by the grand juries ?

MR. ATKINSON : Giving the hon. Gentleman every credit I am unable to see the relevance of that remark.

MR. FLAVIN : They broke every law they liked.

MR. ATKINSON : I do not think anything ever existed before under the same conditions as this proposed tribunal. I heard from a friend who had travelled a good deal in the East that he once attended a Passion Play, and when he arrived he found Adam on the stage waiting to be created. What would this tribunal be? There is no place mentioned where the election is to be held, no time for the election is mentioned, and if it were to be carried out all the county councils of Ireland would be found in procession in Dublin or elsewhere awaiting its creation. That is not the only peculiarity about it. What next? It is admitted that control over the local authorities is absolutely necessary. What is the suggestion? That a new body should be created by nomination by the county councils, the chairmen representing the councils, and with the mayors representing the county boroughs largely predominating over the official element. That is, that there should be a committee of control to control the controllers. It is somewhat as if boys in school formed a committee to decide whether the masters were right or wrong. I do not think that such ideas will gain general acceptance. Could there be anything more topsy-turvy—more upside down—than this board legislating for itself: making rules for itself before it is born, and controlling its own controllers? It will have no staff and no place of meeting; it is, according to the Bill, to sit once only in three months, but it will have so many orders to deal with that—to use an Irish bull—it can only cope with them by sitting continuously twenty-four hours out of every twelve. Again, where is this body to sit? It has no local habitation; is it to meet in Dublin or is it to be ambulatory?

MR. TULLY: If you pass this Bill we will prescribe all these rules after.

MR. ATKINSON: It has no staff, and the Bill makes no suggestion as to where it is to get money to carry on its business. [An HON. MEMBER: The Government is to provide that.] The Bill not only creates a topsy-turvy, upside down arrangement, but it proposes to repeal all the provisions in the Local Government Act of 1896, over which there was the greatest dispute in this House—I regret that I shall have to deal with them seriatim presently—and what is the justification the hon. Member brings forward for reversing everything done under the Act of 1896? As I shall be able to show, he wants laws in Ireland similar to the law of England when it suits his purpose; but when that does not suit his purpose he wants the Irish law dissimilar from the English laws.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: And why not?

MR. ATKINSON: It seems to me it is the old game of "heads I win; tails you lose." What is his justification? It is just that the Local Government Board have been too liberal in the sums they have awarded to different offices; then that they have given a month's vacation to the doctors without consulting the local authorities. Further, that they have insisted on the employment of trained nurses, and finally that they have ignored local opinion. I do not think there is any need for me to refute the imputation that the Local Government Board are anxious to increase the expenses of local government in order to discredit the working of the county councils. A more unfair or a more unfounded charge—if it were made seriously—has never been uttered.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: It is seriously made.

MR. FLYNN (CORK, N.): And we have to pay the money.

MR. ATKINSON: Let us see what the Local Government Board has done. I think if the hon. Member for South Fermanagh had taken the trouble to look at the Act he would have been more correct in his observations. Any person listening to the debate and unacquainted with the provisions of the Act would have come to the conclusion that the Local Government Board fix and regulate the salaries of the county officials. As a matter of fact the Board have no power to deal with any but the existing or grand jury officers—the county surveyor, the county secretary, and the clerk of the district council; and with regard to these the only duty of the Board is to see that their salaries are fixed by the county councils and boards of guardians in accordance with the fees and emoluments they previously received under the grand juries.

MR. T. M. HEALY (LOUTH, N.): Nothing of the kind; it is quite the other way.

MR. FLAVIN: Does the right hon. Gentleman say that the Local Government Board do not fix the salary of any officer who is not an existing officer?

MR. ATKINSON: They only have to deal with the transferred officers whom I have already mentioned, and to see that their remuneration is fixed under the 115th section, subsection 18, on the principle set forth in the English Act of 1888 which directs that they shall take into consideration all the emoluments these particular officials have enjoyed. They have done nothing but that, and I invite hon. Members to name any case in which they have acted otherwise. After all, the power is only a temporary one; it ceases immediately the officer dies or resigns. The hon. Member complained that the Board had not taken into consideration the remonstrances of the local bodies, and had not given the county councils an opportunity to condemn the system.

MR. JORDAN: I did not say "condemn the system"; I said they had not given us an opportunity of stating our case.

MR. ATKINSON: The hon. Member also said that the fact that they had not had an opportunity of stating their case was enough to condemn the system.

MR. JORDAN: And so it is.

MR. ATKINSON: And what are the facts? The Local Government Board sent to every one of these bodies a circular setting forth the provisions of the section and asking their opinions. Before acting they waited until the month of January in this year. The opinions of these bodies were carefully considered, and all the Local Government Board did was to fix the salaries, with the sole view, not of treating these officials generously, but of securing them fair remuneration. The hon. Member for South Monaghan complained that the fees of many of the officials were increased. He apparently begrudges the £7 10s. which was added to a certain clerk's salary.

MR. DALY: The salary was fixed at a sum which the local body deemed sufficient, and my complaint was that the Local Government Board added £7 10s. to it.

MR. ATKINSON: They were bound to fix the salary according to what they considered fair.

MR. CONDON (Tipperary, E.): Then why waste time consulting the local bodies at all? [Cheers.]

MR. SPEAKER: Order, order! The right hon. Gentleman must be allowed to continue his speech without interruption.

MR. ATKINSON: The local bodies were consulted because it was most desirable that their views should be before the Board, and to have a tribunal of appeal merely for the purpose of registering the decrees of the tribunal appealed from seems to be perfectly useless. What are the other causes of complaint which have been advanced? One is in connection with the dispensary doctors, and I may at once say that the Local Government Board had power to exercise authority in the case of this class of wretchedly paid and hard-worked officials, and will certainly continue to interfere where they have reason to believe that a policy dictated by parsimony and a heartless want of consideration is being pursued. The next reason given for superseding the Local Government Board was that they will not treat nuns as trained nurses. The Board has only power to give remuneration to trained nurses, and though I have great respect and admiration for nuns of all descriptions, I must point out that they have not the skill of trained and certificated nurses. In "Felix Holt, the Radical," Mrs. Holt says "Bad medicine is as good as good medicine with a blessing," and hon. Members opposite appear to think that the piety of these nuns takes the place of skill.

*MR. TULLY: The nuns are trained in the Mater Hospital, and all the best hospitals in Dublin.

MR. ATKINSON: Then if the nuns obtain certificates the Local Government Board will not refuse to pay them.

*MR. TULLY: Their order will not allow them to have certificates.

MR. ATKINSON: The hon. Gentleman is quite right in saying that, but I repeat that the nuns are not entitled by reason merely of their piety to take positions involving the exercise of medical skill. The last charge was a small point about county analysts, and as to that I may point out that these officials are appointed under the Food and Drugs Act. With that the Local Government Board have no more to do than to see that the local authority appoints a fit and proper person. I am anxious to defend a tribunal which has been so much assailed, which has had such vast duties thrown upon it, and which has discharged those duties as the friends of local government in Ireland wish them to be discharged—a tribunal which has done its best to set the machine going upon fair lines, and whose efforts, I am happy to say, have been appreciated. I find in the Nation, a periodical which some of the hon. Members opposite will respect, these words—

“We have never been slow to criticise the policy or methods of the Local Government Board and its principal measures, but we think we shall only be expressing the feeling of the majority of those who have watched its proceedings since the passing into law of a great measure of popular rule when we say that its course in the main has been characterised by courtesy, fair play, and a just sense of responsibility, and that it has discharged the duties entrusted to it both well and wisely.”

On the part of the Government I wish to entirely associate myself with that expression of opinion. I now pass on to the different clauses of the Bill. By its provisions the numerous duties which the Local Government Board has to discharge would be submitted to the review of this extraordinary tribunal, and in truth there is no principle in the Bill except the principle of overturning everything that exists. Clause 5 deals with the question of appeal, and would give this composite tribunal of county councillors the power of reviewing a decision even upon a question of law. Clause 6 is a gem. It proposes that half the rates on all houses in Ireland shall be paid out of the Church surplus. It would require £450,000 per annum to pay half the rates on all the houses in Ireland, and, even if there were no objection in principle, how is the hon. Member to extract £450,000 a year out of the Church surplus, considering that the Church endowment, before anything was deducted from it, did not amount to that? The hon. Member is arguing that the part is greater than the whole. In England, owing to the distressed condition of agriculture, half the rates were paid, and it was contended that as Irish agriculture was still more depressed, there was an even stronger claim for relief. But the hon. Member goes further and suggests that because of the distressed condition of agriculture every one who lives in a house should have half his rates paid. Surely that is a total misapplication of the principle on which relief is granted. The Bill requires under Sub-section 2 that it shall be paid out of the local taxation account. The objection to that is that it is not in the local taxation account, because the Church surplus was never put there. Sub-section 3 provides that certain modifications of Sections 49 and 50 of the Act shall apply. The objection to that is that they apply already. Clause 7 is directed to the relief of occupiers from the payment of rates. The hon. Member in that seems to forget the great broad principle on which the Act of 1898 is founded—namely, that the rate should be thrown on the occupier, in order that he who has the power shall bear the burden. By that means we were able to get rid of those embarrassing checks which were introduced into earlier Bills dealing with local government. We said that if the landlords were to be relieved financially they should also be deprived of power to interfere, and we provided that those who had the powers should also bear the burden of any extravagance in which they might indulge. The suggestion of the next clause is to make a special rate to pay for a special purpose. What it really does is to enable the county council to erect works and charge them on a particular district. If they were so disposed they could make water works for a particular town, and make a charge, not against the people residing in that county, but against the population in a fixed area. Now with respect to the clergy and the district councils. I quite admit that on that point there were differences of opinion, and that there is a good deal to be said on both sides, but I do insist on the fact that there was no intention to offer insult or inflict any stigma on the clergy of any denomination. Experience showed that it was desirable that they should be excluded from such local bodies. The next clause gives power to the Lord Chancellor to remove lunatics. That was a thing which was deliberately introduced, because it was considered most unwise to put these ex-officio magistrates in a position occupied by no other judge in the land.

Even a county court judge may be removed by a superior court, and a judge of the Supreme Court may be removed by a Vote of both Houses.

MR. MAURICE HEALY (Cork): How about England?

MR. ATKINSON: It is different in England.

MR. MAURICE HEALY: How?

MR. ATKINSON: Of half a dozen reasons I will cite one. Different county councils in Ireland not merely express sympathy with the Boers, but also a fervent hope that the massacre of Majuba may be repeated. The question of the court-house is, I know, a vexed question. Built primarily for the administration of justice, they are put in charge of an officer of the Crown, who is bound to look after the Crown property and to issue Crown writs, etc. He seems to me to be the proper custodian, inasmuch as his duty is to make arrangements for the administration of justice. Subject to that the Act, which did not wish to put the councils to the expense of building halls to transact their business in, contained a subsidiary clause by which they were entitled to use the court-house subject to the discretion of the sheriff. The district council had no right to use it.

MR. TULLY: The district council replaced the old presentment sessions.

MR. ATKINSON: And the sheriff refused to allow the green flag to float over the court house. The reason why we say the green flag should not be allowed to fly there is because in one district the green flag might fly, while in the next the Orange flag might be used, and in the border counties both might be seen, with most probably a riot on the roof. On behalf of the Government, and with the full conscience that I express the opinion of my right hon. friend the Chief Secretary, I appeal to the House to reject this Bill, on the ground that it is premature, crude, ill-advised, and mischievous.

MR. MAURICE HEALY said the Attorney General had just given a non possumus, to which Irish Members were accustomed on the introduction of a private Bill, but they looked forward to the day in the case of this Bill, as had happened with dozens of other private Bills, when the Government of some years hence would gladly accept the proposals of this Bill. This Bill contained two proposals of a somewhat large character, and a number of points of detail, in reference to which one would have thought the Attorney General himself would be glad to see some amendment. The history of English legislation always was that in a measure like the Local Government Act of England or Scotland, Bills correcting defects of detail disclosed in the working of the measures would be always welcome. That, unfortunately, was not their experience in the case of Irish measures. Last year the Attorney General himself told the House that the Government were considering the matter of introducing a measure to modify the Grand Juries Acts, so as to provide for the proper working of the Local Government Act. That pledge was never redeemed. To-day an opportunity had been given him of, at any rate, giving a similar undertaking. Still he had not held out any hope that the Government intended introducing any measure, even to amend the various defects which the experience of eighteen months had disclosed in the working of the Local Government Act. No, Irish Members had to be content because once in the course of ten years, by agitation amounting in the end to a revolution, a large amending Act was passed, such as the Local Government Act, and now they were to wait for another ten or twenty years until sufficient popular force was developed to compel the Government of the day to again take up Irish legislation, and to again determine what reforms were called for in the Irish law. He would mention just one instance of gross injustice under the Local Government Act. Hitherto the roads in small Irish urban centres had been attended to by the grand juries, and the cost of making and repairing those roads came out of the county cess, which was levied equally on all classes of hereditaments. The effect of the passing of the Local Government Act, which had been to transfer the duty of the making and repairing of those roads to small Irish bodies, was to completely change the incidence of taxation, for while before the cost was thrown equally upon all classes of hereditaments, now those smaller bodies had only power to tax lands at one-fourth of their valuation, with the result that, besides the injustice that had arisen owing to the changed state of the law with regard to taxes on land and buildings, an additional injustice was set up, for in the small towns nearly the whole charge of making and maintaining the roads had been thrown upon buildings alone. Yet the Attorney General said he did not understand what the clause that sought to remedy this very great grievance meant. He treated this Bill as if it were an attack upon the Local Government Board, while it was really an attempt to amend the law relating to local government in Ireland. He regretted that time did not permit him to say more on the present occasion.

Mr. Atkinson.

Question put.

The House divided:—Ayes, 126; Noes, 216. (Division List No. 12.)

AYES.

Abraham, William (Cork, N.E.)
Allan, William (Gateshead)
Allison, Robert Andrew
Ambrose, Robert
Ashton, Thomas Gair
Atherley-Jones, L.
Austin, Sir John (Yorkshire)
Austin, M. (Limerick, W.)
Barlow, John Emmott
Bayley, Thomas (Derbyshire)
Billson, Alfred
Birrell, Augustine
Blake, Edward
Brunner, Sir John Tomlinson
Burt, Thomas
Buxton, Sydney Charles
Caldwell, James
Cameron, Sir Chas. (Glasgow)
Cameron, Robert (Durham)
Carmichael, Sir T. D. Gibson
Carvill, Patrick G. Hamilton
Causton, Richard Knight
Channing, Francis Allston
Clark, Dr. G. B.
Colville, John
Condon, Thomas Joseph
Crean, Eugene
Crilly, Daniel
Curran, Thomas B. (Donegal)
Curran, Thomas (Sligo, S.)
Daly, James
Dalziel, James Henry
Doogan, P. C.
Douglas, Charles M. (Lanark)
Dunn, Sir William
Emmott, Alfred
Engledew, Charles John
Evans, Samuel T. (Glamorgan)
Farrell, James P. (Cavan, W.)
Farrell, Thomas J. (Kerry, S.)
Fenwick, Charles
Flavin, Michael Joseph
Flynn, James Christopher

Fox, Dr. Joseph Francis
Goddard, Daniel Ford
Gourley, Sir Edw. Temperley
Gurdon, Sir Wm. Brampton
Hammond, John (Carlow)
Hayden, John Patrick
Hayne, Rt. Hn. Charles Seale-
Healy, Maurice (Cork)
Hedderwick, Thos. Charles H.
Hemphill, Rt. Hon. Chas. H.
Hogan, James Francis
Holland, William Henry
Horniman, Frederick John
Joicey, Sir James
Jones, D. Brynmor (Swansea)
Jones, Wm. (Carnarvonshire)
Jordan, Jeremiah
Kay-Shuttleworth, Rt. Hn. Sir U
Kearley, Hudson E.
Kilbride, Denis
Kinloch, Sir John Geo. Smyth
Langley, Batty
Lawson, Sir W. (Cumberland)
Leese, Sir J. F. (Accrington)
Leng, Sir John
Lewis, John Herbert
Lough, Thomas
Lyell, Sir Leonard
MacDonnell, Dr. M. A. (Qn's C)
MacNeill, John Gordon Swift
McCartan, Michael
McCrae, George
McDermott, Patrick
McEwan, William
McGhee, Richard
Maddison, Fred.
Mandeville, J. Francis
Mendl, Sigismund Ferdinand
Molloy, Bernard Charles
Montagu, Sir S. (Whitechapel)
Moore, Arthur (Londonderry)
Morgan J. Lloyd (Carmarthen)
Murnaghan, George

Norton, Capt. Cecil William
O'Brien, Patrick (Kilkenny)
O'Connor, Arthur (Donegal)
O'Connor, Jas. (Wicklow, W.)
O'Connor, T. P. (Liverpool)
O'Malley, William
Parnell, John Howard
Pease, Joseph A. (Northum.)
Philipps, John Wynford
Pickersgill, Edward Hare
Power, Patrick Joseph
Price, Robert John
Redmond, John E. (Waterford)
Redmond, William (Clare)
Reid, Sir Robert Threshie
Rickett, J. Compton
Rickett, John Bryn (Eifion)
Robson, William Snowdon
Samuel, J. (Stockton-on-Tees)
Shaw, Thomas (Hawick B.)
Steadman, William Charles
Sullivan, Donal (Westmeath)
Sullivan, T. D. (Donegal, W.)
Tanner, Charles Kearns
Tennant, Harold John
Thomas, David Alfred (Merthyr)
Trevelyan, Charles Philips
Tully, Jasper
Wallace, Robert
Walton, Joseph (Barnsley)
Warner, Thomas Courtenay T.
Weir, James Galloway
Williams, John Carvell (Notts.)
Wilson, Charles Henry (Hull)
Wilson, John (Durham, Mid.)
Wilson, John (Govan)
Wilson, Josh. H. (Middlesboro')
Woodhouse, Sir J. T. (H'fd.)
Woods, Samuel
Young, Samuel (Cavan, East)
TELLERS FOR THE AYES—
Sir Thomas Esmonde and
Captain Donelan.

NOES.

Acland-Hood, Capt. Sir A. F.
Archdale, Edward Mervyn
Arnold, Alfred
Arnold-Forster, Hugh O.
Arrol, Sir William
Atkinson, Rt. Hon. John
Bailey, James (Walworth)
Baird, John George Alex.
Balcarres, Lord

Baldwin, Alfred
Balfour, Rt. Hon. A. J. (Manch'r)
Banbury, Frederick George
Barnes, Frederick Gorell
Barry, Rt. Hn. A. H. Smith (Hunts)
Barry, Sir Francis T. (Windsor)
Bartley, George C. T.
Beach, Rt. Hon. Sir M. H. (Bristol)
Beckett, Ernest William

Begg, Ferdinand Faithfull
Bhownaggee, Sir M. M.
Biddulph, Michael
Bill, Charles
Blakiston-Houston, John
Blundell, Colonel Henry
Bowles, Capt. H. F. (Middlesex.)
Bowles, T. G. (King's Lynn)
Brassey, Albert

Brodrick, Rt. Hon. St. John
 Brookfield, A. Montagu
 Butcher, John George
 Carlile, William Walter
 Carson, Rt. Hon. Edward
 Cavendish, R. F. (N. Lancs.)
 Cavendish, V. C. W. (Derbyshire)
 Cecil, Lord Hugh (Greenwich)
 Chaplin, Rt. Hon. Henry
 Coghill, Douglas Harry
 Cohen, Benjamin Louis
 Collings, Rt. Hon. Jesse
 Colomb, Sir John Charles R.
 Cooke, C. W. Radcliffe (Hereford)
 Corbett, A. Cameron (Glasgow)
 Cotton-Jodrell, Col. Ed. T. D.
 Courtney, Rt. Hon. Leonard H.
 Cox, Irwin Edward Bainbridge
 Cross, Alexander (Glasgow)
 Cross, Herb. Shepherd (Bolton)
 Curzon, Viscount
 Dalkeith, Earl of
 Davies, Sir Hor. D. (Chatham)
 Denny, Colonel
 Dickinson, Robert Edmond
 Digby, John K. D. Wingfield-
 Dixon-Hartland, Sir F. Dixon
 Dorington, Sir John Edward
 Doughty, George
 Douglas, Rt. Hon. A. Akers-
 Duxford, Sir William T.
 Duncombe, Hon. Hubert V.
 Dyke, Rt. Hon. Sir William Hart
 Egerton, Hon. A. de Tatton
 Elliot, Hn. A. Ralph Douglas
 Faber, George Denison
 Fellowes, Hn. Ailwyn Edward
 Fergusson, Rt. Hon. Sir (Manchester)
 Field, Admiral (Eastbourne)
 Finch, George H.
 Finlay, Sir Robert Bannatyne
 Fisher, William Hayes
 Flannery, Sir Fortescue
 Fletcher, Sir Henry
 Flower, Ernest
 Forster, Henry William
 Foster, Colonel (Lancaster)
 Fry, Lewis
 Galloway, W. Johnson
 Garfit, William
 Gedge, Sydney
 Gibbons, J. Lloyd
 Gibbs, Hn. A. G. H. (C. of Lond.)
 Gibbs, Hn. Vicary (St. Albans)
 Godson, Sir Augustus Fred.
 Goldsworthy, Major-General
 Gordon, Hon. John Edward
 Goulding, Edward Alfred
 Greene, Henry D. (Shrewsbury)
 Gretton, John
 Greville, Hon. Ronald
 Hall, Rt. Hon. Sir Charles
 Halsey, Thomas Frederick
 Hamilton, Rt. Hon. Lord G.

Hanbury, Rt. Hon. Robert W.
 Hanson, Sir Reginald
 Hardy, Laurence
 Haslett, Sir James Horner
 Heaton, John Henniker
 Helder, Augustus
 Hickman, Sir Alfred
 Hoare, Sir Samuel (Norwich)
 Houldsworth, Sir Wm. Henry
 Houston, R. P.
 Howard, Joseph
 Howell, William Tudor
 Howorth, Sir Henry Hoyle
 Hozier, Hon. James Henry C.
 Jeffreys, Arthur Frederick
 Jenkins, Sir John Jones
 Jessel, Captain Herbert M.
 Johnston, William (Belfast)
 Johnstone, Heywood (Sussex)
 Kenyon, James
 Kenyon-Slaney, Col. William
 Keswick, William
 Knowles, Lees
 Lawrence, Sir E. Durning (Corn)
 Lawrence, W. F. (Liverpool)
 Lawson, John Grant (Yorks.)
 Lea, Sir Thomas (Londonderry)
 Lecky, Rt. Hon. Wm. Edw. H.
 Llewelyn, Sir Dillwyn (Swans)
 Lockwood, Lieut.-Col. A. R.
 Loder, Gerald Walter Erskine
 Long, Col. Charles W. (Evesham)
 Lowe, Francis William
 Loyd, Archie Kirkman
 Lucas-Shadwell, William
 Macartney, W. G. Ellison
 Macdonald, John Cunningham
 MacIver, David (Liverpool)
 MacLure, Sir John William
 MacArthur, Charles (Liverpool)
 McKillop, James
 Marks, Henry Hananel
 Massey-Mainwaring, Hn. W. F.
 Melville, Beresford V.
 Middlemore, J. Throgmorton
 Milward, Colonel Victor
 Monk, Charles James
 Montagu, Hon. J. Scott (Hants.)
 More, Robt. Jasper (Shropshire)
 Morrell, George Herbert
 Morton, A. H. A. (Deptford)
 Mount, William George
 Murray, Rt. Hon. A. G. (Bute)
 Murray, Col. Wyndham (Bath)
 Myers, Wm. Henry
 Newdigate, Francis Alexander
 Nicol, Donald Ninian
 Parkes, Ebenezer
 Pease, Herb. Pike (Darlington)
 Penn, John
 Phillpotts, Captain Arthur
 Pierpoint, Robert
 Pilkington, R. (Lancs, Newton)
 Pilkington, Sir G. A. (Lancs. SW)

Platt-Higgins, Frederick
 Plunkett, Rt. Hon. H. Curzon
 Pollock, Harry Frederick
 Pretymann, Ernest George
 Pryce-Jones, Lt.-Col. Edward
 Purvis, Robert
 Pym, C. Guy
 Rentoul, James Alexander
 Richards, Henry Charles
 Richards, Sir T. (Hartlepool)
 Ridley, Rt. Hon. Sir Matthew W.
 Ritchie, Rt. Hon. C. Thomson
 Robertson, Herbert (Hackney)
 Rothschild, Hon. Lionel Walter
 Round, James
 Royds, Clement Molyneux
 Russell, Gen. F. S. (Cheltenham)
 Russell, T. W. (Tyronne)
 Rutherford, John
 Ryder, John Herbert Dudley
 Samuel, H. S. (Limehouse)
 Sandys, Lt.-Col. Thos. Myle
 Sanderson, Rt. Hon. Col. Ed. J.
 Savory, Sir Joseph
 Seton-Karr, Henry
 Sharpe, William Edward T.
 Shaw, Charles Edw. (Stafford)
 Shaw-Stewart, M. H. (Renfrew)
 Sidebottom, William (Derby)
 Simeon, Sir Barrington
 Sinclair, Louis (Romford)
 Smith, Abel H. (Christchurch)
 Smith, J. Parker (Lanarks.)
 Smith, Hn. W. F. D. (Strand)
 Spencer, Ernest
 Stanley, Edward J. (Somerset)
 Stirling-Maxwell, Sir John M.
 Stone, Sir Benjamin
 Sturt, Hon. Humphry Napier
 Sutherland, Sir Thomas
 Talbot, Rt. Hon. J. G. (Oxford Univ.)
 Thorburn, Sir Walter
 Thornton, Percy M.
 Tollemache, Henry James
 Tomlinson, Wm. E. Murray
 Osborne, Thomas
 Vincent, Sir Edgar (Exeter)
 Warr, Augustus Frederick
 Webster, Sir Richard E.
 Welby, Lieut.-Col. A. C. E.
 Wharton, Rt. Hon. John Lloyd
 Whitmore, Charles Algernon
 Williams, Colonel R. (Dorset)
 Williams, J. Powell (Birm.)
 Willoughby de Eresby, Lord
 Willox, Sir John Archibald
 Wilson-Todd, Wm. H. (Yorks.)
 Wodehouse, Rt. Hon. E. R. (Bath)
 Wortley, Rt. Hon. C. B. Stuart-
 Wylie, Alexander
 Wyndham, George
 TELLERS FOR THE NOES—
 Sir William Walrond and
 Mr. Anstruther.

Words added.

Second Reading put off for six months.

Main Question, as amended, put, and agreed to.

Adjourned at twenty minutes before
 Six of the Clock.

[INDEX

INDEX

TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

[AUTHORISED EDITION].

FIRST VOLUME OF SESSION 1900.

JANUARY 30--FEBRUARY 14.

EXPLANATION OF ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS.

Bills: Read First, Second, or Third Time = 1R., 2R., 3R. [c.] = Commons. [l.] = Lords.
Amendt. = Amendment. Os. = Observations. Qs. = Questions. As. = Answers.
Com. = Committee. Con. = Consideration. Rep. = Report. Where in the Index* is added with Reading of a Bill, or a Vote in Committee of Supply, it indicates that no Debate took place on that Stage of the Bill, or on that Vote. Subjects discussed in Committee of Supply are entered under their headings, and also under Member's Names, without reference to the actual Vote before the Committee. The abbreviation "S" has been adopted as explanation under the subjects.

Aberdeen Police and Improvement Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1027.
1R.* Feb. 12, 1196.

Aberdeen University

Abstract of Accounts, Jan. 30, 53, 69.
Annual Statistical Report, Jan. 30, 53, 69.

Abstractors, Promotion of

Q. Col. Dalbiac; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 8, 926.

Access to Mountains [Scotland] Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 2, 420.

Access to the Houses of Parliament

Metropolitan Police Sessional Order, Jan. 30, 60.

Accidents to Railway Servants

See Railway Servants.

Acland-Hood, Capt. Sir A. [Somerset. Wellington]

Army—Strengthening and Improving Organisation of the Regular and Auxiliary Forces, Feb. 12, 1301.

South African War—Military and Political Policy of the Government, etc. (Vote of Censure), Jan. 31, 188.

VOL. LXXVIII. [FOURTH SERIES.]

Act of Union

Taxation of Ireland—Debate on the Address, Feb. 8, 1003, Feb. 9, 1066.

Adjournments of the House

See Sittings and Adjournments of the House.

Admiralty

First Lord—Rt. Hon. G. J. Goschen.

Secretaries—Mr. W. E. Macartney; Sir E. Macgregor.

(See Navy).

Afghanistan

Subsidy Granted to the Ameer

Detailed Account of Expenditure

Q. Mr. L. Morgan; A. Lord G. Hamilton, Feb. 2, 444.

Diversion of Subsidy for Defence Purposes

Q. Mr. L. Morgan; A. Lord G. Hamilton, Feb. 2, 445.

Africa, East

Foreign Jurisdiction Act—Order in Council presented, Feb. 1, 234.

German East Africa—Trade Report, Jan. 30, 47.

3 L

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Africa, South

Basutoland—Native Labour, Hut Tax, etc.—Earl Grey's Speech
Q. Mr. Bayley; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 8, 918.

Cable from South Africa to Australia—Eastern Telegraph Company's Concessions

Q. Mr. Hogan; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 1, 282.

German Policy—Baron von Marschall's Declaration, etc.

Q. Mr. Hedderwick; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 13, 1360.

Property in the Republics—Sir A. Milner's Proclamation, See South African War.

South African War, See that Title.

Africa, West

Gold Coast, See that Title.

Lagos, See that Title.

Sierra Leone Campaign Medals—Natives guilty of unlawful acts

Q. Mr. Hedderwick; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 9, 1050.

Tonga, See that Title.

Waima Incident, See that Title.

Aged Deserving Poor

Departmental Committee, Reports Presented, Feb. 9, 1041, Feb. 12, 1165.

National Old Age Pensions, Petition, Feb. 13, 1357.

Old Age Pensions Bill, See that Title.

Old Age Provident Pensions Bill, See that Title.

Outdoor Provident Relief Bill, See that Title.

[See also Old Age Pensions.]

Agrarian Outrages, Ireland

Returns Presented, Jan. 31, 158; Feb. 1, 233.

Agricultural Department, Ireland

See Ireland.

Agricultural Districts

Education—Circular to Local Authorities, etc.

Q. Mr. Hobhouse; A. Sir J. Gorst, Feb. 8, 923.

Agricultural Grants, Ireland

County Cess Allotment

Q. Captain Donelan; A. Mr. G. W. Balfour, Feb. 1, 290.

Agricultural Labourers

Workmen's Compensation Act—Extension
Q. Sir J. T. Woodhouse; A. Sir M. W. Ridley, Feb. 1, 284.

Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, Extension Bill, See that Title.

Agriculture, Board of President—Right Hon. W. H. Long.

Veterinary Advisers

Q. Mr. Johnson-Ferguson; A. Mr. Long, Feb. 6, 718.

Airdrie, Coatbridge and District Water Trust Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1027.

1R. Feb. 12, 1196.*

Airdrie and Coatbridge Tramways Bill

Petitions referred to Standing Orders, Feb. 9, 1037.

Standing Orders not complied with, Feb. 9, 1022; 1027.

Akers-Douglas, See DouglasAlaska Boundary Question

Provisional Boundary, Exchange of Notes, Jan. 30, 45, 64.

Aliens

Immigration, Returns Presented, Feb. 8, 897, 898, 904.

Naturalized Aliens, Names of—Address for Return, Jan. 30, 160.

Allan, Mr. W. [Gateshead]

Patriotic Fund, Application and Administration of, Feb. 8, 971.

South African War.

Progress of the War, Feb. 1, 256.

Uitlander Volunteers—Governor of Natal's Offer, Number of Volunteers Enrolled, etc., Feb. 5, 566.

"Victoria and Albert"—Capsizing, cause, Feb. 1, 279.

Alliance Rumours

See "Triple Alliance"—Mr. J. Chamberlain's Statement at Leicester.

Allotments Act

Extending to Ireland.

Q. Mr. Field; A. Mr. G. W. Balfour, Feb. 1, 292.

Ambrose, Mr. R. (Mayo, West)

Congested Districts (Ireland) Board and Westport Landlords, Feb. 13, 1375.

Poor Law Officers' Salaries, Ireland, Feb. 13, 1375.

Sligo's, Marquess of, Estate—Correspondence with the Congested Districts Board, Feb. 9, 1059.

"American" Transport Ship

Meat unfit for use

Qs. Gen. Laurie, Mr. Jeffreys; As. Mr. Macartney, Feb. 2, 434.

Ancient Monuments Protection Bill

c. 1R. Feb. 13, 1380.*

Anglo-German Convention*See* Titles Samoa and Tonga.Anglo-German Secret Treaty

Terms of Alleged Treaty, etc.

Q. Mr. G. Bowles; A. Mr. Brodrick,
*Feb. 1, 282.AnimalsFoot and Mouth Disease, See that Title.Vivisection, See that Title.Anti-Shanars RiotsPetition for redress of Grievances, *Feb. 6, 696.Appropriation Accounts Presented, Jan. 31, 160.*ArbitrationSouth African War, See that Title.Archdale, Mr. [Fermanagh, N.]Local Government [Ireland] Act (1898), Amendment Bill, 2R., *Feb. 14, 1488.Armagh, Mid.New Writ, *Jan. 30, 54.ArmamentsBoer Armaments and British Guns, etc.,
See South African War—Sub-headings,
Boer Armaments, Guns, etc.ArmiesMilitary Systems of Continental Powers and Great Britain, difference between Salisbury, Marquess of, on, *Jan. 30, 31.Arms Licences, IrelandRefusing Licence to Mr. J. O'Neill
Q. Mr. Farrell; A. Mr. Atkinson,
*Feb. 6, 724.*Roscommon—Request for description of weapons, etc., by the Police
Q. Mr. Haydon; A. Mr. Atkinson,
*Feb. 13, 1377.Armstrong's, Messrs.Offer of Guns for South Africa
Q. Mr. J. A. Pease; A. Mr. Wyndham,
Feb. 8, 913.ArmySecretary of State—Marquess of Lansdowne*Under Secretaries*—Mr. G. Wyndham;
Sir R. H. Knox*Financial Secretary*—Mr. J. P. Williams.Army Corps—Three Army Corps for Home
Defence, &c.Statement (Mr. Wyndham), *Feb. 12, 1271.*Army Service Corps, Increase in—Military Scheme of the GovernmentStatements (Marquess of Lansdowne), *Feb. 12, 1175; (Mr. Wyndham), 1271.Army—cont.Artillery, addition to—Military Scheme of the GovernmentStatements (Marquess of Lansdowne),
Feb. 12, 1174; (Mr. Wyndham), 1271.

Artillery Changes in 1887

Q. Sir J. Colomb; A. Mr. Wyndham,
Feb. 9, 1045; Feb. 13, 1362.

Auxiliary Forces

Number on Feb. 1st

Statement (Mr. Wyndham), Feb. 12, 1261

Scheme of Home Defence, etc.

Statements (Marquess of Lansdowne), Feb. 12, 1175; (Mr. Wyndham), 1230 — Debate Resumed, Feb. 13, 1382.

(See also Titles Militia, Volunteers and Yeomanry).

Boots—Indian Contract, Prices, etc.

Qs. Mr. Channing; As. Mr. J. P. Williams, *Feb. 8, 903; Feb. 9, 1049.*Cartridges—Defective Webley Cartridges
Q. Mr. Hedderwick; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 5, 567.

Cavalry—Military Scheme of the Government

Statements (Marquess of Lansdowne),
*Feb. 12, 1175 (Mr. Wyndham), 1272.*Chelsea Hospital—Account Presented,
*Feb. 12, 1166, 1217.*Civil Disturbances, Suppression of, by Troops—Expenses of Troops employedQ. Mr. D. A. Thomas; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, *Feb. 13, 1364.*Clerical Establishments, Vacancies—
Claims of Officers' Sons and DaughtersQ. Mr. S. MacNeill; A. Mr. Wyndham, *Feb. 8, 916.*Clothing for Troops in South Africa, See South African War.Commissions for Non-commissioned Officers in South Africa, See South African War—Promotion from the Ranks.

Conscription, Compulsory Scheme, &c.

Qs. Marquess of Salisbury, *Jan. 30, 31; Marquess of Lansdowne, Feb. 12, 1182; Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 12, 1260; Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, Feb. 12, 1279.*Contemplated Military Measures, See sub-heading, Strengthening and Improving Organisation of Regular and Auxiliary
Forces.Crimean and Indian Mutiny Veterans,
See that Title.Defence of the Empire, See that Title.Electoral Disabilities (Military Services)
Bill—Extension to Army and Navy
ForcesQs. General Laurie, Mr. G. Bowles;
As. Sir M. W. Ridley, Feb. 6, 709.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Army—cont.

- Engineers (Royal) Department — High charges for Building Work, alleged, Inquiry into Administration
Q. Mr. S. MacNeill; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 12, 1230.
- Ex-Soldiers Rejoining for one year Scheme, Statements (Marquess of Lansdowne), Feb. 12, 1179; (Mr. Wyndham), 1273.
- Forage for South Africa, See South African War.
- Guns
 - Artillery Volunteers. See Volunteers.
 - New Batteries, Guns for
Statement, (Marquess of Lansdowne), Feb. 12, 1175.
 - South African War, See that Title.
- Home Defences, See Defences of the Empire.
- India, See that Title.
- Lee-Enfield Rifles—Trials, etc.
Qs. Mr. F. W. Wilson, Mr. Weir; As. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 1, 276, Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 6, 710.
Statement, (Mr. Wyndham), Feb. 1, 340.
- Linked Battalion System
O. Sir C. Dilke, Feb. 12, 1286.
- Maps, Surveys, etc., of South Africa, See South African War.
- Mauser Pistols and the Imperial Light Horse Equipment
Q. Mr. Hedderwick; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 5, 571.
- Medical Corps—Number of Officers employed in South Africa, and at other Foreign Stations, etc.
Q. Sir W. Foster; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 6, 705.
- Metal Market—Buying through a Broker, Discontinuance of old system
Qs. Mr. Warner; As. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 2, 440; Feb. 5, 583.
- “Military Authorities”—Definition
Qs. Sir J. Colomb; As. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 9, 1045; Feb. 13, 1362.
- Militia, See that Title.
- Officers’ Quarters—Wives of Regimental Officers and the surrender of Quarters
Q. Mr. S. MacNeill; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 2, 439.
- Officers for new Battalions, etc.
Statements (Marquess of Lansdowne), Feb. 12, 1180; (Mr. Wyndham), 1275.
- Patriotic Fund, Application and Administration of, etc.
Amendment to the Address (Mr. Kearley), Feb. 8, 941.
- Promotions from the Ranks, See South African War.
- Recruiting, Progress of Statements (Marquess of Lansdowne), Feb. 12, 1174; (Mr. Wyndham), 1273.

Army—cont.

- Reserve—Strengthening and Improving Organization of the Regular and Auxiliary Forces—Government Proposals Statements (Marquis of Lansdowne), Feb. 12, [78] 1171; Mr. Wyndham, 1273.
- Reserve and Three Years’ men
Statement (Marquess of Lansdowne), Feb. 12, 1181.
- Rifle Ranges, See that Title.
- Russell “Shooting Director” Invention
Qs. Sir J. Fergusson; As. Mr. J. P. Williams, Mr. Goschen, Feb. 12, 1232.
- Salisbury Plain. Property purchased—Return, Jan. 31, 158.
- Savings Banks—Statements Presented
Feb. 5, 562; Feb. 8, 897.
- Schools, Military Drill, proposed
O. Lord Wantage, Feb. 12, 1184.
- Secret Service Fund, See that Title.
- Separation Allowances, See South African War.
- Soldiers’ Effects Fund—Crimean Soldiers’ Widows, etc.
Q. Sir J. Leng; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 8, 915.
- South Africa, Military Necessities after the War
O. Sir C. Dilke, Feb. 12, 1286.
- South African War, See that Title.
- Strength of the Army—Number and Constitution of Forces at home—Statements (Marquess of Lansdowne), Feb. 12, 1172; (Mr. Wyndham), 1261.
- Strengthening and Improving Organisation of Regular and Auxiliary Forces—Government Scheme Contemplated Military Measures
Q. Sir F. Flannery; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 1, 257; Q. Mr. Warner; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 5, 565.
Motion (Earl of Dunraven) Feb. 5, 550.
- References to in Debate on the Address, Jan. 30, 38, 39; Jan. 31, 194.
- Statements (Marquess of Lansdowne), Feb. 12, 1168, 1173; (Mr. Wyndham), 1257;—Debate Resumed, Feb. 13, 1382.
- (For Details of Scheme See Titles, Militia, Volunteers, Yeomanry, etc.)
- Swiss Military System
O. Sir J. Fergusson, Feb. 12, 1297.
Q. Mr. Seely; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 13, 1362.
- Three Years’ men, Additions to Line Battalions—
Statements (Marquess of Lansdowne), Feb. 12, 1181; (Mr. Wyndham), 1273.
- Volunteers, See that Title.
- Yeomanry, See that Title.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Army Estimates

Issue of, to Members

Q. Mr. Buchanan; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 13, 1364.Supplementary Estimates Presented, Feb. 2, 903.Supplementary Estimates—Land Forces (120,000), Com., Feb. 12, 1257, 1382.Army and Navy Investment Trust Billl. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1163.Arnold, Mr. A. [Halifax]South African War, Feb. 7, 890.Arnold-Foster, Mr. H. O. [Belfast, W.]Army—Government Military Proposals, Feb. 12, 1329.South African War—State of Home Defences, Military Administration, etc. Feb. 1, 342.ArtillerySee* Titles, Army and South African War—Guns.AsiaGerman and Russian Railway Construction
Q. Mr. Maclean; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 13, 1367.Persia and Afghanistan, See those Titles.Assizes, IrelandOrders in Council Presented, Jan. 31, 159; Feb. 1, 235.Asquith, Right Hon. H. H. [Fife, E.]South African War—Military and Political Policy of the Government, etc. (Vote of Censure), Feb. 6, 731.Aston Manor Tramways Billl. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1161.Atherley-Jones, Mr. L. [Durham, N.W.]South African War—Policy of the Government, etc. (Vote of Censure), Feb. 5, 632.Atkinson, Right Hon. J.—Attorney General for Ireland [Londonderry, N.]Arms, Licensing to carry, Refusal of licence to Mr. J. O'Neill, Feb. 6, 725.

Belfast

Police Cells—Death of J. Thompson, Feb. 12, 1241.Union—Charge against an Employee, Misappropriation of Food, Feb. 5, 587.Carriage Licences in Dublin, Feb. 8, 936.Cavan Police Force—Number of Police, etc. Feb. 9, 1059.Clare Extra Police, Charges, etc., Feb. 9, 1057.Constabulary—Leave of Absence, Suspension of, alleged, Feb. 13, 1375.County Court Printing—Cost of, and the County Council, Feb. 13, 1376.Curtin, Michael, Case of, Feb. 8, 934.Dingle Pier, Condition of—Proposed Extension, etc., Feb. 5, 584.Atkinson, Right Hon. J.—*cont.*Explosives. Sale of—New Regulations, Feb. 6, 724.Granard Estate—Purchase of Holdings by Tenants, Action of Land Commissioners, etc., Feb. 13, 1377.Gun Licences in Roscommon—Request for description of weapons by police, Feb. 13, 1377.Herring Industry—Government Brand, etc., Feb. 5, 585.

Judicial Appointments

Politics of Judges, Feb. 12, 1241.Religious Disabilities, Feb. 5, 585; Feb. 13, 1375.Justices of the Peace, Removal of, Feb. 5, 589.Kanturk Baronial Railway Guarantee, Feb. 9, 1058.Kerry—Extra Police in County Kerry, Feb. 8, 932.Land (Ireland) Acts, Administration and working of, Feb. 9, 1121, 1146.Land Commission—Land Court Returns Feb. 6, 725.Lifford County Court House—Action of the High Sheriff, Feb. 5, 589; Feb. 8, 935.Local Government (Ireland) Act (1898) Amendment Bill, 2R, Feb. 14, 1472, 1487, 1503, 1504, 1505, 1506, 1507, 1508, 1509, 1510, 1511, 1512, 1515.Local Government Rate Allowances, Feb. 5, 586.Lunatic Asylums, Grant in Aid and Local Taxation Account, Feb. 13, 1376.National Education—Money handed over to new Board of Agriculture, Recouping, Feb. 8, 936.Newcastle West—Labourers' Cottages Scheme, Feb. 8, 937.Ogilby Estate (or Omagh Estate), Co. Tyrone, Sale of, Feb. 8, 931.Out-Nursing in Unions, etc., Feb. 8, 932.Paupers—Removal of Irish Paupers City of Dublin Grievance, Feb. 6, 724.Settlement, Law of, Extending to Ireland, Feb. 6, 724.Peace Preservation Act—Monaghan County Council Resolution, Feb. 12, 1241.Poor Law Expenditure, Increase in—New Dispensary Rules, etc., Feb. 8, 929.Road Contractors—Difficulties of obtaining access to Quarries, etc., Feb. 8, 930.Roscommon—Proclaimed Meeting, Feb. 12, 1242.Rural District Councils, Number of Members constituting Quorum, etc., Feb. 13, 1374.Sanitary Works—Charges under Local Government Act, etc., Feb. 12, 1243.Small Houses [Acquisition of Ownership] Act, Extension to Ireland—Carrying out of the Act, etc., Feb. 5, 588.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Atkinson, Right Hon. J.—cont.

- Tallow—Extra Police, Feb. 13, 1378.
 Trawling in Wexford Bay, Feb. 8, 933.
 Warden Estate
 Ejectment Decrees, etc., Feb. 8, 931.
 National Teacher's Residence Site,
 Feb. 9, 1057.
 Westport Landlords and Congested Districts Board, Feb. 13, 1375.

Attar Khan

- Petition, Jan. 31, 157.

Attorney General

- Sir R. E. Webster.

Austin, Mr. M.—[Limerick, W.]

- Curtin, Michael, case of, Feb. 8, 934.
 Newcastle West—Labourers' Cottages
 Scheme, Feb. 8, 937.
 Small Houses [Acquisition of Ownership]
 Act, Extension to Ireland—Carrying out of the Act, etc., Feb. 5, 888.

Australasia

- Cable from South Africa to Australia,
 Eastern Telegraph Company's Concessions
 Q. Mr. Hogan; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 1, 282.
 Contingent in South Africa—Chaplains,
 Roman Catholic Chaplains
 Q. Mr. T. Curran; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 1, 269.
 Federation—Commonwealth Bill, etc.
 Date of introduction.
 Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 9, 1051.
 Reference to in Debate on the Address (Lords), Jan. 30, 12, 16; (Commons),
 Jan. 30, 77, 81.
 Freemantle, Port of Call for Mail Steamers
 Q. Mr. Hogan; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb.
 6, 726.
 Mints—Coinage of Silver
 Q. Mr. Hogan; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb.
 13, 1374.

Auxiliary Forces

- See* Titles, Army, Militia, Volunteers, etc.

Avebury of Avebury, Baron

- New Peer, Jan. 30, 5.

Bahamas

- Report presented, Jan. 30, 46, 63.

Bainbridge, Mr. E. [Lincoln, Gainsborough]

- Hawksley Correspondence—"Independence Belge" Publication, Feb. 1, 259.
 Merchant Cruisers—Subsidised Cruisers,
 Return, Feb. 6, 712.
 South African War
 Boer Supremacy in South Africa—
 Conspiracy, alleged, Feb. 1, 256.

Bainbridge, Mr. E.—cont.South African War—cont.

- Butler, Sir W. — Views and Proceedings, Resignation, etc., De-patches relating to, Feb. 1, 254.
 Guns at Pretoria, Feb. 6, 699.
 Indian Native Troops, Employment of,
 Feb. 1, 271.
 Northumberland Fusilier Volunteers
 Equipment—Application to War
 Office, alleged, Feb. 6, 705.
 Transport Wagons—Wagons unfit for use, alleged, Feb. 6, 700.
 Transports, Employment of First-class Passenger Ships in the Future, Feb.
 6, 699.
 Volunteer Artillery Guns—Complaints, Feb. 6, 705.

Bakehouses [Hours of Labour] Bill

- c. 1R.* Feb. 9*, 1065.

Baker Street and Waterloo Railway Bill

- c. Ordered, Feb. 9*, 1027.
1R. Feb. 12*, 1196.

Balcarres, Lord [Lancashire, Chorley]

- Science and Art Department, Council of Advice on Art Matters, Feb. 13, 1370.
 Victoria and Albert Museum, Guiliano's
 Bequests—Stolen Ornaments, Feb. 13, 1370.

Baldwin's Estate

- Q. Mr. M. Healy; A. Mr. Atkinson,*
Feb. 6, 726.

Balfour, Rt. Hon. A. J.—First Lord of the Treasury [Manchester, East]

- Army—Contemplated Military Measures,
 Feb. 1, 257; Feb. 5, 566.
 Ballot for Bills and Motions, Jan. 31, 162.
 Business of the House, Feb. 8, 938, 939, 940, 941.

Address in Answer to the Queen's Speech

- Business of the House on conclusion of Debate, Feb. 6, 727, 728.

Discussion of Amendments, Facilities for, Feb. 1, 258.*Financial Business—Precedence on Tuesdays, Feb. 12, 1248.*Cabinet Committee of Defence, Constitution and Functions of, Feb. 1, 261.*Church Discipline—Legislation, Feb. 1, 263.*Contraband of War, Food Stuffs as, Feb. 6, 708.*France—British Ambassador in Paris, Temporary Absence, Feb. 12, 1233.*Hawksley Correspondence—"Independence Belge" Publication, Feb. 1, 258.*Irish Gold Ornaments and the British Museum, Feb. 1, 293.*Marine Insurance Bill, Feb. 13, 1248.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Balfour, Rt. Hon. A. J.—cont.

Old Age Pensions—Relief of Sufferers by the War, Feb. 1, 1220.

Patriotic Fund, Application and Administration of, Feb. 8, 970, 971, 973.

Queen's Speech—The Address, Jan. 30, 96; Jan. 31, 162; Feb. 1, 302, 376, 381, 382, 384, 391; Feb. 6, 813.

Termination of Debate, Jan. 31, 231.

Saunderson's, Col., remarks on the Irish Nationalists, Feb. 2, 537.

School Board Franchise, Scotland—Legislation, Feb. 12, 1247.

South African War

Arbitration, Feb. 2, 426.

Boer Armaments and Strength of the Enemy, etc., Jan. 30, 103—Sir W. Butler's Despatches, Feb. 2, 427.

Boer Supremacy in South Africa Conspiracy, alleged, Feb. 1, 256.

Butler, Sir W.

Despatches and Correspondence, Feb. 1, 253, 256; Feb. 2, 427.

Military Situation—Report, Feb. 1, 253, 255.

Milner, Sir A., and Sir W. Butler, Different views of Policy—Defence of Natal, etc., Feb. 5, 566; Feb. 12, 218.

Views and Proceedings, Resignation, etc.—Despatches relating to, Feb. 1, 254, 255.

Canadian Contingent—Refusal of Cavalry by the War Office, Feb. 2, 428.

Government and the War—Want of Knowledge, Foresight, etc. [Vote of Censure], Jan. 30, 96; Feb. 1, 376, 381, 382, 384, 391; Feb. 6, 813.

Guns—Artillery Strength in South Africa previous to Outbreak of Hostilities, Feb. 12, 1219.

Indian Native Troops, Employment of, Feb. 1, 271.

Magersfontein Engagement and the Highland Brigade, Inquiry, Feb. 1, 261; Feb. 12, 1220.

Orange Free State joining the Transvaal, Jan. 30, 103; Feb. 1, 302.

Prisoners—Boer Prisoners on Board Ship, Feb. 12, 1219.

Progress of the War, Feb. 1, 256.

War Office Administration, Feb. 6, 815; Feb. 12, 1344.

Town Tenants, Ireland—Legislation, Feb. 2, 451.

Treasury, Constitution and Functions of, etc.—Select Committee of Inquiry Suggested, Feb. 12, 1234.

"Triple Alliance"—Mr. Chamberlain's Speech at Leicester, Feb. 5, 578.

Volunteers, Irish Volunteers, Formation of Corps, Feb. 5, 564.

Balfour, Rt. Hon. G. W.—(Chief Secretary for Ireland [Leeds, Central].)

Agricultural Grants and Country Cess, Amount allotted, etc., Feb. 1, 290.

Allotments Act, Extending to Ireland, Feb. 1, 292.

Castleisland and Ballinacelligot District, Fair Rent Applications, Feb. 1, 293.

Chamberlain's, Mr., visit to Dublin, Conduct of Trinity College Students, etc., Feb. 2, 447.

Cork County, Fair Rent applications in, Feb. 2, 448.

District Councillors Disqualifications, Feb. 1, 280.

Government Printing—Copyrighted Rate Books, Feb. 2, 449.

Intermediate Education Act—Amendment proposed, Feb. 1, 292.

Judges—Religion of Judges, Unequal Number of Protestant to Roman Catholic, Feb. 1, 291.

Kerry—Application for Fair Rent in North Kerry, Feb. 2, 450.

Land, Revaluation of, Feb. 2, 451.

Land Law [Ireland] Act, 1896—Returns Feb. 2, 447.

Local Government Election Petitions, Commissioners' Judgments—Return, Feb. 1, 288.

Local Government Officials and the Local Government Act, 1898

Claims for Compensation, etc., Procedure adopted by the Treasury Department, Feb. 1, 285.

Remuneration of County and District Council Officials—Action of the Local Government Board, Feb. 1, 286.

Local Government Rules and Orders Feb. 1, 289; Feb. 2, 451.

Probate Duty Grant—Distribution of to Poor Law Unions, delay in, Feb. 1, 292.

Roads—Labourers undertaking maintenance and repairs, Feb. 1, 291.

Statutes—Codification, Feb. 1, 293.

Ballot for Bills and Motions

Motion [Mr. A. J. Balfour], Jan. 31, 160.

Ballymacelligot District

Fair Rent Applications—Delay in hearing Q. Mr. Flavin; A. Mr. G. W. Balfour, Feb. 1, 293.

Banbury, Mr. F. G. [Camberwell, Peckham]

Out-door Relief (Friendly Societies) (No. 2) Bill, 2r., Feb. 13, 1464.

Bank Notes

Return of Notes not Presented for Payment, etc., Feb. 1, 236.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Bank of England

Advances to Government, Copy of Applications Presented, Feb. 8, 903.

Annual Accounts of Exchequer Bills, etc., Presented, Feb. 1, 236.

Exchequer Bills and other Government Securities, etc., Accounts Presented, Jan. 31, 160.

Bankruptcy Court, Ireland

Rules—Order in Council Presented, Jan. 31, 159; Feb. 1, 235.

Barbed Wire Cutters

South African War

Q. Mr. Nussey; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 1, 264.

Barlow, Mr. J. E. [Somerset, Frome]

South African War

Reserve Officers' Outfit Allowance, Feb. 8, 913.

Yeomanry Commissions, Selection of Officers, etc., Feb. 8, 911.

Barnsley Corporation Bill

Standing Orders not complied with, Feb. 13, 1353, 1356,

Barracks

Malta—Insanitary Condition of Barracks, etc.

Q. Mr. Stevenson; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 13, 1365.

Barry Railway (Steam Vessels) Bill

1 R. Feb. 12*, 1163.

Bartley, Mr. G. C. T. [Islington, N.]

Jameson Raid—Excuse for Arming of the Transvaal, Feb. 1, 371.

Queen's Speech—The Address, Feb. 1, 367.

South African War

British Forces, Composition of, Feb. 8, 905.

Customs Duties on Articles sent to the Troops, Feb. 6, 708.

Political and Military Policy of the Government, etc. (Vote of Censure), Feb. 1, 367.

Wallace Collection, Opening to the Public, Feb. 12, 1240.

Basingstoke and Alton Light Railway

Order Presented, Feb. 9, 1023, 1040.

Basutoland

Native Labour, Hut Tax, etc.—Earl Grey's Speech

Q. Mr. Bayley; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 8, 918.

Bateman, Lord

South African War—Commands at the Front, Feb. 12, 1166.

Bayley, Mr. T. [Derbyshire, Chesterfield]

Basutoland—Native Labour, Hut Tax, etc., Earl Grey's Speech, Feb. 8, 918.

Patriotic Fund, Application and Administration of, Feb. 8, 953.

Beach, Rt. Hon. Sir M. H.—Chancellor of the Exchequer [Bristol, W.]

Education—Reform of Primary Education in Ireland, Feb. 2, 445.

Income Tax—Servant of Limited Liability Company and the Three Years' Average, Feb. 12, 1235.

Secret Service Fund

Application for Increase, Feb. 2, 446.
Unexpended Balance, Feb. 8, 921.

South African War

Death Duties, Proposal to remit, Feb. 12, 1221.

Stinting Military Preparations, alleged, Jan. 31, 180.

Taxation of Ireland—

Over Taxation alleged, Feb. 9, 1090, 1102.

Cost of the War in South Africa, Exemption of Ireland from additional Taxation Proposed, Feb. 12, 1222.

Treasury Bills, Issue of, Feb. 1, 278.

Beach, Rt. Hon. Sir M. H.

South African War and the Chancellor of the Exchequer

See Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Beckett, Mr. E. W. [York, N.R., Whitby]

South African War—Policy of the Government, etc. [Vote of Censure], Feb. 5, 671]

Bedford Gas Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1027.

1 R. Feb. 12*, 1196.

Beer Retailers' and Spirit Grocers' Licences [Ireland] Bill

c. 1 R. Feb. 2*, 410.

Beer Retailers' and Spirit Grocers' Licences [Ireland] [No. 2.] Bill

c. 1 R. Feb. 2*, 416.

Belfast

Police Cells—Death of J. Thompson

Q. Mr. Daly; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 12, 1241.

Union—Charge against an Employee, Misappropriation of Food

Q. Mr. McCartan; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 5, 587.

Whisky in Bond—weak whisky

Q. Mr. W. Johnston; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 13, 1373.

Belfast and County Down Railway Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1027.

1 R. Feb. 12*, 1196.

Belgium

Flax Industry Report, Jan. 30, 47.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Belgium—cont.

Stokes, Mr., murder of—Compensation Money to Widow
Q. Mr. Hedderwick; A. Mr. Brodrick,
Feb. 13, 1366.

Belts

Flannel Belts for the Troops in South Africa as a Precaution against Enteric Fever
Q. Gen. Russell; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 12, 1226.

Bethell, Commander G. R. [York, E.R., Holderness]

Patriotic Fund, Application and Administration of, Feb. 8, 969.

South African War, Feb. 7, 887.

Bexhill and Rotherfield Railway Bill

1. 1R. Feb. 12, 1163.*

Bhownaggee, Sir M. M. [Bethnal Green, N.E.]

Buckland Museum of Fish Culture, Accommodation for, at South Kensington Museum, Feb. 8, 920.

India, Expenditure Commission Report, Feb. 8, 919.

Persia—Russian Loan, Terms of, etc., Feb. 8, 922.

Bichromate or Chromate of Potassium

Manufacture of, Special Factory Rules Presented, Jan. 30, 51, 66.

Biddulph, Mr. M. [Herefordshire, Ross]

Army—Government Military Measures, Feb. 12, 1213.

Bills

Ballot for Bills—Motion (Mr. A. J. Balfour), Jan. 31, 160.

Government Bills and the Ten Minute Rule

Qs. Mr. S. MacNeill, Mr. Speaker, Feb. 12, 1380.

Private Bills. See that Title.

Birmingham Corporation [Stock] Bill

1. 1R. Feb. 12, 1161.*

Birmingham [King Edward the Sixth] Schools Bill

1. 1R. Feb. 12, 1161.*

Birmingham University

College Charter Act, 1871—Paper Presented, Jan. 30, 50, 68.

Birmingham University Bill

1. 1R. Feb. 12, 1161.*

Birrell, Mr. A. [Eife, W.]

South African War and the Government (Vote of Censure), Feb. 2, 543.

Blundell, Colonel H. B. H. [Lancashire, Ince]

Army—Scheme for Strengthening the Army, and Improving Organisation of Auxiliary Forces, etc., Feb. 12, 1431.

South African War—Conduct of the Campaign, etc., Feb. 2, 503.

Blythswood, Lord

Volunteers—Home Defence Scheme, Feb. 12, 1185.

Board of Agriculture

See Agriculture, Board of.

Boer Armaments

See South African War.

Boer Supremacy in South Africa

See South African War.

Boilers

Steam Engines and Boilers [Persons in Charge] Bill, See that Title.

Boilers Registration and Inspection Bill

c. 1R. Feb. 2, 408.*

Bond, Mr. E. [Nottingham, E.]

Ships of War—Precautions against Fire, Feb. 12, 1237.

South African War and the Government, etc. (Vote of Censure), Feb. 6, 800.

Boochuna—

Petition, Jan. 31, 157.

Boots for Troops

Indian Contracts—Prices, etc.

Qs. Mr. Channing; As. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 8, 909; Feb. 9, 1049.

Borneo—North British Borneo

Difference between Natives and Chartered Company—Expedition against Mat Sallah, &c.

Qs. Mr. Weir; As. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 6, 714; Feb. 13, 1366.

Borough Funds Bill

c. 1R. Feb. 2, 421.*

Bournemouth Corporation Bill

1. 1R. Feb. 12, 1161.*

Bowles, Mr. T. G.—[Lynn Regis]

Anglo-German, alleged, Secret Treaty, Terms, etc., Feb. 1, 282.

Army—Scheme for Strengthening the Army, and Improving Organisation of, etc., Auxiliary Forces, Feb. 12, 1289.

Ballot for Bills and Motions, Jan. 31, 163.

Cabinet Committee of Defence, Constitution and Functions of, Feb. 1, 261.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Bowles. Mr. T. G.—cont.

Contraband of War and the Right of Search—Detention of Herzog, etc., Feb. 2, 430; Feb. 8, 907; Feb. 9, 1041.

Declaration of Paris, Queen's Signature and the Draft of Declaration, etc., Feb. 2, 443.

Electoral Disabilities [Military Services] Bill, Extension to Army and Navy Forces, Feb. 6, 710.

German Navy—Co-operation of Holland with Germany in Development of the Navy, alleged, Feb. 13, 1368.

Persia—Russian Railway Concessions in Northern Persia, Feb. 12, 1234.

Queen's Speech—The Address, Jan. 31, 163.

South African War

Intervention of Foreign Governments, Feb. 2, 430.

Irish Attitude, Terms of Peace, etc., Feb. 7, 868.

Property in the Republics—Sir A. Milner's Proclamation, Feb. 1, 269; Feb. 9, 1042; Feb. 13, 1361.

Treasury, Constitution and Functions of—Select Committee of Inquiry suggested, Feb. 12, 1233.

Boy Sailor Scheme and the Naval Reserve

Number of Boys enrolled

Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Mr. Ritchie, Feb. 12, 1238.

Bradford Corporation Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1028.

1R. Feb. 12*, 1197.

Bradford and Leeds Light Railway Order,

Feb. 9, 1023, 1039.

Brakes

See Railways.

Brasenose College, Oxford

Statute Presented, Jan. 30, 50, 68.

Bray and Enniskerry Railway Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1028.

1R. Feb. 12*, 1197.

Brewery and Commercial Investment Trust, Limited, Bill

1. 1R. Feb. 12*, 1163.

Bridges

Highways and Bridges Act (1891) Amendment Bill, See that Title.

Brighton Corporation Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1028.

1R. Feb. 12*, 1197.

Bristol Water Bill

1. 1R. Feb. 13*, 1353.

British Constitution

Defects of, as an Instrument of War—Marquess of Salisbury's statement Jan. 30, 30

Os. Sir E. Grey, Feb. 1, 381, 383; Mr. Bryce, Feb. 2, 471; Sir W. Harcourt, Feb. 5, 593; Mr. Asquith, Feb. 6, 731.

Treasury, See that Title.

British Gas Light Company [Staffordshire Potteries] Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1028.

1R. Feb. 12*, 1197.

British Honduras

Money Orders Convention between United States and British Honduras, Jan. 30, 45, 46.

Report presented, Jan. 30, 46, 63. See also

British Museum

Irish Gold Ornaments, decision as to Q. Sir T. Esmonde; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 1, 293.

British North Borneo

See Borneo.

British South Africa Company

Hawksley Correspondence, See that Title.

Broadhurst, Mr. H. [Leicester]

South African War—Sleeping Helmets, Feb. 8, 913.

Brodrick, Rt. Hon. St. John—Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs [Surrey, Guildford]

Asia—German and Russian Railway Construction, Feb. 13, 1367.

Borneo, British North—Natives and the British North Borneo Company, Expedition against Mat Sellah, &c., Feb. 13, 1367.

China—French Settlement at Shanghai—Extension, Feb. 6, 716.

Contraband of War and the Right of Search—Detention of the "Herzog," etc., Feb. 2, 431; Feb. 8, 907; Feb. 9, 1041; Feb. 12, 1223.

Declaration of Paris—Queen's Signature, Draft of Declaration, etc., Feb. 2, 444.

Delagoa Bay

Anglo-German, alleged, Secret Treaty, Terms, etc., Feb. 1, 282.

Railway, Delay in delivery of award, Feb. 8, 914.

Transvaal Consul—Removal of Mr. Pott, etc., Feb. 6, 707.

Egypt—Insubordination among Egyptian Troops at Omdurman, Feb. 12, 1235.

Germany

Navy Development—Co-operation of Holland, alleged, Feb. 13, 1368.

South African Policy—Baron von Marschall's Declaration, etc., Feb. 13, 1360.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14

Brodrick, Rt. Hon. St. John—cont.Hydrographical Conference, Feb. 12, 1235.“Kowshing” Claims—Negotiations, etc., *Feb. 9, 1051.*New Hebrides—Sale of Spirits and Firearms to Natives, *Feb. 13, 1366.*Nicaragua Canal Convention—Clayton-Bulwer Treaty Rights, *Feb. 8, 922.*Osman Digna, Treatment of, *Feb. 12, 1235.Persia*Russian LoanCommunication from Persian Government, *Feb. 9, 1052.*Terms of, etc., Feb. 6, 716; Feb.
*8, 922.*Russian Railway Concessions in Northern Persia, Feb. 12, 1234;
*Feb. 13, 1367.*Queen's Speech—The Address, Jan. 31,
*218.*Samoa—Anglo-German Convention, Working of new arrangements, *Feb. 6, 714.South African WarEgyptian Guns and Stores, *Feb. 8, 905.*Gold Mines—Sir A. Milner's Notice, Concurrence of Foreign Powers, etc.,
*Feb. 13, 1361.*Intervention of Foreign Governments, *Feb. 2, 430.*Policy of the Government, etc. (Vote of Censure), *Jan. 31, 218.*Stokes, Mr., murder of—Compensation Money to Widow, *Feb. 13, 1366.*Waima Incident—Negotiations, Feb. 5,
*578.*Zanzibar—Customs Duties, *Feb. 8, 923.Brompton and Piccadilly Circus Railway Billc. Ordered, *Feb. 9, 1028.1R. *Feb. 12, 1197.Brookfield, Mr. A. M. [Sussex, Rye]Army—Scheme for Strengthening the Army and Improving Organisation of Auxiliary Forces, etc., *Feb. 12, 1382.*South African War—Mismanagement, etc.
(Vote of Censure), *Jan. 31, 201.*War Office, Charges against by a Volunteer Officer, *Feb. 2, 439.Brotherhood Depression Range Finder

Experiments at Gibraltar

Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. J. P. Williams,
*Feb. 12, 1229.Brownlow, EarlMilitary Measures—Military Drill in Schools, etc., *Feb. 12, 1188.Bryce, Rt. Hon. J. [Aberdeen, South]British Constitution and the South African War—Prime Minister's Statement, Feb.
*2, 471.*Cape Dutch, Loyalty of, *Feb. 2, 469.*Jameson Raid and the South African War, *Feb. 2, 457.South African WarBoer Supremacy in South Africa, alleged conspiracy between the Orange Free State and the Transvaal, *Feb. 2, 468.*Policy of the Government (Vote of Censure), *Feb. 2, 456.*Settlement after the War, *Feb. 2, 473.*Uitlanders' Grievances, *Feb. 2, 458.Buchanan, Mr. T. R. [Aberdeenshire, East]Army—Scheme for Strengthening the Army, Cost of the War in South Africa, etc., *Feb. 12, 1316.*Army Estimates, Issue of, to Members, *Feb. 13, 1364.*India—Troops outside the Frontier, Expenditure, *Feb. 5, 576.South African WarPolicy of the Government, etc. (Vote of Censure), *Jan. 31, 192.*Transport—Return, Rates for Ships, etc., including in Return, Feb. 5,
*574.*Treasury Bills, Issue of, *Feb. 1, 278.Buckingham, Towcester and Metropolitan Junction Railway Billc. Ordered, *Feb. 9, 1028.1R. *Feb. 12, 1197.Buckland Museum of Fish CultureAccommodation for, at South Kensington Museum.Q. Sir M. Bhowaggre; A. Mr.
Ritchie, *Feb. 8, 920.Building SocietiesAnnual Report, *Feb. 1, 236.Bundar AbbasCustoms of the Port and Russian Loan to Persia.Q. Mr. Yerburch; A. Mr. Brodrick,
*Feb. 6, 716.*Russian Railway Concessions in Northern Persia.Qs. Mr. Drage, Mr. G. Bowles; As.
Mr. Brodrick, *Feb. 12, 1234.“Bundesrath”

Right of Search

Q. Mr. Hedderwick; A. Mr. A. J.
Balfour, *Feb. 12, 1222.Burghclere, LordFoot and Mouth Disease, Slaughter of Cattle, etc., *Feb. 13, 1354.Burial Law ReformQ. Mr. C. Williams; A. Sir M. W. Ridley
Feb. 2, 446.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Burnley Corporation Bill

l. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1162.

Burns, Mr. J. [Battersen]

South African War—Policy of the Government, etc. (Vote of Censure), Feb. 6, 781.

Bury and District Water (Transfer) Bill

l. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1162.

Business of the House

Qs. Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, Mr. Lough, Mr. J. Redmond, Mr. J. Lowther, Mr. Woods, Sir T. Esmonde, Mr. D. A. Thomas; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 8, 938, 939, 940, 941.

Address in Answer—Business of the House on Conclusion of the Debate.

Q. Mr. D. A. Thomas; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 6, 727.

Exemption from Standing Order, See Sittings and Adjournments of the House. Financial Business—Precedence on Tuesdays, Notice of Motion (Mr. A. J. Balfour), Feb. 9, 1060; Motion (Mr. A. J. Balfour), Feb. 12, 1248.

Butler, Sir W.

See South African War.

Buxton, Mr. S. C. [Tower Hamlets, Poplar]

South African War and the Government, etc. (Vote of Censure), Jan. 31, 178.

By-Elections

See Titles, New Writs, and New Members Sworn.

Cabinet Committee of Defence

Constitution and Functions of

Q. Mr. G. Bowles; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 1, 261.

Cable Communication

Africa, South—New Cable to Australia, Eastern Telegraph Company's Concessions

Q. Mr. Hogan; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 1, 282.

France—Reduction of Rates for Press (Night) Telegrams, Jan. 30, 46, 64.

Pacific Cable Scheme

Correspondence relating to, Jan. 30, 49, 67.

Delay in Proceedings

Q. Mr. Hogan; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 1, 281.

Cairne Valley Light Railway

Order Presented, Feb. 9, 1023, 1040.

Caledonian Railway Bill

l. 1R.* Feb. 13, 1353.

Campbell-Bannerman, Rt. Hon. Sir H. [Stirling Burghs.]

Army—Strengthening and Improving Organisation of Regular and Auxiliary Forces—Government Scheme, Feb. 12, 1277.

Ballot for Bills and Motions, Jan. 31, 62.

Campbell-Bannerman, Rt. Hon. Sir H.—cont.

Business of the House, Feb. 8, 938

Financial Business—Precedence on Tuesday, Feb. 12, 1249.

Compulsory Military Service, Feb. 12, 1270.

Queen's Speech—The Address, Jan. 30, 60, 80, 97, 98, 101, 106, 109; Feb. 6, 803.

Conduct and Courtesy of Debate—Speeches on the Government side of the House, Feb. 1, 391.

Termination of Debate, Jan. 31, 232; Feb. 1, 397.

South African War

Boer Armaments and Strength of the Enemy, Jan. 30, 90.

Glencoe, Occupation of—Question of Policy, Jan. 30, 95, 109.

Government and the War—Want of Knowledge, Judgment, etc. (Vote of Censure), Jan. 30, 81; Feb. 1, 397; Feb. 6, 803.

Orange Free State joining the Transvaal, Jan. 30, 91.

Camperdown, Earl

Spion Kop—Boer treatment of British wounded, Feb. 8, 900.

Canada

Alaska Boundary Dispute—Exchange of Notes, Jan. 30, 45.

Crofter Colonisation Scheme, Report, Jan. 30, 46, 61.

Pacific Cable, See that Title.

South African War

Medical Contingent, Refusal by War Office

Q. Gen. Laurie; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 9, 1046.

Offers of Troops—Refusal of Cavalry by the War Office

Q. Mr. Hedderwick; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 2, 428.

Cape Colony

Guns—Number of Guns, etc., previous to the Outbreak of Hostilities.

Q. Mr. Hedderwick; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 9, 1044; Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 12, 1219.

Military Hospitals—Defects, etc.

Q. Dr. Farquharson; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 8, 908.

Milner's, Sir A., Staff—Appointment of Mr. F. H. Wilson

Q. Mr. S. MacNeill; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 8, 1044.

(See also South African War).

Cape Dutch

Loyalty of, and the South African War

References to, in Debate on the Address, Feb. 2, 469, 509.

Cardiff

Coal Supply for National purposes—Firm Contracting to Supply Foreign Government with 400,000 Tons, alleged Cardiff—cont.

- Q. Gen. Russell ; A. Mr. Goschen,
Feb. 5, 575
Q. Earl of Dunraven ; A. Marquess of Lansdowne, Feb. 5, 561.

Cardiff Corporation Bill

l. 1R. Feb. 12, 1162.*

Standing Orders not Complied with,
Feb. 9, 1022, 1027.

Carriage Licences

Dublin

Q. Mr. Field ; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb.
8, 936.

Carrington, Sir F.

Commands at the Front

Os. Lord Bateman, Marquess of Lansdowne, Feb. 12, 1166.

Q. Mr. Coghill ; A. Mr. Wyndham,
Feb. 6, 701.

Carson, Rt. Hon. E. [Dublin University]

Local Government [Ireland] Act [1898]
Amendment Bill, 2R., Feb. 14, 1502.

Cartridges

Defective Webley Cartridges

Q. Mr. Heddewick ; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 5, 567.

Castleisland District

Fair Rent Applications, Delay in Hearing

Q. Mr. Flavin ; A. Mr. G. W. Balfour,
Feb. 1, 293.

Casual Labourers

Workmen's Compensation Act Extension

Q. Mr. Field ; A. Sir M. White-
Ridley, Feb. 1, 285.

Cattle

Foot and Mouth Disease, See that Title.

Cavan

Police Force—Number of Police, etc.

Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell ; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 9, 1058.

Cecil, Mr. E. [Herts, Hertford]

South African War and the Government, etc., (Vote of censure), Jan 30, 146

Celtic Gold Ornaments

British Museum and the Purchase of Irish
Gold Ornaments

Q. Sir T. Esmonde ; A. Mr. A. J.
Balfour, Feb. 1, 293.

Censorship of War News

Letters of War Correspondents

Q. Mr. Hogan ; A. Mr. Wyndham,
Feb. 1, 268.

Outgoing Telegrams

Q. Mr. L. Morgan ; A. Mr. Hanbury,
A. Feb. 2, 437.

Central Telegraph Office

Holiday Arrangements

Q. Mr. Steadman ; A. Mr. Hanbury,
Feb. 9, 1053.

Chamberlain Rt. Hon. J.—Secretary of State for the Colonies [Birmingham, W.]

Australasian Federation—Commonwealth,
Bill, Date of Introduction, etc., Feb. 9, 1051.

Basutoland—Native Labour, Hut Tax, etc.,—Earl Grey's Speech Feb. 8, 918.

Borneo—British North Borneo, Differences between Natives and Chartered Company, Expedition against Mat Sellah, etc., Feb. 6, 714.

Cable from South Africa to Australia—
Eastern Telegraph Company's Concessions, Feb. 1, 282.

Gibraltar—Sanitary Condition of Town and Garrison, Feb. 5, 577.

Gold Coast Railways—Cape Coast to Axim, etc., Feb. 8, 918.

Hawksley Correspondence

"Indépendance Belge," Publication,
Feb. 1, 258.

Laying upon the Table of the House,
Feb. 5, 567.

Letter to Earl Grey, Feb. 2, 428.

Jamaica Legislative Council—Nominated and Elected Numbers, Action of the Governor, etc., Feb. 6, 715.

Malta Barracks, Insanitary Condition of,
Feb. 13, 1365.

Milner's Sir A., Staff—Appointment of Mr. F. H. Wilson, Feb. 9, 1044.

Newfoundland Treaty Shore Question,
Negotiations with France, alleged, Feb. 2, 443.

Pacific Cable Scheme—Delay in Proceedings, Feb 1, 281.

Queen's Speech—The Address, Feb. 2, 491,
Feb. 5, 602, 609, 666.

Rum, Colonial Rum—Excise Duties,
Feb. 13, 1365.

Sierra Leone Campaign Medals—Natives guilty of unlawful acts, Feb. 9, 1050.

South African Crisis—Negotiations, etc.,
Sir E. Clarke's Statement, Feb. 2, 491.

South African War

British Subjects Commandeered by
the Enemy—Shooting of J.
McLachlan for refusing to fight, alleged, Feb. 5, 568 ; Feb. 8, 906.

Chaplains—Australian Contingent,
Roman Catholic Chaplains, Feb. 1, 269.

Greene, Mr. Conyngham and Mr.
Chamberlain, Interviews between,
Feb. 2, 430.

High Treason at the Cape, alleged—Case of M. du Plessis, Feb. 6, 703.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Chamberlain, Rt. Hon. J.—cont.South African War—cont.

Mafeking Station Master, Shooting, alleged, Feb. 6, 702.

Natal, Defence of—Plan of Campaign, Feb. 1, 267.

Political and Military Policy of the Government—Want of Foresight, Judgment, etc. (Vote of Censure); Feb. 5, 602, 609, 666.

Property in the Republics—Sir A. Milner's Proclamation, Feb. 1, 269; Feb. 9, 1043.

Uitlander Volunteers—Governor of Natal's Offer, Number of Volunteers enrolled, etc., Feb. 5, 566.

Tonga—Mr. B. Thomas's Mission, Anglo-German Convention, Feb. 6, 714; Feb. 13, 1365.

Warren's, Sir C.—Expedition (1885)—Attitude of the Orange Free State, Feb. 6, 703.

Chamberlain's, Mr., Speech at Leicester

(W. Earl of Kimberley, Jan. 30, 14, 19.

Chamberlain's, Mr., visit to Dublin

Conduct of Trinity College Students, etc.
Q. Mr. Daly; A. Mr. G. W. Balfour, Feb. 2, 446.

Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster—

Lord James of Hereford.

Chancellor of the Exchequer

Sir M. Hicks-Beach (See Beach).

Stinting the Military Preparations, alleged
Os. Marquess of Salisbury, Jan. 30, 32; Sir M. Hicks-Beach, Mr. S. Buxton, Jan. 30, 180—Personal Explanation (Marquess of Salisbury), Feb. 1, 237.

Channing, Mr. F. A. [Northampton, East]

Army—Government Military Proposal, Feb. 12, 1291.

Boots for Troops—Indian Contracts, Prices, etc., Feb. 8, 909; Feb. 9, 1049.

Foot and Mouth Disease

Information as to Prevalence of Disease in Foreign Countries, Feb. 8, 927.

Norfolk Outbreak, Feb. 8, 928.

South African War

Boer Armaments and Strength of the Enemy—Sir W. Butler's Dispatches, Feb. 1, 255; Feb. 2, 427.

Government—Vote of Censure, Feb. 5, 638.

Chaplains

Australian Contingent in South Africa—Roman Catholic Chaplains

Q. Mr. T. Curran; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 1, 269.

Chaplain's—cont.

Yeomanry and the South African War—Suggested Appointments
Os. Earl Egerton, Marquess of Lansdowne, Feb. 6, 686, 687.

Chaplin, Rt. Hon. H.—President of the Local Government Board [Lincolnshire, Sleaford].Land

Compulsory Hiring of Land, Number of Orders, etc., Feb. 5, 590.

Sales by Municipal Corporations, Feb. 12, 1236.

Old Age Pensions—Number of Persons fulfilling conditions for receiving, etc., Feb. 12, 1236.

Charing Cross, Euston and Hampstead Railway Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1028.

1R.* Feb. 12, 1198.

Charing Cross and Strand Electricity Supply Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1028.

1R.* Feb. 12, 1198.

Charitable Endowments [London]

Returns Presented, Feb. 7, 563.

Charities

Durham, County of—Return Ordered [Mr. Grant Lawson], Feb. 14, 1465.

Montgomery, County of—Return Ordered [Mr. Grant Lawson], Feb. 14, 1466.

Cheap Trains Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 2, 413.

Chelsea Hospital

Account Presented, Feb. 12, 1166, 1217.

Chelsea Water Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1028.

1R.* Feb. 12, 1198.

Chemical Works

Factory and Workshop Rules, Jan. 30, 51.

Cheshire Lines Committee Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1028.

1R.* Feb. 12, 1198.

Chester, Bishop of

Deeds of Heroism, Commemoration in Elementary Schools, Proposal
Q. Mr. Yerburch; A. Sir J. Gorst, Feb. 13, 1360.

Chief Secretary for Ireland

Right Hon. G. W. Balfour.

Children

Imbecile [Training Institutions] Bill, See that Title.

Sale of Intoxicating Liquors to Children Bill, See that Title.

Vagrants' Children Protection Bill, See that Title.

China

- France in China—Extension of Shanghai Settlement
Q. Mr. Yerburgh ; A. Mr. Brodrick,
Feb. 6, 716.
- “Kowshing” Claims—Negotiations, etc.
Q. Mr. Provand ; A. Mr. Brodrick,
Feb. 9, 1051.
- Trade Reports, Jan. 30, 47 ; Feb. 1, 234.

Chipping Rifle Range

- Light Railway from Longridge to Chipping
Q. Mr. Tomlinson ; A. Mr. Wyndham,
Feb. 8, 918.

Christmas and Cocos-Keeling Islands

- Report Presented, Jan. 30, 46, 63.

Church Discipline

- Legislation
Q. Mr. Warner ; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour,
Feb. 1, 293.

Church Discipline Bill

- c. 1R.* Feb. 2, 416.

Church Temporalities, Ireland

- Report, Feb. 1, 236 ; Feb. 5, 563.

Church's Patent Bill

- l. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1162.

Circuit System

- See Assizes.*

City of London Electric Lighting Bill

- c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1028.
1R.* Feb. 12, 1198.

City of London [Various Powers] Bill

- c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1029.
1R.* Feb. 12, 1199.

City and South London Railway Bill

- c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1028.
1R.* Feb. 12, 1198.

Civil Contingencies Fund

- Accounts Presented, Feb. 8, 904.

Civil Disturbances

- Expenses of Troops Employed—Local and Imperial Charges.
Q. Mr. D. A. Thomas ; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 13, 1364.

Civil Servants

- Promotion of Abstractors
Q. Col. Dalbiac ; A. Mr. Hanbury,
Feb. 8, 926.
- Volunteers, Pay and Allowances for Volunteers in South Africa.
Q. Mr. Hedderwick ; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 6, 707.

Civil Services and Revenue Departments

- Appropriation Accounts Presented, Jan. 31, 160.
- Circulation of the Estimates
Q. Mr. Buchanan ; A. Mr. Hanbury,
Feb. 13, 1373.
- Estimates and Memorandum Presented,
Feb. 8, 903.
- Supplementary Estimate Presented, Feb. 12, 1217 ; Feb. 14, 1465.

Clackmannan and Kinross

- New Writ, Jan. 30, 54—New Member Sworn, Jan. 30, 54.

Clancy, Mr. J. J. [Dublin Co., North]

- Taxation of Ireland—Amendment to the Address, Feb. 8, 1003.

Clare

- Congested Districts—Including the whole of Clare County in Schedule Districts
Q. Mr. W. Redmond ; A. Mr. Plunkett, Feb. 12, 1246.
- Extra Police Charges, etc.
Q. Mr. W. Redmond ; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 9, 1057.

Clark, Dr. G. B. [Caithness]

- Highlands of Scotland—Deer Forests, etc., Crofters' and Cottars' Grievances,
Feb. 8, 980.
- South African War—Boer Problem, etc.,
Feb. 7, 850.
- Warren's, Sir C., Expedition in 1885—Attitude of the Orange Free State.
Feb. 6, 703.

Clarke, Sir E. [Plymouth]

- South African War—Policy of the Government, Negotiations, etc. (Vote of Censure), Feb. 2, 488.

Clayton-Bulwer Treaty

- See Nicaragua Canal.*

Cleethorpes Gas Bill

- l. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1163.

Clerk of the House of Commons

- See House of Commons.*

Clifden, Viscount

- Representative Peers for Ireland
Petition, Feb. 1, 233.
- Right to vote established, Feb. 12, 1161, 1353.

Clontarf Urban District Council Bill

- c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1029.
1R.* Feb. 12, 1199.

Clothing for Troops in South Africa

- See South African War.*

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Clyde Navigation Bill

l. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1162.

Coal

Exports, etc., Return Ordered [Mr. D. A. Thomas], Feb. 6, 699.

Cardiff Firm contracting to supply Foreign Government with 400,000 Tons, alleged

Q. Gen. Russell; A. Mr. Goschen, Feb. 5, 575; Q. Earl of Dunraven; A. Marquess of Lansdowne, Feb. 5, 561.

Emergency Contracts and the Navy

Qs. Mr. D. A. Thomas; As. Mr. Goschen, Feb. 6, 712; Feb. 8, 916.

Coal Mines Regulation Acts Amendment Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 2, 414.

Coal Mines Regulation Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 2, 420.

Coastguards

Telephonic Communication

Q. Sir C. Gull; A. Mr. Goschen, Feb. 6, 713.

Coggeshall Light Railway

Order Presented, Feb. 9, 1023.

Coghill, Mr. D. H. [Stoke-upon-Trent]

South African War

Carrington, Gen. Sir F.—Offer for Service in South Africa, Feb. 6, 701.

Newspapers for the Troops — Non-delivery, alleged, Feb. 6, 709.

Coinage

Australian Mints—Coinage of Silver

Q. Mr. Hogan; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 13, 1374.

Colenso Battle

Naval Brigade—Despatches

Q. Com. Young; A. Mr. Goschen, Feb. 5, 575.

College Charter Act, 1871

Birmingham University, See that Title.

Colomb, Sir J. [Great Yarmouth]

Army—Strengthening and Improving Organisation of the Regular and Auxiliary Forces—Government Proposals, Feb. 12, 1312.

“Military Authorities”

Artillery Changes by the War Office in 1887, Feb. 13, 1362.

Definition, Feb. 9, 1045.

Old Age Pensions—Relief of Sufferers by the War, Feb. 12, 1220.

Colonial Bank Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1029.

l. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1199.

Colonial Marriages [Deceased Wife's Sister] Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 2, 417.

16

Colonial Reports Presented

Annual Series, Jan. 30, 46, 63.

Colonies

Imperial Federation

O. Earl of Shaftesbury, Jan. 30, 10.

Rum, Local Excise Duties on

Q. Mr. Lawrence; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 13, 1365.

South African War—Colonial Contingents, etc., See South African War—Australian Contingents, Canadian Contingents, etc.

(See also Names of Colonies.)

Colville, Mr. J. [Lanark N.E.]

Transports, Speed of, Feb. 2, 437.

Commands at the Front

See South African War.

Commercial Education

Educational Grants, Extension to Commercial Subjects,

Q. Sir A. Rollit; A. Sir J. Gorst, Feb. 12, 1239.

Commercial Union Assurance Company Bill

l. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1163.

Committees

House of Commons—Appointment of Committees

Selection, Committee of, Feb. 6, 691.

Standing Orders Committee, Feb. 6, 690.

Temporary Chairman of Committees, Feb. 12, 1352

House of Lords—Appointment of Committees.

House of Lords Offices, Select Committees, Feb. 2, 403.

Selection, Committee of, for the Standing Committee, Feb. 2, 403.

Selection, Committee of, Feb. 2, 404.

Standing Committee, Feb. 2, 403.

Standing Orders Committee, Feb. 2, 403.

Commissions for Non-Commissioned Officers

See South African War—Promotion from the Ranks.

Commonwealth Bill

See Australasian Federation.

Companies Acts Amendment [No. 2] Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 2, 425.

Companies Acts Amendment Bill

c. 1R. Feb. 12, 1257.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Companies Acts Amendment [No. 2] Bill

Ministers of the Crown and Directorships of Companies

Q. Mr. S. MacNeill; A. Mr. Ritchie, *Feb. 13, 1379.Companies [Winding-up] Act, 1890General Rules Presented, Feb. 9, 1022, 1041.Compensation for Damage to Crops Billc. 1R. Feb. 2, 423.Compulsory ServiceSee Conscription.Condon, Mr. T. J. [Tipperary, East]Local Government [Ireland] Act [1898] Amendment Bill, 2R., *Feb. 14, 1512.Congested Districts Board, Ireland

Clare County to be included in the Schedule Districts

Q. Mr. W. Redmond; A. Mr. Plunkett, Feb. 12, 1246.

Sligo's, Marquess of, Estate—Correspondence

Q. Dr. Ambrose; A. Mr. Plunkett, Feb. 9, 1059.

Westport Landlords desirous of selling Estates, Congested Districts Board refusing to purchase

Q. Dr. Ambrose; A. Mr. Atkinson, *Feb. 13, 1375.Congested Districts Board [Scotland]Crofters' Grievances — Debate on the Address, *Feb. 8, 976.Congested Relief [Scotland] Act

Balance of Money Granted

Q. Mr. Hedderwick; A. Mr. A. G. Murray, *Feb. 5, 582.Congo Free State

Murder of Mr. Stokes—Compensation to Widow

Q. Mr. Hedderwick; A. Mr. Brodrick, *Feb. 13, 1366.Connaught Rangers and the South African War

Court Martial of Major, alleged

Q. Mr. T. M. Healy; A. Mr. Wyndham, *Feb. 5, 570.Conscription and Compulsory Military ServiceOs. Marquess of Salisbury, Jan. 30, 31; Earl of Rosebery, Jan. 30, 38; Marquess of Lansdowne, Feb. 12, 1182; Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 12, 1260; Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, *Feb. 12, 1279.*References to, in Debate on the Address, *Jan. 30, 11, 31, 38.Consolidated FundAbstract Account Presented, Jan. 31, 159.

VOL. LXXVIII. [FOURTH SERIES.]

Constabulary, Royal Irish

Cavan—Number of Police, etc.,

Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 9, 1058.

Clare—Extra Police Charges, etc.

Q. Mr. W. Redmond; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 9, 1058.

Kerry, Extra Police in County Kerry

Q. Mr. Flavin; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 8, 931.

Leave of Absence, Suspension of, alleged

Q. Mr. Daly; A. Mr. Atkinson, *Feb. 13, 1374.*Pensions—Return Presented, Feb. 1, 251.

Tallow—Extra Police

Q. Mr. Shea; A. Mr. Atkinson, *Feb. 13, 1378.Consular JurisdictionOrders in Council under Foreign Jurisdiction Act Presented, *Feb. 1, 234.Contagious Diseases, AnimalsFoot and Mouth Disease, See that Title.Continental Powers and Great Britain

France — British Ambassador at Paris, Temporary Absence

Q. Mr. W. Redmond; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, *Feb. 12, 1233.*Harcourt, Sir W., on, Feb. 5, 608

Press "Warfare"

O. Earl of Kimberley, *Jan. 30, 13.Contraband of WarDelagoa Bay, see that Title.

Food Stuffs as Contraband

Q. Mr. Dillon; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 6, 708.

Right of Search

"Bundesrath"

Q. Mr. Hedderwick; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 12, 1222.

"Herzog"—Count von Bülow's Speech, etc.

O. Lord E. Fitzmaurice, *Jan. 30, 131.*Qs. Mr. G. Bowles; As. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 2, 430; Feb. 8, 907; *Feb. 9, 1041.*Q. Mr. Hedderwick; A. Mr. Brodrick, *Feb. 12, 1222.ConvictsPenal Servitude Acts — Conditional Licences, Jan. 30, 52, 65; *Feb. 5, 549.Cooke, Mr. C. W. E. [Hereford]Rifle Ranges—Number of Ranges closed, etc., Feb. 1, 275; *Feb. 9, 1050.*South African War—Maps, Surveys, etc., *Feb. 1, 263.Copyrighted Rate Books in IrelandQ. Mr. Flavin; A. Mr. G. W. Balfour, Feb. 2, 449.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Corbett, Mr. A. C. [Glasgow, Tradeston]
Orphan Homes, Scotland—Children refused Public Education, Feb. 8, 923.

Cork

Fair Rent Applications
Q. Mr. M. Healy; A. Mr. G. W. Balfour, Feb. 2, 448.

Harbour — Pilotage Byelaw, Order in Council Presented, Feb. 1, 234.

Muzzling Order
Q. Mr. M. Healy; A. Mr. Plunkett, Feb. 9, 1059.

Post Office—Extension of Buildings
Q. Mr. M. Healy; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 1, 287.

Stamp Office, Transfer of, to more convenient centre
Q. Mr. M. Healy; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 1, 288.

Cork, Earl of

Yeomanry, Imperial—Delay in Transport to the Front, Feb. 6, 689.

Cork Electric Tramways Bill

Standing Orders complied with, Feb. 13, 1356.

Cork, Bandon and South Coast Railway Bill

L. 1R. Feb. 12, 1164.*

Cornwall, Duchy of

Account Presented, Feb. 1, 236.

Corporal Punishment Bill

c. 1R. Feb. 2, 410.*

Corporations

Land Sales
Q. Sir W. Foster; A. Mr. Chaplin, Feb. 12, 1236.

County Cess, Ireland

Agricultural Grant
Q. Capt. Donelan; A. Mr. W. G. Balfour, Feb. 1, 290.

County and Borough Franchise Assimilation (London) Bill

c. 1R. Feb. 2, 413.*

County Councillors [Qualification of Women] (Scotland) Bill

c. 1R. Feb. 2, 423.*

County Courts Act, 1888

Whitelock, W. H.—Order of the Lord Chancellor, Jan. 30, 51, 70.

County Courts, Ireland

Cost of Printing, &c., and the County Council.

Q. Mr. Englelew; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 13, 1376.

County and City of Dublin Electric Lighting Bill

Petition referred to Standing Committees, Feb. 9, 1038.

Standing Orders not complied with, Feb. 9, 1022, 1027.

County of London and Brush Provincial Electric Lighting Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1029.

1R. Feb. 12, 1199.*

Courtney, Mr. [Cornwall, Bodmin]

South African War and the Government—Vote of Censure, Feb. 5, 662.

Coventry Corporation Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1029.

1R. Feb. 12, 1199.*

Cowes Pier Bill

L. 1R. Feb. 12, 1162.*

Cranbrook and Tenterden Light Railway

Order Presented, Feb. 9, 1023, 1039.

Crew Accommodation on Merchant Ships

Q. Mr. Havelock Wilson; A. Mr. Ritchie, Feb. 12, 1238.

Crimean War

Comparison with South African War
Q. Sir C. Dilke, Feb. 1, 296.

Crimean and Indian Mutiny Veterans

Irish Veterans, Inmates of Workhouses

Q. Mr. Flavin; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 6, 712.

Urquhart, H., Case of

Q. Mr. Hedderwick; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 6, 711.

Widows of Crimean Soldiers and the Soldiers Effects Fund

Q. Sir J. Leng; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 8, 915.

Criminal Law and Procedure (Ireland) Act, [1887], Repeal Bill

c. 1R. Feb. 2, 417.*

Crofters and Cottars, Scotland

Colonisation Scheme, Report, Jan. 30, 46, 61.

Deer Forests—Amendment to the Address [Mr. Weir], Feb. 8, 973—Division, 1002.

Crofters Act, 1886

Extension of—Amendment to the Address [Mr. Weir], Feb. 8, 973—Division, 1002.

Crops

Compensation for Damages to Crops Bill, See that Title.

Croydon Tramways and Improvements Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1029.

1R. Feb. 12, 1200.*

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

CruisersFishery Cruisers, See that Title

Subsidised Cruisers—Return

Q. Mr. Bainbridge; A. Mr. Goschen,
*Feb. 6, 712.Crystal Palace Company BillL. 1R. * *Feb. 12, 1164.Curran, Mr. T. [Sligo, S.]Australian Contingent in South Africa—
Roman Catholic Chaplains, *Feb. 1, 269.Customs Duties

Articles sent to the Troops in South Africa

Q. Mr. Bartley; A. Mr. Wyndham,
Feb. 6, 708.

Zanzibar, Re-imposition of Duties

Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Mr. Brodrick,
*Feb. 8, 922.Curtin, Michael, Case ofQ. Mr. Austin; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 8,
*934."Daily Mail" and the South African WarO. Mr. J. Burns, *Feb. 6, 785.Dalbiac, Major P. H. [Camberwell, N.]Abstractors, Promotion of, Feb. 8, 926.

South African War

Reservists prematurely called up—
Compensation, *Feb. 12, 1226.*Separation Allowances, Delay in Payments, etc., *Feb. 12, 1227.Daly, Mr. J. [Monaghan, S.]Army—Strengthening and Improving Organisation of the Regular and Auxiliary Forces—Government Proposals, Feb.
*12, 1458.*Belfast Police Cells—Death of J. Thompson, *Feb. 12, 1241.*Chamberlain's, Mr., visit to Dublin, Conduct of Trinity College Students, etc.,
*Feb. 2, 446.*Constabulary, Royal Irish—Leave of absence, Suspension of, alleged, Feb. 13,
*1374.*Dublin Museum, Removal of Old Furniture, Feb. 1, 284.

Judicial Appointments, Ireland

Politics of Judges receiving Appointments, *Feb. 12, 1240.*Religion of Judges—Unequal number of Protestants to Roman Catholics,
*Feb. 1, 291.*Religious Disabilities, Feb. 5, 585; *Feb. 13, 1375.*Land Acts (Ireland) Administration and working of — Amendment to the Address, *Feb. 9, 1111.*Local Government (Ireland) Act (1898)
Amendment Bill, 2R., Feb. 14, 1483, 1486,
*1487, 1507, 1511.Daly, Mr. J.—cont.Out-nursing in Irish Unions, etc., Feb. 8,
*932.*Peace Preservation Act—Monaghan
County Council Resolution, *Feb. 12, 1241*Poor Law Expenditure, Ireland, Increase—
New Dispensary Rules, etc., *Feb. 8, 929.Dalziel, Mr. J. H. [Kirkcaldy Burghs]Income Tax—Servant of Limited Liability Company and the Three Years Average,
*Feb. 12, 1235.Dangerous TradesFactory and Workshop Special Rules, Presented, *Jan. 30, 51.De Aar—Shooting of Boers at,Q. Mr. Shee; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 8,
*906.Dearne Valley Railway BillL. 1R. * *Feb. 13, 1353.Death DutiesSouth African War, Proposal to remit
Death Duties, etc.Q. Gen. Russell; A. Sir M. Hicks-
Beach, *Feb. 12, 1221.Deceased Wife's Sister—Colonial Marriages [Deceased Wife's Sister] Bill, See that Title.Declaration of ParisQueen's Signature—Draft of Declaration, etc.Q. Mr. G. Bowles; A. Mr. Brodrick,
*Feb. 2, 443.Deeds of HeroismCommemoration in Elementary Schools,
Bishop of Chester's Proposal.Q. Mr. Yerburch; A. Sir J. Gorst,
*Feb. 13, 1360.Deer Forest, ScotlandCrofters and Cotter's Grievances—Amendment to the Address (Mr. Weir), Feb. 8, *973—Division, 1002.Defence of the EmpireCabinet Committee of Defence, Constitution and functions of.Q. Mr. G. Bowles; A. Mr. A. J.
Balfour, *Feb. 1, 261.*Harbour Defences—Conference on Armaments, etc.Q. Mr. Hedderwick; A. Mr. Wyndham, *Feb. 2, 442.Home DefencesArnold-Forster, Mr., on, Feb. 1, 343.

Embodiment of Militia

Q. Mr. Warner; A. Mr. Wynd-
ham, Feb. 1, 272.

Fleet—Protection against invasion

Sir C. Dilke on, Feb. 12, 1282.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Defence of the Empire—cont.Home Defences—cont.*Forces Available

Q. Mr. Stevenson; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 1, 276.

Passive Defence—Statement (Mr. Wyndham), Feb. 12, 1265.

Replacing Field Batteries sent to the Front

Q. Mr. Warner; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 5, 567.

Strengthening and improving Organisation of the Regular and Auxiliary Forces—Government Proposals

Statements (Marquess of Lansdowne) Feb. 12, 1171; (Mr. Wyndham) 1259 — Debate resumed, Feb. 13, 1332.

Delagoa Bay

Anglo-German Secret Treaty, alleged,—Terms, etc.

Q. Mr. G. Bowles; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 1, 282.

Contraband of War, See that Title.

Railway—Delay in delivery of Award

Q. Sir E. T. Gourley; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 3, 914.

Transvaal Consul and the Castle Steamship Company's Agency, Removal of Mr. Pott, &c.

Q. Mr. S. Montagu; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 6, 706.

Denmark

Finance Report, Jan. 30, 47.

Trade Report, Jan. 30, 47.

Deportation of Paupers,

See Paupers.

Devonport—

Smith, G., Case of

Q. Mr. Kearley; A. Mr. J. T. Williams, Feb. 12, 1230.

Devonport Corporation Bill

Petition Referred to Standing Committee, Feb. 9, 1038.

Standing Orders not complied with, Feb. 9, 1022, 1027.

Devonshire, Duke of—Lord President of the Council

Foot and Mouth Disease—Slaughter of Cattle, etc., Feb. 13, 1355.

Devonshire Yeomanry—

Delay in Embarkation for South Africa.

Q. Sir C. Gull; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 8, 911.

Dilke, Rt. Hon. Sir C. W. [Gloucester, Forest of Dean]

Army—Government Military Proposals for strengthening the Army, etc. Feb. 12, 1282.

Australasian Federation—Commonwealth Bill, Date of Introduction, etc., Feb. 9, 1051.

Dilke, Right Hon. Sir C. W.—cont.

Boy Sailor Scheme and the Royal Navy Reserve—Number of Boys enrolled, Feb. 12, 1238.

British Constitution as a Fighting Machine—Prime Minister's Statement, Feb. 1, 298.

Fleet and Home Defence, Feb. 12, 1282.

India—Troops serving out of India, Feb. 1, 271.

Mauritius Garrison—Black Battalion, Composition of, &c., Feb. 1, 271.

Newfoundland Treaty Shore Question—Negotiations with France, alleged, Feb. 2, 443.

Pen Trade—Inspector's Report, Feb. 12, 1368.

Secret Service Fund, Feb. 1, 306.

South African War

Artillery strength previous to Outbreak of Hostilities, Feb. 12, 1219.

Government and the War—want of Knowledge, Foresight, etc. (Vote of Censure), Feb. 1, 296, 323.

Waima Incident—Negotiations, Feb. 5, 578.

Zanzibar—Re-imposition of Customs Duties, Feb. 8, 922.

Dillon, Mr. J. [Mayo, E.]

Contraband of War, Food Stuffs, &c., etc., Feb. 6, 708.

Local Government Election Petitions, Commissioners' Judgments — Return, Feb. 1, 288.

Local Government Officials and the Local Government Act

Claims for Compensation, etc., Procedure adopted by the Treasury, Feb. 1, 285.

Remuneration of County and District Council Officials—Action of the Local Government Board, Feb. 1, 286.

Saunderson's, Col., remarks on the Nationalists, Feb. 2, 535, 536.

South African War

Butler, Sir W.

Despatches and Correspondence, Feb. 1, 253, 256.

Military Situation—Report, Feb. 1, 253, 255.

Prisoners—Boer Prisoners on Board Ship, Feb. 12, 1219.

Tugela Operations—Col. Wynne's Field Order, Feb. 1, 266.

Vote of Censure—Attitude of the Irish Members, Explanation, Feb. 5, 654.

Dingle Pier

Proposed Extension, etc.

Q. Sir T. G. Esmonde; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 5, 584.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Diplomacy

Chamberlain's, Mr., Speech at Leicester
O. (Earl of Kimberley), Jan. 30, 14.

Diplomatic and Consular Service

Foreign Jurisdiction Act—Orders in Council Presented, Feb. 1, 234.

Distress, Abolition and Substitution Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 2, 426.

District Councillors, Ireland,

See Ireland.

Divorce

Petition for Alteration of Law, Jan. 31, 157.

Doncaster Corporation Light Railways

Order Presented Feb. 9, 1023, 1039.

Donegal Railway Bill

l. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1164.

Donelan, Captain A. J. C. [Cork, E.]

Agricultural Grants and the County Cess.
Amount allotted, etc., Feb. 1, 290.

Roads—Labourers undertaking maintenance and repairs, Feb. 1, 291.

Dorking Water Bill

l. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1164.

Douglas, Rt. Hon. A. Akers—First Commissioner of Works [St. Augustine's].

Foot and Mouth Disease Regulations,
Feb. 13, 1371.

House of Commons—Inadequate Accommodation for Members, Feb. 6, 727.

Waterford and Limerick Railway—Dismissal of Employes, Feb. 5, 583.

Welsh Railway Dispute, Feb. 5, 583.

Drage, Mr. G. [Derby]

Persia—Russian Railway Concessions in Northern Persia, Feb. 12, 1234.

South African War, Jan. 30, 134.

Du Toit, Mr., and South African Affairs

Os. Mr. Drage, Jan. 30, 134; Capt. Sinclair, Feb. 2, 511.

Dublin

Carriage Licences

Q. Mr. Field; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 8, 936.

Chamberlain's, Mr., visit, Conduct of Trinity College Students

Q. Mr. Daly; A. Mr. G. W. Balfour, Feb. 2, 446.

Museum—

Removal of Objects of Art

Q. Sir T. Esmonde; A. Sir J. Gorst, Feb. 5, 581.

Removal of Old Furniture

Q. Mr. Daly; A. Sir J. Gorst, Feb. 1, 284.

Paupers, Removal of—Dublin City Grievance

Q. Mr. Field; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 6, 724.

Dublin—cont.

Science and Art Department, Transferring Control to New Agricultural and Industrial Department

Q. Sir T. Esmonde; A. Mr. Plunkett, Feb. 8, 937.

Dublin Corporation Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1029.

1R.* Feb. 12, 1200.

Dublin, Wicklow, and Wexford Railway Bill

l. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1164.

Duchy of Cornwall

Account Presented, Feb. 1, 236.

Duncombe, Hon. H. V. [Cumberland, Egremont]

Ballot for Bills and Motions, Jan. 31, 161, 163.

Nicaragua Canal Convention—Clayton-Bulwer Treaty Rights, Feb. 8, 922.

Queen's Speech—The Address, Jan. 31, 161.

Dundee Harbour Bill

l. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1162.

Durham, County of, Charities

Return ordered [Mr. Grant Lawson], Feb. 14, 1465.

Durham (County of) Electric Power Supply Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1029.

1R.* Feb. 12, 1200.

Durham, Earl of

Durham, Dean of, and Mr. Justice Grantham, Feb. 1, 240.

Durham's, Dean of, Sermon

Mr. Justice Grantham's Remarks, etc.

Os. Earl of Durham, Earl of Halsbury, Feb. 1, 240.

Dunraven, Earl of

Army

Contemplated Military Measures, Feb. 5, 550.

Strengthening and improving Organisation of the Regular and Auxiliary Forces — Government Proposals, Feb. 12, 1186.

Coal Supply for National Requirements, Feb. 5, 561.

Volunteers, Recruiting—Col. Edis and the Inspector-General of Auxiliary Forces, Feb. 5, 554, 560.

East India

See India.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

East London Water Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1029.
1 R.* Feb. 12, 1200.

East Shropshire Water Bill

1. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1162.

East Stirlingshire Water Bill

1. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1162.

Eastern Telegraph Company

Cable from South Africa to Australia.
Q. Mr. Hogan; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 1, 282.

Edinburgh Corporation Bill

1. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1162.

Edinburgh District Lunacy Board Bill

1. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1162.

Edinburgh University

Abstract of Accounts, Jan. 30, 53, 69.
Annual Statistical Report, Jan. 30, 53, 69.

Edis, Col., and Volunteer Recruiting

Os. Earl of Dunraven; Marquess of Lansdowne, Feb. 5, 554, 556.

Education

Agricultural Districts—Circular under Act of 1899, etc.

Q. Mr. Hobhouse; A. Sir J. Gorst, Feb. 8, 923.

Evening Continuation Schools—Return Ordered (Mr. Hobhouse), Feb. 8, 904.

Grants—Extension to Commercial Subjects.

Q. Sir A. Rollit; A. Sir J. Gorst, Feb. 12, 1239.

Irish Questions

Intermediate Education (1897) Act—Amendment proposed.

Q. Mr. Field; A. Mr. G. W. Balfour, Feb. 1, 292.

National Education and the Board of Agriculture—Provision for Repayment of £78,000.

Q. Mr. Gibney; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 8, 936.

Q. Mr. A. O'Connor; A. Mr. Plunkett, Feb. 13, 1379.

National School Teachers, See that Title.

Reform of Primary Education.

Q. Mr. Field; A. Sir M. Hicks-Beach, Feb. 2, 445.

University Education—Facilities for discussion.

O. Mr. J. Redmond, Feb. 12, 1247.

Scotch Questions.

Minute of the Committee of Council Presented, Feb. 6, 549, 563.

Orphan Homes, Children refused Public Education, Feb. 8, 923.

Education—cont.

Special Reports on Educational Subjects, Distribution of

Q. Mr. Hobhouse; A. Sir J. Gorst, Feb. 8, 924.

Technical Instruction Act

Minutes of Committee of Council Presented, Jan. 30, 50, 68.

Voluntary Schools (Grants in Aid) Bill. See that Title.

Education Department

Consultative Committee.

Q. Col. Lockwood; A. Sir J. Gorst, Feb. 12, 1239.

Reorganisation

Q. Mr. Gordon; A. Sir J. Gorst, Feb. 12, 1238.

Departmental Committee, Terms of Reference, etc.

Q. Col. Murray; A. Sir J. Gorst, Feb. 5, 581.

Minutes of the Lord President of the Council, etc.—Return Ordered (Col. Murray), Feb. 12, 1218,—Return Presented, 1351.

Effects of Deceased Seamen

See Seamen.

Egerton, Earl

Yeomanry and the South African War—Chaplains, Feb. 6, 686.

Egypt

Guns and Stores sent to South Africa

Qs. Mr. W. Redmond; Mr. S. MacNeill; As. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 8, 905.

Insubordination among Egyptian Troops

Q. Mr. W. Redmond; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 12, 1235.

Parcel Post Agreement, Jan. 30, 48, 63.

Electoral Disabilities (Military Services) Bill

Extension to Army and Navy Forces

Qs. Gen. Laurie; Mr. G. Bowles; As. Sir M. W. Ridley, Feb. 6, 709.

Electors, Parliamentary Constituencies

Number of—Address for Return, Jan. 31, 160.

Elementary Schools

Commemoration of Deeds of Heroism, the Bishop of Chester's Proposal

Q. Mr. Yerburgh; A. Sir J. Gorst, Feb. 13, 1360.

Elliot, Hon. A. B. D. (Durham)

South African War—Policy of the Government, etc. (Vote of Censure), Feb. 6, 740

Emigration and Immigration

Aliens, See that Title.

Endowments

Charitable Endowments (London)—Further Return Presented, Feb. 5, 563.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Engineer (Royal) Department

High Charges for Building Work, alleged—Inquiry into Administration

Q. Mr. S. MacNeill; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 12, 1230.Engledew, Mr. C. J. [Kildare, N.]County Court Printing, Ireland—Cost of, and the County Council, Feb. 13, 1376.Irish Rural District Councils, Number of Members constituting Quorum, etc., Feb. 13, 1374.Enniscorthy Post Office

Delay in building New Office

Q. Mr. T. J. Healy; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 5, 580."Entanglement" of Ladysmith

See South African War—Natal.

Enteric Fever

Inoculation

Q. Mr. A. E. Pease; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 1, 265.

Precautions against, in South Africa—Flannel Belts for Soldiers, etc.

Q. Gen. Russell; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 12, 1226.Equipment, Loss of Soldiers paying for

Q. Mr. Sinclair; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 12, 1225.Esmonde, Sir T. [Kerry, W.]Business of the House—Facilities for discussing the Catholic University Question, Feb. 8, 940.Dingle Pier, Condition of, proposed extension, etc., Feb. 5, 584.Dublin Museum—Removal of Objects of Art, Feb. 5, 581.Irish Gold Ornaments and the British Museum, Feb. 1, 293.Science and Art Department (Ireland)—Transferring Management and Control, etc., Feb. 8, 937.Taxation of Ireland—Over Taxation, alleged, Feb. 9, 1066.Essington and Ashmore Light RailwayOrder Presented, Feb. 9, 1023, 1039.Evans, Mr. S. T. [Glamorgan, Mid]

Hawksley Correspondence

"Indépendance Belge" Publication, Feb. 1, 258.Letter to Earl Grey, Feb. 2, 428.South African War—British Prisoners at Pretoria, Number of, etc., Feb. 8, 904.Evening Continuation SchoolsReturn Ordered (Mr. Hobhouse), Feb. 8, 904.Evicted Tenants (Ireland) Billc. 1R.* Feb. 2, 411.Evictions (Ireland)Returns Presented, Jan. 30, 45, 62; Jan. 31, 158; Feb. 1, 233.Exchequer BillsBank of England—Account Presented, Jan. 31, 160.ExeterNew Member Sworn, Jan. 30, 54.Exeter Corporation Billc. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1029.1R.* Feb. 12, 1200.Exmouth Urban District Water Billl. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1162.Exmouth and District Water Billl. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1164.Experiments on Living Animals

See Vivisection.

ExplosionsGelatine Explosion at Upton Towans Factory, Gwithian Report, Jan. 30, 48, 63.Llest Colliery Report, Jan. 30, 47, 63.Explosives

Sale of, in Ireland—New Regulation, alleged

Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 6, 724.Factories and WorkshopsDangerous Trades—Special Rules presented, Jan. 30, 51.Report—Annual Report of Chief Inspector, Jan. 30, 48, 63.Factory and Workshops Act [1878] Amendment Billc. 1R.* Feb. 13, 1380.Fair Rents, Ireland

See Land Commission.

Falkirk Corporation Billl. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1162.Falkirk and District Water Billl. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1162.Famine in India

See India.

Farnworth Urban District Council Billc. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1029.1R.* Feb. 12, 1200.Farquharson, Dr. R. [Aberdeenshire, W.]Army—Strengthening and improving Organisation of the Regular and Auxiliary Forces, Government Proposal, Feb. 12, 1451.Cape Colony and Natal Military Hospitals Defects, etc., Feb. 8, 908.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Farrell, Mr. J. P. [Cavan, W.]

Arms, Licensing to Carry, in Ireland, Refusal of Licence to Mr. J. O'Neill, Feb. 6, 724.

Cavan Police Force—Number of Police, etc., Feb. 9, 1058.

Explosives, sale of, in Ireland—New Regulations, Feb. 6, 724.

Garrisons in Ireland—Concentration of Troops at Mullingar or Longford, Feb. 13, 1364.

Granard Estate—Purchase of Holdings by Tenants, Action of Land Commissioners, etc., Feb. 13, 1376.

Land Acts, Administration and Working of, Feb. 9, 1143.

Poor Law Expenditure, Increase—New Dispensary Rules, etc., Feb. 8, 929.

Road Contractors, Ireland—Difficulties of obtaining access to Quarries, etc., Feb. 8, 929.

Roscommon — Proclaimed Meeting, Feb. 12, 1241.

Sanitary Works—Charges under Local Government Act, etc., Feb. 12, 1243.

Warden Estate, Kenmare—Ejectment Decrees, etc., Feb. 8, 930.

Farrer, Lord

Sat first after the Death of his Father, Jan. 30, 5.

Feeble Minded Children

Imbeciles [Training Institutions] Bill. See that Title.

Fenian Prisoners at Mafeking

Q. Mr. P. O'Brien, A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 12, 1224; Qs. Mr. P. O'Brien, As. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 12, 1224; Feb. 13, 1358.

Ferguson, Mr. M. [Leith Burghs]

South African War—Policy of the Government, etc. [Vote of Censure], Feb. 6, 768.

Fergusson, Rt. Hon. Sir J. [Manchester, N.E.]

Army, Strengthening and improving Organisation of the Regular and Auxiliary Forces—Government Scheme, Feb. 12, 1295.

Russell "Shooting Director" Invention, Feb. 12, 1232.

French, Mr. P. [Wexford, S.]

Re-afforestation in Ireland, Feb. 12, 1247.

Trawling in Wexford Bay, Feb. 8, 933; Feb. 9, 1055.

Wexford Postal Service, changes advocated, Feb. 8, 927.

Field, Adm. E. [Sussex, Eastbourne].

Army—Strengthening and Improving Organization of the Regular and Auxiliary Forces, Government Proposals, Feb. 12, 1400.

Marines in South Africa, Separation Allowance, Feb. 8, 915.

Field, Adm. E.—cont.

Patriotic Fund, Application and Administration of, etc., Feb. 8, 955.

Revenge, H.M.S., Explosion on, Cause of, etc., Feb. 8, 917.

Field, Mr. W. [Dublin, St. Patrick]

Allotments Act—Extending to Ireland, Feb. 1, 292.

Carriage Licences—Extending System in Great Britain to Dublin, Feb. 8, 936.

Casual Labourers—Workmen's Compensation Act, Extension, Feb. 1, 285.

Education

Intermediate Education Act—Amendment proposed, Feb. 1, 292.

Reform of Primary Education in Ireland, Feb. 2, 445.

Foot and Mouth Disease—Importation of Cattle to Ireland, Feb. 6, 717.

Hexham Railway Accident, Inquiry, Feb. 1, 283.

Kildare Postal Arrangements—Complaint, Feb. 1, 723.

Land, Revaluation, Feb. 2, 450.

Militia, Irish—Volunteering for Service in South Africa, Feb. 8, 910.

Paupers—Removal of Irish Paupers, City of Dublin Grievance, Feb. 6, 724.

Railway Passes for Irish Members of Parliament, Feb. 6, 721.

Settlement, Law of, Extending to Ireland, Feb. 6, 724.

South African War, Feb. 7, 891.

Town Tenants, Ireland—Legislation, Feb. 2, 451.

Financial Relations, England and Ireland

Over Taxation of Ireland, Alleged—Amendment to the Address [Mr. Clancy] Feb. 8, 1003; Feb. 9, 1066; Division, 1102.

Fine or Imprisonment [Scotland and Ireland Act]

Order in Council Presented, Feb. 5, 549.

Fire Brigade Bill

c. 1R. Feb. 2, 415.*

Firearms

Licences to Carry Arms, Ireland, See Arms.

Sale of, to Natives in New Hebrides Q. Mr. Hogan; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 13, 1366.

Firms

Registration of Firms Bill, See that Title.

First Commissioner of Works

Right Hon. Akers-Douglas.

First Lord of the Admiralty

Right Hon. G. T. Goschen.

First Lord of the Treasury

Right Hon. A. J. Balfour.

Fish Culture

Buckland Museum, See that Title.

Fisheries

Irish Herring Industry—Government Brand, etc.

Q. Mr. Flavin; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 5, 585.

Trawling, See that Title.

Fishery Cruisers

Scotland—Completion of New Cruisers

Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. A. G. Murray, Feb. 13, 1370.

Trawling in Irish Waters

Q. Mr. Ffrench; A. Mr. Goschen, Feb. 9, 1055.

Fishguard Water and Gas Bill

1. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1164.

Fishguard and Rosslare Railways and Harbour Bill

1. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1164.

Fitzmaurice, Lord E. G. P. [Wilts, Cricklade]

South African War—Policy of the Government, Want of Knowledge and Foresight, etc. [Vote of Censure]—Amendment to the Address, Jan. 30, 1131; Jan. 31, 224.

Flannery, Sir J. F. [Yorkshire, Shipley]

Army—Contemplated Military Measures, Feb. 1, 257.

South African War—Policy of the Government, etc. [Vote of Censure], Feb. 1, 395; Feb. 2, 452.

Flavin, Mr. M. J. [Kerry, N.]

Crimean and Indian Mutiny Veterans—Irish Veterans in Workhouses, Feb. 6, 712.

Government Printing in Ireland—Copyrighted Rate Books, Feb. 2, 449.

Herring Industry, Ireland, Government Brand, etc., Feb. 5, 585.

Kerry

Applications for Fair Rents, Feb. 2, 450.

Castleisland and Ballymacelligot District Fair Rent Applications, Feb. 1, 293.

Extra Police in County Kerry, Feb. 8, 931.

Land [Ireland] Acts, Administration and Working of, Feb. 9, 1150.

Listowel Mails—Delays, Feb. 13, 1244.

Local Government [Ireland] Act [1898] Amendment Bill, 2R., Feb. 14, 1500 1508, 1511.

Separations Allowance—Widowed mothers of unmarried men, Irish Militia Regiments, Feb. 13, 1360.

Sneem Mails, Late Delivery of, Feb. 9, 1055.

Warden Estate—National Teacher's Residence site, Feb. 9, 1056.

Flax Industry

Belgium, Report, Jan. 30, 47.

Fleet and Home Defence

Protection against Invasion—Army v. Fleet—Sir Charles Dilke on the Government Military Proposals, Feb. 12, 1282.

Flynn, Mr. J. C. [Cork, N.]

Army—Military Proposals of the Government, Feb. 12, 1432.

Business of the House, Financial Business—Precedence on Tuesdays, etc., Feb. 12, 1251.

Kanturk Baronial Railway Guarantee, Feb. 9, 1057.

Local Government [Ireland] Act [1898] Amendment Bill, 2R., Feb. 14, 1510.

South African War, Feb. 7, 872.

Arbitration and the Peace Conference, Feb. 2, 426.

Foodstuffs as Contraband of War

See Contraband of War.

Foot and Mouth Disease

Cattle importation to Ireland

Q. Mr. Field; A. Mr. Long, Feb. 6, 717.

Information as to Prevalence of Disease in Foreign Countries

Q. Mr. Channing; A. Mr. Long, Feb. 8, 927.

Number of fresh cases

Q. Mr. F. W. Wilson; A. Mr. Long, Feb. 9, 1052.

Outbreak in Norfolk

Qs. Col. Gunter, Mr. Channing, Sir M. Hoare; As. Mr. Long, Feb. 8, 927.

Regulations—Slaughter of Cattle, etc.

Q. Mr. Stevenson; A. Mr. Long, Feb. 9, 1052; Os. Lord Burghclere, Duke of Devonshire, Feb. 13, 1354.

Q. Mr. F. W. Wilson; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas, Feb. 13, 1371.

Forage for South Africa

See South African War.

Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890

Orders in Council, Feb. 1, 234.

Forster, Mr. H. S. [Suffolk, Lowestoft]

War News—Crying in the Street Nuisance, Feb. 2, 440.

Foster, Sir B. W. [Derby, Ilkeston]

Army—Strengthening and Improving Organisation of the Regular and Auxiliary Forces, Government Scheme, Feb. 12, 1299.

Land

Compulsory Hiring of Land, Number of Orders, etc., Feb. 5, 590.

Sales by Municipal Corporations, Feb. 12, 1236.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Foster, Sir B. W.—contLong Eaton Level Crossing—Dangers of,
*Feb. 6, 719.*Medical Corps—Number of Officers employed, etc., *Feb. 6, 705.France

British Ambassador at Paris, Temporary Absence

*Q. Mr. W. Redmond; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 12, 1233.*China, *See that Title.*Colonies—Report, *Jan. 30, 47.*Newfoundland Treaty Shore Question, *See Newfoundland.*Press Telegrams by Night, Reduced Rates, Papers Presented, *Jan. 30, 46, 64.*Telegraphic Communication, Declaration, Presented, *Jan. 30, 46, 64.*Trade Report, *Jan. 30, 46.*Warima Incident, *See that Title.FranchiseCounty and Borough Franchise Assimilation [London] Bill. *See that Title.*Extension to Women, *See Parliamentary Franchise [Extension to Women] Bill.*Manhood Suffrage [Ireland] Bill, See that Title.Franchise and Removal of Women's Disabilities Billc. 1R Feb. 2, 425.FreemantlePort of Call for Australian Mail Steamers
*Q. Mr. Hogan; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 6, 726.Friendly SocietiesChief Registrar Reports, *Feb 2, 401, 408.*Outdoor Relief [Friendly Societies] Bill,
See that Title.Friendly Societies Disqualification Removal Billc. 1R Feb. 2, 424.FurnitureOld Furniture, Removal of from Dublin Museum, alleged
*Q. Mr. Daly; A. Sir John Gorst, Feb. 1, 284Galloway

Postal Service Complaints

*Q. Mr. O'Malley; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 6, 722; Q. Mr. Pinkerton; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 12, 1245.Galloway, Mr. W. J. [Manchester, S.W.]Patriotic Fund, Application and Administration of, *Feb. 3, 938.*Superannuation and Compensation Allowances, Allotment Pay to Soldiers' Wives, etc., *Feb. 12, 1227.Galway, Viscount

Yeomanry

Home Defence Scheme, *Feb. 12, 1184.*Imperial Yeomanry, Delay in Transport to the Front, Feb. 6, 688.Gas Light and Coke Company Billc. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1030.1R Feb. 12, 1201.Gas Light and Coke, Commercial Gas, and South Metropolitan Gas Companies' Billc. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1030.1R* Feb. 12, 1201.Gedge, Mr. S. [Walsall]South African War—Policy of the Government, etc. (Vote of Censure) *Feb. 6, 773.General Prisons [Ireland] Act, 1877Order in Council Presented, *Feb. 5, 549.Generals at the FrontCriticism on, *See South African War.GermanyAfrica—German East Africa, Trade Report, *Jan. 30, 47.*Anglo-German Convention, See Titles Tonga and Samoa.

Anglo-German Secret Treaty, alleged, Terms, etc.

*Q. Mr. G. Bowles; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 1, 282.*Contraband of War—Right of Search, etc.
*See that Title.*Finance — Prussian Finance Report, Jan. 30, 49."Herzog" and "Bundesrath," *See Contraband of War—Right of Search.*Mortgage Bank Law—Report Presented,
Feb. 5, 549.

Navy—Co-operation of Holland with Germany in Development of Increased Navy, alleged.

Q. Mr. G. Bowles; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 13, 1365.

Railways in Asia—Concession by the Sultan of Turkey.

*Q. Mr. Maclean; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 13, 1367.*Samoa — Anglo-German Convention, *See Samoa.*Sickness and Old Age Insurance—Report,
Jan. 30, 47.

South African Policy—Baron von Marschall's Declaration, etc.

*Q. Mr. Hedderwick; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 13, 1360.Gibbs, Hon. V. (Herts, St. Albans)South African War—Policy of the Government, etc. (Vote of Censure), Feb. 1, 355.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Gibney, Mr. J. (Meath, N.)Irish National Teachers—Board of Agriculture and the £78,000, *Feb. 8, 936.Gibraltar

Brotherhood Depression Range Finder Experiments.

Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 12, 1229.

Sanitary Condition of Town and Fortress.

Q. Mr. Stevenson; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain, *Feb. 5, 577.Glasgow Building Regulations Billl. 1r. * *Feb. 12, 1162.Glasgow UniversityAnnual Statistical Report, *Jan. 30, 53, 69.Glasgow and South-Western Railway Billl. 1r. * *Feb. 12, 1164.Glastonbury Corporation Gas Billc. Ordered, *Feb. 9, 1030.*1r. * *Feb. 12, 1201.Glastonbury and Street Gas Billc. Ordered, *Feb. 9, 1030.*1r. * *Feb. 12, 1201.Glen Clelland Collieries Accident

Employment of Polish Workmen, etc.

Q. Mr. Woods; A. Sir M. W. Ridley. *Feb. 13, 1368.Glencoe and Natal

See South African War—Natal.

Glyncorrwg Urban District Council Gas Billl. 1r. * *Feb. 13, 1354."Golconda," Transport Ship

Unsatisfactory Condition of Boat, alleged

Q. Captain Norton; A. Mr. Goschen, *Feb. 12, 1231.Gold Coast

Railways—Cape Coast to Axim, etc.

Q. Mr. S. MacNeill; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain, *Feb. 8, 918.Gold Mines in the Transvaal

See South African War—Property in the Republics, etc.

Gordon, Hon. J. E. [Elgin and Nairn]Education Department, Reorganisation, *Feb. 12, 1238.*Highlands of Scotland—Deer Forests, Crofters' and Cottars' Grievances, etc., *Feb. 8, 982.Gordon Highlanders

Urquhart, H., Case of

Q. Mr. Hedderwick; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, *Feb. 6, 711.Gorst, Rt. Hon. Sir J. E.—Vice-President of the Council for Education [Cambridge University]Agricultural Districts, Education in—Circular to Local Authorities, etc., *Feb. 8, 924.*Commercial Subjects—Extending Education Grants to, *Feb. 12, 1239.*Dublin Museum—Removal of Objects of Art, alleged, Feb. 1, 284; Feb. 5, 581.

Education Department

Consultative Committee, *Feb. 12, 1239.*Reorganisation, *Feb. 12, 1239.*Departmental Committee, Terms of Reference, etc., *Feb. 5, 581.*Educational Subjects, Special Reports Distribution, *Feb. 8, 924.*Heroism, Deeds of—Commemoration in Schools, Bishop of Chester's proposal, *Feb. 13, 1360.*Science and Art Department—Council of Advice for Art Matters, *Feb. 13, 1371.*Victoria and Albert Museum, Guiliano's Request, Recovery of Stolen Ornaments, *Feb. 13, 1370.Goschen, Rt. Hon. G. J.—First Lord of the Admiralty [St. George's, Hanover Square.]*Coal SupplyCardiff Firm contracting to Supply Foreign Government with 400,000 Tons, alleged, *Feb. 5, 575.*Emergency Contracts, *Feb. 6, 712; Feb. 8, 916.*Coastguards and Telephonic Communication, *Feb. 6, 713.*Cruisers—Subsidised Merchant Cruisers, Return, *Feb. 6, 712.*Fishery Cruisers—Trawling in Wexford Bay, *Feb. 9, 1056.*Revenge, H.M.S., Explosion on, Cause of, etc., *Feb. 8, 917.*Russell Shooting Director Invention, *Feb. 12, 1232.*Ships of War—Precautions against Fire, *Feb. 12, 1237.South African WarMarines—Separation Allowance, *Feb. 8, 915.*Mules, Transport of—Names of Transports, Conditions of Shipments, etc., *Feb. 12, 1220.*Naval Brigade—War Despatches, Battles of Graspan and Colenso, *Feb. 5, 575.*Political and Military Policy—Responsibility of the Cabinet, etc. (Vote of Censure), *Feb. 2, 474.*Strength of the Enemy and Number of British Forces, *Feb. 2, 480.*Uitlanders' Grievances, Feb. 2, 478.

[cont.]

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Goschen, Rt. Hon. G. J.—cont.

Transport Service
Employment of First-class Passenger Ships, Feb. 6, 699.

Goldconda, Unsatisfactory Condition of,
alleged, Feb. 12, 1231.

Return—Rates for Ships, etc., including in Return, Feb. 5, 574.

Victoria and Albert—Capsizing, Cause of,
Feb. 1, 279.

Gourley, Sir E. T. [Sunderland]

Army—Strengthening and Improving
Organisation of the Regular and Auxiliary Forces, Government Proposals,
Feb. 12, 1429.

Delagoa Bay Railway—Delay in delivery of Award, Feb. 8, 914.

South African War
Equipment of first Regiment leaving for the Cape, Feb. 1, 273.

Mules, Transport of—Names of Transports, Conditions of Shipment, etc.,
Feb. 12, 1220.

Victoria and Albert—Capsizing, cause of,
Feb. 1, 279.

Government Clerical Establishments

Vacancies—Sons and Daughters of Army and Navy Officers

Q. Mr. S. MacNeill; A. Mr.
Wyndham, Feb. 8, 916.

Government of India Act, 1858

Order in Council Presented, Feb. 1, 235.

Government Printing

Ireland—Copyrighted Rate Books

Q. Mr. Flavin; A. Mr. G. W. Balfour,
Feb. 2, 449.

Government Property [Exemption from Rates]

Petitions for alteration of Law, Feb. 2,
407; Feb. 7, 829; Feb. 13, 1357.

Government Securities

Bank of England—Accounts Presented,
Jan. 31, 160; Feb. 1, 236.

Government Stock and Other Securities Investment Company Bill

L. 1R. Feb. 12*, 1164.

Granard Estate

Purchase of Holdings by Tenants—Action of Land Commissioners

Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. Atkinson,
Feb. 13, 1378.

Granby, Marquess of

Army—Government Military Measures,
Feb. 12, 1189.

Grantham Gas Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1030.
1R. Feb. 12*, 1201.

Grantham, Mr., and the Dean of Durham

Os. Earl of Durham, Earl of Halsbury,
Feb. 1, 240.

Graspan Battle

Naval Brigade—Despatches

Q. Com. Young; A. Mr. Goschen,
Feb. 5, 575.

Gray, Mr. E. [West Ham]

Army—Strengthening and Improving Organisation of the Regular and Auxiliary
Forces, Government Proposals, Feb. 12, 1461.

Great Berkhamstead Water Bill

L. 1R. Feb. 12*, 1164.

Great Central Railway Bill

L. 1R. Feb. 12*, 1164.

Great Eastern Railway Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1030.
1R. Feb. 12*, 1201.

Great Northern Railway Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1030.
1R. Feb. 12*, 1202.

Great Northern Railway (Ireland) Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1030.
1R. Feb. 12*, 1202.

Great Southern and Western and Waterford and Central Ireland Railway Companies Amalgamation Bill

L. 1R. Feb. 12*, 1164.
Origination in House of Lords, Feb. 6, 694.

Great Southern and Western, and Waterford, Limerick, and Western Railway Companies Amalgamation Bill

L. 1R. Feb. 12*, 1164.
Origination in House of Lords, Feb. 6, 694.

Great Southern and Western Railway Bill

L. 1R. Feb. 12*, 1164.

Great Western Railway Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1030.
1R. Feb. 12*, 1202.

Great Yarmouth Port and Haven Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1030.
1R. Feb. 12*, 1202.

Greece

Finance Report, Jan. 30, 47.

Greek Loan

Account Presented, Feb. 1, 236.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Greene, Mr. C. and Mr. ChamberlainQ. Mr. S. MacNeill; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 2, 429.GrenadaReport Presented, Jan. 30, 46, 63.Grey, Earl

Basutoland Hut Tax, etc.

Q. Mr. Bayley; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 8, 1918.

Hawksley's Letter to

Q. Mr. S. MacNeill; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 2, 428.Grey, Sir E. [Northumberland, Berwick]British Constitution and the War—Government Defence, Feb. 1, 381.South African War, Objects of the War—Political and Military Policy of the Government, etc. (Vote of Censure), Feb. 1, 373.Ground Rents (Taxation by Local Authorities)Petition, Feb. 9, 1040.Ground Values (Taxation) (Scotland)Petition for alteration of Law, Feb. 7, 829.Guiliano Bequest

Stolen Ornaments, Recovery of

Q. Lord Balcarras; A. Sir J. Gorst, Feb. 13, 1370.Gull, Sir O. [Devon, Barnstaple]Coastguards and Telephonic Communication, Feb. 6, 713.Mohegan, Wreck of—Passenger Vessels Regulations, Feb. 6, 718.Royal National Lifeboat Institution—Telephonic Communication, Feb. 5, 578.

South African War

Hay—Bad Hay supplied to the Royal Dragoons, Feb. 6, 573.Yeomanry—Devonshire Yeomanry, Delay in Embarkation, Feb. 8, 911.Gun Barrel Proof Act (1868) Amendment Bill1. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1164.GunsLicences, Ireland, See Arms.

Manufacture and Supply for the Army and Navy

O. Sir C. Dilke, Feb. 12, 1285.

Quick-Firing Guns—Trials

Q. Mr. Hedderwick; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 1, 277.South African War, See that Title.Volunteers, New Guns, etc., for—State-ments [Marquess of Lansdowne], Feb. 12, 1178; [Mr. Wyndham], 1266.Gunter, Colonel R. [York, W.R., Barkston Ash]Foot and Mouth Disease, Norfolk Outbreak, Feb. 8, 927.Gwyrfael Rural District Council Water Bill1. 1R.* Feb. 13, 1354.Habitual InebriatesSee Inebriates*.Hague ConferenceSouth African War, See that Title—Arbitration.Halifax Corporation Billc. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1030.1R.* Feb. 12, 1203.Halsbury, Earl of—Lord ChancellorDurham's, Dean of, Sermon on the South African War—Mr. Justice Grantham's Remarks, etc., Feb. 1, 240.Land Charges Bill, 2R, Feb. 12, 1167.Lunacy Bill, 2R, Feb. 12, 1167.Hamilton, Rt. Hon. Lord G.—Secretary of State for India [Middlesex, Ealing]

Afghanistan

Defence of—Diversion of Subsidy Granted to the Ameer, Feb. 2, 444.Detailed Account of Expenditure of Subsidy, Feb. 2, 444.

Army

Troops Employed Beyond the Frontier—Expenditure, Feb. 5, 576.Troops Serving out of India, Number, etc., Feb. 1, 271.Expenditure Commission Report, Feb. 8, 919.

Famine

Relief—Circular, Warning against Imposition, Feb. 8, 920.Number of Persons Receiving Relief and Area affected, Feb. 1, 283.Natu Brothers, Release, etc., Feb. 8, 920.Railways—Survey Party of 1876, Feb. 13, 1368.Hamilton Burgh Billc. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1030.1R.* Feb. 12, 1203.Hammond, Mr. J. [Carlow]Poor Law Officers' Salaries, Ireland, Feb. 13, 1375.Separation Allowance and the Irish Militia, Feb. 9, 1048; 13, 1360.Hanbury, Right Hon. B.W.—Secretary to the Treasury [Preston]Abstractors, Promotion of, Feb. 8, 926.Australian Mints—Coinage of Silver, Feb. 13, 1374.Central Telegraph Office—Holiday Arrangements, Feb. 9, 1053.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Hanbury, Rt. Hon. R. W.—cont.Cork

Post Office, Extension of Buildings,
Feb. 1, 287.

Stamp Office, Transfer of, to more Convenient Centre, Feb. 1, 288.

Enniscorthy Post Office—Delay in building
New Office, Feb. 5, 581.

Freemantle, Port of Call for Australian Mail Steamers, Feb. 6, 727.

Galloway Postal Service Complaints,
Feb. 6, 722 ; 12, 1245.

Income Tax Exemptions—Claims to Relief, Free Postage for Correspondence,
etc., Feb. 8, 925.

Italy, Postage Rates—Surcharges on Letters, Feb. 13, 1372.

Kildare Postal Arrangements—Complaint, Feb. 6, 723.

Listowel Mails, Delays, Feb. 12, 1244.

Local Government Officials and the Local Government Act, 1898—Claims for Compensation, Procedure adopted by the Treasury Department, Feb. 1, 286.

Oldham Telegraphic Delays—Complaint
Feb. 6, 723.

Ordnance Survey Staff—Scheme of Pensions for Temporary Civil Assistants,
etc., Feb. 8, 926.

Parcel Post between Great Britain and the United States, Feb. 1, 287.

Parcel Post to Ireland—Stranraer and
Portadown Route, Feb. 9, 1054.

Parliamentary Debates—Free Copies of Bound Volumes for Members, Feb. 8, 925.

Piers and Harbours, Ireland, Expenditure
on—Return, Feb. 9, 1054.

Post Office London Telephone Exchange—
Tariff and Regulations, Feb. 9, 1054.

Royal National Lifeboat Institution—
Telephonic Communication, Feb. 5, 578.

Sneem Mails, Late Delivery, Feb. 9, 1055.

Somerset House—Index to Old Wills,
Re-Compilation, Feb. 12, 1240.

South African War

Censorship of Outgoing Telegrams,
Feb. 2, 438.

Civil Service Volunteers—Pay and Allowances, Feb. 6, 707.

Newspapers for the Troops, Non-delivery of, alleged, Feb. 6, 709.

Telegrams

Addresses, Regulations — Newtown,
Feb. 5, 580.

Charge Anomalies—Combinations of Letters in the Nature of Ciphers,
Feb. 5, 579.

Telegraphists—Sick Leave, case of Female
Telegraphist of the Western District,
Feb. 5, 580.

Hanbury, Rt. Hon. R. W.—cont.

Telephones—Cork and the Neighbouring Cities in the South of Ireland, want of Communication, Feb. 1, 288.

Wallace Collection, Opening to the Public,
Feb. 12, 1240.

Wexford Postal Service, Changes advocated, Feb. 8, 927.

Whisky, Irish, Weak Whisky in Bond,
Feb. 13, 1373.

Harbour Defences

Conference on Armaments, etc.

Q. Mr. Helderwick ; A. Mr. Wynd-
ham, Feb. 2, 442.

Harcourt, Rt. Hon. Sir W. G. V. [Mon-mouthshire, W.]

British Constitution as a Fighting
Machine

Marquees of Salisbury's Statement,
Feb. 5, 593.

Jameson Raid and the South African War.
Feb. 5, 605.

South African War—Political and Military Policy of the Government, Want of Judgment, Foresight, etc. (Vote of Censure), Feb. 5, 591.

Hartlepool Gas and Water Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1031.

1R.* Feb. 12, 1203.

Harwood, Mr. G. [Bolton]

House of Commons—Inadequate Accommodation for Members, Feb. 6, 727.

South African War

Boer Prisoners on Board Ship at the Cape, Feb. 6, 700.

Government and the War—Vote of Censure, Feb. 6, 823.

Hastings Corporation Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1031.

1R.* Feb. 12, 1203.

Hastings Harbour Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1031.

1R.* Feb. 12, 1203.

Hastings Tramways Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1031.

1R.* Feb. 12, 1203.

Hawksley Correspondence

Independence Eclog Publication

Qs. Mr S. T. Evans, Mr. Bainbridge,
Mr. S. MacNeill ; As. Mr. A. J.
Balfour, Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 1, 258.

Laying upon the Table of the House

Q. Mr. Labouchere ; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 5, 566.

Letter to Earl Grey

Q. Mr. S. T. Evans ; A. Mr. J.
Chamberlain, Feb. 2, 428.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Hay for South Africa

See South African War—Forage.

Hayden, Mr. J. P. [Roscommon, S.]Gun Licences in Roscommon—Request for description of Weapons, etc., by the Police, *Feb. 13, 1377.Healy, Mr. M. [Cork City]

Cork

Fair Rent Applications, *Feb. 2, 448.*Muzzling Order in Cork, *Feb. 9, 1059.*Post Office—Extension of Buildings, *Feb. 1, 287.*Stamp Office—Transfer of, to more convenient Centre, *Feb. 1, 288.*Land Court Returns, *Feb. 2, 447; Feb. 6, 725.*Local Government (Ireland) Act, Rules and Orders—Return, *Feb. 1, 289; Feb. 2, 451.*Local Government (Ireland) Act (1898) Amendment Bill, 2R., *Feb. 14, 1515.*Statutes—Codification, *Feb. 1, 293.*Telephone Service—Cork and the neighbouring Cities in the South of Ireland, Want of Communication, *Feb. 1, 288.Healy, Mr. T. J. [Wexford]Ennisceorthy Post Office—Delay in building new Office, *Feb. 5, 580.Healy, Mr. T. M. [Louth, N.]Ivagh's, Lord, Ambulance Corps—Members of, as Combatants, *Feb. 9, 1046.*Local Government (Ireland) Act (1898) Amendment Bill, 2R., *Feb. 14, 1510.*Local Government Rate Allowances, *Feb. 5, 586.*Railway Amalgamation Bills—Origination in the House of Lords, *Feb. 4, 694.*Saunderson's, Colonel, remarks on Nationalists as cowards, *Feb. 2, 534.South African War

British Reverses

Irish Revenge, etc., *Feb. 7, 857.*Connaught Rangers—Court-martial of Major, alleged, *Feb. 5, 570.*Forage, Home and Foreign Produce—Hay Contracts, *Feb. 8, 909.*Inquiry into Casualties to Irishmen, *Feb. 5, 569.*Mafeking Station Master, Shooting, alleged, *Feb. 5, 569; Feb. 6, 701.*Militia—Number of Irish, English, and Scotch Regiments Volunteering for the Front—Returns, *Feb. 2, 433.*Taxation of Ireland—Over Taxation, alleged, *Feb. 9, 1099, 1103.*Trawling in Irish Waters, *Feb. 8, 933.Heaton, Mr. H. [Canterbury]Parcel Post between United States and Great Britain, *Feb. 1, 287.*Telegrams, Charge Anomalies—Combinations of Letters in the nature of ciphers, *Feb. 5, 579.Hedderwick, Mr. T. C. [Wick Burghs]Army—Strengthening and Improving Organisation of the Regular and Auxiliary Forces—Government Proposals, *Feb. 12, 1459.*Congested Relief (Scotland) Act—Balance of Money granted, *Feb. 5, 582.*Crimean and Indian Mutiny Veterans, Case of H. Urquhart, *Feb. 6, 711.*Crofters Act, 1886, Extension of—Deer Forests, etc., *Feb. 8, 977.*German Policy in South Africa—Baron von Marschall's Declaration, etc., *Feb. 13, 1360.*Harbour Defences in the United Kingdom, *Feb. 2, 442.*Quick-firing Guns—Trials, *Feb. 1, 277.*Secret Service Money, Application for Increase, *Feb. 2, 445.*Sierra Leone Campaign Medals—Natives guilty of Unlawful Acts, *Feb. 9, 1050.South African WarButler's, Sir W.—Despatches and Correspondence, *Feb. 1, 256.*Canadian Contingent—Refusal of Cavalry by the War Office, *Feb. 2, 428.*Civil Service Volunteers—Pay and Allowances, *Feb. 6, 707.*Guns of Position—Natal and Cape Colony, Feb. 2, 432; Feb. 9, 1044."Herzog"—Right of Search, *Feb. 12, 1222.*Imperial Light Horse Equipment—Mausers Pistols, *Feb. 5, 571.*Magersfontein Engagement and the Highland Brigade—Inquiry, *Feb. 1, 261; Feb. 12, 1219.*Maps, Surveys, etc., *Feb. 1, 262.*Mountain Batteries—Gen. Buller's Campaign, Number of Batteries and Equipment, *Feb. 2, 432.*Stokes, Mr., Murder of—Compensation Money to Widow, *Feb. 13, 1366.*Webley Cartridges—Defective Cartridges, *Feb. 5, 567.Helmets

Sleeping Helmets for the Troops in South Africa

Q. Mr. Broadhurst; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 8, 913.Hemel Hempstead Corporation [Water] Billl. 1R. Feb. 12, 1162.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Hemphill, Rt. Hon. C. H. [Tyrone, N.]Land (Ireland) Acts, Administration and Working of, Feb. 9, 1135.South African War—Policy of the Government, etc. (Vote of Censure), Feb. 5, 679.Heriosm, Deeds ofCommemoration in Elementary Schools, Bishop of Chester's proposal
Q. Mr. Verburgh; A. Sir J. Gorst, Feb. 13, 1360.Herring Industry, IrelandGovernment Brand, etc.³Q. Mr. Flavin; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 5, 585."Herzog"—Right of SearchQs. Mr. G. Bowles; As. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 8, 907; Feb. 9, 1041; Q. Mr. Hedderwick; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 12, 1222.Hexham Railway AccidentQ. Mr. Field; A. Mr. Ritchie, Feb. 1, 283.Hicks-Beach

See Beach.

High Treason

Cape—Case of M. du Plessis

Q. Mr. B. Roberts; A. Mr. Chamberlain, Feb. 6, 703.Higham Ferrers Water Billl. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1162.Highland Brigade

Magersfontein Engagement—Inquiry

Q. Mr. Hedderwick; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 12, 1219; Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 13, 1359.Highlands and Islands of ScotlandCrofter Colonisation Scheme, Reports, Jan. 30, 46, 61.Deer Forests—Amendment to the Address [Mr. Weir] Feb. 8, 973.Highways and Bridges Act [1891] Amendment Billc 1R.* Feb. 13, 1380.Hoare, Sir S. [Norwich]Foot and Mouth Disease, Norfolk Outbreak, Feb. 8, 928.Hobhouse, Mr. H. [Somerset, East]Agricultural Districts, Education in—Circular to Local Authorities, etc., Feb. 8, 923.Educational Subjects, Special Reports Distribution, Feb. 8, 924.Hobhouse, Mr. H.—*cont.*Income Tax Exemptions—Claims to Relief, Free Postage for Correspondence, etc., Feb. 8, 925.Somersetshire Volunteers—Failure to form Company, Number of Men unable to pass test, etc., Feb. 5, 571.Hofmeyer, Mr.—South African CrisisO. Mr. Bryce, Feb. 2, 469.Hogan, Mr. J. F. [Tipperary, Mid]Australian Mints—Coinage of Silver, Feb. 13, 1374.Cable from South Africa to Australia—Eastern Telegraph Company's Concessions, Feb. 1, 282.Fremantle—Port of Call for Australian Mail Steamers, Feb. 6, 726.Italy—Postage Rates to Southern Italy, Surcharges on Letters, Feb. 13, 1372.New Hebrides—Sale of Firearms and Spirits to Natives, Feb. 13, 1366.Pacific Cable Scheme, Feb. 1, 281.Samoa—Anglo-German Convention, Working of new arrangements, Feb. 6, 714.South African WarCensorship of War News—Letters of War Correspondents, Feb. 1, 268.Ladysmith, Siege of—Children at Ladysmith, Feb. 1, 267.Tonga—Mr. B. Thomas's Mission, &c., Feb. 6, 713; Feb. 13, 1365.Home Defence

See Title Defence of the Empire.

Home Rule

Irish Sympathy with the Boers

O. Mr. T. M. Healy on, Feb. 7, 862.Hong KongAnnual Report Presented, Jan. 30, 46, 63.Horses for Troops in South Africa

Irish Horses

Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 9, 1048.

Number carried on each Transport Ship, Horses lost on the Voyage, etc.—Return

Q. Gen. Russell; A. Mr. Macartney, Feb. 2, 437.Hospitals

Military Hospitals and the South African War, See South African War.

Hounds

Poisoning, alleged, in West Limerick—Charge against Mr. Curtin

Q. Mr. Austin; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 8, 934.

Jun. 30—Feb. 14.

House of CommonsBusiness of the House, See that Title.Clerk of the House—Resignation of Sir R. F. D. Palgrave, Letter to the Speaker, *Jan. 30, 70.*Committees, See that Title.Journal—Sessional Order, Jan. 30, 61.

Members' Accommodation — Inadequate Accommodation

*Q. Mr. Harwood ; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas, Feb. 6, 727.House of LordsCommittees, See that Title.Manuscripts Calendar—(Historical Manuscript Commission) Presented, *Feb. 5, 549.*New Peers, See Peers.Offices — Select Committee Appointed, *Feb. 2, 403.*Roll of the Lords, *Feb. 2, 401.*Sat First, See Peers.Housing of the Working Classes

Workmen's Trains

Q. Mr. Woods ; A. Mr. Ritchie, Feb. 6, 720.Housing of the Working Classes Billc. 1R. Feb. 9, 1065.Housing of the Working Classes (Rural Districts) Billc. 1R.* Feb. 9, 1065.Howorth, Sir H. H. [Salford, South]Commands at the Front—Selections, etc., Feb. 13, 1358.Hoylelake and West Kirby Improvement Billc. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1031.1R. Feb. 12, 1204.Huddersfield Corporation Tramways Billc. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1031.1R.* Feb. 12, 1204.Huntingdon Corporation Billc. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1031.1R.* Feb. 12, 1204.Hydrographical ConferenceQ. Mr. Weir ; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 12, 1235.Ilfracombe Improvement Billc. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1031.1R.* Feb. 12, 1204.Imbeciles [Training Institutions] Billc. 1R.* Feb. 2, 416.*

VOL. LXXVIII. [FOURTH SERIES.]

Immigration*See* Emigration and Immigration.Imperial Light Horse

Equipment—Mauser Pistol

*Q. Mr. Hedderwick ; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 5, 571.Imperial Ottoman Guaranteed LoanAccount Presented, *Feb. 8, 898, 903.*Imperial Volunteers, See VolunteersImperial War Fund

Administration

Q. Sir J. Leng ; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 1, 268.Imperial YeomanrySee Yeomanry.Imperialism

Definition of

Q. Mr. Asquith, Feb. 6, 739.Imschenetzky's Uralite Patent Billl. 1R. Feb. 13, 1353.Income Tax

Exemptions — Claims to Relief, Free Postage for Correspondence

Q. Mr. Hobhouse ; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 8, 925.

Servant of Limited Liability Company and the Three Years Average

*Q. Mr. Dalziel ; A. Sir M. Hicks-Beach, Feb. 12, 1235."Indépendance Belge"Publication of Rhodes-Hawksley Correspondence, See Hawksley Correspondence.India

Secretary of State—Right Hon. Lord G. Hamilton.

Under Secretary—Earl of Onslow

Afghanistan, See that Title.Anti-Shanars Riots, Petition for Redress of grievances, *Feb. 1, 696.ArmyGarrison—Government Military Proposals, Sir C. Dilke on, Feb. 12, 1287.

Native Troops, Employment of, in South Africa

Q. Mr. Bainbridge ; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 1, 271.

Replacing Troops sent out to South Africa

Q. Mr. Warner ; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 6, 707.

Troops outside the Frontier—Expenditure

Q. Mr. Buchanan ; A. Lord G. Hamilton, Feb. 5, 576.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

India—cont.Army—cont.

Troops Serving out of India, numbers, etc.

Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Lord G. Hamilton, Feb. 1, 271.

Boots

Indian Contract for Boots for Soldiers in South Africa—Prices, etc.

Qs. Mr. Channing; As. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 8, 909; Feb. 9, 1049.

Expenditure Commission Report

Q. Sir M. Bownaggee; A. Lord G. Hamilton, Feb. 8, 919.

Famine

Number of Persons receiving Relief, and Area affected

Q. Sir W. Wedderburn; A. Lord G. Hamilton, Feb. 1, 283.

Relief—Circular Letter, warning against Imposition

Q. Sir W. Wedderburn; A. Lord G. Hamilton, Feb. 8, 919.

Loans raised in India, Return, Jan. 30, 51, 70.

Merchant Shipping—Extending Load line to India

Order in Council presented, Feb. 1, 234.

Native Princes, Loyalty of—South African War

O. Duke of Somerset, Jan. 30, 7.

Natu Brothers, Release, etc.

Q. Sir W. Wedderburn; A. Lord G. Hamilton, Feb. 8, 920.

Railway Surveys—Survey Party of 1876

Q. Mr. Maclean; A. Lord G. Hamilton, Feb. 13, 1368.

Secretary's Establishment—Revision of Appointments, etc., Order in Council Presented, Feb. 1, 235.

Trade, Statement Presented, Jan. 30, 48.

Wars on, or beyond the borders of British India—Return Presented, Jan. 30, 70; Jan. 31, 158.

Industrial and Provident Societies

Report, Feb. 2, 401, 408.

Inebriate Retreats

Rules as to Management Presented, Feb. 1, 235.

Inebriates Acts, 1879 to 1899

Petition for alteration of Law, Feb. 2, 407; Feb. 12, 1216.

Inebriates Amendment [Scotland] Bill

l. IR. * Feb. 9, 1024.

Intermediate Education (Ireland) Act

Amendment proposed

Q. Mr. Field; A. Mr. G. W. Balfour, Feb. 1, 292.

International Law

Contraband of War, See that Title.

Intoxicating Liquors (Local Veto) Ireland Bill

c. IR. * Feb. 2, 424.

Invasion of British Empire

Home Defences—Army v. Fleet, Sir C. Dilke on the Government Military proposals, Feb. 12, 1282.

Ipswich Corporation Tramways Bill

l. IR. * Feb. 12, 1162.

Ireland

Lord Lieutenant—Earl Cadogan.

Chief Secretary—Rt. Hon. G. W. Balfour.

Attorney General—Rt. Hon. J. Atkinson.

Solicitor General—Mr. D. P. Barton.

Agrarian Outrages—Returns Presented, Jan. 31, 158; Feb. 1, 233.

Agricultural Grant under Local Government Act, and the County Cess

Q. Captain Donelan; A. Mr. G. W. Balfour, Feb. 1, 290.

Agricultural and Industrial Department Transfer of Science and Art Department

Q. Sir T. Esmonde; A. Mr. Plunkett, Feb. 8, 937.

National Education—Provision for Recouping for sum of £78,000

Q. Mr. Gibney; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 8, 936; Q. Mr. A. O'Connor; A. Mr. Plunkett, Feb. 13, 1379.

Allotments Act, Extending to Ireland

Q. Mr. Field; A. Mr. G. W. Balfour, Feb. 1, 292.

Armagh, Mid—New Writ, Jan. 30, 54.

Arms Licences—Licence refused to Mr. J. O'Neill

Q. Mr. Farrell; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 6, 724.

Army

Garrisons—Concentration of Troops at Mullingar or Longford

Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 13, 1364.

Militia and Volunteers, See those Titles.

Assizes—Orders in Council presented, Re-arranging of the Circuits, Jan. 31, 159.

Winter Assizes, Jan. 31, 159; Feb. 1, 235.

Ballymacelligot—Delay in hearing Fair Rent applications

Q. Mr. Flavin; A. Mr. G. W. Balfour, Feb. 1, 293.

Bankruptcy Court—Orders in Council Presented, Jan. 31, 159; Feb. 1, 235.

Belfast, See that Title.

Bills relating to, See their Titles.

Carriage Licences in Dublin

Q. Mr. Field; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 8, 936.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Ireland—cont.Castleisland—Delay in hearing Fair Rent applicationsQ. Mr. Flavin; A. Mr. G. W. Balfour, Feb. 1, 293.Cattle Importation—Foot and Mouth DiseaseQ. Mr. Field; A. Mr. Long, Feb. 6, 717.Cavan Police ForceQ. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 9, 1058.Chamberlain's, Mr., visit to Dublin—Conduct of Trinity College Students, etc.Qs. Mr. Daly, Mr. W. Redmond; As. Mr. G. W. Balfour, Feb. 2, 446.Church Temporalities—Report, Feb. 1, 236; Feb. 5, 563.*Clare County Police Charges, etc.Q. Mr. W. Redmond; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 9, 1057.Congested Districts Board—Clare County to be included in Scheduled DistrictsQ. Mr. W. Redmond; A. Mr. Plunkett, Feb. 12, 1246.County Cess—Agricultural GrantQ. Captain Donelan; A. Mr. G. W. Balfour, Feb. 1, 290.County Court Printing, Payment for, by the County CouncilQ. Mr. Engledew; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 13, 1376.Constabulary, Royal Irish, For Collective heading, see that Title.*Cork, See that Title.*Crimean Pensioners, Inmates of Work-housesQ. Mr. Flavin; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 6, 712.Curtin, Michael, Case ofQ. Mr. Austin; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 8, 934.Dingle Pier, Condition of—proposed Extension, etc.Q. Sir T. Esmonde; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 5, 584.Dispensaries—New Regulations, Increased Poor Law Expenditure, etc.Qs. Mr. J. P. Farrell; Mr. Daly; As. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 8, 929.District Councillors—Disqualifications forQ. Mr. Power; A. Mr. G. W. Balfour, Feb. 1, 289.Dublin, See that Title.*Education, For Collective heading, see that Title.*Enniscorthy Post Office—Delay in building new OfficeQ. Mr. T. J. Healy; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 5, 580.Evictions*Evicted Tenants Bill, See that Title.*Notices of Evictions—Returns Presented, Jan. 31, 158; Feb. 1, 233.*Ireland—cont.*Evictions—cont.*Returns, Presented Jan. 30, 45, 62; Jan. 31, 158; Feb. 1, 233.*Explosives, Sale of—New Regulations, allegedQ. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 6, 724.Fair Rent applications, For Collective heading, see Land Commission.*Galloway Postal Service, ComplaintsQ. Mr. O'Malley; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 6, 722; Q. Mr. Pinkerton; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 12, 1245.Gold Ornaments and the British MuseumQ. Sir G. T. Esmonde; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 1, 293.Granard Estate—Purchase of Holding by Tenants, Action of Land Commissioners, etc.Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 13, 1376.Herring Industry—Government Brand, etc.Q. Mr. Flavin; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 5, 585.Home Rule—Irish Nationalists and the South African War.Q. Mr. T. M. Healy, Feb. 7, 862.Horses for South African War—Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 9, 1048.Intermediate Education Act—Amendment proposedQ. Mr. Field; A. Mr. G. W. Balfour, Feb. 1, 292.Judicial Appointments*Politics of Judges receiving appointmentsQ. Mr. Daly; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 12, 1240.Religious DisabilitiesQs. Mr. Daly, Mr. S. MacNeill, Mr. P. O'Brien; As. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 5, 585; Q. Mr. Daly; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 13, 1375.Religion of Judges—Unequal Numbers of Protestants to Roman CatholicsQ. Mr. Daly; A. Mr. G. W. Balfour, Feb. 1, 291.Judicial Rents, For Collective heading, see Land Commission—Fair Rents.*Kanturk Baronial Railway GuaranteeQ. Mr. Flynn; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 9, 1057.Kerry, See that Title.*Kildare—Postal ComplaintsQ. Mr. Field; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 6, 723.Land Acts, Administration and Working of—Amendment to the Address [Mr. Daly], Feb. 9, 1111—Division, 1150.*Land Commission, For Collective headings, see that Title.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Ireland—cont.

- Lifford County Court House—Action of the High Sheriff
Qs. Mr. S. MacNeill; As. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 5, 588; Feb. 8, 935.
- Listowel Mails—Delays
Q. Mr. Flavin; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 12, 1244.
- Local Government Act
 Amending Bill
Q. Mr. Engledew; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 13, 1374.
- Officials
 Claims for Compensation, etc.—
 Procedure adopted by the Treasury Department
Qs. Mr. Dillon; As. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 1, 285.
- Remuneration of County and District Council Officials—
 Action of the Local Government Board
Q. Mr. Dillon; A. Mr. G. W. Balfour, Feb. 1, 286.
- Return of Rules and Orders, Delay in issuing Qs. Mr. M. Healy; As. Mr. G. W. Balfour, Feb. 1, 289; Feb. 2, 451.
- Local Government Election Petitions—
 Commissioners' Judgments, Return
Q. Mr. Dillon; A. Mr. G. W. Balfour, Feb. 1, 288.
- Local Government Rate Allowances
Q. Mr. T. M. Healy; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 5, 586.
- Lunatic Asylums—Grant in Aid and the Local Taxation Accounts
Q. Mr. Power; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 13, 1376.
- Magistrates and Justices of the Peace—
 Removal of Justices of the Peace
Q. Mr. Mandeville; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 5, 589.
- Mayo, New Writ, Feb. 6, 691.
- Militia, See that Title.
- Muzzling Order—Cork
Q. Mr. M. Healy; A. Mr. Plunkett, Feb. 9, 1059.
- National School Teachers, See that Title.
- Nursing—Out-Nursing in Irish Unions
Q. Mr. Daly; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 8, 932.
- Parcel Post Route—Stranraer and Portadown
Q. Mr. Moore; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 9, 1054.
- Pauper Children—Boarding-out, etc.
Q. Mr. Daly; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 8, 932.
- Paupers, Deportation of Amendment to the Address [Mr. Flavin], Feb. 2, 1153.
- City of Dublin Grievance
Q. Mr. Field; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 6, 724.

Ireland—cont.

- Peace Preservation Act—Monaghan County Council Resolution, etc.
Q. Mr. Daly; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 12, 1241.
- Piers and Harbours, Expenditure on—
 Return
Q. Mr. W. Moore; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 3, 1054.
- Police Cells in Belfast—Death of J. Thompson
Q. Mr. Daly; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 12, 1241.
- Police, For Collective heading, see Constabulary, Royal Irish.
- Poor Law
 Expenditure—Dispensary Rules, etc.
Qs. Mr. J. P. Farrell, Mr. Daly; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 8, 929.
- Officers' Salaries
Q. Mr. Hammond; A. Mr. Ambrose, Feb. 13, 1375.
- Primary Education—Reform
Q. Mr. Field; A. Sir M. Hicks-Beach, Feb. 2, 445.
- Printing—Government Printing, Copy-righted Rate Books
Q. Mr. Flavin; A. Mr. G. W. Balfour, Feb. 2, 449.
- Prisons—Rule in Pursuance of the Fine or Imprisonment [Scotland and Ireland] Act, Feb. 5, 549.
- Probate Duty Grant—Distribution of the Grants to Poor Law Unions, delay in
Q. Mr. Tully; A. Mr. G. W. Balfour, Feb. 1, 292.
- Proclaimed Meetings—Roscommon
Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 12, 1241.
- Public Accounts and Charges Act, 1891—
 Treasury Minute, Feb. 6, 685, 697.
- Railway Amalgamation Bills, See Names of Bills—Great Southern, Western, and Waterford, etc.
- Re-afforestation
Q. Mr. Ffrench; A. Mr. Plunkett, Feb. 12, 1247.
- Records, Public—Appendix to Report, Jan. 30, 45, 62.
- Representative Peers, See that Title.
- Roads
 Contractors—Difficulties of obtaining access to Quarries, etc.
Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 8, 929.
- Labourers undertaking maintenance and repairs of roads
Q. Capt. Donelan; A. Mr. G. W. Balfour, Feb. 1, 291.
- Royal University of Ireland, Accounts and Reports Presented, Feb. 5, 563; Feb. 9, 1041; Feb. 12, 1166.
- Rural District Councils, Number of Members Constituting a Quorum, etc.—
 Amendment of Act
Q. Mr. Engledew; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 13, 1374.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Ireland—cont.

Sanitary Works—Charges under Local Government Act, etc.

Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 12, 1243.

Science and Art Department, Transferring Management and Control, etc.

Q. Sir T. Esmonde; A. Mr. Plunkett, Feb. 8, 937.

Sligo's, Marquess of, Estate—Correspondence with the Congested Districts Board

Q. Dr. Ambrose; A. Mr. Plunkett, Feb. 9, 1059.

Small Houses (Acquisition of Ownership) Act, Extension to Ireland—carrying out of the Act by the District Councils

Q. Mr. Austin; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 5, 588.

South African War—Attitude of Ireland, Debate on the Address, Feb. 7, 830

Stamp Office in Cork—Transfer of, to more convenient centre

Q. Mr. Healy; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 1, 288.

Statutes—Codification

Q. Mr. M. Healy; A. Mr. G. W. Balfour, Feb. 1, 293.

Supreme Court of Judicature—Accounts Presented, Feb. 12, 1217.

Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1877—Orders in Council Presented, Jan. 31, 159; Feb. 1, 235.

Tallow—Extra Police

Q. Mr. Shee; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 13, 1378.

Taxation

Over Taxation of Ireland, alleged—Amendment to the Address (Mr. Clancy), Feb. 3, 1003; Feb. 9, 1066; Division, 1108.

South African War Expenditure—Exemption of Ireland from additional Taxation

Q. Mr. W. Redmond; A. Sir M. Hicks-Beach, Feb. 12, 1222.

Telephone Service—Cork and neighbouring Cities in the South of Ireland, want of Communication

Q. Mr. M. Healy; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 1, 288.

Tobacco Growing Experiment

Q. Mr. W. Redmond; A. Mr. Plunkett, Feb. 12, 1245.

Town Tenants—Legislation

Q. Mr. Field; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 2, 451.

University Education—Facilities for Discussion

O. Mr. J. Redmond, Feb. 12, 1247.

Valuation of Land—Re-valuation

Qs. Mr. Field, Mr. Shee; As. Mr. G. W. Balfour, Feb. 2, 450.

Ireland—cont.

Volunteers—Formation of Volunteer Corps

Qs. Mr. W. Johnston, Mr. P. O'Brien, Mr. W. Redmond; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 5, 564.

Warden Estate

Ejectment Decrees, etc.

Q. Mr. T. J. Farrell; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 8, 930.

National Teachers' Residence Site

Q. Mr. Flavin; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 9, 1056.

Waterford and Limerick Railway—Dismissal of Employes

Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas, Feb. 5, 583.

Westport Landlords desirous of selling Estates, Congested Districts Board refusing to purchase

Q. Dr. Ambrose; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 13, 1375.

Wexford Bay, Steam Trawling in

Qs. Mr. Ffrench; As. Mr. Plunkett, Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 8, 933.

Irish Brigade with the Boers

Alleged Murder of wounded Prisoner

Q. Mr. Mandeville; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 12, 1224.

Irish Members

Railways, Passes for—Free Passes

Q. Mr. Field; A. Mr. Ritchie, Feb. 6, 721.

Irish Nationalist Members

Sympathy with the Boers

Debate on the Address, Feb. 7, 830.

Sanderson, Col., on, Feb. 2, 533

Qs. Mr. T. M. Healy, Mr. J. Redmond and The Speaker, Feb. 2, 535

Irregular Corps

Volunteers and Yeomanry, See those Titles.

Isolation Hospitals Bill

L. 1R. Feb. 5*, 550.

Italy

Parcel Post Convention—Additional Articles, Jan. 30, 45, 64.

Postage Rates to Southern Italy—Surcharges on Letters

Q. Mr. Hogan; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 13, 1372.

Trade Reports, Jan. 30, 47, 49.

Iveagh's, Lord, Ambulance Corps

Members of, as Combatants

Q. Mr. T. M. Healy; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 9, 1046.

Jamaica

Legislative Council—Nominated and Elected Members, Action of the Governor, etc.

Q. Mr. S. MacNeill; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 6, 715.

Report Presented, Jan. 30, 46, 63.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Jameson Raid

Excuse for Arming of the Transvaal
Q. Mr. Bartley, Feb. 1, 371.

Hawksley Correspondence. See that Title.

References to in Debate on the Address,
Jan. 30, 125, 144; Jan. 31, 184, 199,
211; Feb. 2, 457; Feb. 5, 605.

Japan

Foreign Jurisdiction - Act — Order in Council Presented, Feb. 1, 234.

Jarrow and Hebburn Electricity Supply Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1031.
1R.* Feb. 12, 1204.

Jeffreys, Mr. A. F. [Hants, N.]

South African War

Forage—Home and Foreign Produce,
Prices, etc., Feb. 5, 573.

Transport Ships—Meat on the "American," Feb. 2, 435.

"Jelunga"—Transport Ship Service

Condition of Women and Children on
Q. Mr. S. MacNeill; A. Mr. Wynd-
ham, Feb. 5, 574.

Jessel, Capt. H. M. [St. Pancras, S.]

Army—Strengthening and Improving
Organisation of the Regular and Auxiliary Forces—Government Proposals, Feb. 12, 1456.

Johnson-Ferguson, Mr. J. E. [Leicester, Loughborough]

Veterinary Advisers to the Board of Agriculture, Feb. 6, 718.

Johnston, Mr. W. [Belfast, S.]

Army—Strengthening and Improving
Organisation of the Regular and
Auxiliary Forces—Government Proposals, Feb. 12, 1454.

Irish Volunteers—Formation of Irish Corps, Feb. 5, 564.

Whisky, Irish, Weak Whisky in Bond,
Feb. 13, 1373.

Jordan, Mr. [Fermanagh, S.]

Local Government (Ireland) Act (1898)
Amendment Bill, 2R., Feb. 14, 1490,
1506, 1511.

Journal of the House

Sessional Order, Jan. 30, 61.

Judges, Ireland

Politics of Judges Receiving Appointments

Q. Mr. Daly; A. Mr. Atkinson,
Feb. 12, 1240.

Judges, Ireland—cont.

Religious Disabilities

Qs. Mr. Daly, Mr. S. MacNeill, Mr.
P. O'Brien; As. Mr. Atkinson,
Feb. 5, 585; Feb. 13, 1375.

Religion of Judges—Unequal Number of Protestants to Roman Catholics

Q. Mr. Daly; A. Mr. G. W. Balfour,
Feb. 1, 291.

Judicial Bents, Ireland

See Land Commission.

Judicial Statistics (Scotland) Act, 1869

Report, Jan. 30, 49, 62.

Kanturk Baronial Railway Guarantee

Q. Mr. Flynn; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 3, 1057.

Kearley, Mr. H. E. [Devonport]

Patriotic Fund, Application and Administration of—Amendment to the Address,
Feb. 8, 941, 956, 971, 973.

Smith, G., Case of, Feb. 12, 1230.

Kenmare

Warden Estate, See Kerry.

Kennaway, Right Hon. Sir J. H. [Devon, Honiton]

Queen's Speech—The Address, Termination of Debate, Jan. 31, 230.

Kenyon-Slaney, Colonel W. [Shropshire, Newport]

Army—Strengthening and improving
Organisation of the Regular and Auxiliary Forces—Government Proposals,
Feb. 12, 1407.

South African War—Government and the War [Vote of Censure], Feb. 6, 750.

Kerry

Extra Police in County Kerry

Q. Mr. Flavin; A. Mr. Atkinson,
Feb. 8, 931.

Land Commission Sitings

Appeals

Q. Mr. Flavin; A. Mr. Atkin-
son, Feb. 15, 587.

Fair Rent Applications in North
Kerry

Q. Mr. Flavin; A. Mr. G. W.
Balfour, Feb. 2, 450.

Warden Estate

Ejectment Decrees, etc.

Q. Mr. T. J. Farrell; A. Mr.
Atkinson, Feb. 8, 930.

National Teacher's Residence Site

Q. Mr. Flavin; A. Mr. Atkin-
son, Feb. 9, 1056.

Kildare

Postal Arrangements—Complaint

Q. Mr. Field; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb.
6, 723.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Kimberley

Treatment of Natives
O. Mr. J. Burns, Feb. 6, 794.

Kimberley, Earl of

Army—Military Measures for Strengthening the Army, etc., Feb. 12, 1188.

Queen's Speech—The Address, Jan. 30, 13.

South African War and British Government—Want of Knowledge, Foresight, etc., Jan. 30, 15.

Treasury, Powers of—Reflection on the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Feb. 1, 238, 240.

Kingscourt, Keady, and Armagh Railway Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1031.
1R.* Feb. 12, 1204.

Kingston-upon-Thames Corporation Bill

l. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1162.

Kingston-upon-Thames Gas Bill

l. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1164.

Knott End Railway Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1031.
1R.* Feb. 12, 1205.

Knowles, Mr. Lees [Salford, West]

Army—Strengthening and Improving Organisation of the Regular and Auxiliary Forces, Government Proposals, Feb. 12, 1414.

Volunteers on Foreign Service, Officers' Commissions, Feb. 1, 274; Feb. 8, 912.

"Kowshing"

Claims—Negotiations, etc.
Q. Mr. Provand; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 9, 1051.

Labouchere, Mr. H. [Northampton]

Army—Strengthening and Improving Organisation of the Regular and Auxiliary Forces, Government Proposals, Feb. 12, 1326.

Hawksley Correspondence—Laying upon the Table of the House, Feb. 5, 566.

Labourers' Cottages, Ireland

Newcastle West Scheme
Q. Mr. Austin; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 8, 937.

Ladysmith

See South African War.

Lagos

Foreign Jurisdiction Act—Order in Council Presented, Feb. 1, 234.

Report Presented, Jan. 30, 46, 63.

Lambeth Water Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1032.
1R.* Feb. 12, 1205.

Lancashire, Derbyshire, and East Coast Railway Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1032.
1R.* Feb. 12, 1205.

Lancashire Corporation Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1032.
1R.* Feb. 12, 1205.

Lancashire Electric Power Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1032.
1R.* Feb. 12, 1205.

Lancashire Inebriates Acts Board Bill

l. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1162.

Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1032.
1R.* Feb. 12, 1205.

Land

Compulsory Hiring of Land under Local Government Act, 1894—Number of Orders deposited with the Local Government Board
Q. Sir W. Foster; A. Mr. Chaplin, Feb. 5, 590.

Highlands of Scotland, Crofters and Cottars' Grievances—Debate on the Address, Feb. 8, 973.

Ireland

Compulsory Purchase—Debate on the Address, Feb. 9, 1111.

Re-valuation

Qs. Mr. Field, Mr. Shee; As. Mr. G. W. Balfour, Feb. 2, 450.

Sales by Municipal Corporations

Q. Sir W. Foster; A. Mr. Chaplin, Feb. 12, 1236.

Land Acts, Ireland

Administration and Working of—Amendment to the Address [Mr. Daly], Feb. 9, 1111, Division, 1150.

Evictions—Notice, etc., See Title Evictions.

Land Charges Bill

l. 1R.* Feb. 2, 402.
2R.* Feb. 12, 1167.

Land Commission, Ireland

Account Presented, Feb. 5, 563.

Administration and working of the Land Acts—Debate on the Address, Feb. 9, 1111; Division, 1150.

Cork, County Applications for Fair Rents
Q. Mr. M. Healy; A. Mr. G. W. Balfour, Feb. 2, 447.

Judicial Rents, Returns presented, Jan. 30, 45, 62; Jan. 31, 158.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Land Commission, Ireland—cont.

Kerry

Appeals

Q. Mr. Flavin; A. Mr. G. W. Balfour, Feb. 2, 450.

Applications for Fair Rents in North Kerry

Q. Mr. Flavin; A. Mr. G. W. Balfour, Feb. 2, 450.

Castleisland and Ballinacelligot District

Q. Mr. Flavin; A. Mr. G. W. Balfour, Feb. 1, 293.

Proceedings—Returns, Jan. 30, 45, 62; Jan. 31, 158; Feb. 1, 233.

Returns

Q. Mr. M. Healy; A. Mr. G. W. Balfour, Feb. 2, 447; Q. Mr. M. Healy; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 6, 725.

Land Transfer Act, 1897

Paper Presented, Feb. 1, 235; Feb. 2, 408.

Land Values Taxation [Scotland] Bill

c. 1R. Feb. 6, 730.*

Land Valuation [Scotland] Act [1854] Amendment Bill

c. 1R. Feb. 2, 424.*

Lansdowne, Marquess of—Secretary of State for War

Army

Contemplated Military Measures, Feb. 5, 552.

Strengthening and Improving Organisation of the Regular and Auxiliary Forces, Government Proposals—Statement, Feb. 12, 1168, 1194.

Coal Supply for National Requirements, Feb. 5, 561.

Queen's Speech—The Address, Jan. 30, 39.

South African War

Boer Armaments, Strength of the Enemy and the Intelligence Department of War Office, etc., Jan. 30, 39; Feb. 1, 246.

Commands at the Front, Feb. 12, 1168.

Maps, Surveys, etc., Feb. 2, 406.

Spion Kop—Boer Treatment of British Wounded, Feb. 8, 900.

Telegrams to Soldiers in South Africa—Code words, Reduction of Cost, etc., Feb. 8, 899.

Volunteers, Recruiting—Colonel Edis and the Inspector-General of Auxiliary Forces, Feb. 5, 556.

Yeomanry, and the South African War—Chaplains, Suggested Appointment, Feb. 6, 687.

Delav in Transport to the Front, 689.

Latimer Road and Acton Railway Bill.

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1032.

1R. Feb. 12, 1206.*

Laurie, Lt.-Gen. J. W. [Pembroke, Haverfordwest]

Electoral Disabilities [Military Services] Bill, Extension to Army and Navy Forces, Feb. 6, 709.

South African War

Canadian Medical Contingent—Refusal by the War Office, Feb. 9, 1046.

Transport Ships, Meat on the "American," Feb. 2, 434.

Lawrence, Mr. W. F. [Liverpool, Abercromby]

Colonial Rum—Excise Duties, Feb. 13, 1365.

Lawson, Mr. J. G. [York, N.R., Thirsk]

Local Government [Ireland] Act [1898] Amendment Bill, 2R., Feb. 14, 1495, 1498.

Taxation of Ireland—Over Taxation, alleged, Feb. 9, 1081.

Lawson, Sir W. [Cumberland, Cockermouth]

South African War, Feb. 7, 883.

Lea, Sir T. [Londonderry, S.]

Williams, Emanuel, Case of, Feb. 6, 721.

Leasehold Enfranchisement [England and Wales] Bill

c. 1R. Feb. 2, 421.*

Lee Conservancy Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1032.

1R. Feb. 12, 1206.*

Lee-Enfield Rifle

Sighting—Statement [Mr. Brodrick], Feb. 1, 340.

Trials

Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 6, 710.

Leng, Sir J. [Dundee]

Liquor Licensing Laws Commission—Legislation, Feb. 6, 717.

Seamen—Unclaimed Wages of Deceased Seamen, Feb. 13, 1371.

Soldiers' Effects Fund—Crimean Soldiers' Widows, Feb. 8, 915.

South African War Relief Funds, Administration—Danger of Overlapping, etc., Feb. 1, 268.

Level Crossings

Long Eaton Level Crossing, Dangers of

Q. Sir W. Foster; A. Mr. Ritchie, Feb. 6, 719.

Licensed Premises [Hours of Sale] [Scotland] Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 9, 1064.

Licensing*See* Liquor Traffic and Liquor Licensing Laws.Lichfield, Earl of

Telegrams to Soldiers in South Africa—Code words, Reduction of cost, etc., Feb. 8, 898.

Lichfield Rifle Range

Progress of Construction, etc.

Q. Mr. Warner; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 1, 273.

Lifeboat Service

Royal National Lifeboat Institution—Telephonic Communication

Q. Sir C. Gull; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 5, 578.

Lifford County Court House

Action of the High Sheriff's

Qs. Mr. S. MacNeill; As. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 5, 588; Feb. 8, 935.

Light Railways Act, 1896

Orders Presented, Feb. 9, 1023, 1038.

Lighthouses

British Possessions Abroad, Dues and Expenditure, Account Presented, Jan. 30, 51, 67.

Inspection of Local Lighthouses—Reports Presented, Jan. 31, 158; Feb. 1, 235.

Lincoln, County of—Light Railway

Orders Presented, Feb. 9, 1023, 1038.

Lincoln Corporation [Tramways] Bill

l. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1162.

Liquor Licensing Laws Commission

Legislation

Q. Sir J. Leng; A. Sir M. W. Ridley, Feb. 6, 717.

Liquor Traffic and Liquor Licensing LawsBills, See their names.

Irish Whisky, Weak Whisky in Bond

Q. Mr. W. Johnston; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 13, 1373.

New Hebrides—Sale of Liquor to Natives

Q. Mr. Hogan; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 13, 1366.

Scotch Whisky—Distributing Samples

Q. Mr. J. Wilson; A. Mr. A. G. Murray, Feb. 13, 1369.

Liquor Traffic Local Veto Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 2, 423.

Liquor Traffic Local Veto [Scotland] Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 6, 729.

Liquor Traffic Local Veto [Wales] Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 6, 731.

Listowel Mails

Delays

Q. Mr. Flavin; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 12, 1244.

Liverpool Corporation Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1032.

1R.* Feb. 12, 1206.

Liverpool Overhead Railway Bill

l. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1164.

Llandrindod Wells Water Bill

Standing Order Complied with, Feb. 8, 901.

Llest Colliery Explosion

Report, Jan. 30, 47, 63.

Lloyd-George, Mr. D. [Carnarvon]

South African War—Policy of the Government, Uitlanders' Grievances, etc. (Vote of Censure) Feb. 6, 758.

LoansForeign Loans, See Names of Countries.

India, Loans raised in, Return, Jan. 30 51, 70.

Loan Societies

Abstract of Accounts, Feb. 2, 401, 408.

Local Authorities' Servants

Superannuation—Petitions for Alteration of Law, Jan. 31, 157; Feb. 1, 249; Feb. 5, 562; Feb. 8, 902; Feb. 9, 1040; Feb. 12, 1216.

Local Government Act, 1894

Petition for Alteration of Law, Jan. 31, 157.

Local Government Board

President—Rt. Hon. H. Chaplin.

Parliamentary Secretary—Mr. T. W. Russell.

Local Government (Ireland) Act*See* Ireland.Local Government (Ireland) Act (1898) Amendment Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 2, 413.

2R. Feb. 14, 1510.

Local Government (Scotland) Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 2, 412.

Local Government Rate (Ireland)

Allowances

Q. Mr. T. M. Healy; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 5, 586.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Local Taxation

Government Property (Exemption from Rates), See that Title.

Ground Rents (Taxation by Local Authorities), Petitions, Feb. 9, 1040.

Ground Values Taxation (Scotland)—Petitions for Alteration of Law, Feb. 7, 829.

Land Values Taxation (Scotland) Bill, See that Title.

Woodlands, Rating—Petitions, Jan. 31, 157; Feb. 2, 408; Feb. 8, 902.

Local Veto Bills

See Titles of Bills.

Lockwood, Lt.-Col. A. [Essex, Epping]

Army—Strengthening and improving Organisation of the Regular and Auxiliary Forces—Government Proposals, Feb. 12, 1305.

Education Department — Consultative Committee, Feb. 12, 1239.

London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway Bill

l. 1R. Feb. 12, 1164.*

London, Walthamstow, and Epping Forest Railway Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1033.

1R. Feb. 12, 1208.*

London County Council [Compulsory Purchase of Land] Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1033.

1R. Feb. 12, 1207.*

London County Council [General Powers] Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1033.

1R. Feb. 12, 1207.*

London County Council [Improvements] Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1033.

1R. Feb. 12, 1208.*

London County Council [Spitalfields Market] Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1033.

1R. Feb. 12, 1208.*

London Hydraulic Power Company Bill

l. 1R. Feb. 12, 1164.*

London Municipalities [Women's Disabilities Removal] Bill

c. 1R. Feb. 2, 414.*

London Scottish Volunteers

Grant towards Outfit

Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 6, 706.

London Sea Water Supply Bill

l. 1R. Feb. 12, 1164.*

London Telephone Exchange

Tariff and Regulations

Q. Mr. Provand; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 9, 1053.

London University

By-Election New Writ, Jan. 30, 54.

London Water [Purchase] Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1033.

1R. Feb. 12, 1208.*

London Water Supply

See Metropolitan Water Supply.

London Water [Welsh Supply] Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1033.

1R. Feb. 12, 1208.*

London and India Docks Joint Committee Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1032.

1R. Feb. 12, 1206.*

London and North-Western Railway Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1032.

1R. Feb. 12, 1206.*

London and North-Western Railway [Wales] Bill

c. 1R. Feb. 12, 1207.*

London and St. Katharine Docks and East and West India Dock Companies Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1033.

1R. Feb. 12, 1207.*

London and South-Western Railway Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1033.

1R. Feb. 12, 1207.*

Long, Rt. Hon. W. H.—President of Board of Agriculture [Liverpool, West Derby]

Foot and Mouth Disease

Importation of Cattle to Ireland, Feb. 6, 717.

Information as to Prevalence of Disease in Foreign Countries, Feb. 8, 927.

Outbreaks—Regulations, etc., Feb. 8, 928; Feb. 9, 1052, 1053.

Veterinary Advisers to the Board of Agriculture, Feb. 6, 718.

Long Eaton Level Crossing

Dangers of

Q. Sir W. Foster; A. Mr. Ritchie, Feb. 6, 719.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Longford

Granard Estate—Purchase of Holdings by Tenants, Action of the Land Commissioners, etc.

Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell ; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 13, 1376.

Lord Advocate for Scotland

Right Hon. A. G. Murray.

Lord Chancellor of Ireland

Lord Ashbourne.

Lord Chief Justice of England

Lord Russell of Killowen.

Lord High Chancellor

Earl of Halsbury.

Lord Lieutenant of Ireland

Earl Cadogan.

Lord President of the Council

Duke of Devonshire.

Lough, Mr. T. [Islington, W.]

Army—Strengthening and Improving Organisation of the Regular and Auxiliary Forces, Government Proposals, Feb. 12, 1423.

Business of the House, Feb. 8, 939.

“Parliamentary Debates”—Free Copies of Bound Volumes for Members, Feb. 8, 924.

Patriotic Fund, Application and Administration of, etc., Feb. 8, 970, 971.

Taxation of Ireland—Over Taxation, alleged, Feb. 9, 1073

Workmen's Trams—Alteration of Model Clause in Tramway Bills, Feb. 8, 920.

Lowestoft Railway Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1033.

1R. Feb. 12, 1208.*

Lowther, Right Hon. J. [Kent, Thanet]

Business of the House, Feb. 8, 939.

Financial Business—Precedence on Tuesdays, Feb. 12, 1251.

“Parliamentary Debates”—Free Copies of Bound Volumes, Feb. 8, 925.

Lowther, Right Hon. J. W.—Chairman of Committees [Cumberland, Penrith]

Irish Railways Amalgamation Bills—Origination in House of Lords, Feb. 6, 695.

Lubbock, Right Hon. Sir J.

New Peer, Jan. 30, 5.

Lunacy Bill

1. 1R. Feb. 5, 549.*

2R. Feb. 12, 1167.

Lunatic Asylums

Ireland—Grant in aid and Local Taxation Account

Q. Mr. Power ; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 13, 1376.

Lunatic Asylums—cont.

Midlothian and Peebles District Lunacy Board, General Rules, Present of, Jan. 30, 53, 69.

Visitors, Number of Visits made, etc., Report, Jan. 30, 50, 70.

Luxemburg, Grand Duchy of Trade Marks Protection, Declaration, Feb. 13, 1354, 1357.

Lyell, Sir L. [Orkney and Shetland]

Highlands of Scotland—Deer Forests, Crofters, and Cottars' Grievances, etc., Feb. 8, 980.

Macartney, Mr. W. E.—Secretary to the Admiralty [Antrim, S.]Transport Service

Farewells on Transports, Feb. 2, 437.

Horses on Transports—Returns, Feb. 2, 437.

Meat on the “American,” Feb. 2, 435.

Provisions on “Pavonia,” Feb. 2, 436.

Macdona, Mr. J. C. [Southwark, Rotherhithe]

Asia—German and Russian Railway Construction, Feb. 13, 1367.

India—Railway Survey of 1876, Feb. 13, 1368.

MacNeill, Mr. Swift [Donegal, S.]

Address in Answer to Queen's Speech—Facilities for Discussion of Amendments, Feb. 1, 258.

Business of the House, Financial Business—Precedence on Tuesdays, Feb. 12, 1250.

Company Bill—Ministers of the Crown and Directorships of Companies, Feb. 13, 1379.

Engineers, Royal, Department—High Charges for Building Work, alleged, Inquiry into Administration, Feb. 12, 1230.

Gold Coast Railways—Cape Coast to Axim, etc., Feb. 8, 918.

Government Bills—Ten Minute Rule, Feb. 13, 1380, 1381.

Government Clerical Establishments Vacancies—Sons and Daughters of Army and Navy Officers, Feb. 8, 916.

Hawksley Correspondence—Indépendance Belge Publication, Feb. 1, 259.

Jamaica Legislative Council—Nominated and Elected Members, Action of the Governor, etc., Feb. 6, 715.

“Jelunga,” Transport Ship—Condition of Women and Children on, Feb. 5, 574.

Lifford County Court House—Action of the High Sheriff, Feb. 5, 588 ; Feb. 8, 935.

Local Government (Ireland) Act (1898) Amendment Bill, 2R., Feb. 14, 1503, 1508, 1510.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

MacNeill, Mr. Swift—cont.

Militia, Distribution of Regiments—Irish Regiments serving in Great Britain, etc., Feb. 2, 441.

Milner's, Sir A., Staff—Appointment of Mr. F. H. Wilson, Feb. 9, 1044.

Regimental Officers' Quarters, Wives of Officers and the Surrender of Quarters, Feb. 2, 439.

Religious Disabilities in Ireland—Lord Justices, Feb. 5, 585.

Russian Loan to Persia—Communication from Persian Government, Feb. 9, 1051.

South African War

Butler, Sir W.—Views and Proceedings, Resignation, etc., Despatches relating to, Feb. 1, 255; Feb. 6, 704.

Egyptian Guns and Stores, Feb. 8, 905.

Greene, Mr. Conyngham, and Mr. Chamberlain, Interview between, Feb. 2, 429.

News of the War—Time of Publication at the War Office, Feb. 2, 438.

Sumatra—Treatment of Invalid Soldiers, Feb. 9, 1047.

Volunteer Officers' Commissions, Sale by Agency, etc., Feb. 12, 1231.

Wolseley, Lord, and Intelligence Department—Boer Strength, Feb. 1, 265.

Stock Exchange—Alleged Outrage by Transvaal War Enthusiast, Feb. 1, 278.

Taxation of Ireland—Over Taxation, alleged, Feb. 9, 1083.

War Office Inquiry Committee of 1898—Recommendations of Committee, Feb. 12, 1229.

McCartan, Mr. M. [Down, S.]

Belfast Union—Charge against an Employee, Misappropriation of Food, Feb. 5, 587.

M'Crae, Mr. G. [Edinburgh, E.]

Volunteer Officers' Commissions, etc.—Conditions of Employment on Foreign Service, Feb. 1, 274; Feb. 8, 912.

M'Lachlan, John—

Commandeered by the Enemy, Shot for refusing to fight, alleged

Qs. Col. Pryce-Jones, Mr. B. Roberts, Col. Milward; As. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 5, 568; Q. Mr. B. Roberts; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 8, 906.

M'Leod, Mr. J. [Sutherland]

Highlands of Scotland—Deer Forests, Crofters' and Cotters' Grievances, etc., Feb. 8, 985.

Maddison, Mr. F. [Sheffield, Brightside]

Army—Strengthening and Improving Organisation of the Regular and Auxiliary Forces, Government Proposals, Feb. 12, 1308.

Welsh Railway Dispute, Feb. 5, 582.

Mafeking

See South African War.

Magersfontein Engagement

See South African War.

Magistrates and Justices of the Peace

Removal of Justices of the Peace, Ireland Q. Mr. Mandeville; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 5, 589.

Maidenhead Gas Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1033.

1R. Feb. 12, 1209.*

Mail Service

American Mails, Time occupied in Transit—Return ordered [Sir J. Leng], Feb. 13, 1357.

Australian Mail Steamers—Fremantle as Port of Call

Q. Mr. Hogan; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 6, 726.

Irish Questions

Galway Mails—Delivery of Letters in Carrabrown

Q. Mr. Pinkerton; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 12, 1245.

Listowel Mails, Delay

Q. Mr. Flavin; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 12, 1244.

Sneem Mails, Late Delivery of

Q. Mr. Flavin; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 9, 1053.

Mail Steamers

Right of Search—Case of the Herzog, etc., See Contraband of War.

Malcolm, Mr. J. [Suffolk, Stowmarket]

South African War and the Government (Vote of Censure), Feb. 5, 635.

Malta

Insanitary Condition of Barracks, etc.

Q. Mr. Stevenson; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 13, 1365.

Transport Service—Golconda, Unsatisfactory Condition of Boat, alleged

Q. Captain Norton; A. Mr. Goschen, Feb. 12, 1231.

Manchester

Williams, Emanuel, Case of

Q. Sir J. Leese; A. Sir R. Webster, Feb. 6, 721.

Manchester City Railway Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1034.

Order discharged, Feb. 12, 1216.

Petition for Bill ordered to be withdrawn, Feb. 12, 1216.

Manchester Corporation Tramways Bill

1. 1R. Feb. 12, 1162.*

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Manchester and Liverpool Electric Express Railway Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1034.
1R. Feb. 12*, 1209.

Manchester Ship Canal Bill

1. 1R. Feb. 12*, 1164.

Mandeville, Mr. F. [Tipperary, S.]

Irish Brigade with the Boers—Alleged Murder of wounded Prisoner, Feb. 12, 1224.

Removal of Justices of the Peace, Feb. 5, 589.

Manhood Suffrage (Ireland) Bill

c. 1R. Feb. 2*, 419.

Manuscripts

Historical Manuscripts Commission — Calendar of House of Lords Manuscripts Presented, Feb. 5, 549.

Maps, Surveys, etc.

See South African War.

Margate Corporation Bill

1. 1R. Feb. 12*, 1162.

Margate Pier and Harbour Bill

1. 1R. Feb. 12*, 1164.

Marine Insurance Bill

Q. Mr. Warr; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 12, 1248.

Marines, Royal

Separation Allowance

Q. Admiral Field; A. Mr. Goschen, Feb. 8, 915.

Market Weighton Drainage and Navigation Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1034.
1R. Feb. 12*, 1209.

Marriages

Colonial Marriages (Deceased Wife's Sister) Bill, See that Title.

Mason University College, Birmingham

See Birmingham University

Matches—Phosphorus Poisoning

Special Rules, Presented, Jan. 30, 52, 66.

Mauritius

Garrison—Black Battalion, Composition of
Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 1, 271.

Mauritius and Rodrigues

Report Presented, Jan. 30, 46, 63.

Mauser Pistol

Imperial Light Horse Equipment

Q. Mr. Hedderwick; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 5, 571.

Maxwell, Rt. Hon. Sir H. [Wigton]

Army — Strengthening and Improving Organisation of the Regular and Auxiliary Forces, Government Proposals, Feb. 12, 1403.

Mayo

South Mayo Division—New Writ, Feb. 6, 691.

Meat

Transport Ships, See Transport Service.

Medals

Sierra Leone Campaign Medals—Natives guilty of unlawful Acts

Q. Mr. Hedderwick; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 9, 1050.

Medical Service in South Africa

See South African War.

Members

New Writs and New Members Sworn, See those Titles.

Mendl, Mr. S. F. [Plymouth]

South African War and the Government (Vote of Censure), Feb. 1, 361.

Menstone Water (Transfer) Bill

1. 1R. Feb. 12*, 1162.

Merchant Cruisers

Subsidised Cruisers—Return

Q. Mr. Bainbridge; A. Mr. Goschen, Feb. 6, 712.

Merchant Seamen

See Seamen.

Merchant Shipping

Boy Sailor Scheme and the Royal Naval Reserve, Number of Boys enrolled
Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Mr. Ritchie, Feb. 12, 1238.

Crew Accommodation

Q. Mr. Havelock Wilson; A. Mr. Ritchie, Feb. 12, 1238.

Load Line—Extending Provisions of Act to India, Order in Council presented, Feb. 1, 234.

Naval Expenditure and Mercantile Marine, Return Ordered, Feb. 8, 903.

Pilotage Byelaws—Orders in Council Presented, Feb. 1, 234.

Return—Trade and Navigation Presented, Feb. 1, 253.

Seamen, See that Title.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Merchant Shipping Act, 1894Orders in Council Presented, Feb. 1, 234.Merchant Shipping (Liability of Ship-owners) Billc. 1R.* Feb. 2, 409.Mersey Docks and Harbour Board Billl. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1162.Mersey Railway Billl. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1165.Metal Market

Government Purchase—Discontinuance of Purchase through Broker

Qs. Mr. Warner; As. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 2, 440; Feb. 5, 583.Meteorological CouncilReport, Jan. 30, 45, 62.Methuen, Lord

Commands at the Front

Os. Lord Bateman, Marquess of Lansdowne, Feb. 12, 1166.Metropolitan District Railway Billc. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1034.1R.* Feb. 12, 1209.Metropolitan PoliceHouses of Parliament, Approaches to, etc.
—Sessional Order, Jan. 30, 60.Metropolitan Police Provisional Order Billc. 1R.* Feb. 8, 902.Metropolitan Water Companies Billc. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1034.1R.* Feb. 12, 1209.Metropolitan Water Supply

Royal Commission

Minutes of Evidence, Jan. 30, 49, 65.Report, Jan. 30, 48, 63.Mexborough, EarlRepresentative Peers for Ireland, Right to Vote Established, Feb. 1, 233; Feb. 9, 1017, 1353.MexicoTrade Report, Jan. 30, 47.Meysey-Thompson, Sir H. [Stafford, Hands-worth]South African War—Policy of the Government (Vote of Censure), Feb. 2, 495.Mid-Kent Water Billc. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1034.1R.* Feb. 12, 1209.Midland Great Western Railway of Ireland Billl. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1165.Midland Railway Billc. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1034.1R.* Feb. 12, 1210.Midlothian, &c., District Lunacy BoardRules Presented, Jan. 30, 53, 69.Midwives Billc. 1R.* Feb. 2, 410.Milford Docks Billl. 1R.* Feb. 13, 1353.Military "Authorities"Q. Sir J. Colomb; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 9, 1045

Artillery Changes in 1887—Reduction of Royal Horse Artillery

Q. Sir J. Colomb; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 13, 1362.Military Lands Provisional Order Billc. 1R.* Feb. 9, 038.Military Proposal of the Government

See Army—Strengthening and Improving Organisation of Regular and Auxiliary Forces.

Military Savings Banks

See Savings Banks.

Military Systems of Continental PowersSalisbury, Marquess of, on, Jan. 30, 31.Military System in Switzerland

Report

Q. Mr. Seely; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 12, 1362.Militia

Bonuses to Officers—Ex-Army Officers' Grievances

Q. Capt. Norton; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 2, 440.Bounties—Variety in payment of, Statement (Marquess of Lansdowne) Feb. 12, 1176.

Embodiment of the whole of the Militia, etc.—Home Defence

O. Earl of Kimberley, Jan. 30, 17;Q. Mr. Warner; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 1, 272.Statements (Marquess of Lansdowne), Feb. 12, 1175 (Mr. Wyndham) 1274.Irish Militia

Forces serving in Ireland

Q. Mr. Shree; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 2, 442.

Irish Regiments serving in Great Britain

Q. Mr. S. MacNeill; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 2, 441.

See also Subheading South African War.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Militia—cont.

Officers and Retired Pay
Q. Capt. Norton; A. Mr. Wyndham,
Feb. 1, 273.

Pay—Placing on Scale of Regulars
Statement (Mr. Wyndham), Feb. 12, 1266.

Recruiting, Progress in
Statement (Mr. Wyndham), Feb. 12, 1262.

Reserve—Messing Allowances, etc.
Statement (Marquess of Lansdowne),
Feb. 12, 1177.

South African War

Equipment of first Regiment leaving for the Cape
Q. Sir E. T. Gourley; A. Mr.
Wyndham, Feb. 1, 273.

Irish Militia

Compulsory Volunteering
Q. Mr. Field; A. Mr. Wyndham,
Feb. 8, 910.
Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr.
Wyndham, Feb. 13, 1361.

Separation Allowance
Q. Mr. Hammond; A. Mr.
Wyndham, Feb. 9, 1048;
Qs. Mr. Flavin; As. Mr.
J. P. Williams, Feb. 13, 1360.

Number of Irish, English, and Scotch Regiments Volunteering for the Front—Returns
Q. Mr. T. M. Healy; A. Mr.
Wyndham, Feb. 2, 433.

Strengthening and Improving Organisation of the Auxiliary Forces

Statements (Marquess of Lansdowne),
Feb. 12, 1175; (Mr. Wyndham),
1261—Debate resumed, Feb. 13, 1382.

[For details of Scheme, see their Sub-headings.]

Training

Statement (Mr. Wyndham), Feb. 12, 1266.

Wellington, Duke of, and the Militia —Battle of Waterloo fought by Militiamen
O. Earl Nelson, 12 Feb., 1189.

Milner, Sir A.

See South African War.

Milward, Colonel [Warwick, Stratford-upon-Avon]

Army—Strengthening and Improving
Organisation of the Regular and Auxiliary Forces, Government proposals, Feb. 12, 1448.

South African War.

British Subjects Commandeered by
the Enemy—Shooting of J.
M'Lachlan for refusing to fight,
alleged, Feb. 5, 568.

Milward, Colonel—cont.South African War—cont.

Guns—Quick-firing Guns, etc., Jan. 31, 175.

Policy of the Government (Vote of Censure), Jan. 31, 172.

Volunteer Officers' Commissions, Feb. 13, 1362.

Mines

Coal Mines Regulation Bill, See that Title.

Llest Colliery Explosion, Reports, Jan. 30, 47, 63.

Transvaal Gold Mines—Sir A. Milner's Proclamation, See South African War
—Property of the Republics.

Mines [Eight Hours] Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 2, 410
Petitions, Feb. 14, 1465.

Mints

Australian Mint—Coinage of Silver.
Q. Mr. Hogan; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 13, 1374

"Mohegan," Wreck

Passenger Vessels Regulations.
Q. Sir C. Gull; A. Mr. Ritchie, Feb. 6, 718.

Monaghan

Peace Preservation Act—County Council
Resolution, etc.
Q. Mr. Daly; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 12, 1241.

Money Orders

Merchant Seamen, Statement Presented,
Jan. 30, 51, 67.

United States and British Honduras—
Convention, Jan. 30, 45, 64.

Monkswell, Lord

Army—Government Military Proposals,
Feb. 12, 1186.

Boer Armaments and Strength of the Enemy, and the Intelligence Department of the War Office, etc., Feb. 1, 244.

Durham, Dean of, and Mr. Justice Grant-
ham, Feb. 1, 240.

Volunteers and Yeomanry—Recruiting,
Feb. 5, 560.

Moore, Mr. W. [Antrim, North]

Land (Ireland) Acts, Administration and Working of, Feb. 9, 1130.

Parcel Post to Ireland—Stranraer and
Portadown Route, Feb. 9, 1054.

Piers and Harbours, Ireland—Expenditure
on, Return, Feb. 9, 1054.

South African War, Feb. 7, 875.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Monson, Sir E.

Temporary Ab-sence from Paris
Q. Mr. W. Redmond; A. Mr. A. J.
Balfour, Feb. 12, 1233.

Montagu, Mr. S. [Hants, New Forest]

Delagoa Bay—Transvaal Consul, Removal of Mr. Pott, etc., Feb. 6, 706.

Montgomery, County of Charities—Return Ordered, Feb. 14, 1466.

Morecambe Urban District Council Gas Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1034.

1R.* Feb. 12, 1210.

Morgan, Mr. J. L. [Carmarthen, West]

Afghanistan—Subsidy Granted to the Ameer

Defence—Diversion of Subsidy, Feb. 2, 444.

Detailed Account of Expenditure,
Feb. 2, 444.

South African War

Censorship of Outgoing Telegrams
Feb. 2, 437.

Natal, Defence of—Plan of Campaign,
Feb. 2, 432.

Newcastle Yeomanry Equipment,
Feb. 2, 432.

Morley Corporation Bill

1. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1162.

Motherwell Water Bill

1. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1163.

Motherwell and Bellshill Railway Bill

1. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1163.

Mountain Ash Water Bill

1. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1163.

Mountain Batteries

Buller's, Gen., Campaign in South Africa
—Number of Batteries and Equipment

Q. Mr. Hedderwick; A. Mr. Wynd-
ham, Feb. 2, 432.

Muirkirk, Mauchline and Dalmellington Railways (Abandonment) Bill

1. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1165.

Mules

Transport of, to South Africa—Names of Transports, Conditions of Shipment,
etc.

Q. Sir E. Gourley; A. Mr. Goschen,
Feb. 12, 1220.

Municipal Corporations

Charters of Incorporation, Jan. 30, 52, 66.

Land Sales by

Q. Sir W. Foster; A. Mr. Chaplin,
Feb. 12, 1236.

Murnaghan, Mr. G. [Tyrone, Mid]

Ogilby Estate, County Tyrone, Sale of,
Feb. 8, 931.

Murray, Col. C. W. [Bath]

Education Department Reorganisation—Departmental Committee, Terms of Reference, etc., Feb. 5, 581.

Rifle Ranges—Number of Ranges closed, and new Ranges opened, etc., Feb. 12, 1229.

Somersetshire Volunteers—Failure to form Company, Number of Men unable to pass Test, Feb. 5, 571.

Murray, Mr. J. [Coventry]

Army—Strengthening and improving
Organisation of the Regular and Auxiliary Forces, Government proposals, Feb. 12, 1308.

Murray, Rt. Hon. A. G.—Lord Advocate
[Buteshire]

Congested Districts Relief (Scotland) Act
—Balance of Money granted, Feb. 5, 582.

Fishery Cruisers—Completion of New Cruisers, Feb. 13, 1370.

Highlands of Scotland—Deer Forests,
Crofters' and Cottars' Grievances, etc.,
Feb. 8, 991.

Orphan Homes—Children refused Public Education, Feb. 8, 923.

Whisky Samples—Distribution among Dwelling Houses, Feb. 13, 1369.

Muzzling Order

Cork

Q. Mr. M. Healy; A. Mr. Plunkett,
Feb. 9, 1059.

Natal

Defence of Natal, etc., etc., See South African War.

National Gallery

Report Presented, Feb. 12, 1217.

National Old Age Pensions

Petition, Feb. 13, 1357.

National School Teachers, Ireland

Board of Agriculture—£78,000 handed over to Recouping

Q. Mr. Gibney; A. Mr. Atkinson,
Feb. 8, 936; Q. Mr. A. O'Connor;
A. Mr. Plunkett, Feb. 13, 1379.

Warden Estate and Teacher's Residence
Site

Q. Mr. Flavin; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb.
9, 1056.

National Telephone Company

Exchange Areas, Copy Presented, Feb. 12, 1217.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14

Natu Brothers

Release, etc.

Q. Sir W. Wedderburn; A. Lord G. Hamilton, Feb. 8, 1920.NavyFirst Lord—Rt. Hon. G. J. Goschen.Civil Lord—Mr. Austin Chamberlain.

Boy Sailor Scheme and the Royal Naval Scheme, Number of Boys Enrolled

Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Mr. Ritchie, *Feb. 12, 1928.Coal Supply

Cardiff Firm supplying 400,000 tons to Foreign Government, alleged

Q. Earl of Dunraven; A. Marquess of Lansdowne, Feb. 5, 1961; Q. General Russell; A. Mr. Goschen, *Feb. 5, 1975.Emergency ContractsQs. Mr. D. A. Thomas; As. Mr. Goschen, Feb. 6, 1912; Feb. 8, 1916.

Cruisers—Subsidised Cruisers, Return

Q. Mr. Bainbridge; A. Mr. Goschen, Feb. 6, 1912.

Efficiency—Naval Preparation Abroad, etc.

O. Earl of Kimberley, *Jan. 30, 18.*Expenditure—Naval Expenditure and Mercantile Marine, Return Ordered [Sir J. Colomb], Feb. 8, 1903.

Fishery Cruisers, Trawling in Irish Waters

Q. Mr. Pfrench; A. Mr. Goschen, Feb. 9, 1905.

Guns—Manufacture and Supply of

O. Sir C. Dilke, *Feb. 12, 1928.*Home Defence—Fleet v. the ArmyDilke, Sir C., on the Government Military Proposals, *Feb. 12, 1922.*Marines, *See that Title.*Patriotic Fund, Application and Administration of—Amendment to the Address [Mr. Kearley], Feb. 8, 1911.

"Revenge," H.M.S., Explosion on, Cause of, etc.

Q. Admiral Field; A. Mr. Goschen, Feb. 8, 1917.

Russell "Shooting Director" Invention

Qs. Sir J. Fergusson; As. Mr. J. P. Williams, Mr. Goschen, *Feb. 12, 1922.*Transport Service, See that Title.

"Victoria and Albert" Yacht, Capsizing, cause of

Qs. Sir E. Gourley, Mr. W. Allan A. Mr. G. J. Goschen, Feb. 1, 1929.

War Despatches—Graspan and Colenso Battles

Q. Commander Young; A. Mr. Goschen, *Feb. 5, 1975.Navy—cont.

War Ships—Precautions against Fire, Wood Fittings, etc.

Q. Mr. Bond; A. Mr. Goschen, *Feb. 12, 1927.Navy EstimatesEstimates presented, with Explanation of Differences, Feb. 9, 1941.Neath Harbour BillL. 1R. *Feb. 12, 1963.Nelson, Earl,Militia—Government Military Measures, *Feb. 12, 1989.Netley Hospital

Hours of Duty of Non-Commissioned Officers and Men

Q. Capt. Norton; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, *Feb. 14, 1928.New Hebrides

Sale of Spirits and Fire-Arms to Natives

Q. Mr. Hogan; A. Mr. Brodrick, *Feb. 13, 1966.New Members SwornDickinson, Mr. R. E., for Somerset County [Wells Division], *Jan. 30, 54.*Faber, Mr., for the Borough of York, *Feb. 12, 1949.*Guthrie, Mr. W. M., for Tower Hamlets [Bow and Bromley Division], *Jan. 30, 54.*Vincent, Sir E., for Exeter Borough, *Jan. 30, 54.*Wason, Mr. E., for Clackmannan and Kinross, *Jan. 30, 54.New PeersAvebury of Avebury, Baron, *Jan. 30, 5.*Northcote of Exeter, *Jan. 30, 5.*Wynford, Lord, Feb. 12, 1961.New Russia Company BillL. 1R. *Feb. 12, 1965.New WritsArmagh, Mid, *Jan. 30, 54.*Clackmannan and Kinross, *Jan. 30, 54.*Lancaster, County of [Rossendale], *Jan. 31, 190.*London University, *Jan. 30, 54.*Mayo, South Mayo Division, *Feb. 6, 691.*Nottinghamshire [Newark Division], *Feb. 5, 564.*Plymouth, Feb. 12, 1918.

Jan. 30 - Feb. 14.

New Writs—cont.

Somerset, County of [Wells Division],

*Jan. 30, 54.*York Borough, *Jan. 30, 54.NewarkNew Writ, Feb. 5, 564.Newcastle-upon-Tyne Electric Supply Billc. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1034.1R. Feb. 12, 1210.Newcastle Yeomanry

Equipment

*Q. Mr. L. Morgan; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 2, 432.Newcastle West

Labourers' Cottages Scheme

*Q. Mr. Austin; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 8, 937.Newfoundland

Treaty Shore Question — Negotiations with France

Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 2, 443.Newport Corporation Bill1. 1R. Feb. 12, 1163.Newport [Monmouthshire] Gas Bill1. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1165.Newry, Keady, and Tynan Light Railway BillPetition referred to Standing Orders, *Feb. 9, 1038.*Standing Orders not complied with, *Feb. 9, 1022, 1027.Newspapers

Continental Press—Attacks on Great Britain—Paper "Warfare"

Os. Earl of Kimberley, Jan. 30, 13; Earl of Rosebery, Jan. 30, 35.

Non-Delivery to Soldiers at the Front, alleged.

*Q. Mr. Coghill; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 6, 709.Newsvendors

Crying of War News in the Streets—Nuisance.

Q. Mr. H. S. Foster; A. Sir M. W. Ridley, Feb. 2, 440.Newtown and Llanllwchairn Urban District Gas Bill1. 1R. Feb. 12, 1163.Nicaragua Canal

Convention

Clayton-Bulwer Treaty Rights

*Q. Mr. Duncombe; A. Mr. Brod- rick, Feb. 8, 922.*Convention between Her Majesty's Government and the United States, Presented, *Feb. 7, 830; Feb. 8, 897.NigeriaForeign Jurisdictions Act—Order in Council Presented, *Feb. 1, 234.Noble, Sir A.

Offer of Guns for South Africa, etc.

*Q. Mr. J. A. Pease; A. Mr. Wyn- ham, Feb. 8, 913.Norfolk

Foot and Mouth Diseases Outbreak, Regulations, etc.

Qs. Col. Gunter, Mr. Channing, Sir M. Hoare; As. Mr. Long, Feb. 8, 927; Q. Mr. Stevenson; A. Mr. Long, Feb. 9, 1052; Os. Lord Burghclere, Duke of Devonshire, Feb. 13, 1354; Q. Mr. F. W. Wilson; A. Mr. Akers Douglas, Feb. 13, 1371.North BorneoSee Borneo.North British Railway Bill1. 1R. Feb. 12, 1165.North-Eastern Railway Bill1. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1165.North-Eastern Railway (Steam Vessels) Bill1. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1165.North Metropolitan Electric Power Supply Billc. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1034.1R.* Feb. 12, 1210.North Metropolitan Railway and Canal Company Billc. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1034.1R.* Feb. 12, 1210.North Warwickshire Water Billc. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1035.1R.* Feb. 12, 1211.Northcote of Exeter, BaronNew Peer, *Jan. 30, 5.Northumberland, County ofPolling Districts, County Council Order, Feb. 9, 1022, 1041.

South African War Volunteers

Equipment—Application to War Office to Equip Regiment with Maxim Guns, alleged

Q. Mr. Bainbridge; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 6, 706.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Northumberland, County of—cont.South African War Volunteers—cont.

Offer of Battery with Men by Messrs. Armstrong and the County of Northumberland

Q. Mr. J. A. Pease; A. Mr. Wyndham, *Feb. 8, 913.Norton, Capt. C. W. [Newington, West]Army—Strengthening and improving Organisation of the Regular and Auxiliary Forces—Government Proposals, Feb. 12, 1293.Golconda, Unsatisfactory Condition of, alleged, Feb. 12, 1231.

Militia

Bonuses—Ex-Army Officers' Grievances, *Feb. 2, 440.*Officers and Retired Pay, *Feb. 1, 273.*Netley Hospital—Hours of Duty of Non-commissioned Officers and Men, *Feb. 12, 1228.*Patriotic Fund, Application and Administration of, Feb. 8, 963.

South African War

Policy of the Government, etc. [Vote of Censure], *Feb. 6, 743.*Promotion from the Ranks, *Feb. 1, 272.*Spion Kop—Royal Engineers, Delay in sending forward, alleged, *Feb. 13, 1359.*War Office—Reorganisation Committee Report, *Feb. 13, 1363.Notting Hill Corporation Billc. Ordered, *Feb. 9, 1035.1R. *Feb. 12, 1211.Nussey, Mr. [Pontefract]Wire Cutters for Troops in South Africa, *Feb. 1, 264.O'Brien, Mr. P. [Kilkenny]Judges, Ireland—Religious Disabilities, Feb. 5, 585.

South African War

Fenian Prisoners at Mafeking, *Feb. 12, 1224; Feb. 13, 1358.*Horses, Contracts for, *Feb. 9, 1048.*Militia—Declaration of Men, Method of taking, *Feb. 13, 1361.*Volunteers—Formation of Irish Corps, *Feb. 5, 564.*Waterford and Limerick Railway—Dismissal of employes, Feb. 5, 583.Occupying Tenants' Enfranchisement Billc. 1R *Feb. 2, 420.O'Connor, Mr. A. [Donegal, E.]Board of Agriculture—Provision for Re-payment to National School Teachers, etc., of the £78,000, *Feb. 13, 1379.O'Connor, Mr. T. P. [Liverpool, Scotland]Land (Ireland) Acts, Administration and working of, *Feb. 9, 1140.Ogilby Estate, Co. Tyrone

Sale of

Q. Mr. Murnaghan; A. Mr. Atkinson, *Feb. 8, 931.Oldham

Telegraphic Delays—Complaint

Q. Mr. Runciman; A. Mr. Hanbury, *Feb. 4, 722.Oldham Corporation Billc. Ordered, *Feb. 9, 1035.1R. *Feb. 12, 1211.Old Age InsuranceGermany—Report, *Jan. 30, 47.Old Age PensionsDepartmental Committee, Report Presented, *Feb. 9, 1041; Feb. 12, 1165.*National Old Age Pensions, Petition, Feb. 13, 1357.

Number of Persons fulfilling Conditions for receiving Old Age Pensions, etc.

Q. Sir J. Rankin; A. Mr. Chaplin, Feb. 12, 1236.

Relief of Sufferers by the War

Q. Sir J. Colomb; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 12, 1220.Old Age Pensions Billc. 1R. Feb. 2, 415.Old Age Provident Pensions Billc. 1R. *Feb. 2, 426.Omagh Estate, Co. Tyrone

Sale of

Q. Mr. Murnaghan; A. Mr. Atkinson, *Feb. 8, 931.O'Malley, Mr. W. [Galway, Connemara]Galway Postal Service Complaints, *Feb. 6, 722.*Land (Ireland) Acts, Administration and Working of, *Feb. 9, 1147.Orange Free State

Attitude of, in 1885—Sir Charles Warren's Expedition and Sir John Brand

Q. Dr. Clark; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 6, 703.

British Subjects commandeered by the Enemy, &c.

See South African War.

Joining the Transvaal against Great Britain

Q. Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, Jan. 30, 91; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 102; Sir C. Dilke, Feb. 1, 302; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 302.

Jan. 30 Feb. 14.

Ordnance Survey

Staff—Scheme of Pensions for Temporary Civil Assistants, etc.
Q. Sir B. Simeon; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 8, 926.

Orphan Homes, Scotland

Children refused Public Education
Q. Mr. C. Corbett; A. Mr. A. G. Murray, Feb. 8, 923.

Osman Digna

Treatment of
Q. Mr. W. Redmond; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 12, 1234.

Ossett Corporation Gas Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1035.
1R. Feb. 12, 1211.*

Ossett Gas Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1035.
1R. Feb. 12, 1211.*

Otley Urban District Council Water Bill

1. 1R. Feb. 12, 1163.*

Outdoor Provident Relief Bill

c. 1R. Feb. 2, 426.*

Outdoor Relief (Friendly Societies) Bill

c. 1R. Feb. 2, 413.*

Outdoor Relief (Friendly Societies) (No. 2) Bill

c. 1R. Feb. 2, 418.*
2R., Feb. 12, 1464.

Outlawries Bill

c. 1R. Jan. 30, 61.*

Owners' Site Values

Petition for Alteration of Law. Feb. 1, 249.

Pacific Cable Scheme

Correspondence Presented Jan. 30, 49, 67.
 Delay in Proceedings
Q. Mr. Hogan; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 1, 281.

Paignton Urban District Water Bill

1. 1R. Feb. 12, 1163.*

Palgrave, Sir R. D. F.

Resignation—Letter to the Speaker, Jan. 30, 70.

Parcel Post

Egypt, Agreement with, Jan. 30, 48, 63.
 Great Britain and the United States
Q. Mr. H. Heaton; A. Mr. Hanbury,
Feb. 1, 287.
 Italy — Convention with, Additional Articles presented, Jan. 30, 45, 64.
 Route—Stranraer and Portadown
Q. Mr. Moore; A. Mr. Hanbury,
Feb. 9, 1034.

Paris, Declaration of

Queen's Signature—Draft of Declaration,
 etc.
Q. Mr. G. Bowles; A. Mr. Brod-
 rick, Feb. 2, 443.

Parliament

Opening, Jan. 30.
 Queen's Speech, See that Title.
See also Titles House of Commons, and
 House of Lords.

Parliamentary Constituencies

Electors, Number of—Address for Return,
Jan. 31, 160.

"Parliamentary Debates"

Bound Volumes — Free Copies for Members
Qs. Mr. Lough, Mr. J. Lowther; A.
 Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 8, 924.

Parliamentary Elections

Members returned for two or more Constituencies — Sessional Order, Jan. 30, 54.

New Writs, See that Title.

Peers Interference, See Peers.

Registration of Electors Bill, See that Title.

Parliamentary Franchise [Extension to Women] Bill

c. 1R. Feb. 2, 418.*

Passenger Vessels Regulations

Wreck of the "Mohegan"
Q. Sir C. Gull; A. Mr. Ritchie, Feb.
6, 718.

Patriotic Fund

Administration
Q. Sir J. Leng; A. Mr. Wyndham,
Feb. 1, 268.

Application and Administration of Amendment to the Address (Mr Kearley), Feb. 9, 941.

Pauper Children

Boarding-out, etc.—Irish Pauper Children
Q. Mr. Daly; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb.
8, 932.

Paupers, Ireland

Deportation of Paupers
 Amendment to the Address (Mr. Flavin,
Feb. 9, 1153.

City of Dublin Grievance

Q. Mr. Field; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb.
8, 724.

"Pavonia"—Transport Ship

Provisions
Q. Capt. Phillpotts; A. Mr. Macarney, Feb. 2, 436.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Peace Conference

South African War—Arbitration

Q. Mr. Flynn; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour,
*Feb. 2, 426.Peace Preservation (Ireland) Act

Monaghan County Council Resolution, etc.

Q. Mr. Daly; A. Mr. Atkinson,
*Feb. 12, 1241.Pease, Mr. A. E. [Yorkshire, Cleveland]Enteric Fever, Inoculation against, *Feb. 1, 265.Pease, Mr. H. P. [Darlington]Queen's Speech—The Address, *Jan. 30, 76.*South African War, *Jan. 30, 79.Pease, Mr. J. A. [Northumberland, Tyneside]South African War—Messrs. Armstrong's, and the County of Northumberland Offer, *Feb. 8, 913.Peers

New Peers

Avebury of Avebury, Baron, *Jan. 30, 5.*Northcote of Exeter, Baron, *Jan. 30, 5.*Wynford, Lord, *Feb. 12, 1161.*Parliamentary Elections—Sessional Order,
*Jan. 30, 55.*Representative Peers, See that Title.

Sat First

Farrer, Lord, after the Death of his Father, *Jan. 30, 5.*Vivian, Lord, after the Death of his Father, *Feb. 8, 897.Pembroke College, OxfordStatute Presented, *Jan. 30, 49, 68.Pen Trade

Inspector's Report

Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Sir M. W. Ridley,
*Feb. 18, 1368.Penal Servitude ActsConditional Licences granted, Jan. 30, 52,
*65; Feb. 5, 549.PensionsSuperannuation, *See that Title.Persia

German Railway Construction

Q. Mr. Maclean; A. Mr. Brodrick,
Feb. 13, 1367.

Russian Concessions in Northern Persia

Qs. Mr. Drage, Mr. G. Bowles; As.
Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 12, 1234; Q.
Mr. Maclean; A. Mr. Brodrick,
*Feb. 13, 1367.Persia—cont.

Russian Loan

Communication from Persian Govern-mentQ. Mr. S. MacNeill; A. Mr.
Brodrick Feb. 9, 1051.

Conditions of Loan, etc.

Q. Mr. Yerburgh; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 6, 716; Q. Sir M.
Bhownaggee; A. Mr. Brodrick, *Feb. 8, 922.*Trade Report, *Jan. 30, 47.Peterhead Harbour WorksReport, *Jan. 30, 48, 62.Philipps, Mr. J. W. [Pembroke]Secret Service Fund — Unexpended Balance, Feb. 8, 921.

South African War

Forage, Home and Foreign Produce—
Hay Contracts, *Feb. 8, 908.*Government and the War, Want of Knowledge, Foresight, etc. (Vote of Censure), *Feb. 1, 349.Phillpotts, Captain A. S. [Devon, Torquay]South African War and the Government—
Want of Knowledge, Foresight, etc.
(Vote of Censure), *Feb. 5, 651.*Transport Service—Provisions on Paronia,
*Feb. 2, 436.PhosphorusUse of, in the Manufacture of Matches—
Special Rules Presented, *Jan. 30, 52.Piers and Harbours, Ireland

Expenditure on—Return

Q. Mr. W. Moore; A. Mr. Hanbury,
*Feb. 9, 1054.Pilkington, Lieut.-Colonel R. [Lancashire, Newton]Army — Strengthening and Improving
Organisation of the Regular and
Auxiliary Forces, Government Proposals, *Feb. 12, 1306.Pilotage Bye-LawsOrders in Council Presented, *Feb. 1, 234.Pinkerton, Mr. J. [Galway]Galway Mails—Delivery of Letters in Carrabrown, etc., *Feb. 12, 1245.*Land (Ireland) Acts, Administration and Working of, *Feb. 9, 1127, 1132.Plunkett, Rt. Hon. H.—Vice-President of the Agricultural Department for Ireland [Dublin Co., S.]Board of Agriculture—Provision for Repayment to National Education of £78,000 handed over to the Board, Feb.
*13, 1379.*Congested Districts Board—Clare County to be included in the Schedule Districts,
Feb. 12, 1246.

Jun. 30—Feb. 14.

Plunkett, Rt. Hon. H.—cont.Muzzling Order in Cork, *Feb. 9, 1059.*Reafforestation, *Feb. 12, 1247.*Science and Art Department—Transferring Management and Control, etc., *Feb. 8, 938.*Sligo's, Marquess of, Estate—Correspondence with the Congested Districts Board, *Feb. 9, 1059.*Tobacco Growing Experiment, *Feb. 12, 1245.*Trawling in Wexford Bay, *Feb. 8, 933.PlymouthNew Writ, *Feb. 12, 1218.PoliceConstabulary, Royal Irish, *See that Title.*Metropolitan Police, *See that Title.Polling DistrictsNorthumberland, County Council Order, *Feb. 9, 1022, 1041.Pontefract Park Billc. Ordered, *Feb. 9, 1035.*IR. * *Feb. 12, 1211.Poor Law

Ireland

Dispensary Rules, Increased Poor Law Expenditure, etc.

Qs. Mr. P. J. Farrell, Mr. Daly ;
As. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 8, 929.

Salaries of Officers

Q. Mr. Hammond ; A. Mr. Atkinson, *Feb. 13, 1375.*Paupers, *See that Title.Poor Law Amendment (Scotland) Act, 1895Petitions for Alteration of Law, *Jan. 31, 157 ; Feb. 6, 697.PortugalTrade Reports, *Jan. 30, 46 ; Feb. 8, 897.Post Office

Postmaster-Gen.—Duke of Norfolk.

Secretary—Sir G. H. Murray.

Irish Questions

Cork—Extension of Building

Q. Mr. M. Healy ; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 1, 287.

Enniscorthy Post Office—Delay in building New Office

Q. Mr. T. J. Healy ; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 5, 580.

Galway Postal Service—Complaints

Q. Mr. O'Malley ; A. Mr. Hanbury, *Feb. 6, 722 ; Q. Mr. Pinkerton ; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 12, 1245.Post Office—cont.

Irish Questions—cont.

Kildare Postal Deliveries — Complaints

Q. Mr. Field ; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 6, 723.

Listowel Mails

Q. Mr. Flavin ; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 12, 1244.

Parcel Post Route—Stranraer and Portadown

Q. Mr. W. Moore ; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 9, 1054.

Wexford, South—Changes advocated

Q. Mr. Ffrench ; A. Mr. Hanbury, *Feb. 8, 927.*Mail Service, *See that Title.*Parcel Post, *See that Title.*Telegrams, Telegraphists, etc., *See those Titles.Postage Rates

Italy—Surcharges on Letters

Q. Mr. Hogan ; A. Mr. Hanbury, *Feb. 13, 1372.Post Office London Telephone Exchange

Tariff and Regulations

Q. Mr. Provand ; A. Mr. Hanbury, *Feb. 9, 1053.Postmaster-General

Duke of Norfolk.

Pott, Mr.

Removal of, from Delagoa Bay

Q. Mr. S. Montagu ; A. Mr. Brodric, *Feb. 6, 706.Power, Mr., P. J. [Waterford, E.]District Councillor Disqualifications, *Feb. 1, 289.*Lunatic Asylums, Ireland—Grant in Aid and Local Taxation Account, *Feb. 13, 1376.*South African War, *Feb. 7, 841.Premier

Marquess of Salisbury.

President of the Board of Trade

Rt. Hon. C. T. Ritchie.

President of the Board of Agriculture

Rt. Hon. W. H. Long.

President of the Local Government Board

Rt. Hon. H. Chaplin.

Press

Great Britain and the Continent, "Paper Warfare"

Os. Earl of Kimberley, Jan. 30, 13 ; Earl of Rosebery, Jan. 30, 35.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Press Telegrams

France—Reduction of Rates for Night Telegrams, Papers Presented, Jan. 30, 46, 64.

Preston Corporation Bill

l. 1R. Feb. 12*, 1163

Pretoria

Guns—Number and Character of Guns, Information with Reference to
Q. Mr. Bainbridge; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 6, 699.

Prisoners of War, See South African War.

Pretymann, Capt. E. G. [Suffolk, Woodbridge]

Army—Strengthening and Improving Organisation of the Regular and Auxiliary Forces, Government Proposals, Feb. 12, 1426.

South African War, Jan. 30, 71.

Printing, Government

Copyrighted Rate Books, Ireland
Q. Mr. Flavin; A. Mr. G. W. Balfour, Feb. 2, 449.

Prisoners of War

See South African War.

Prisons

Saint Lucia—Amended Rule Presented, Feb. 5, 563; Feb. 8, 897.

Scotland

Falkirk Prison—Rule Presented, Jan. 30, 53.

Private Bills

Division between the two Houses, Feb. 6, 691.

Standing Orders complied with, Feb. 9, 1017, 1024; Feb. 12, 1161, 1195; Feb. 13, 1353, 1356.

Standing Orders not complied with, Feb. 9, 1022, 1026; Feb. 12, 1216; Feb. 13, 1353, 1356.

Probate Duty Grant, Ireland

Distribution of the Grant to Poor Law Unions, Delay in
Q. Mr. Tully; A. Mr. G. W. Balfour, Feb. 1, 292.

Property in the South African Republics

Milner's, Sir A., Proclamation

Qs. Mr. G. Bowles; As. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 1, 269; Feb. 9, 1042.

Proclamation Presented, Feb. 5, 563; Feb. 8, 897.

Provand, Mr. A. D. [Glasgow, Blackfriars]

"Kowshing" Claims—Negotiations, etc., Feb. 9, 1051.

Post Office London Telephone Exchange—Tariff and Regulations, Feb. 9, 1053.

Provisions on Transport Ships

See Transport Service.

Prussia

Finance Report, Jan. 30, 49.

Pryce-Jones, Lieut.-Colonel E. [Montgomery Boroughs]

South African War—British Subjects Commandeered by the Enemy, Shooting of J. M'Lachlan, alleged, Feb. 5, 568.

Telegraphic Addresses, Regulations—Feb. 5, 580.

Public Accounts and Charges Act

Treasury Minute Presented, Feb. 6, 685, 697.

Public Health Acts Amendment Bill

c. 1R. Feb. 2*, 422.

Public Houses [Scotland] Later Opening Bill

c. 1R. Feb. 2*, 415.

Public Records, Ireland

Appendix to Report, Jan. 30, 45, 62

Pudsey

Charter of Incorporation Presented, Jan. 30, 52, 66.

Purfleet and Gravesend Junction Railway Bill

l. 1R. Feb. 13*, 1354.

Quarries Bill

c. 1R. Feb. 2*, 415

Queen's Speech

Text of Speech, Jan. 30, 1—Address in Answer [Lords] 5, [Commons] 71; Jan. 31, 164; Feb. 1, 295; Feb. 2, 452; Feb. 5, 590; Feb. 6, 731; Feb. 7, 830; Feb. 8, 941; Feb. 9, 1066.

Discussion of Amendments, Facilities for

Q. Mr. S. MacNeill; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 1, 258.

Report, Feb. 9, 1017.

Quick-firing Guns

See Guns.

Railway Accidents

Hexham Accident

Q. Mr. Field; A. Mr. Ritchie, Feb. 1, 283.

Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888

Return Presented, Jan. 30, 48, 62.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Railway Servants' Accidents

Report of Royal Commission, Jan. 30, 49, 64; Feb. 7, 233.

Royal Commission Recommendations

Railways (Prevention of Accidents) Bill, See that Title.

Railways

Continuous Brakes, Return, Jan. 30, 48, 62.

Free Passes for Irish Members

Q. Mr. Field; A. Mr. Ritchie, Feb. 6, 721.

Foreign Countries, See their Names.

India—Survey Party of 1876

Q. Mr. Maclean; A. Lord G. Hamilton, Feb. 13, 1368.

Ireland

Amalgamation Bills, See Names of Bills—Great Southern, Western, Waterford, &c.

Waterford and Limerick Railway—Dismissal of Employés

Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas, Feb. 5, 583.

Light Railways, See that Title.

Long Eaton Level Crossing

Q. Sir W. Foster; A. Mr. Ritchie, Feb. 6, 719.

Welsh Railway Dispute—Arbitration, etc.

Q. Mr. Maddison; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas, Feb. 5, 582.

Railways (Prevention of Accidents) Bill

c. Ordered and 1R. Feb. 12*, 1255.

Ramsgate Corporation Improvements Bill

l. 1R. Feb. 12*, 1163.

Ramsgate Harbour

Receipts and Payments, Statement Presented, Jan. 30, 51, 67.

Rankin, Sir J. [Herefordshire, Leominster]

Old Age Pensions, Number of Persons fulfilling Conditions for Receiving, etc., Feb. 12, 1236.

Rasch, Major F. C. [Essex, S. East]

Army—Strengthening and Improving Organisation of the Regular and Auxiliary Forces, Government Proposals, Feb. 12, 1324.

South African War—War Office Administration, etc., Feb. 2, 516.

Rate Books, Ireland

Copyrighted Rate Books

Q. Mr. Flavin; A. Mr. G. W. Balfour, Feb. 2, 449.

Rates and Rating

See Local Taxation.

Rawmarsh Urban District Council (Tramways) Bill

l. 1R. Feb. 12*, 1163.

Reading Corporation (Tramways) Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1035.
1R. Feb. 12*, 1211.

Records, Ireland

Appendix to Report, Jan. 30, 45, 62.

Recruiting

See Titles, Army, Volunteers, Militia, etc.

Redditch and District Light Railways Order

Presented Feb. 9, 1023, 1039.

Redhill Gas Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1035.

1R. Feb. 12*, 1212.

Redmond, Mr. J. E. [Waterford]

Business of the House, Feb. 8, 939.

Financial Business, Precedence on Tuesdays, Feb. 12, 1252.

Irish Railways Amalgamation Bills—Origination in the House of Lords, Feb. 6, 696.

Queen's Speech—The Address, Feb. 2, 535.

Saunderson's, Col., Remarks on Nationalists as "Cowards," Feb. 2, 535.

South African War, Conclusion of the War, Terms of Peace, etc.—Amendment to the Address, Feb. 7, 830.

Taxation of Ireland—Over Taxation, alleged, Feb. 9, 1086.

University Education (Ireland)—Facilities for Discussion, Feb. 12, 1247.

Redmond, Mr. W. H. K. [Clare, E.]

Chamberlain's, Mr., Visit to Dublin, Conduct of Trinity College Students, etc., Feb. 2, 447.

Clare Extra Police Charges, etc., Feb. 9, 1057.

Congested Districts Board, Ireland, Clare County to be included in the Schedule Districts, Feb. 12, 1246.

Egypt—Insubordination among Egyptian Troops at Omdurman, Feb. 12, 1235.

France—British Ambassador at Paris, Temporary absence, Feb. 12, 1233.

Land (Ireland) Acts, Administration and Working of, Feb. 9, 1114.

Osman Digna, Treatment of, Feb. 12, 1234.

South African War

Butler's, Sir W., Despatches, Feb. 2, 427.

Casualties—Publication of Lists, Feb. 12, 1224.

Consulting Surgeons, Pay of, Feb. 12, 1225.

Cost of the War—Exemption of the Irish People from additional Taxation, Feb. 12, 1222.

Egyptian Guns and Stores, Feb. 8, 905.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Redmond, Mr. W. H. K.—cont.Tobacco Growing in Ireland, Experiment.
Feb. 12, 1245."Triple Alliance"—Mr. Chamberlain's Leicester speech, *Feb. 5, 578.*Volunteers—Formation of Irish Corps,
*Feb. 5, 565.*Wexford Bay, Steam Trawling in, *Feb. 8, 934.Regimental Officers' QuartersWives of Officers, and the Surrender of Quarters*Q. Mr. S. MacNeill; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 2, 439.Registration of Electors Bill.c. 1R.* Feb. 6, 730.Registration of Firms Billc. 1R.* Feb. 2, 411.Reid, Sir R. T. [Dumfries Burghs]South African War and the Government, Want of knowledge, judgment, etc.
(Vote of Censure), *Jan. 31, 206.Religious DisabilitiesIrish Judicial Appointments, *See Ireland.Rentoul, Mr. J. A. [Down, E.]Taxation of Ireland — Over Taxation alleged, *Feb. 9, 1085.Representative Peers for IrelandClifden, Viscount—Right to vote established, Feb. 12, 1161, 1353.
Petition, *Feb. 1, 233.*Mexborough, Earl of — Petition, *Feb. 1,
233; Right to Vote Established, Feb. 9,
1017, 1353.ReserveSee Title Army and South African War."Revenge," H.M.S., ExplosionQ. Admiral Field; A. Mr. Goschen, Feb. 8, 917.Revenue DepartmentsSee Civil Service and Revenue Departments.Rhodes-Hawksley CorrespondenceSee Hawksley Correspondence.Rhodes, Mr., and the South African WarReferences to, in Debate on the Address,
*Jan. 5, 126; Jan. 31, 185; Feb. 2, 545,
547; Feb. 5, 669, 754, 765.Rhymney Iron Company Billl. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1165.Rhymney Railway Billl. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1165.Ricksmansworth and Uxbridge Valley Water Billc. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1212.Ridley, Rt. Hon. Sir M. W.—Secretary of State for the Home Department [Lancashire, Blackpool]Burial Law Reform, *Feb. 2, 446.*Electoral Disabilities (Military Services)
Bill, Extension to Army and Navy
Forces, *Feb. 6, 709.*Glen Clelland Colliery Accident, *Feb. 13,
1369.*Liquor Licensing Laws Commission—
Legislation, *Feb. 6, 717.*Pen Trade—Inspector's Report, *Feb. 13, 1368.*Stock Exchange—Alleged Outrage by Transvaal War Enthusiast, *Feb. 1, 278.*War News—Crying in the Street Nuisance, *Feb. 2, 440.*Workmen's Compensation Act—Exclusion of Casual Labourers, *Feb.
2, 446.*Extension, *Feb. 1, 284.Rifle Clubs

Establishment of National Rifle Clubs

*O. Earl of Shaftesbury, Jan. 30, 11.Rifle RangesChipping—Light Railway from Longridge to Chipping*Q. Mr. Tomlinson; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 8, 918.*Lichfield Rifle Range, Progress of Construction, etc.*Q. Mr. Warner; A. Mr. Wyndham,
Feb. 1, 275.*

Number of Ranges closed, etc.

*Q. Mr. R. Cooke; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 1, 275; Feb. 9, 1050;Q. Col. Murray; A. Mr. J. P.
Williams, Feb. 12, 1229.*

Return

*Q. Mr. F. W. Wilson; A. Mr.
Wyndham, Feb. 6, 711.*Statement (Marquess of Lansdowne), *Feb.
12, 1178.Rifle Shooting Directors

Brotherhood Depression Range Finder

*Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. J. P. Williams,
Feb. 12, 1229.*

Russell's Invention

*Qs. Sir J. Fergusson; As. Mr.
Goschen, Mr. J. P. Williams,
Feb. 12, 1232.RiflesLee-Enfield Rifle, See that Title.Right of SearchSee Contraband of War.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Riots

Suppression of, by Military—Expenses of Troops employed
Q. Mr. D. A. Thomas; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 13, 1364.

Ritchie, Rt. Hon. C. T.—President of the Board of Trade [Croydon]

Boy Sailor Scheme and the Royal Naval Reserve, Number of Boys enrolled, Feb. 12, 1238.

Buckland Museum of Fish Culture, Accommodation for, at South Kensington Museum, Feb. 8, 920.

Companies Acts Amendment Bill
Feb. 12, 1257.

Ministers of the Crown and Directorships of Companies, Feb. 13, 1379.

Crew Accommodation on Merchant Ships, Feb. 12, 1238.

Hexham Railway Accident Inquiry, Feb. 1, 283.

Long Eaton Level Crossing, Dangers of, Feb. 6, 719.

"Mohegan," Wreck of—Passenger Vessels Regulations, Feb. 6, 719.

Railway Passes for Irish Members—Feb. 6, 721.

Seamen—Unclaimed Wages of Deceased Seamen, Feb. 13, 1372.

Workmen's Trams—Alteration in Model Clause in Tramways Bill, Feb. 8, 920.

Workmen's Trains and the Housing of the Working Classes Problem, Feb. 6, 720.

Roads

Ireland

Labourers undertaking maintenance and repairs of Roads
Q. Capt. Donelan; A. Mr. W¹ Balfour, Feb. 1, 291.

Road Contractors, Difficulties of obtaining access to Quarries
Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 8, 929.

Roberts, Mr. J. B. [Carnarvonshire, Eifion]

Army—Strengthening and improving Organisation of the Regular and Auxiliary Forces—Government Proposals, Feb. 12, 1463.

Business of the House, Financial Business—Precedence on Tuesdays, Feb. 12, 1252.

Queen's Speech—The Address, Feb. 2, 518.

Termination of Debate, Jan. 31, 230

South African War

British Subjects commandeered by the Enemy—Shooting of J. McLachlan for Refusing to Fight, alleged, Feb. 5, 568; Feb. 8, 906.

Roberts, Mr. J. B.—cont.

Butler, General Sir W.—Defence of Natal, etc., Feb. 1, 267; Feb. 12, 1218.

High Treason at the Cape, alleged—Case of M. de Plessis, Feb. 6, 703.

Uitlanders' Grievances, etc. [Vote of Censure], Feb. 2, 518, 520.

Robertson, Mr. E. [Dundee]

Army—Strengthening and improving Organisation of the Regular and Auxiliary Forces—Government proposals, Feb. 12, 1388.

Robertson, Mr. H. [Hackney, S.]

Local Government [Ireland] Act [1898] Amendment Bill, 2r., Feb. 14, 1499, 1500, 1502.

Robson, Mr. S. [South Shields]

South African War—Grievances of the Uitlanders, etc., Jan. 30, 137.

Rochdale Corporation Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 12, 1216.
1r.* Feb. 13, 1356.

Roll of the Lords

Feb. 2, 401.

Rollit, Sir A. [Islington, South]

Army—Strengthening and improving Organisation of the Regular and Auxiliary Forces—Government proposals, Feb. 12, 1436.

Education Grants—Extending to Commercial subjects, Feb. 12, 1239.

Volunteers, Recruiting—Special Army Order, Jan. 2, 1900; Feb. 1, 274.

Roman Catholic Disabilities Removal Bill

c. 1r.* Feb. 2, 417.

Roscommon

Gun Licences—Request for Description of Weapons by Police
Mr. Hayden; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 13, 1377.

Proclaimed Meeting

Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 12, 1241.

Rosebery, Earl of South African War and the Government—Marquess of Salisbury's Defence, etc., Jan. 30, 34.

Rossendale By-Election

New Writ, Jan. 31, 160.

Rotherham Corporation Bill

1. 1r.* Feb. 12, 1163.

Rotherhithe and Ratchliffe Tunnel Bill

1. 1r.* Feb. 12, 1163.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Royal Engineers*See* Engineers.Royal Irish ConstabularySee* Constabulary, Royal Irish.Royal MarinesSee* Marines.Royal National Lifeboat InstitutionSee* Lifeboat Service.Royal Patriotic FundSee* Patriotic Fund.Royal University of IrelandAccounts of Receipts and Expenditure Presented, Feb. 5, 563.Report Presented, Feb. 9, 1041; Feb. 12, 1166.Rugeley Gas Billc.* Ordered, Feb. 9, 1035.1R.* Feb. 12, 1212.Rum

Colonial Rum—Excise Duties.

Q. Mr. Lawrence; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 13, 1365.Runciman, Mr. W. [Oldham]Oldham Telegraphic Delays—Complaint, Feb. 6, 722.Rural District Councils, Ireland

Number of Members constituting quorum, etc.—Amendment of Act.

Q. Mr. Engledew; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 13, 1374.Rural Education

Circular to Local Authorities, under Act of 1899, etc.

Q. Mr. Hobhouse; A. Sir J. Gorst, Feb. 8, 923.Russell, General F. S. [Cheltenham]Army—Strengthening and improving Organisation of the Regular and Auxiliary Forces—Government Proposals, Feb. 12, 1455.Coal Supply for National Purposes—Cardiff Firm Contracting to Supply Foreign Government with 400,000 tons, Feb. 5, 575.Death Duties and the South African War, Proposal to Remit, Feb. 12, 1221.South African WarBoer Armaments—Expenditure, Private Statement to Members of the Volkeraad—Orders for guns placed with Messrs. Krupp, etc., Feb. 12, 1223.Clothing for Troops—Reserves of Warm Clothings, Feb. 12, 1226.Russell, Gen. F. S.—cont.*South African War—cont.Enteric Fever—Flannel Belts as preventatives, Feb. 12, 1226.Guns, manufacture of, equal to those of the Boers, Feb. 12, 1223.Horses on Transports—Returns, Feb. 2, 437.Policy of the Government [Vote of Censure], Feb. 5, 629.Volunteer Officers with the Regulars, Feb. 12, 1225.Russell, Mr. T. W.—Secretary to the Local Government Board [Tyrone, South]Land [Ireland] Acts, Administration and working of, Feb. 9, 1116.Local Government [Ireland] Act [1898] Amendment Bill, 2R. Feb. 14, 1486.South African War—Irish Amendment to the Address for the Conclusion of the War, Feb. 7, 880.Russell “Shooting Director” InventionQs.* Sir J. Fergusson; As. Mr. Goschen, Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 12, 1232.RussiaPersia—Russian Loan, etc. See Persia.Trade Report, Jan. 30, 46.St. Albans Water Billc.* Ordered, Feb. 9, 1035.1R.* Feb. 12, 1212.St. David's Railway [Additional Powers] Billc.* Ordered, Feb. 9, 1035.1R.* Feb. 12, 1212.Saint LuciaPrison Regulations—Amended Rule, Presented, Feb. 5, 563; Feb. 8, 897.Saint VincentReport presented, Jan. 30, 46, 63.Sale of Intoxicating Liquors to Children Billc.* 1R.* Feb. 2, 418.Sale of Intoxicating Liquors to Children [No. 2] Billc.* 1R.* Feb. 2, 419.Petitions, Feb. 5, 562; Feb. 6, 697; Feb. 7, 829; Feb. 18, 902; Feb. 9, 1040; Feb. 12, 1217; Feb. 14, 1465.Sale of Intoxicating Liquors on Sunday Billc.* 1R.* Feb. 2, 412.Petitions, Feb. 1, 249; Feb. 3, 408; Feb. 6, 697; Feb. 7, 829; Feb. 9, 1040; Feb. 12, 1216; Feb. 13, 1367; Feb. 14, 1465.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Sale of Intoxicating Liquors [Ireland] Bill*c.* 1R. Feb. 2, 422.Petition, Feb. 9, 1040.Salford Corporation Bill1. 1R. * Feb. 12, 1163.Salisbury, Marquess of—Premier and Secretary of State for Foreign AffairsBritish Constitution as an Instrument of War, Jan. 30, 30.Queen's Speech—the Address, Jan. 30, 26.Secret Service Fund, Jan. 30, 28.South African War—Boer Armaments, etc., Charge against the Government for want of Knowledge and Foresight, etc., Jan. 30, 26.Treasury Control, Jan. 30, 32.Chancellor of the Exchequer and the South African War—Reflections on the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Jan. 30, 32; Feb. 1, 237.Personal Explanation, Feb. 1, 237, 239.Salisbury PlainProperty purchased, Return Presented, Jan. 30, 70; Jan. 31, 158.Saltoun, Lord

South African War

Maps, Surveys, etc., Feb. 2, 404.Volunteer Artillery Guns, etc., Feb. 12, 1183.Samoa

Anglo-German Convention

Convention Presented, Jan. 30, 47, 65.References to, in Debate on the Address (Lords), Jan. 30, 11, 14.

Working of new Arrangements

Q. Mr. Hogan; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 6, 714.Sandys, Col. T. M. [Lancashire, Bootle]Army—Strengthening and Improving Organisation of the Regular and Auxiliary Forces, Government Proposals, Feb. 12, 1319.Sanitary Works, Ireland

Charges under Local Government Act, etc.

Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 12, 1243.Sankaren, ChananPetition, Jan. 31, 157.Sardinian LoanAccount Presented, Feb. 1, 236.Saunderson, Col., Rt. Hon. E. J. [Armagh, N.]Land (Ireland) Acts, Administration and Working of, Feb. 9, 1139.South African War—Attitude of the Irish Nationalists, etc., Feb. 2, 530, 538.Savings BanksMilitary Savings Banks, Statement Presented, Feb. 5, 562; Feb. 8, 897.Seamen's Deposits, Account Presented, Jan. 30, 51, 67.Trustee Savings Banks, See that Title.Scarborough Corporation Billc.* Ordered, Feb. 9, 1036.1R. * Feb. 12, 1212.School Board Franchise, Scotland

Legislation

Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 12, 1247.Schools

Commemoration of Deeds of Heroism in Elementary Schools, Bishop of Chester's Proposal

Q. Mr. Yerburgh; A. Sir J. Gorst, Feb. 13, 1360.Science and Art Departments

Council of Advice for Art Matters

Q. Lord Balfour; A. Sir J. Gorst, Feb. 13, 1370.

Dublin—Transferring Control to Agricultural and Industrial Department

Q. Sir T. G. Esmonde; A. Mr. Plunkett, Feb. 8, 937.Re-organisation of the Education Department, See Education Department.South Kensington Museum, See that Title.Scotland.Secretary*—Right Hon. Lord Balfour of Burleigh.Under Secretary—Mr. G. A. J. Lee.Lord Advocate—Right Hon. A. G. Murray.Solicitor General—Mr. C. S. Dickson.Bills relating to, See their Titles.Congested Districts Board, Crofters' Grievances—Debate on the Address, Feb. 8, 976.

Congested District Relief Act—Balance of Money Granted

Q. Mr. Hedderwick; A. Mr. A. G. Murray, Feb. 5, 582.Crofters and Cottars, for Collective heading, See that Title.Deer Forests—Grievance of Crofters and Cottars, etc. — Amendment to the Address [Mr. Weir], Feb. 8, 973; Division 1002.Education—Minute of the Committee of Council on Education Presented, Feb. 5, 549, 563.

Fishery Cruisers—Completion of New Cruisers

Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. A. G. Murray, Feb. 13, 1370.

Glen Clelland Collieries Accident—Employment of Polish Workmen, etc.

Q. Mr. Woods; A. Sir M. White Ridley, Feb. 13, 1368.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Scotland—cont.

Ground Values (Taxation), Petition for alteration of Law, Feb. 7, 829.

Judicial Statistics Act, 1869, Report, Jan. 30, 62.

Lunacy—Midlothian and Peebles District Lunacy Board, General Rules presented, Jan. 30, 53, 69.

Orphan Homes—Children Refused Public Education

Q. Mr. C. Corbett; A. Mr. A. G. Murray, Feb. 8, 923.

Poor Law Amendment Acts, Petitions for alteration of Law, Jan. 31, 157; Feb. 6, 697.

Prisons—Papers Presented, Jan. 30, 53; Jan. 31, 158.

School Board Franchise—Legislation

Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 12, 1247.

Town Councils (Scotland) Bill, See that Title.

Whisky Samples, Distributing among Dwelling Houses

Q. Mr. J. Wilson; A. Mr. A. G. Murray, Feb. 13, 1369.

Scott, Mr. C. P. [Lancashire, Leigh]

South African War and the Government
• [Vote of Censure] Feb. 2, 499.

Scottish American Investment Company Limited. Bill

L. IR. Feb. 12*, 1165.

Scottish Widows' Fund and Life Assurance Company Bill

L. IR. Feb. 12*, 1165.

Seamen, Merchant Service

Boy Sailor Scheme and the Royal Naval Reserve, Number of Boys Enrolled

Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Mr. Ritchie, Feb. 12, 1238.

Deceased Seamen

Unclaimed Wages

Q. Sir J. Long; A. Mr. Ritchie, Feb. 13, 1371.

Wages and Effects, Account Presented, Jan. 30, 49, 67; Feb. 1, 249.

Money Orders, Statement Presented, Jan. 30, 51, 67.

Savings Banks, Account of Deposits, Jan. 30, 51, 67.

Wages, Transmission of, Statement Presented, Jan. 30, 51, 67.

Secondary and Technical Instruction

Minutes of Committee of Council on Education Presented, Jan. 30, 50, 68.

Secret Service Fund

Application for Increase

Q. Mr. Hedderwick; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach, Feb. 2, 445.

Secret Service Fund—cont.

Insufficient, Marquess of Salisbury on, Jan. 30, 28.

References to, in Debate on the Address, Jan. 31, 169, 179, 196; Feb. 1, 306.

Transvaal—Amount spent on Secret Service

O. Marquess of Salisbury, Jan. 30, 28.

Unexpended Balance

Q. Mr. Philipps; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach, Feb. 8, 921.

Seely, Mr. C. H. [Lincoln]

Swiss Military System—Report, Feb. 13, 1362.

Select Vestries Bill

Pro Forma, L.R. Jan. 30*, 5.

Selection, Committee of,

See Committees.

Separation Allowance

See South African War.

Seton-Karr, Mr. H. [St. Helens]

Army—Strengthening and improving Organisation of the Regular and Auxiliary Forces, Government Proposals, Feb. 12, 1421.

Settlement, Law of

Extending to Ireland

Q. Mr. Field; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 6, 724.

Seychelles

Report Presented, Jan. 30, 46; 63.

Shaftesbury, Earl of

South African War, Jan. 30, 9.

Shanars

Petition for Redress of Grievances, Feb. 6, 696.

Shanghai

See China.

Shannon Water and Electric Power Bill

Petition referred to Standing Orders, Feb. 9, 1038.

Standing Orders not complied with, Feb. 9, 1022, 1027.

Shaw, Mr. C. E. [Stafford]

South African War (Vote of Censure), Feb. 6, 823.

Shaw, Mr. T. [Hawick Burghs]

Highlands of Scotland—Deer Forests, Crofters' and Cottars' Grievances, etc., Feb. 8, 995.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Shee, Mr. J. J. [Waterford, West]Land, Ireland—Revaluation, Feb. 2, 450.Militia—Distribution of Regiments, Forces Serving in Ireland, etc., Feb. 2, 442.

South African War

Mafeking Station-master, Shooting, alleged, Feb. 1, 266; Feb. 2, 434.Shooting Boer Prisoners, alleged, Feb. 2, 433; Feb. 8, 906.Tallow—Extra Police, Feb. 13, 1378.Sheffield Corporation Billl. 1r.* Feb. 12, 1163.Sheffield District Railway Billl. 1r.* Feb. 12, 1165.Shipowners' LiabilityMerchant Shipping (Liability of Shipowners) Bill, See that Title.ShippingSee* Merchant Shipping.Ships of War

Precautions against Fire, Wooden Fittings, etc.

Q. Mr. Bond; A. Mr. Goschen, Feb. 12, 1237.Shooting DirectorsSee* Rifle Shooting Directors.Shops Billc. 1r.* Feb. 2, 425.Sierra Leone

Campaign Medals—Natives Guilty of unlawful Acts.

Q. Mr. Hedderwick; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 9, 1050.Silver

Australian Mints—Coinage of Silver

Q. Mr. Hogan; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 13, 1374.Simeon, Sir J. S. B. [Southampton]Ordnance Survey Staff—Scheme of Pensions for Temporary Civil Assistants, etc., Feb. 8, 926.Sinclair, Capt. J. [Forfar]Army—Strengthening and improving Organisation of the Regular and Auxiliary Forces, Government Proposals, Feb. 12, 1411.Jameson Raid and the South African War, Feb. 2, 511.Queen's Speech—The Address, Feb. 2, 505.

South African War

Cape Dutch, Loyalty of, etc., Feb. 2, 509.Equipment, Loss of—Charge to Soldiers, Feb. 12, 1225.Government [Vote of Censure], Feb. 2, 505.Sittings and Adjournments of the HouseExemption from Standing Order—Debate on the Address, Motion [Mr. A. J. Balfour], Feb. 6, 729; Feb. 9, 1060.Sleeping Helmets

Troops in South Africa

Q. Mr. Broadhurst; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 8, 913.Sligo's, Marquess of, Estate

Correspondence with Congested District Board

Q. Mr. Ambrose; A. Mr. Plunkett, Feb. 9, 1059.Small Houses [Acquisition of Ownership] Act

Extension to Ireland—Carrying out of the Act by the District Councils

Q. Mr. Austin; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 5, 588.Smith, G, Case ofQ. Mr. Kearley; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 12, 1230.Smith, Mr. A. H. [Christchurch]Army—Strengthening and improving Organisation of the Regular and Auxiliary Forces, Government Proposals, Feb. 12, 1457.Smith, Mr. S. [Flintshire]Volunteers, Recruiting—Excess of present establishments, Obstacles placed in the way of obtaining Recruits, alleged, Feb. 9, 1046.Sneem Mails

Late Delivery of Mails

Q. Mr. Flavin; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 9, 1055.SoldiersQuestions relating to South African War, See South African War.Soldiers' Effects Fund

Crimean Soldiers' Widows, etc.

Q. Sir J. Leng; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 8, 915.References to, in Debate on the Patriotic Fund, Feb. 8, 949, 961.SomalilandForeign Jurisdiction Act—Order in Council Presented, Feb. 1, 234.Somerset, County ofNew Writ, [Wells Division] Jan. 30, 54—New Member Sworn, Jan. 30, 54.

Jan. 30 -Feb. 14.

Somerset, Duke ofSouth African War, *Jan. 30, 5.Somerset HouseIndexes to Early Wills—Recompilation
*Q. Colonel Welby; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 12, 1240.Somersetshire VolunteersFailure to form Company—Number of Men unable to pass Test
*Qs. Colonel Murray, Mr. Hobhouse;
A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 5, 571.Soudan

Osman Digna

Capture of

O. Duke of Somerset, Jan. 30, 9.

Treatment of

*Q. Mr. W. Redmond; A. Mr.
Brodrick, Feb. 12, 1234.South African WarAdministration by the Military Departments, etc.—Mr. Wyndham's Defence,
*Feb. 1, 316.*Army Supplementary Estimates—Statement (Mr. Wyndham), Feb. 12, 1257, 1328.

Arbitration and the Peace Conference

*Q. Mr. Flynn; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour,
Feb. 2, 426.*Artillery, See Subheading Guns.Australasian Contingent—Roman Catholic Chaplains*Q. Mr. T. Curran; A. Mr. A. J.
Chamberlain, Feb. 1, 289.*Boer Armaments and Strength of the EnemyBritish Government—Want of Knowledge, Foresight, etc.*Os. Lord Monckswell, Marquess of Lansdowne, Feb. 1, 244, 246.*Balfour's, Mr., Speech at Manchester*O. Earl of Kimberley, Jan. 30, 20.*References to, in Debate on the
Address (Lords), *Jan. 30, 19,
34, 39 (Commons), 73, 92, 103,
149; Jan. 31, 168, 179, 190,
193, 201; Feb. 1, 304, 370;
Feb. 5, 604, 633.*Salisbury's, Marquess, Defence,
*Jan. 30, 26—Earl of Rosebery's attack on, Jan. 30, 34.*Wyndham's, Mr., Statement,
Feb. 1, 337; Feb. 2, 539.

Butler's, Sir W., Despatches

*Q. Mr. Channing; A. Mr. A. J.
Balfour, Feb. 2, 426.*Conventions of 1881 and 1884—Conventions Responsible for the Boer Armaments*O. Marquess of Salisbury, Jan.
30, 26, 29.South African War—cont.Boer Armaments and Strength of the Enemy—*cont.*Expenditure of the Transvaal Government, Private statement to Members of the Volksraad—
Orders placed with Messrs.
Krupp, etc.*Q. Gen. Russell; A. Mr. J. P.
Williams, Feb. 12, 1223.*Wolseley, Lord, and the Intelligence Department—Conflicting Statements*Q. Mr. S. MacNeill; A. Mr.
Wyndham, Feb. 1, 265.*Boer Supremacy in South Africa—alleged conspiracy between the Orange Free State and the Transvaal*Q. Mr. Bainbridge; A. Mr. A. J.
Balfour, Feb. 1, 256.*References to, in the Debate on the Address, *Jan. 30, 139; Jan. 31, 188;
Feb. 2, 468, 498; Feb. 5, 614.*British Forces, Number and Composition of *Q. Mr. Bartley; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 8, 905.*Statements (Marquess of Lansdowne),
*Feb. 12, 1169 (Mr. Wyndham),
1258.*British Garrison necessary after the War
*O. Sir C. Dilke, Feb. 12, 1286*British Subjects Commandeered by the Enemy—Shot for refusing to fight, alleged*Qs. Colonel Pryce-Jones, Mr. B.
Roberts, Colonel Milward; As. Mr.
J. Chamberlain, Feb. 5, 568; Q. Mr.
B. Roberts; A. Mr. Chamberlain,
Feb. 8, 906.*

Butler, Sir W.—Despatches, etc.

Boer Armaments

*Q. Mr. Channing; A. Mr. A. J.
Balfour, Feb. 2, 426.*

Military Situation

*Qs. Mr. Hedderwick, Mr. Dillon;
As. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 1,
253, 256.*References to, in Debate on the
Address, *Jan. 31, 194; Feb. 1,
314.*Milner, Sir A., and Sir W. Butler,
Friction between*Q. Mr. Warner; A. Mr. A. J.
Balfour, Feb. 5, 565.*Motion (Lord Monckswell), *Feb. 1, 244.*References to, in Debate on the
Address, *Jan. 30, 93, 105; Feb. 1,
305, 313, 339; Feb. 5, 658, 758.*Views and Proceedings, Resignation, etc.*Qs. Mr. Bainbridge; Mr. S.
MacNeill; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 1, 254, 255; Qs. Mr.
S. MacNeill; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 6, 704.See also* Subheading Natal, Defence of, etc.Cabinet Committee of Defence, See that Title.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

South African War—cont.

Canadian Contingent

Cavalry, Refusal by the War Office
Q. Mr. Hedderwick; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 2, 428.

Medical Contingent, Refusal by the War Office
Q. General Laurie; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 2, 1046.

Cape Dutch, Loyalty of

References to, in the Debate on the Address, Feb. 2, 469, 509; Feb. 5, 616; Feb. 6, 812.

Carrington's General Sir F., Offer of Services

Q. Mr. Coghill; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 6, 700.

Casualties

Highland Brigade, Losses, See Sub-heading Magersfontein Engagement.

Publication of Lists

Q. Mr. Thornton; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 5, 572; Q. Mr. W. Redmond; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 12, 1224.

Censorship of War News

Letters of War Correspondents

Q. Mr. Hogan; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 1, 268.

Outgoing Telegrams

Q. Mr. L. Morgan; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 2, 437.

Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Stinting of the Military Preparations

Os. Marquess of Salisbury, Jan. 30, 32; Sir M. Hicks-Beach, Mr. S. Buxton, Jan. 31, 180—Personal Explanation (Marquess of Salisbury), Feb. 1, 237.

Chaplains

Australian Contingent Roman Catholic Chaplains

Q. Mr. T. Curran; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 1, 269.

Yeomanry—Appointment of Chaplains suggested

Os. Earl Egerton, Marquess of Lansdowne, Feb. 6, 686, 687.

Clothing for Troops

Q. Mr. Warner; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 1, 267.

Flannel Belts—Precautions against Enteric Fever

Q. General Russell; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 12, 1226.

Replacing Clothes worn out, etc.

Q. Mr. Warner; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 6, 700.

Reserves of Warm Clothing

Q. General Russell; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 12, 1226.

Colenso Battle—Naval Brigade Despatches

Q. Commander Young; A. Mr. Goschen, Feb. 5, 575.

South African War—cont.

Colonial Assistance—References to, in Debate on the Address (Lords), Jan. 30, 10, 15.

Colonial Military Contingents—Correspondence relating to, Presented, Jan. 30, 47, 63.

Commands at the Front

Carrington, Sir F., and Lord Methuen
Os. Lord Bateman, Marquess of Lansdowne, Feb. 12, 1166.

Selections, Powers in regard to subordinate Generals, etc.

Q. Sir H. Howorth; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 13, 1358.

Commissions for Non-Commissioned Officers, See Sub-heading Promotion from the Ranks.

Conclusion of the War—Amendment to the Address (J. Redmond), Feb. 7, 830—Division, 892.

Conduct of the War—Occupation of Glencoe and Dundee, Question of Policy, See Sub-heading Natal, Defence.

Connaught Rangers—Court Martial of Officer, alleged

Q. Mr. T. M. Healy; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 5, 570.

Contemplated Military Measures. See Army—Strengthening, etc.

Continental Powers and Great Britain—"Paper Warfare"

Q. Earl of Kimberley, Jan. 30, 13.

Contraband of War, See that Title.

Cost of the War

Army Supplementary Estimates Presented, Feb. 8, 903.

Exemption of Ireland from additional taxation

Q. Mr. W. Redmond; A. Sir M. Hicks-Beach, Feb. 12, 1222.

Amendment to the Address [Mr. (Clancy), Feb. 8, 1003; Feb. 9, 1006—Division, 1108.

Supplementary Estimate—Statement [Mr. Wyndham], Feb. 12, 1258.

Crimean War Comparison

Q. Sir C. Dilke, Feb. 1, 296.

Customs Duties on Gifts sent to the Troops

Q. Mr. Bartley; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 6, 708.

Death Duties—Proposal to remit, etc.

Q. Gen. Russell; A. Sir M. Hicks-Beach, Feb. 12, 1221.

Debate on the Address [Lords], Jan. 30, 5; [Commons] 71. Jan. 31, 164; Feb. 1, 295; Feb. 2, 451; Feb. 5, 570; Feb. 6, 731.

Delagoa Bay, See that Title.

Durham's, Dean of, Sermon on the War—

Mr. Justice Grantham's Remarks

Q. Earl of Halsbury, Feb. 1, 240.

Egyptian Guns and Stores

Os. Mr. W. Redmond, Mr. S. MacNeill; As. Mr. Brodric, Feb. 8, 905.

South African War—cont.

Electoral Disabilities (Military Services) Bill, See that Title.

Enteric Fever, Precautions against Flannel Belts for Soldiers

Q. Gen. Russell ; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 12, 1226.

Inoculation against

Q. Mr. A. E. Pease ; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 1, 265.

Equipment, Loss of—Charge to Soldiers

Q. Mr. Sinclair ; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 12, 1225.

Fenian Prisoners at Mafeking, alleged

Q. Mr. P. O'Brien ; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 12, 1224 ; Qs. Mr. P. O'Brien ; As. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 12, 1224 ; Feb. 13, 1358.

Forage—Home grown and Foreign Produce, prices, etc.

Q. Mr. Strachey ; Q. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 1, 270 ; Qs. Mr. Philipps, Mr. T. M. Healy, Mr. D. A. Thomas ; As. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 8, 908 ; Q. Mr. Jeffreys ; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 5, 673.

Bad Hay Supplied to the Royal Dragoons

Q. Sir C. Gull ; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 5, 573.

Free State, See Subheading Orange Free State.

Future of South Africa, See Subheading Settlement after the War.

Generals, Criticism on—References to in Debate on the Address, Jan. 30, 8, 16, 30, 95.

Government Policy, Want of Knowledge, Foresight, etc. — Debate (Lords), Jan. 30, 5 ; (Commons) 71 ; Jan. 31, 164 ; Feb. 1, 295 ; Feb. 2, 452 ; Feb. 5, 590 ; Feb. 6, 751—Division, Feb. 6, 824.

Balfour's, Mr. A. J., Defence, Jan. 30, 96.

Campbell-Bannerman, Sir H., Attack on the Government, Jan. 30, 81.

Salisbury's, Marquess, Defence, Jan. 30, 26—Earl Rosebery's Attack on, Jan. 30, 34.

Graspan Battle — Naval Brigade, Despatches

Q. Com. Young ; A. Mr. Goschen, Feb. 5, 575.

Greene, Mr. Conyngham, and Mr. Chamberlain, Interviews between

Q. Mr. S. MacNeill ; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 2, 429.

Guns

Armstrong, Messrs., and the County of Northumberland's Offer

Q. Mr. J. A. Pease ; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 8, 913.

South African War—cont.

War—cont.

Artillery Strength in South Africa, Previous to Outbreak of Hostilities

Q. Sir C. Dilke ; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 12, 1219.

Guns of Position—Cape Colony and Natal

Qs. Mr. Hedderwick ; As. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 2, 432, Feb. 9, 1044.

Boer Armaments, See that Subheading.

British Guns, Comparison with the Boer Guns—References to in Debate on the Address, Jan. 30, 74, Jan. 31, 175.

Continental Standard

Q. Mr. Warner ; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 5, 567.

Egypt—Guns obtained from

Qs. Mr. W. Redmond, Mr. S. MacNeill ; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 8, 905.

Manufacture of Guns equal to those of the Boers

Q. Gen. Russell ; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 12, 1223.

Position Guns, Employment of, in the Field, etc.

O. Sir C. Dilke, Feb. 1, 311.

Pretoria—Information as to character and number of Guns, Guns sent to the Front, &c.

Q. Mr. Bainbridge ; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 6, 699.

Proportion of Artillery Strength

Q. Col. Welby ; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 9, 1044.

Volunteer Artillery Guns—Complaints

Q. Mr. Bainbridge ; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 6, 705.

Wyndham's, Mr., Statement, Feb. 1, 337.

Hay, See Subheading Forage.

Helmets—Sleeping Helmets

Q. Mr. Broadhurst ; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 8, 913.

High Treason at the Cape, alleged—Case of Mr. du Plessis

Q. Mr. B. Roberts ; A. Mr. Chamberlain, Feb. 6, 703.

Highland Brigade—Magersfontein Battle, Losses at, See Subheading Magersfontein Engagement

Horses

Forage, See that Subheading.

Purchase in Ireland

Q. Mr. P. O'Brien ; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 9, 1048.

Transport Service, See that Title.

Hospitals—Cape Colony and Natal, Military Hospitals, Defects, etc

Q. Dr. Farquharson ; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 8, 908.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

South African War—cont.

Imperial Light Horse Equipment, Mauser Pistols
Q. Mr. Hedderwick; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 5, 571.

India—Native Troops, Employment of
Q. Mr. Bainbridge; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 1, 271.

Intervention of Foreign Governments
Q. Mr. G. Bowles; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 2, 430.

Invalid Soldiers, Treatment of Soldiers from the "Sumatra"
Q. Mr. S. MacNeill; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 9, 1047.

Ireland, Attitude of—Debate on the Address, Feb. 7, 830.

Irish Brigade with the Boers—Alleged Murder of a wounded Prisoner by the British.
Q. Mr. Mandeville; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 12, 1224.

Iveagh's, Lord, Ambulance Corps—Members of, as Combatants.
Q. Mr. T. M. Healy; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 9, 1046.

Kimberley, Relief of, and Mr. Rhodes
O. Mr. Philipps, Feb. 1, 351.

Ladysmith, Siege of—Children at Ladysmith
Q. Mr. Hogan; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 1, 267.

Ladysmith "Entanglement," See Subheading Natal, Defence of, etc.

M'Lachlan, John—Commandeered by the Enemy, Shot for refusing to fight, alleged, See Subheading British Subjects.

Mafeking—Message to the Queen
O. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 2, 548.

Mafeking Stationmaster, Shooting, by order of Col. Baden-Powell, alleged.
Qs. Mr. Shee; As. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 1, 264; Feb. 2, 434; Q. Mr. T. M. Healy; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 5, 569; Qs. Mr. T. M. Healy; As. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 6, 701.

Magersfontein Engagement

Highland Brigade Losses—Inquiry
Qs. Mr. Hedderwick; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 1, 261; Feb. 12, 1219; Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 13, 1359.

Publication of the News by the War Office—Date of Publication
Q. Mr. S. MacNeill; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 2, 438.

Maps, Surveys, etc.

Qs. Mr. Hedderwick, Mr. R. Cooke; As. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 1, 262; Os. Lord Saltoun, Marquess of Lansdowne, Feb. 2, 404-406.

Wyndham's, Mr., Statement, Feb. 1, 337.

Marines, See Subheading Naval Brigades.

South African War—cont.Medical Service

Number of Officers Employed, etc.
Q. Sir W. Foster; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 6, 705.

Pay of Consulting Surgeons
Q. Mr. W. Redmond; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 12, 1225.

Military Preparations previous to the Outbreak of Hostilities—References to in Debate on the Address, Jan. 30, 89, 102.

Military Measures, See Title Army—Strengthening, etc.

Militia, See that Title.

Milner, Sir A.

Butler, Sir W., and Sir A. Milner, Friction between—Cape Colony Defensive Forces and the Occupation of Kimberley
Q. Mr. Warner; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 5, 565.

Policy in South Africa

O. Mr. Buchanan, Jan. 31, 200.

Property in the Republics—Proclamation, See that Subheading

Staff, Appointment of Mr. T. F. Wilson

Q. Mr. S. MacNeill; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 9, 1044.

Mountain Batteries—General Buller's Campaign, Number of Batteries and Equipment

Q. Mr. Hedderwick; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 2, 432.

Mounted Men—Colonial Offers, etc.

Canadian Offer, Refusal by the War Office

O. Mr. Hedderwick; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 2, 428.

White's, Sir G., Request

Q. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 1, 339.

Wyndham's, Mr., Explanation, Feb. 1, 333.

Natal, Defence of—Occupation of Glencoe and Dundee, Question of Policy—Ladysmith "Entanglement," etc.

Q. Mr. B. Roberts; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 1, 267; Q. Mr. L. Morgan; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 2, 431; O. Marquess of Lansdowne, Feb. 12, 1169; Q. Mr. B. Roberts; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 12, 1218.

Correspondence relating to, Jan. 30, 49, 67.

References to, in Debate on the Address, Jan. 30, 95, 109, 153; Jan. 31, 165, 191; Feb. 1, 351, 369, 386; Feb. 2, 480; Feb. 5, 631, 659, 674; Feb. 6, 737, 744, 771.

Wyndham's, Mr., Statement, Feb. 1, 331.

Naval Brigades

O. Mr. Goschen, Feb. 2, 483.

Marines—Separation Allowance

Q. Admiral Field; A. Mr. Goschen, Feb. 8, 915.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

South African War—cont.Naval Brigades—cont.

War Despatches—Battles of Grapans and Colenso
Q. Com. Young; A. Mr. Goschen, Feb. 5, 575.

Newspapers for the Troops—Non-delivery alleged

Q. Mr. Coghill; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 6, 709.

Northumberland Volunteers, See Title
Volunteers—South African War.

Orange Free State

British Subjects Commandeered by the Enemy, See that Sub-heading.

Joining the Transvaal against Great Britain

Os. Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, Jan. 30, 91; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 120; Sir C. Dilke, Feb. 1, 302, Mr. A. J. Balfour, 302.

Patriotic Fund, Application of, etc.—Amendment to the Address [Mr. Kearley], Feb. 8, 941.

Peace, Terms of, See Sub-heading Settlement after the War.

Plan of Campaign—Defence of Natal, See Sub-heading Natal.

Progress of the War

Q. Mr. W. Allan; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 1, 256.

Promotion from the Ranks

Q. Capt. Norton; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 1, 272.

PrisonersBoer Prisoners

Prisoners on Board Ship at Cape Town

Q. Mr. Harwood; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 6, 700; Q. Mr. Dillon; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 12, 1219.

Shooting Boer Prisoners, alleged

Qs. Mr. Shee; As. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 2, 433; Feb. 8, 906.

British Prisoners at Pretoria—Number of Prisoners, etc.

Q. Mr. S. T. Evans; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 8, 904.

Fenian Prisoners, See that sub-heading.

Irish Brigade with the Boers—alleged murder of a wounded prisoner

Q. Mr. Mandeville; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 12, 1224.

Property in the Republics—Sir A. Milner's Proclamation

Qs. Mr. G. Bowles; As. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 1, 269; Feb. 9, 1042; Q. Mr. G. Bowles; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 13, 1361.

Proclamation presented, Feb. 5, 563; Feb. 8, 897.

Relief Funds

Administration—Danger of overlapping, etc.

Q. Sir J. Leng; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 1, 268.

South African Crisis—cont.Relief Funds—cont.*Imperial War Fund

Q. Sir J. Leng; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 1, 268.

Patriotic Fund, See that Title.

Relief of Sufferers by the War—Old Age Pensions

Q. Sir J. Colomb; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 12, 1220.

ReserveCommissions—Grievances

Q. Mr. Barlow; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 8, 911.

Compensation to Reservists prematurely called up

Q. Col. Dalbiac; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 12, 1216.

Outfit Allowance for Officers

Q. Mr. Barlow; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 8, 913.

Rifles—Lee-Enfield Rifle, incorrectly sighted

Suffolk Hussars

Q. Mr. F. W. Wilson; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 1, 276.

Trials

Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 6, 710.

Secret Service Fund, See that Title.

Separation Allowance

Delay in Payments, etc.

Q. Col. Dalbiac; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 12, 1227.

Irish Militia—Grievance

Q. Mr. Hammond; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 9, 1048.

Marines

Q. Admiral Field; A. Mr. Goschen, Feb. 8, 915.

Widowed Mothers of unmarried Men—Irish Militia Regiments

Qs. Mr. Hammond, Mr. Flavin; As. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 13, 1360.

Settlement after the War

References to in Debate on the Address, Jan. 30, 87; Jan. 31, 171, 182; Feb. 2, 473; Feb. 5, 622.

Terms of Peace, etc.—Mr. J. Redmond's Amendment to the Address, Feb. 7, 830—Division, 892.

Sick and Wounded

Hospitals, See that Subheading.

Somersetshire Volunteers, See Volunteers—South African War.

Spion KopBoer Treatment of British Wounded

Q. Earl Camperdown; A. Marquess of Lansdowne, Feb. 8, 900.

Royal Engineers, Delay in sending forward, alleged

Q. Capt. Norton; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 13, 1359.

Strengthening and improving Organisation of the Regular and Auxiliary Forces—Government proposals, See Title Army.

Superannuation and Compensation Allowances—Allotment Pay to Soldiers' Wives, etc.

Q. Mr. Galloway; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 12, 1227.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

South African Crisis—cont.

Tactics and Strategy—Defence of Natal,
See Subheading Natal.

Telegrams to Soldiers, Code Words—Reduction of cost of Telegrams, etc.

Qs. Earl of Lichfield, Marquess of Lansdowne, Feb. 8, 898.

Transport Service, See that Title.

Transport Wagons—Wagons unfit for use, alleged

Q. Mr. Bainbridge; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 6, 700.

Tugela Operations—Col. Wynne's Field Order

Q. Mr. Dillon; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 1, 266.

Tugela Retreat—Time of Publication of News at the War Office

Q. Mr. S. MacNeill; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 2, 438.

Uitlanders' Grievances—Debate on the Address, Jan. 30, 137; Jan. 31, 165; Feb. 2, 458, 478, 520; Feb. 6, 763.

Unpreparedness for War, See Debate on the Address, Jan. 30, 5, 71; Jan. 31, 164; Feb. 1, 295; Feb. 2, 452; Feb. 5, 590; Feb. 6, 731.

Volunteers, See that Title.

Vote of Censure on the Government—Want of Knowledge, Foresight, etc., Motion (Lord E. Fitzmaurice), Jan. 30, 113; Jan. 31, 164; Feb. 1, 295; Feb. 2, 252; Feb. 5, 590; Feb. 6, 731; Division, Feb. 6, 824.

War Correspondents

Censorship of War News, See that Subheading.

War News

Crying War News in the Streets Nuisance

Q. Mr. H. S. Foster; A. Sir M. W. Ridley, Feb. 2, 440.

Publication by the War Office

Q. Mr. Whitmore; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 1, 268; Q. Mr. S. MacNeill; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 2, 438.

War Office, &c., Administration, See War Office

Wire Cutters for the Troops

Q. Mr. Nussey; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 1, 264.

Wyndham's, Mr., Statement, Feb. 1, 316.

Yeomanry, See that Title.

South-Eastern Railway Bill

l. 1R. Feb. 12*, 1165.

South-Eastern and London, Chatham, and Dover Railways Bill

l. 1R. Feb. 12*, 1165.

South Essex Water Board Bill

l. 1R. Feb. 12*, 1163, 1353.

South Kensington Museum

Buckland Museum of Fish Culture, Accommodation for

Q. Sir M. Blownaggee; A. Mr. Ritchie, Feb. 8, 920.

Victoria and Albert Museum, See that Title.

South Lancashire Tramways Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1036.

1R. Feb. 12*, 1212.

South Metropolitan Gas Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1036.

1R. Feb. 12*, 1213.

South Shields Corporation Bill

l. 1R. Feb., 12*, 1163.

South Staffordshire Tramways Bill

l. 1R. Feb. 12*, 1165.

South Wales Electrical Power Distribution Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1036.

1R. Feb. 12*, 1213.

Southampton Harbour Bill

l. 1R. Feb. 12*, 1163.

Southport Corporation Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1036.

1R. Feb. 12*, 1213.

Southport Extension and Tramways Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1036.

1R. Feb. 12*, 1213.

Southport and Lytham Tram-road Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 13, 1357.

Southport Water Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1036.

1R. Feb. 12*, 1213.

Spalding Urban District Council [Water] Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1036.

1R. Feb. 12*, 1213.

Speaker, Rt. Hon. W. C. Gully [Carlisle]

Debates in the House of Lords during present Session, References to, Jan. 31, 169, 180.

Government Bills—Ten Minute Rule, Feb. 12, 1257.

Point of Procedure, Feb. 13, 1380.

Irrelevant Observations in Debate on Amendments to the Address, Jan. 31, 171, 172; Feb. 2, 502, 505; Feb. 7, 847, 849, 856, 874.

Personal Reflections on Members—Irish Nationalist Members and Col. Saunderson, Feb. 2, 534, 535, 536, 538.

Private Bills—Division of Bills between the Lords and Commons, Feb. 6, 695.

Unparliamentary Language—"Language of the Pot-house," Feb. 6, 786.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Spion Kop Battle

- Boer Treatment of British Wounded
Q. Earl of Camperdown, Feb. 8, 900.
 Royal Engineers, Delay in sending forward, Alleged
Q. Captain Norton : A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 13, 1359.

Station Master at Mafeking

See South African War—Mafeking Station Master

Standing Committee

Select Committee for Standing Committee (Lords) Appointed, Feb. 2, 403.

Standing Orders

- Committee (Lords) Appointed, Feb. 2, 402.
 Private Bill, See that Title.
 Select Committee (Commons) Appointed, Feb. 6, 690.

Statutes

- Irish Statutes—Codification
Q. Mr. M. Healy : A. Mr. G. W. Balfour, Feb. 1, 293.

Steadman, Mr. W. C. [Tower Hamlets, Stepney]

- Central Telegraph Office — Holiday Arrangements, Feb. 9, 1053.
 Telegraphists—Sick leave, Case of Female Telegraphist of the Western District, Feb. 5, 579.

Steam Engines and Boilers [Persons in Charge] Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 9, 1065.

Steam Trawling

See Trawling.

Stevenson, Mr. F. S. [Suffolk, Eye.]

- Foot and Mouth Disease Regulations, Feb. 9, 1052.
 Gibraltar—Sanitary Condition of Town and Garrison, Feb. 5, 577.
 Home Defence—Forces Available, Feb. 1, 276.
 Malta Barracks, Insanitary Condition of, etc., Feb. 13, 1365.
 Queen's Speech—The Address, Jan. 30, 151 ; Jan. 31, 164.
 South African War and the Government, Plan of Campaign, etc. (Vote of Censure), Jan. 30, 151 ; Jan. 31, 164.

Stirling - Maxwell, Sir J. M. [Glasgow College]

South African War — Vote of Censure on the Government, Feb. 6, 767

Stock Exchange

- Alleged Outrage by Transvaal War Enthusiasts
Q. Mr. S. MacNeill : A. Sir M. White-Ridley, Feb. 1, 278.

Stockport Corporation Tramways Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1036.
1R. Feb. 12*, 1214.

Stokes, Mr., Murder of

- Compensation
Q. Mr. Hedderwick : A. Mr. Brodriek, Feb. 13, 1366.

Strachey, Mr. E. [Somerset, S.]

- Outdoor Relief (Friendly Societies) (No. 2) Bill, 2R., Feb. 13, 1464.
 South African War—FORAGE, Home grown and Foreign Produce, Prices, etc., Feb. 1, 270.

Straits Settlement

Report Presented, Jan. 30, 46, 63.

Street Noises Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 2, 414.

Stuart Mr. J. [Shoreditch, Hoxton]

Queen's Speech—The Address, Adjournment of Debate, Feb. 3, 392. |

"Sumatra"

- Treatment of Invalid Soldiers
Q. Mr. S. MacNeill ; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 9, 1047.

Suffolk

- Foot and Mouth Disease Outbreak
Os. Lord Burgclere, Duke of Devonshire, Feb. 13, 1354 ; Q. Mr. Stevenson ; A. Mr. Long, Feb. 9, 1052.

Sunday Closing [Monmouthshire] Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 2, 409.

Sunday Closing [Wales] Act [1881] Amendment Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 2, 423.

Sunday Sale of Intoxicating Liquors

See Sale of Intoxicating Liquors on Sunday Bill.

Sunderland Corporation Bill

1. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1163.

Superannuation

- Civil Servants appointed without Certificate—Treasury Minutes, Feb. 1, 236, 252 ; Feb. 2, 401 ; Feb. 6, 685, 698 ; Feb. 14, 1466.
 Local Authorities' Servants—Petitions for Alteration of Law, Jan. 31, 157 ; Feb. 1, 249 ; Feb. 5, 562 ; Feb. 8, 902 ; Feb. 9, 1040 ; Feb. 12, 1216.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Superannuation and Compensation Allowances

Allotment Pay to Soldiers' Wives, etc.
Q. Mr. Galloway; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 12, 1227.

Supply

Army Estimates, See that Title

Civil Service Estimates

Circulation of the Estimates
Q. Mr. Buchanan; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 13, 1373.

Supplementary Estimates Presented,
Feb. 12, 1217; Feb. 14, 1465.

Supreme Court of Judicature

Ireland—Accounts Presented, Feb. 12, 1217.

Supreme Court of Judicature (Ireland) Act

Orders in Council Presented, Jan. 31, 159; Feb. 1, 235.

Surgeons

Consulting Surgeons with the Troops, Pay of
Q. Mr. W. Redmond; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 12, 1225.

Swansea Harbour

Pilotage Bye-law, Order in Council Presented, Feb. 1, 234.

Swindon, Wilts.

Charter of Incorporation Presented, Jan. 30, 52, 66.

Swiss Military System

O. Sir J. Fergusson, Feb. 12, 1297; Q. Mr. Seely; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 13, 1362.

Taff Vale Railway Bill

l. 1R. Feb. 12, 1165.*

Tallow

Extra Police
Q. Mr. Shee; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 13, 1378.

Taunton Corporation Bill

*c. Ordered Feb. 9, 1036.
 1R.* Feb. 12, 1214.*

Taxation

Ireland, See that Title.

Local Taxation, See that Title.

Technical Education Acts

Minutes of Committee of Council on Education Presented, Jan. 30, 50, 68.

Telegrams

Addresses Regulations—"New town"
Q. Col. Pryce-Jones; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 5, 580.

Censorship of Outgoing Telegrams to South Africa.

Q. Mr. L. Morgan; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 2, 437.

Charge Anomalies—Combinations of Letters in the nature of cyphers

Q. Mr. H. Heaton; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 5, 579.

France—Press Telegrams by Night, Reduced Rates, Jan. 30, 46, 64.

South African War—Telegrams to Soldiers, Code Words, Reduction of Cost of Telegrams, etc.

Oa. Earl of Lichfield, Marquess of Lansdowne, Feb. 8, 898.

Telegraphic Communication with France

Declaration Presented, Jan. 30, 46, 64.

Telegraphists

Holiday Arrangements in the Central Telegraph Office.

Q. Mr. Steadman; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 3, 1153.

Sick-leave—Case of female Telegraphist of the Western District.

Q. Mr. Steadman; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 5, 579.

Telephonic Communication

Coastguards, Communication with
Q. Sir C. Gull; A. Mr. Goschen, Feb. 6, 713.

Ireland, South—Cork and the Neighbouring Cities, Want of Communication
Q. Mr. M. Healey; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 1, 288.

National Telephone Company, See that Title.

Post Office London Telephone Exchange—Tariff and Regulations

Q. Mr. Provand; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 9, 1053.

Royal National Lifeboat Institution

Q. Sir C. Gull; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 5, 578.

Ten Minute Rule

Government Bills—Point of Procedure
Oa. Mr. S. MacNeill, Feb. 12, 1257; Feb. 13, 1380.

Tenants in Towns Improvement (Ireland) Bill

c. 1R. Feb. 2, 417.*

Tenkasi

Anti-Shanars Riots—Petition for Redress of Grievances, Feb. 6, 696.

Thomas, Mr. D. A. (Merthyr Tydvil)

Business of the House, Feb. 8, 940.

Business of the House on Conclusion of Debate on Queen's Speech, Feb. 6, 727.

Financial Business, Precedence on Tuesdays, Feb. 12, 1250.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Thomas, Mr. D. A.—cont.

Civil Disturbances, Suppression of, by Military—Expenses of Troops employed, Feb. 13, 1364.

Coal for the Navy—Emergency Contracts, Feb. 6, 712; Feb. 8, 916.

Forage for South Africa, Home and Foreign Produce—Hay Contracts, Feb. 8, 909.

Thornton, Mr. P. M. [Clapham]

South African War—Casualties in Volunteer Forces, Identification and Publication, Feb. 5, 572.

Tobacco

Ireland, growing Tobacco in, Experiment
Q. Mr. W. Redmond; A. Mr. Plunkett, Feb. 12, 1245.

Tomlinson, Mr. W. E. M. [Preston]

Chipping Rifle Range—Light Railway from Longridge to Chipping, Feb. 8, 918.

Tonga

Thomas's, Mr. B., Mission—Anglo-German Convention
Qs. Mr. Hogan; As. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 6, 713; Feb. 13, 1365.

Tottenham Urban District Council Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1036.

1 R.* Feb. 12, 1214.

Tower Hamlets

New Member Sworn [Bow and Bromley Division], Jan. 30, 54.

Town Councils [Scotland] Bill

c. 1 R.* Feb. 2, 418.

Petitions, Feb. 7, 829; Feb. 8, 903; Feb. 9, 1046; Feb. 12, 1217; Feb. 13, 1357.

Town Tenants, Ireland

Legislation

Q. Mr. Field; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 2, 451.

Trade, Board of President—Rt. Hon. C. T. Ritchie.

Parliamentary Secretary—Earl of Dudley.

Trade Marks Protection

Declaration for between United Kingdom and the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg, Feb. 13, 1354, 1357.

Trade Reports, Presented

Annual Series, Jan. 30, 46, 49, 65, 70; Feb. 1, 233; Feb. 2, 408; Feb. 7, 829; Feb. 8, 897; Feb. 14, 1465.

Miscellaneous Series, Jan. 30, 47, 65; Feb. 5, 549; Feb. 7, 829.

Trade Unions

Registrar of Friendly Societies Report
Feb. 2, 401, 408.

Trade and Commerce

Certificates of Origin, French Consular Fees—Exchange of Notes Presented, Jan. 30, 45, 64.

Foreign Countries, See their Names.

, Return—Trade and Navigation, Presented, Feb. 1, 253.

Trains

Workmen's Trains, See that Title.

Tramways

Bills Relating to, See their Titles.

Transfer of Land

See Land Transfer.

Transport Service—South African War

Farewells on Transports

Q. Mr. Warner; A. Mr. Macartney, Feb. 2, 436.

First-class Passenger Ships, Employment of

Q. Mr. Bainbridge; A. Mr. Goschen, Feb. 6, 699.

"Golconda," Unsatisfactory Condition of Boat, alleged

Q. Capt. Norton; A. Mr. Goschen, Feb. 12, 1231.

Horses, Number of, carried on each ship, Horses lost on the voyage, etc.—Return

Q. General Russell; A. Mr. Macartney, Feb. 2, 437.

"Jelunga"—Condition of Women and Children

Q. Mr. S. MacNeill; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 5, 574.

Mules, Transport of—Names of Transports, Conditions of Shipment, etc.

Q. Sir E. Gourley; A. Mr. Goschen, Feb. 12, 1220.

Meat unfit for use on the "American"

Qs. General Laurie, Mr. Jeffreys; As. Mr. Macartney, Feb. 2, 434.

Name, Tonnage, and Speed of Vessels, Return Ordered [Mr. Weir], Feb. 6, 698, Provisions on the "Pavonia"

Q. Captain Phillpotts; A. Mr. Macartney, Feb. 2, 436.

Return

Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 1, 270.

Rates for Ships, etc., including in Return

Q. Mr. Buchanan; A. Mr. Goschen, Feb. 5, 574.

Speed of Transports

Q. Mr. Colville; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 2, 437.

Yeomanry—Delay in Embarkation

Os. Viscount Galway, Earl of Cork, Marquess of Lansdowne. Feb. 6, 688.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Transport Wagons

Wagons sent out to South Africa, unfit for use, alleged Q. Mr. Bainbridge; A. Mr. Wynd-
Feb. 6, 700.

Transvaal

Conventions of 1881 and 1884, and the Boer Armaments
O. Marquess of Salisbury, Jan. 30, 26.
Crisis—Correspondence Presented, Jan. 30, 49, 67
Property in the Republics—Sir A. Milner's Proclamation, See South African War.
Secret Service Fund
O. Marquess of Salisbury, Jan. 30, 28.
War, See South African War.

Trawling

Fishery Cruisers, See that Title.
Ireland—Wexford Bay
Qs. Mr. Ffrench; As. Mr. Plunkett, Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 8, 933; Q. Mr. Ffrench; A. Mr. Goschen, Feb. 9, 1055.

Treasury Bills

Issue of
Q. Mr. Buchanan; A. Sir M. Hicks-Beach, Feb. 1, 278.

Treasury Chest

Account Presented, Feb. 1, 251.

Treasury Control

Chancellor of the Exchequer and the South African War and the Stinting of the Military Preparations
Os. Marquess of Salisbury, Jan. 30, 32; Sir M. Hicks-Beach, Mr. S. Buxton, Jan. 31, 180—Personal Explanation [Marquess of Salisbury] Feb. 1, 237.
Constitution and Functions of the Department, etc.—Select Committee of Inquiry suggested
Q. Mr. G. Bowles; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 12, 1233.
Exercise of Powers in Governing Departments of the State—Not for the Public Benefit
O. Marquess of Salisbury, Jan. 30, 32.

Treaty Series

Jan. 30, 45, 64; Feb. 13, 1354, 1357.

Trees

Re-afforestation of Ireland
Q. Mr. Ffrench; A. Mr. Plunkett, Feb. 12, 1247.

"Triple Alliance"

Chamberlain's, Mr., Speech at Leicester
Q. Mr. W. Redmond; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 5, 578.

Trustee Savings Banks Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 7, 830.

Tugela Retreat

Time of Publication of News at the War Office
Q. Mr. S. MacNeill; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 2, 438.

Tully, Mr. [Leitrim, S.]

Army—Strengthening and Improving Organisation of the Regular and Auxiliary Forces—Government Proposals, Feb. 12, 1440.
Local Government (Ireland) Act (1898) Amendment Bill, 2R., Feb. 14, 1466, 1472, 1498, 1505, 1509, 1512, 1515.
Probate Duty Grant—Distribution to Poor Law Unions, Feb. 1, 292.

Turkey

Imperial Ottoman Guaranteed Loan, 1855, Account Presented, Feb. 8, 898, 903.

Tweedmouth, Lord

Rifle Ranges—Government Military Measures, Feb. 12, 1190.

Tyneside Electric Power Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1037.
1R.* Feb. 12, 1214.

Tyrone

Ogilby Estate, Sale of
Q. Mr. Murnaghan; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 8, 931.

Union, Act of, between England and Ireland

Taxation Grievance—Debate on the Address, Feb. 8, 1003; Feb. 9, 1066.

United States

Alaska Boundary Question—Exchange of Notes, Jan. 30, 45, 64.
Mails, Time occupied in Transit—Return ordered (Sir J. Leng) Feb. 13, 1357.
Money Orders Convention between United States and British Honduras, Jan. 30, 45, 64.
Nicaragua Canal, See that Title.
Parcel Post between Great Britain and United States
Q. Mr. H. Heaton; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 1, 287.

Universal Life Assurance Society Bill

1., 1R.* Feb. 12, 1165.

Universities

See Names of Universities.

Universities [Scotland] Act, 1899

Annual Statistical Report, Jan. 30, 53.

Universities of Oxford and Cambridge Act

Statutes Presented, Jan. 30, 49, 68.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

University EducationIreland, See that Title.Upton Towans FactoryExplosion, Report, Jan. 30, 48, 63.Urquhart, H., of the Gordon HighlandersQs.* Mr. Hedderwick; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 6, 711.VaccinationActs, 1867 to 1898—Petitions for Alteration of Law, Jan. 31, 157; Feb. 1, 249; Feb. 5, 562; Feb. 6, 697; 685; Feb. 12, 1166; Feb. 13, 1357.Local Government Board's Order—Petition, Feb. 6, 697.Vagrants' Children Protection Billc. 1R.* Feb. 6*, 729.Vale of Rheidol Light Railway Billc. Ordered, Feb. 9*, 1037.
1R. Feb. 12*, 1214.Veterinary Advisers to the Board of AgricultureQ.* Mr. Johnson-Ferguson; A. Mr. Long, Feb. 6, 718.Vice-President of the Council of Education

Sir J. E. Gorst

"Victoria and Albert"

Capsizing, Cause of

Qs. Sir E. Gourley, Mr. W. Allan; A. Mr. Goschen, Feb. 1, 279.Victoria and Albert Museum

Giuliano's Bequest—Recovery of Stolen Ornaments

Q. Lord Balcarras; A. Sir J. Gorst, Feb. 13, 1370.Vivian, LordSat first after the Death of his Father, Feb. 8, 897.VivisectionProhibition—Petitions, Feb. 7, 829; Feb. 8, 898.Voluntary Schools (Grants in Aid) Billc. 1R.* Feb. 6*, 730.Volunteers

Artillery Volunteers

Modern Guns for, etc.—Statements (Marquess of Lansdowne), Feb. 12, 1178; (Mr. Wyndham), Feb. 12, 1263, 1266.

Obsolete Guns

Q. Mr. Bainbridge; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 6, 705.Volunteers—cont.

Capitation Grant, Increase

Statements (Marquess of Lansdowne), Feb. 12, 1178; (Mr. Wyndham), 1267.

Ireland—Formation of Volunteer Corps

Qs. Mr. W. Johnston, Mr. P. O'Brien, Mr. W. Redmond; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 5, 564.

Mounted Infantry

Statement (Marquess of Lansdowne), Feb. 12, 1178.

Recruiting—Excess of Present Establishment

Edis, Col., and the Inspector-General of Auxiliary Forces, Os. Earl of Dunraven, Marquess of Lansdowne, Feb. 5, 554, 556.

Obstacles placed in the way of obtaining Recruits, alleged

Q. Mr. S. Smit; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 9, 1046.Special Army Order, Jan. 2, 1900*Q.* Sir A. Rolitt; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 1, 274.Statements (Marquess of Lansdowne), Feb. 12, 1177; (Mr. Wyndham), 1262.Reserve—Statement (Marquess of Lansdowne), Feb. 12, 1179.

Rifle Practice—Providing suitable Ranges, etc.

Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 1, 275.See also Title Rifle Ranges.

South African War

Casualties—Publication and Identification

Q. Mr. Thornton; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 5, 572.

Civil Service Volunteers—Pay and Allowances

Q. Mr. Hedderwick; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 6, 707.

Guns

Complaints

Q. Mr. Bainbridge; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 6, 705.

Northumberland Volunteers—Equipment—Application to the War Office to equip Regiment with Maxim Guns, &c., alleged

Q. Mr. Bainbridge; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 6, 706.

Messrs. Armstrong's Offer of Guns, etc.

Q. Mr. J. A. Pease; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 8, 913.

London Scottish Volunteers—Grant towards Outfit, etc.

Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 6, 706.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Volunteers—cont.South African War—cont.

Officers' Commissions, etc. — Conditions of Employment on Foreign Service

Qs. Mr. M'Crae, Mr. L. Knowles ;
As. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 1, 274 ;
Feb. 8, 912 ; Feb. 13, 1362.

Attaching Qualified Officers to units in want of Officers

Q. Gen. Russell ; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 12, 1225.

Sale by Agency, etc.

Q. Mr. S. MacNeill ; A. Mr. J. P. Williams, Feb. 12, 1231.

Somersetshire Corps—Failure to form Company, Number of Men unable to pass Test,

Qs. Col. Murray, Mr. Hobhouse ;
A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 5, 571.

Utlander Volunteers — Governor of Natal's Offer, Number of Volunteers enrolled,

Q. Mr. W. Allan ; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 5, 566.

Strengthening and improving Organization of the Auxiliary Forces, Government Proposals

Statements (Marquess of Lansdowne),
12 Feb. 1175 ; (Mr. Wyndham) 1261 ;
—Debate resumed, Feb. 13, 1382.

(For Details of Scheme, See their sub-headings).

Training — Statement (Mr. Wyndham),
Feb. 12, 1267.

Vote of Censure on the Government

South African War—Motion (Lord E. Fitzmaurice, Jan. 30, 113 ; Jan 31, 164 ;
Feb. 1, 295 ; Feb. 2, 452 ; Feb. 5, 590 ;
Feb. 6, 731—Division, Feb. 6, 824.

Wages

Seamen, See that Title.

Wagons

Transport Wagons for South Africa—Useless Wagons, alleged

Q. Mr. Bainbridge ; A. Mr. Wyndham,
Feb. 6, 700.

Waima Incident

Negotiations

Q. Sir C. Dilke ; A. Mr. Brodrick,
Feb. 5, 578.

Wakefield Corporation Market Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1037.

1R. Feb. 12*, 1214.

Wales

Bills relating to, See their Titles.

Llest Colliery Explosion

Q. Mr. Woods ; A. Sir M. W. Ridley,
Feb. 13, 1368.

Railway Dispute—Arbitration, etc.

Q. Mr. Maddison ; A. Mr. Akers-
Douglas, Feb. 5, 582.

Reports, Jan. 30, 47, 63.

Wallace Collection

Opening to the Public

Q. Mr. Bartley ; A. Mr. Hanbury,
Feb. 12, 1240.

Wallsall Corporation Bill

1. 1R. Feb. 13*, 1354.

Wandsworth and Putney Gas Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1037.

1R. Feb. 12*, 1215.

Wantage, Lord

Military Measures of the Government,
Feb. 12, 1183.

War

Art of War as studied on the Continent,
O. Marquess of Salisbury, Jan. 30, 31.

British Constitution as an Instrument of War

O. Marquess of Salisbury, Jan. 30, 33.

See South African War.

War Office

Secretary of State—Marquess of Lansdowne.

Under Secretaries—Mr. G. Wyndham,
Sir R. H. Knox.

Financial Secretary — Mr. J. P. Williams.

Administration—South African War

Balfour's, Mr. A. J., Defence, Feb.
6, 815.

Wyndham's, Mr., Defence, Feb. 1, 316.

Charges Against by a Volunteer Officer

Q. Mr. Brookfield ; A. Mr. Wyndham,
Feb. 2, 439.

Clerical Vacancies—Sons and Daughters of Officers

Q. Mr. S. MacNeill ; A. Mr. Wynd-
ham, Feb. 8, 916.

Inquiry Committee of 1898

Recommendations of Committee

Q. Mr. S. MacNeill ; A. Mr. J. P.
Williams, Feb. 12, 1229.

Report

Q. Capt. Norton ; A. Mr. J. P.
Williams, Feb. 13, 1363.

Intelligence Department — Boar Armaments and strength of the Enemy
Os. Lord Monkswell ; Marquis of
Lansdowne, Feb. 1, 244, 246.

References to in Debate on the
Address, Jan. 30, 19, 34, 39, 73, 92, 103, 149, 168, 179, 190, 193, 201.

Wyndham's, Mr., Defence, Feb. 1, 316.

News of the War

Casualties, Publication of Lists

Q. Mr. W. Redmond ; A. Mr. J. P.
Williams, Feb. 12, 1224,

Editing and Publishing

Q. Mr. Whitmore ; A. Mr. Wynd-
ham, Feb. 1, 268.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

War Office—cont.News of the War—cont.

Magerfontein Engagement—Time of Publication of News
Q. Mr. S. MacNeill; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 2, 438.

Tugela Retreat—Time of Publication of News

Q. Mr. S. MacNeill; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 2, 438.

Warden Estate

Ejectment Decrees, etc.

Q. Mr. T. J. Farrell; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 8, 930.

National Teachers' Residence Site

Q. Mr. Flavin; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 9, 1056.

Warner, Mr. T. C. T. [Stafford, Lichfield]

Army—Strengthening and Improving Organisation of the Regular and Auxiliary Forces, Government Proposals, Feb. 12, 1303.

Church Discipline—Legislation, Feb. 1, 293.Contemplated Military Measures, Feb. 5, 565.

Home Defences—Replacing Field Batteries sent to the Front, Feb. 5, 567.

Indian Army—Replacing Troops sent out to South Africa, Feb. 6, 707.

Lichfield Rifle Range, Progress of Construction, etc., Feb. 1, 275.

Metal Market, Government Purchase—Discontinuance of Purchase through Broker, Feb. 2, 1440; Feb. 5, 583.

Militia, Embodiment of, Feb. 1, 272.

South African War

Butler, Sir W., and Sir A. Milner, Friction between—Cape Colony Defensive Forces and the Occupation of Kimberley, Feb. 5, 565.

Clothing, Feb. 1, 267; Feb. 6, 700.

Guns—Continental Standard, Feb. 5, 567.

Farewells on Transports, Feb. 2, 436.Warr, Mr. A. F. [Liverpool, E. Toxteth]Marine Insurance Bill, Feb. 12, 1248.Warren's, Sir C., Expedition

Attitude of the Orange Free State

Q. Dr. Clark; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 6, 703.

Wars

India—War on, or beyond the Borders of British India, Return, Jan. 31, 158.

Wars of the past—Criticism on the Government and Officers in Command, Marquess of Salisbury on, Jan. 30, 30.

Waste Lands Afforestation (Ireland) Billc.1R.* Feb. 2, 421.Water Supply Billc. 1R.* Feb. 2, 421.Water Supply, Metropolitan

Royal Commission

Minutes of Evidence, Jan. 30, 49, 65.
Report, Jan. 30, 48, 63.

Waterford and Limerick Railway

Dismissal of Employees

Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas, Feb. 5, 583.

Watermen's Certificates Billc. 1R.* Feb. 2, 420.Webley Cartridges

Defective Cartridges

Q. Mr. Hedderwick; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 5, 567.

Webster, Sir B. E.—Attorney General—[Isle of Wight]Williams, Emanuel, case of, Feb. 6, 721.Wedderburn, Sir W. [Banffshire]

In ia

Famine

Number of Persons receiving Relief, and area affected, Feb. 1, 283.

Relief—Circular letter, warning against Imposition, Feb. 8, 919.

Natu Brothers, Release, etc., Feb. 8, 920.

Weir, Mr. J. G. [Ross and Cromarty]

Borneo—Natives and Chartered Company, Expedition against Mat Sallah, etc., Feb. 6, 714; Feb. 13, 1366.

Brotherhood Depression Range Finder—Experiments at Gibraltar, Feb. 12, 1229.

Deer Forests—Grievances of Crofters and Cottars in the Highlands, Amendment to the Address, Feb. 8, 973.

Fishery Cruisers—completion of New Cruisers, Feb. 13, 1370.

Hydrographical Conference, Feb. 12, 1235.Lee-Enfield Rifles—Trials, Feb. 6, 710.

London Scottish Volunteers—Grant towards Outfit, Feb. 6, 706.

School Board Franchise, Scotland

Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 12, 1247.

South African War

Magersfontein Engagement, Highland Brigade Losses, Inquiry, Feb. 13, 1359.

Transport Service—Return, Feb. 1, 270.

Volunteers—Rifle Practice, Providing suitable Ranges, etc., Feb. 1, 275.

Welby, Lt.-Col. A. C. E. [Taunton]

Army—Strengthening and improving Organization of Regular and Auxiliary Forces—Government Proposals, Feb. 12, 1417.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Welby, Lieut.-Col. A. C. E.—cont.

Somerset House—Indexes to Old Wills, Compilation, Feb. 12, 1240.

South African War—Proportion of Artillery Strength, Feb. 9, 1044.

Wellington, Duke of

Battle of Waterloo fought by Militiamen, O. Earl of Nelson, Feb. 12, 1189.

Denounced by the City of London during the Peninsular War, Marquess of Salisbury on, Jan. 30, 30.

Wells

By Election—New Writ and New Member sworn, Jan. 30, 54.

Wemyss, Earl of

Militia—Military Measures of the Government, Feb. 12, 1191.

West Bromwich Corporation Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1037.

1R.* Feb. 12, 1215.

West Ham Corporation Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1037.

1R.* Feb. 12, 1215.

West Kent Regiment

Transport complaint

Q. Capt. Norton; A. Mr. Goschen, Feb. 12, 1231.

Westgate and Birchington Water Bill

1. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1165.

Wetherby District Water Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1037.

1R.* Feb. 12, 1215.

Wexford

Postal Service—South Wexford

Q. Mr. Ffrench; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 8, 927.

Wexford Bay

Steam Trawling in

Qs. Mr. Ffrench; As. Mr. Plunkett, Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 8, 933.

Q. Mr. Ffrench; A. Mr. Goschen, Feb. 9, 1055.

Whisky

Irish—Weak Whisky in Bond

Q. Mr. W. Johnston; A. Mr. Hanbury, Feb. 12, 1373.

Scotch—Samples, Distribution among Dwelling Houses

Q. Mr. J. Wilson; A. Mr. Murray, Feb. 12, 1369.

Whitechapel and Bow Railway Bill

1. 1R.* Feb. 12, 1353.

Whitelock, W. H.

County Courts Act, Order of the Lord Chancellor, Jan. 30, 51, 70.

Whitmore, Mr. C. A. [Chelsea]

War News—Editing and Publishing by the War Office, Feb. 1, 268.

Wick and Lybster Light Railway

Order presented, Feb. 9, 1023, 1039.

Widnes and Runcorn Bridge Bill

c. Ordered, Feb. 9, 1037.

1R.* Feb. 12, 1215.

Williams, Emanuel

Q. Sir J. Lees; A. Sir R. Webster, Feb. 6, 721.

Williams, Lt. Col. R. [Dorset, W.]

Army—Strengthening and improving Organisation of the Regular and Auxiliary Forces—Government proposals, Feb. 12, 1433.

Williams, Mr. J. C. [Notts, Mansfield]

Burial Law Reform, Feb. 2, 446.

Williams, Mr. J. P.—Financial Secretary to the War Office—[Birmingham]

Army Estimates, Issue of to Members, Feb. 12, 1364.

Boots for Troops—Indian Contracts, Prices, etc., Feb. 8, 910; Feb. 9, 1049.

Brotherhood Depression Range Finder—Experiments at Gibraltar, Feb. 12, 1229.

Crimean, and Indian Mutiny Veterans—Irish Veterans in Workhouses, Feb. 6, 712.

Urquhart, H., Case of, Feb. 6, 711.

Engineers, Royal, Department—High Charges for Building Work, alleged—Inquiry into Administration, Feb. 12, 1230.

Metal Market, Government Purchase, Discontinuance of Purchase through Broker, Feb. 2, 440; Feb. 5, 584.

Netley Hospital—Hours of Duty of Non-commissioned Officers and Men, Feb. 12, 1228.

Patriotic Fund, Application and Administration of, etc., Feb. 8, 959.

Rifle Ranges—Number of Ranges closed and New Ranges opened, etc., Feb. 12, 1229.

Riot, Suppression by Military, Expenses of Troops employed, Feb. 12, 1364.

Russell "Shooting Director," Invention, Feb. 12, 1232.

Smith, G., Case of, Feb. 12, 1231.

Soldiers' Effects Fund—Crimean Soldiers' Widows, Feb. 8, 915.

South African War

Boer Armaments—Expenditure of the Transvaal—Private Statement issued to Members of the Volksraad—Orders for Guns placed with Messrs. Krupp, etc., Feb. 12, 1223.

Casualties—Publication of Lists, Feb. 12, 1224.

Clothing for Troops—Reserves of Warm Clothing, Feb. 12, 1226.

Jan. 30—Feb. 14.

Williams, Mr. J. P.—cont.South African War—cont.Consulting Surgeons, pay of, *Feb. 12, 1225.*Enteric Fever — Flannel Belts as preventative, *Feb. 12, 1226.*Equipments, loss of — Charge to Soldiers, *Feb. 12, 1225.*Fenian Prisoners at Mafeking, alleged, *Feb. 12, 1224.*Forage—Home Grown and Foreign Produce, Prices, etc., *Feb. 1, 270; Feb. 5, 573; Feb. 8, 909.*Bad Hay supplied to the Royal Dragoons, *Feb. 5, 573.*Guns—Manufacture of Guns equal to those of the Boers, *Feb. 12, 1223.*Horses, Contracts for, *Feb. 9, 1048.*Irish Brigade with the Boers—Alleged Murder of a wounded Prisoner, *Feb. 12, 1225.*Reservists prematurely called up—Compensation, *Feb. 12, 1227.Separation AllowanceDelay in Payments, etc., *Feb. 12, 1228.*Widowed Mothers of Unmarried men, Irish Militia, *Feb. 13, 1360.Volunteer OfficersAttaching to Units in Want of Officers, *Feb. 12, 1225.*Commissions, Sale by Agency, etc., *Feb. 12, 1232.*Superannuation and Compensation Allowances, Allotments, Pay to Soldiers' Wives, etc., *Feb. 12, 1227.*War Office Inquiry Committee Recommendations, Feb. 12, 1230.
Report, *Feb. 13, 1363.Willoughby de Eresby, Lord [Lincolnshire, Horncastle]Army—Strengthening and improving Organisation of the Regular and Auxiliary Forces—Government proposals, *Feb. 12, 1444.Wills at Somerset HouseIndexes to Early Wills—Re compilation Q. Col. Welby; A. Mr. Hanbury, *Feb. 12, 1240.Wilson, Mr. F. W. [Norfolk, Mid]Army—Strengthening and Improving Organisation of the Regular and Auxiliary Forces, Government Proposals, *Feb. 12, 1402.*Foot and Mouth Disease Regulations, *Feb. 9, 1052; Feb. 13, 1371.*Rifle Ranges closed—Return, *Feb. 6, 711.*Rifles — Suffolk Hussars, Incorrectly Sighted Rifles, *Feb. 1, 276.Wilson, Mr. J. [Falkirk Burghs]Whisky Samples — Distribution among Dwelling Houses in Scotland, *Feb. 13, 1369.Wilson, Mr. J. H. [Middlesbrough]Crew Accommodation on Merchant Ships, *Feb. 12, 1238.*South African War (Vote of Censure), *Feb. 6, 798.Wilson, Mr. F. H.

Assistant to High Commissioner of Cape Colony.

Q. Mr. S. MacNeill; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 9, 1044.Wine and Beerhouse Acts Amendment Billc. 1R. *Feb. 9, 1064.Winter Assizes (Ireland)Orders in Council Presented, *Jan. 31, 159; Feb. 1, 235.Wire Cutters for Troops in South AfricaQ. Mr. Nussey; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 1, 284.Wirrall Railway Billl. 1R. Feb. 12, 1165.Withing Urban District Council Billl. 1R. *Feb. 12, 1163.WitnessesHouse of Commons—Sessional Order, *Jan. 30, 60.Wolseley, Lord

Boer Strength and the Intelligence Department

Q. Mr. S. MacNeill; A. Mr. Wyndham, *Feb. 1, 265.Wolverhampton Gas Billc. Ordered, *Feb. 9, 1037.1R. *Feb. 12, 1215.Wolverhampton, Essington, and Cannock Chase Junction Railway Billc. Ordered, *Feb. 9, 1037.1R. *Feb. 12, 1215.Women's Suffrage

See Titles Parliamentary Franchise (Extension to Women) Bill, Franchise and Removal of Women's Disabilities Bill.

Woodbridge District Water Billc. Ordered, *Feb. 9, 1037.1R. Feb. 12, 1216.

